Failure to Give Notice of Deficient Performance — Summary Judgment Burdens: Plaintiff alleged it had performed and was entitled to payment under a contract. Defendant answered that plaintiff had performed deficiently and that defendant had not breached the contract and owed no money under it. Since the contract required defendant to notify plaintiff of deficient performance, whether notice was given was crucial to each party's case. Defendant's answer raised the genuine issue of material fact as to whether defendant gave notice of deficiency, so that when plaintiff moved for summary judgment, plaintiff had the initial burden of offering evidence establishing the absence of notice. Statements of plaintiff's attorney that no notice had been given did not meet this burden; therefore, the burden to show that notice had been given did not shift to defendant and the court committed reversible error when it: (1) placed that burden on defendant; (2) granted plaintiff summary judgment for failure of defendant to carry the burden; and (3) refused defendant's motion for alteration or amendment of the judgment. However, defendant could have avoided an unnecessary appeal by filing affidavits or other evidence showing that defendant had given notice and that a genuine issue of material fact thus existed. Brinkman & Lenon v. P&D Land Enterprises, 263 M 238, 867 P2d 1112, 51 St. Rep. 36 (1994).

Interplay Between Time for Filing Notice of Appeal and Time for Filing Motion to Amend or Alter Judgment: District Courts retain jurisdiction to consider and resolve timely motions to alter or amend filed pursuant to Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P., or this rule. A notice of appeal filed under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), prior to the expiration of the time allowed for motions to alter or amend but followed by such motions timely filed has no effect. Shull v. First Interstate Bank of Great Falls, 262 M 355, 864 P2d 1268, 50 St. Rep. 1594 (1993).

Ineffective Appeal After Motion to Alter or Amend Judgment — Failure to Cure Results in Dismissal: On April 30, Grounds filed a motion to alter or amend a judgment partially granting her former husband's (Coward's) posttrial motions. On May 17, before Grounds' motion was ruled upon, Coward filed a notice of appeal from the disposition of his pretrial motions. The Supreme Court held that under Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P., the day the order was issued on his motions is not to be counted and that because the time for serving a motion to alter or amend judgment is less than the 11 days referred to in Rule 6(a), intervening Saturdays and Sundays are not counted. Therefore, the District Court could still rule on Grounds' motion. Under former Rule 5(a)(4), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), Coward filed a premature notice of appeal and should have waited until Grounds' motion was disposed of or considered denied. Failure of Coward to file a new notice of appeal after Grounds' motion was considered denied means that his own appeal must be dismissed. In re Marriage of Grounds & Coward, 256 M 397, 846 P2d 1034, 50 St. Rep. 114 (1993).

Lack of Supporting Brief and Notice of Motion — Ruling Not Invalidated: Coward made a motion to alter or amend judgment but failed to file a supporting brief within 5 days and failed to give notice to Grounds that the motion would be heard along with the hearing on her motion for contempt. These omissions notwithstanding, the District Court partially granted Coward's motion. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion. Citing Maberry v. Gueths, 238 M 304, 777 P2d 1285 (1989), the Supreme Court said that even though failure to file a brief is an admission that the motion is not well taken, the District Court still has discretion whether to grant the motion. The parties were also invited to propose a briefing schedule and/or evidentiary hearing date to present supplemental arguments, but failed to do so. Under these circumstances, the District Court did not abuse its discretion. In re Marriage of Grounds & Coward, 256 M 397, 846 P2d 1034, 50 St. Rep. 114 (1993). However, see Moody v. Northland Royalty Co., 286 M 89, 951 P2d 18, 54 St. Rep. 1317 (1997), which held that the District Court erred when it granted defendant's motion to dismiss after designating defendant's answer as the brief supporting a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 2, M.U.D.C.R. (Title 25, ch. 19).

Failure to Perfect Appeal Within Time Limits as Precluding Jurisdiction: Failure to perfect an appeal within the time limits provided by law prevents the Supreme Court from acquiring jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. First Sec. Bank of Havre v. Harmon, 255 M 168, 841 P2d 521, 49 St. Rep. 955 (1992), followed in In re Marriage of Yeanuzzi, 2001 MT 171, 306 M 163, 30 P3d 1095 (2001).

Retention of District Court Jurisdiction After Filing of Appeal: A motion filed under this rule must be determined by the District Court within 45 days. If the court fails to rule within that time, the motion is considered denied. Former Rule 5(a)(1), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), required the notice of appeal in civil cases to be filed within 30 days of judgment. However, if a motion is timely filed under this rule, the time for appeal runs from the entry of an order granting or denying the motion or, if applicable, from the time the motion is considered denied at the end of the 45-day period (see 1995 amendment). If a notice of appeal is filed before the motion is disposed of, the notice of appeal has no effect. Semenza v. Hartelius, 248 M 294, 811 P2d 1262, 48 St. Rep. 356 (1991).

Court Failure to Rule Within Forty-Five Days on Motion to Set Aside or Amend — Loss of Jurisdiction Over That Issue: Subsequent to obtaining a decree of dissolution, the husband died intestate and his ex-wife moved to have the decree set aside. More than 45 days later (see 1995 amendment), the District Court set aside the decree and also granted the ex-wife's motion to substitute as personal representative. The Supreme Court reversed, stating that a postjudgment motion not ruled on within 45 days is considered denied and at that time, the lower court lost its jurisdiction with respect to setting aside the decree. The court also held that the 45 days run from the time the motion to set aside or amend is filed and is not affected by when the notice of entry of judgment is filed. In re Marriage of Miller, 238 M 108, 776 P2d 1218, 46 St. Rep. 1128 (1989), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Untimely Appeal Dismissed: The Supreme Court dismissed an appeal filed after the mandatory time limit imposed under Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., as untimely filed pursuant to this rule. Easley v. Burlington N. RR, 234 M 290, 762 P2d 870, 45 St. Rep. 1915 (1988). See also Miller v. Herbert, 272 M 132, 900 P2d 273, 52 St. Rep. 655 (1995).

Failure to Obtain Continuance — No Invalidation of Proceeding: Following service of the notice of entry of judgment, the defendants filed a timely motion to amend the judgment pursuant to Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P. However, hearing on the motion was not held within 10 days of service as required by Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. However, the hearing was within the total of 40 days which Rule 59(d) allows for the hearing. The notice of hearing was given within the 10-day period. The defendant's technical failure to obtain a continuance from the trial court is not a sufficient reason to invalidate the proceedings when the hearing is held within the period prescribed by the rule. Redinger v. French, 216 M 16, 699 P2d 94, 42 St. Rep. 604 (1985).

Effect of Stipulation Based on Mistake in Interpretation of Law: At entry of judgment the District Court permitted entry of a stipulation that apportioned attorney fees between the parties on the basis of an incorrect interpretation of the law. The parties agreed that attorney fees are costs in mechanics' lien (now construction lien) foreclosure actions. It was error for the District Court to refuse to alter or amend the judgment upon timely application under Rules 59(g) and 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. A judgment by stipulation is as binding as any judgment or verdict, no more or less. The court was responsible for a correct application of the law in accepting the stipulation and in later ruling on whether to alter or amend the judgment thereby entered. Schillinger v. Brewer, 215 M 333, 697 P2d 919, 42 St. Rep. 408 (1985).

No Basis to Reopen Dissolution Decree: The appellant did not claim the existence of unconscionability, fraud, or any other inequitable situation that would give a court a legal basis upon which to reopen a dissolution decree. She attempted to enhance enforcement of the judgment that incorporated the parties' stipulations as to the property division by making a motion to modify. She was precluded by statutory time limits and by the fact that she had no legal basis to compel a court to reopen the judgment. Since no conditions existed that would justify reopening the judgment, the District Court was not required to enter findings of fact. Keirle v. Keirle, 210 M 214, 681 P2d 703, 41 St. Rep. 1016 (1984).

Award of Attorney Fees on Remand Improper: On remand from the Supreme Court, the District Court granted the mother's motion for attorney fees for the first trial and appeal. The District Court was without jurisdiction to grant attorney fees. The original judgment did not provide for attorney fees, and the judgment would have had to be amended before either party could be ordered to pay those fees. A motion to amend a judgment must be made within 10 days of its entry. This rule applies to requests for attorney fees and is not overridden by 40-4-110. Since mother's motion was not timely, the District Court was without jurisdiction to grant attorney fees for the first trial. R.L.S. & T.L.S v. Barkhoff, 207 M 199, 674 P2d 1082, 40 St. Rep. 1982 (1983).

Marital Separation Agreement Not a Judgment Amendable for Failure of Consideration: A marital separation agreement is not a conveyance. A separation agreement incorporated into a divorce decree is enforceable only as a judgment. A judgment can be reopened if obtained through fraud but not for lack of fair consideration. It was error to annul a marital separation agreement under 31-2-311 (now repealed). Witbart v. Witbart, 204 M 446, 666 P2d 1217, 40 St. Rep. 994 (1983).

Motion for Attorney Fees Following Judgment — Not Costs — Timeliness of Motion: The defendants signed a contract to purchase a tract of land from plaintiffs. The contract provided for attorney fees to the prevailing party in an action commenced on the contract. Plaintiffs filed suit alleging that under the contract and various oral agreements, defendants had agreed to pay a real estate commission to plaintiffs. The trial court granted summary judgment to defendants, holding that written evidence of an agreement to pay a commission did not exist. No notice of entry of judgment was ever filed. Defendants later moved to set an attorney fee award. The trial court ruled that under Title 25, ch. 10, attorney fees were not recoverable costs and that the motion for costs was not timely, as it was not filed within 5 days of judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that attorney fees were awardable under the contract and that defendants' motion was essentially a motion to amend judgment under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. The motion was timely made since no notice of entry of judgment was ever filed. Cook v. Harrington, 203 M 479, 661 P2d 1287, 40 St. Rep. 580 (1983).

Untimely Motion, Notice, or Hearing Not Suspending Time for Appeal — Appeal Not Timely: Summary judgment was entered against appellant by the District Court on November 25, 1980. On December 4, 1980, he filed his motion to alter or amend the summary judgment. He noticed the hearing on the motion for December 15, 1980. Under Rule 59(g), the motion was timely filed, but under this subsection, the hearing was set 1 day too late. The time for hearing expired December 14, 1980. Therefore, the time for filing a notice of appeal began running that date and his appeal which was filed on February 4, 1981, was not timely and was dismissed. Malinak v. Safeco Title Ins. Co. of Idaho, 203 M 69, 661 P2d 12, 39 St. Rep. 2046 (1982).

After the plaintiff and defendant stipulated to costs in a quiet title action, an amended judgment was entered by the District Court on October 29, 1981, but on November 13, the plaintiff filed a motion to amend judgment. On appeal by the plaintiff, the Supreme Court held that inasmuch as the motion to amend judgment was not timely filed, the motion did not suspend the running of the time for appeal, and that because the running of the time for filing an appeal had not been suspended, the notice of appeal was filed too late and the court lacked jurisdiction of the appeal. O'Connell v. Heisdorf, 202 M 89, 656 P2d 199, 39 St. Rep. 2347 (1982), followed in Estate of Stinson, 240 M 1, 782 P2d 78, 46 St. Rep. 1892 (1989).

Notice of entry of judgment against appellant was served on him on November 6, 1981. On November 20, 1981, he filed a motion to amend the findings. He did not file a notice of hearing on the motion. The motion was heard on February 1, 1982, and denied on February 2, 1982. Later in February, appellant filed a notice of appeal. The Supreme Court held that appellant's notice was not timely and dismissed the appeal. Under Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., a motion to amend a judgment is considered denied at the end of the time period in which a hearing on the motion must be held. A hearing must be held within 10 days after the motion is filed. Therefore, appellant's motion was considered denied on November 30, 1981, and the notice of appeal was not timely. Fields v. Summit Eng'r, 201 M 204, 653 P2d 1204, 39 St. Rep. 2057 (1982).

When a motion to vacate and set aside a portion of a judgment was made 46 days beyond the authority of Rule 52, M.R.Civ.P., it did not suspend the running of time permitted to file appeal under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Appellant's contention that Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., was applicable did not operate to vest the Supreme Court with jurisdiction to hear the appeal. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown v. Fry, 176 M 58, 575 P2d 1325 (1978).

Time Limits to Be Followed — Jurisdictional Requirement: The parties' marriage was dissolved on April 14, 1980, and a portion of the decree provided that the wife was to receive monthly payments equal to one-half the value of stock. On April 23, 1980, the wife moved under Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P., to amend the findings and judgment to correct the valuation of the stock. The motion was properly noticed for hearing under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. On May 1, 1980, the judge continued the hearing for 30 days upon written stipulation of counsel. The hearing was held on June 5, 1980, but no order was entered. The court finally held a later hearing after the wife again moved on May 4, 1981, and in an order dated October 7, 1981, denied her request. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that once the Rule 52(b) motion was made, the time limits of Rule 59(g) applied and a hearing had to be held within 10 days or the court could continue the hearing not to exceed 30 days. In this case, the court held the hearing 5 days later than the extended date and thereby lost jurisdiction of the motion. Further, the court did not rule on the motion within the required 15 days. Because the time for the wife's appeal began to run on the last day that the District Court could have ruled on the Rule 52 motion, her appeal was not timely and the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Winn, 200 M 402, 651 P2d 51, 39 St. Rep. 1831 (1982), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Notice of Appeal Divests Trial Court of Jurisdiction to Amend Judgment: After respondent moved to amend the judgment of the District Court, appellant filed a notice of appeal. The filing of the notice of appeal deprived the trial court of jurisdiction to amend the judgment. However, under 3-2-204, the Supreme Court can return jurisdiction to the trial court. United Farm Agency v. Blome, 198 M 435, 646 P2d 1205, 39 St. Rep. 1115 (1982).

Service of Notice of Entry of Judgment by Mail — Effective Three Days After Mailing: Notice of entry of judgment was mailed to the parties on May 21, 1980. Twelve days later the respondent filed a motion to amend findings and judgment and a motion for a new trial. Because service of a notice of entry of judgment by mail is not effective until 3 days after the mailing under Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P., the motions were timely. Wilson v. Wilson, 198 M 147, 645 P2d 393, 39 St. Rep. 828 (1982).

Challenge of Decree and Property Settlement After Six Years — Res Judicata: A property settlement and decree entered in 1974 cannot be set aside in 1980 on the grounds of unconscionability. The failure of the spouse to appeal the court's decree in 1974 has rendered the issue res judicata. Hadford v. Hadford, 194 M 518, 633 P2d 1181, 38 St. Rep. 1308 (1981).

Proposed Findings and Conclusions Adopted Verbatim: Notwithstanding the duty imposed in Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., upon a District Court to "find the facts specially and state separately its conclusions of law thereon" is not automatically breached when a court adopts verbatim the proposed findings and conclusions submitted by the prevailing party, especially where, as here, the District Judge invited both parties to submit proposed findings and conclusions prior to making his decision. Adopted findings, though not the product of the District Judge's mind, are formally his and will stand if supported by the evidence. The District Court therefore did not err in denying the petitioner's motion to amend the findings and conclusions, which motion was based upon the verbatim adoption. Billings v. P.S.C., 193 M 358, 631 P2d 1295, 38 St. Rep. 1162 (1981), followed in Sawyer-Adecor Int'l, Inc. v. Anglin, 198 M 440, 646 P2d 1194, 39 St. Rep. 1118 (1982).

Extension of Hearing Date on Motion to Amend — What Suffices for Compliance With Time Requirements: The wife appealed from an amended decree dissolving her marriage, establishing child custody and support, and dividing the property of the marriage. The appellant filed and served a motion to amend the judgment. Including 3 days for mailing, the hearing on that motion was either required to be held within 13 days or to be continued by the court within 13 days. The District Court entered an order setting a hearing date on the appellant's and respondent's motions to amend. That order was filed on the last day of the 13-day period. The order constituted a continuation of the hearing date on the motions to alter or amend. That order did set a hearing date within a 30-day period required by Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. (See 1995 amendment). The District Court then ruled on the motions to alter or amend within 5 days following the hearing. Therefore, the District Court's actions regarding the petitioner's motions to alter or amend the original decree complied with the time requirements of the rule. The amending order of the District Court was therefore valid. Tefft v. Tefft, 192 M 456, 628 P2d 1094, 38 St. Rep. 837 (1981).

Petition to Alter or Amend Judgment With Regard to Fees and Costs in Divorce Case: A petition to alter or amend a judgment must be served not later than 10 days after notice of entry of judgment, and the court was without jurisdiction to grant a petition asking for attorney's fees that was filed almost 3 months after entry of an order that required each party to pay his own fees and costs. McDonald v. McDonald, 183 M 312, 599 P2d 356 (1979), followed in Haugen v. Nelson, 240 M 28, 782 P2d 901, 46 St. Rep. 1915 (1989), and in Estate of Stinson, 240 M 1, 782 P2d 78, 46 St. Rep. 1892 (1989).

Practice of Additur: The practice of additur by the District Courts is prohibited notwithstanding the court's dictum in Ferguson v. Town Pump, Inc., 177 M 122, 580 P2d 915 (1978). Bohrer v. Clark, 180 M 233, 590 P2d 117, 35 St. Rep. 1878 (1978), affirmed in Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700, 53 St. Rep. 17 (1996).

Ruling on Motion — Mandatory Time Limitation: It was error for the court to rule on a motion to alter or amend judgment after expiration of the 15-day time period measured from the date of submission of the motion. Kelly v. Sell & Sell Paint Contractors, 175 M 440, 574 P2d 1002 (1978), affirmed in Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700, 53 St. Rep. 17 (1996).

Rule Mandatory — Untimely Order Void: Order granting motion to alter or amend judgment was void where hearing was not held within 10 days after service as required by this rule; time and procedural limitations for motions subsequent to judgment set out in this rule are mandatory. Armstrong v. High Crest Oils, Inc., 164 M 187, 520 P2d 1081 (1974).

Motion for Modification of Paternity Decree — Requirements of Rules Not Satisfied — Jurisdiction Precluded: Where a husband filed a "motion for modification of divorce decree" more than 4 years after the divorce in an attempt to relitigate the issue of his paternity of the children of the parties, the District Court was without jurisdiction to hear the petition. As the petition on its face did not seek relief under Rules 59 or 60, M.R.Civ.P., and was based on facts which predated the original finding of paternity, which finding was not appealed, the District Court had no jurisdiction to modify its previous order. Butler v. Brownlee, 152 M 453, 451 P2d 836 (1969).

Additur Not Allowed: This rule did not give the District Court power to order an additur to a condemnation award as a condition of denying motion for new trial. Highway Comm'n v. Schmidt, 143 M 505, 391 P2d 692 (1964).

Condemnation Proceedings — Rule Inapplicable to Award by Commissioners: Subdivision (e) of this rule (now subdivision (g)) did not apply in determining right of District Court to alter or amend an award of damages as found by the report of commissioners in condemnation proceeding under 70-30-303 after the award had been filed with the District Court and notice thereof given to the parties by the clerk as the commissioners' award was not a judgment. State ex rel. Frelich v. District Court, 141 M 169, 375 P2d 1016 (1962).

Former Rule 60. Relief from judgment or order

No Showing of Damages or That Client Would Have Prevailed on Lost Appeal of Marital Dissolution Case — Failure of Legal Malpractice Claim: Richards brought a malpractice claim against an attorney who negligently failed to appeal Richards' marriage dissolution proceeding prior to the deadline for appeal. The District Court dismissed the claim, ruling that the court, rather than a jury, should decide the consequences of the attorney's failure to file the appeal and that the lost appeal would not have succeeded. Richards appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Even though the attorney admitted malpractice by allowing the claim to expire, the attorney contended that no damages occurred. When a malpractice claim changes to the question of whether an attorney perfected an appeal, the analysis shifts from one of fact to one of law, which is properly considered by the court rather than a jury. The question of the probable outcome of a lost appeal also presents a question of law for the trial court to decide based on the special expertise required to analyze the relevant law and rules of appellate procedure, and the review is limited to the transcript and record of the underlying action and arguments presented by counsel. Here, there was substantial credible evidence regarding primary parenting time, valuation of the marital estate, and child support payments showing that Richards' lost appeal would not have resulted in a successful or favorable outcome. Further, one element of a legal malpractice claim requires a showing that the attorney's conduct proximately caused damages suffered by the claimant. Because Richards failed to show that the lost appeal would have been successful, he also failed to show that the attorney's breach caused any damages, so the malpractice claim failed. Richards v. Knuchel, 2005 MT 133, 327 M 249, 115 P3d 189 (2005).

Lack of Hearing Record on Support Modification — Vacation of District Court Decree Required: Pamela filed a motion to amend the decree dissolving her marriage, in order to increase child support payments, and a motion to hold her ex-husband, Earl, in contempt for failure to pay child support. The District Court held a hearing, which Earl did not attend. Based upon the hearing, of which no record was made, the District Court modified the decree by increasing Earl's child support payments. Earl was also ordered to pay Pamela's attorney fees and costs. In response, Earl filed a motion under this rule for relief from the judgment, but that motion was denied when the District Court failed to rule. Citing Malley v. Malley, 190 M 141, 619 P2d 531 (1980), the Supreme Court held that without a record, the Supreme Court could not determine the change in circumstances justifying the amended decree and Earl was thereby denied effective appellate review. The District Court's order was vacated, and the case was remanded for a hearing on the merits of Pamela's motion. In re Marriage of Long, 268 M 187, 885 P2d 533, 51 St. Rep. 1252 (1994).

New Trial Denied — Lack of Diligence: The defendants sought a new trial on the basis of newly discovered evidence indicating that the valuation of real property reached by the trial court was $13,000 too high. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's denial of the motion, holding that the defendants had not demonstrated that the evidence could not have been discovered in time for the trial with exercise of due diligence on their part. Brunner v. LaCasse, 241 M 102, 785 P2d 210, 47 St. Rep. 117 (1990).

Motion for Modification of Child Custody Decree: Wife filed for modification of a child custody order, and the subsequent order issued by the court affected only the terms of the original custody decree that relate to the notice required prior to visitation and to allocation of transportation costs. In response to husband's argument that wife's motion for modification should be denied because it was not properly filed under the time limitations established in Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., or this rule, the court held that the motion was filed under 40-4-217, which contains no time limitations. In re Marriage of Chase, 237 M 224, 772 P2d 1264, 46 St. Rep. 754 (1989), replacing previous opinion at 46 St. Rep. 540 (1989).

Appeal Not Timely: When a motion to vacate and set aside a portion of a judgment was made 46 days beyond the authority of Rule 52, M.R.Civ.P., it did not suspend the running of time permitted to file appeal under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Appellant's contention that Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., was applicable did not operate to vest the Supreme Court with jurisdiction to hear the appeal. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown v. Fry, 176 M 58, 575 P2d 1325 (1978).

Loss of Jurisdiction — Divorce Proceeding: The court exceeded its jurisdiction by determining paternity after entry of the original divorce decree. Relief was not sought under Rule 59 or Rule 60 as it could have been. Butler v. Brownlee, 152 M 453, 451 P2d 836 (1969).

Former Rule 60(a). Clerical mistakes

Erroneous Denial of Removal of Assessment of Postjudgment Interest When Principal Paid by City Within Two Years: Funke was awarded damages for injuries incurred when a deck collapsed, including 5% liability against the city of Polson. The District Court ordered that the judgment would bear interest at 10% from the date of the original judgment. The city paid its portion of the judgment within 2 years and filed a motion under Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., to amend the judgment on grounds that it was a clerical error to charge the city interest when the principal was paid within 2 years of judgment as provided in 2-9-317. The motion was denied and the city appealed. The Supreme Court agreed that the District Court properly denied the Rule 60(a) motion because the attempt to shoehorn consideration of 2-9-317 into the clerical error category failed, inasmuch as the District Court did not intend to apply the statute when the judgment was entered, and because the city had not yet paid the judgment, application of the statute at that time was premature. However, the District Court's failure to subsequently apply 2-9-317 was an error of law. When the city paid the judgment within 2 years of entry of judgment, the portion of the judgment requiring the city to pay interest was rendered invalid. Thus, the assessment of postjudgment interest against the city was stricken and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Funke v. Estate of Shultz, 2009 MT 411, 353 M 492, 223 P3d 839 (2009).

Motion for Posttrial Relief Untimely — Posttrial Motion to Correct Clerical Mistakes Proper — Motion for Posttrial Relief Not Substitute for Appeal: Following notice of entry of judgment in a marriage dissolution trial, the husband had 10 days to file a motion under Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., but missed the deadline by 2 days, so the motion was properly ruled untimely. The husband had 30 days to file a notice of appeal, but the untimely Rule 59 motion did not toll the time for appeal, and that time also expired. The decree became final, subject only to the husband's motion for relief under the various provisions of Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P. The District Court erred in not applying this rule to correct clerical mistakes in the findings of facts. However, a Rule 60 motion may not be used as a substitute for appeal, so the husband's Rule 60 motion essentially seeking to set aside the decree based on insufficient evidence was properly denied. In re Marriage of Schoenthal, 2005 MT 24, 326 M 15, 106 P3d 1162 (2005).

No Time Limit on Court's Correcting Clerical Error if There Is No Currently Pending Appeal: At a bench trial, the lower court ruled that a disputed parking easement between the parties did not contain a certain portion of a lot. However, in the court's written opinion, the court cited the easement as containing that portion of the lot that the court's findings had delineated as not being part of the easement. The Franks brought a motion for relief from judgment based on a clerical error by the court. The lower court denied the Franks' motion without explanation, and the Franks appealed. Muri argued that the Franks had not timely filed their appeal because it was filed after the time for filing an appeal had elapsed. The Supreme Court stated that the lower court had clearly made a clerical error in its description of the easement and had abused its discretion in refusing to amend its ruling. The Supreme Court held that under this rule, unless there was a currently pending appeal, the rule had to be interpreted literally to mean that the lower court could correct its clerical error and therefore the time to file an appeal did not apply. The Supreme Court remanded the case and ordered the lower court to correct its error. Muri v. Frank, 2001 MT 29, 304 M 171, 18 P3d 1022 (2001). On remand, the District Court improperly made new findings of fact that conflicted with the unchallenged findings upon which the Supreme Court based its decision in Muri, id. Because plaintiff did not appeal the findings from the first appeal, the District Court had no authority to ignore the law of the case and reconsider its findings on remand. Muri v. Frank, 2003 MT 316, 318 M 269, 80 P3d 77 (2003).

Judge's Answer to Jury Question Held Not External Influence — Juror Affidavits Not Proper — Motions to Change Verdict Denied: In a civil suit, the special verdict form contained question #5 that read: "Do you find by clear and convincing evidence that Defendants acted either fraudulently and or with malice?" This question was taken nearly verbatim from plaintiff's proposed verdict form except that the proposed form contained a slash ("/") between the "and" and "or" in the question. Plaintiff did not object to this clerical error at or prior to the time that the form was submitted to the jury. During jury deliberations, the jury submitted a question to the judge stating: "Do we have to differencateate [sic] Between [sic] fraud and malice in #5." The judge answered "No" to the jury question, and neither plaintiff nor defendants objected to the answer at the time. After the trial, plaintiff filed alternative posttrial motions requesting the court to order that the answer to question #5 be "Yes", to set aside the jury verdict on question #5, and to either enter judgment against defendant on the issue of punitive damages as a matter of law or grant a new trial on the issue of punitive damages. The motions were based on affidavits of eight jurors alleging mistake or confusion based on the court's "No" answer. The District Court denied the motions. The Supreme Court upheld the denial, determining that plaintiff waived her claims of error by failing to object to the special verdict form submitted to the jury; that based on the "invited error rule", plaintiff participated in the error by submitting the conjunctive-disjunctive question; and that the affidavits were not proper because the jury had not been subject to external influences. Sandman v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 1998 MT 286, 291 M 456, 969 P2d 277, 55 St. Rep. 1165 (1998).

Oral Pronouncement as Legally Effective Sentence — Correction of Error in Written Judgment by Nunc Pro Tunc Order — Due Process and Double Jeopardy Rights Not Violated: The oral pronouncement of sentence is the legally effective sentence. The written judgment and commitment serves as evidence of the sentence orally pronounced. In the event of a conflict between the oral and written sentence, the oral controls. The sentencing court may correct an error in a written judgment and commitment by a nunc pro tunc order, pursuant to 46-18-117 (now repealed), to accurately reflect what was orally pronounced at the sentencing hearing. Absent evidence of a tangible detriment or concrete injury to defendant, a clarifying nunc pro tunc order does not jeopardize a defendant's due process rights or constitute double jeopardy. St. v. Lane, 1998 MT 76, 288 M 286, 957 P2d 9, 55 St. Rep. 311 (1998), overruling St. v. Enfinger, 222 M 438, 722 P2d 1170 (1986), St. v. Wirtala, 231 M 264, 752 P2d 177 (1988), St. v. Mason, 253 M 419, 833 P2d 1058 (1992), and St. v. Graveley, 275 M 519, 915 P2d 184 (1996), to the extent that those cases held that the written judgment and commitment, rather than the oral pronouncement of sentence, was to be considered the final, valid order. Lane was followed in St. v. Horton, 2001 MT 100, 305 M 242, 25 P3d 886 (2001), and St. v. Ringewold, 2001 MT 185, 306 M 229, 32 P3d 729 (2001). The Supreme Court amended former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), to reflect the Lane decision in In re Amending Rule 5 of the Mont. Rules of Appellate Procedure, 55 St. Rep. 1267 (1998). See also St. v. Cleveland, 2018 MT 199, 392 Mont. 338, 423 P.3d 1074.

Notice or Motion Not Required to Correct Clerical Error in Order — Reentry of Judgment Not Required: The District Court entered judgment terminating parental rights but misspelled the father's first name. One week later, the court issued an amended order correcting the clerical error but made no other changes. The state did not notify appellant of entry of the amended judgment. Seventeen months after the termination of parental rights, appellant served notice of the amended order on the state and filed a notice of appeal from the amended order based on former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), contending that the state never entered the amended judgment and that therefore the 60-day appeal period did not run until the amended judgment was entered by the appellant's attorney. Under this rule, the District Court has inherent power at any time to correct clerical errors in its own judgments in order to ensure that the record speaks the truth and reflects the court's decision. A notice or motion is not required to rectify a clerical error, nor must the order that makes the correction be denominated a nunc pro tunc order. An error may also be corrected by the issuance of a new order that does not contain the clerical error and that entirely replaces the old order. In the present case, appellant was properly notified when judgment was entered and the original order was handed down. The state was not required to enter judgment again after the amended new order was issued or to notify appellant of the entry of the amended order in order to keep the appeal clock running. Because appellant failed to file a notice of appeal within 60 days of the entry of judgment, the appeal was dismissed as untimely. Clerical Correction of Error in Calculating Child Support Obligation: This rule was an appropriate vehicle for correcting a miscalculation in the net available resources to be considered in setting the amount of child support obligation. In re Marriage of Fronk v. Wilson, 250 M 291, 819 P2d 1275, 48 St. Rep. 936 (1991).

Corrective Order — Not Modification of Judgment: In an action to modify a final decree of dissolution distributing a marital estate, the trial court, under the authority of Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., issued a corrective order to amend the judgment to express what was actually decided and to grant the relief originally intended. The order was not a modification of judgment subject to Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. The court did not have a change of mind or correct a judicial error. In re Marriage of Cannon, 215 M 272, 697 P2d 901, 42 St. Rep. 348 (1985).

Timeliness of Motion — Clerical Errors to Be Corrected at Any Time: The parties' marriage was dissolved on April 14, 1980, and a portion of the decree provided that the wife was to receive monthly payments equal to one-half the value of stock. On April 23, 1980, the wife moved under Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P., to amend the findings and judgment to correct the valuation of the stock. The motion was properly noticed for hearing under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. On May 1, 1980, the judge continued the hearing for 30 days upon written stipulation of counsel. The hearing was held on June 5, 1980, but no order was entered. The wife moved to revalue the stock again on January 22, 1981. The court held a hearing on May 4, 1981, and in an order dated October 7, 1981, denied her request. On appeal the wife contended that her January 22 motion should be considered a motion under Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., on the grounds of newly discovered evidence. Montana's Rule 60(b) requires the motion to be within 60 days following the entry of judgment. However, it can be considered if the relief could have been granted because the substance of the motion brought it under Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P. This was foreclosed here by the District Court ruling on the motion on its merits. The Supreme Court did resolve an apparent conflict between Rule 60(a) and Rule 60(c), M.R.Civ.P., by holding that when a clerical mistake occurs in a judgment, order, or other part of a court record and the error is admitted or can be corrected or clarified without inequity or prejudice to a party, the error can be corrected by the court at any time, either nunc pro tunc or by a new order. In re Marriage of Winn, 200 M 402, 651 P2d 51, 39 St. Rep. 1831 (1982), overruled in part on other grounds by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729, and followed in In re Marriage of Becker, 244 M 469, 798 P2d 124, 47 St. Rep. 1729 (1990).

Amending on Remand Judgment Upheld on First Appeal — Law of Case — Abuse of Discretion: In an original judgment of October 31, 1979, plaintiffs were given the alternatives of either repairing a damaged irrigation ditch or paying damages of $5,500. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court, and in Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981), the court found substantial evidence to support the District Court's findings. This became the law of the case. The case was remanded for a determination of attorney fees to be awarded to defendant. On remand, the District Court amended its conclusions and findings to omit the alternative allowing plaintiffs to repair the ditch and awarded damages without the submission of any additional evidence. On appeal, the Supreme Court found this to be an abuse of discretion, as none of the exceptions found in Rules 52(b), 60(a), or 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., applied. The court abused its discretion in not holding a hearing to determine if either alternative of the original judgment had been complied with. Marta v. Smith, 200 M 414, 650 P2d 1387, 39 St. Rep. 1839 (1982).

Lack of Findings on Marital Home Not Correctable by District Court After Time Limitations Expire: In a divorce settlement, the trial court findings contained no determination of the net worth of the parties, the net worth of the husband's medical practice, or the relative financial contributions of the two parties. The findings of fact also were inconclusive as to the value and disposal of the family home. Five months after the decree was entered, the husband petitioned for amendment, requesting award of the family home to him. Eleven months later the District Court found that it was the original intention of the court to distribute the home to the husband. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court erred in its attempt to amend the decree. Under Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., clerical errors in judgments may be corrected at any time since correction does not alter substantive rights of the parties. Here the attempted change adversely affected the wife's substantive rights by depriving her of her interest in the family home, a major asset of the marriage. Such error is judicial in nature and could not be corrected by the District Court except by motion made within the time limitations of Rules 50(b), 52(b), 59, or 60(b)(1), M.R.Civ.P. No such motion having been made, the error would have been correctable by appeal, which was never taken by either of the parties. The District Court therefore lacked jurisdiction to make the change effected by its entry of the amended findings and decree. The case was remanded. Thomas v. Thomas, 189 M 547, 617 P2d 133, 37 St. Rep. 1710 (1980).

Error in Distribution of Decedent's Estate: When the mineral rights distributed in a decree of settlement of final account and distribution of estate had been previously conveyed by sale, the District Court has jurisdiction to reopen the case to amend the decree because the District Court was without authority to distribute items which were not properly included in the inventory of the estate. In re Estate of Swandal, 179 M 429, 587 P2d 368 (1978).

Finding Equivalent to Denial of Relief: Finding that "The evidence presented does not warrant any setting aside of the default judgment. . ." was equivalent to a denial of relief under this rule. Corban v. Corban, 161 M 93, 504 P2d 985 (1972).

Contempt — Excessive Sentence Corrected: Trial court could correct a judgment imposing a term of imprisonment for contempt of court in excess of that authorized by 3-1-519 (now repealed), and this was harmless error where the correction was made within the period of a stay of execution. Niewoehner v. District Court, 142 M 1, 381 P2d 464 (1963).

Erroneous Order — Corrected Nunc Pro Tunc: Court's nunc pro tunc order correcting erroneous contempt judgment was not in violation of Supreme Court's writ because the order was made before the writ was issued. Niewoehner v. District Court, 142 M 1, 381 P2d 464 (1963).

Effect of Change Governing — Time for Correction: The test is whether on the one hand the change will make the record speak the truth as to what was actually determined or done, or intended to be determined or done by the court, or whether on the other hand it will alter such action or intended action. Where the amendment comes within the permissible class there would seem to be no reason, nor any supportable precedent, limiting by time or term the court's right to correct its record; for if the power is to be effective and do justice to parties and public it must continue until the error is called to the court's attention and corrected. Morse v. Morse, 116 M 504, 154 P2d 982 (1945).

Party Omitted From Judgment: Where findings of fact and conclusions of law declared that both plaintiff wife and minor children should share in a $15 weekly allowance as the parties had agreed, but the decree by mistake or inadvertence omitted the wife's name as a participant, the court may properly allow the amendment that she participate, under section 21-139, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), and the court's inherent power to correct errors of clerk, judge, or counsel, to speak the actual decision, either immediately or years later. Judgment must conform to verdict, decision, or findings in substantial particulars. Morse v. Morse, 116 M 504, 154 P2d 982 (1945).

Time of Correction: The District Court has power to order its judgments amended by nunc pro tunc order to correct an error which has crept into the judgment by reason of misprision on the part of the judge, clerk, or counsel and is apparent on the face of the record, so that it shall truly express what was actually decided, irrespective of the time intervening between the commission of the error and time correction order is made, provided the amendment does not change the rights fixed by the judgment as originally intended and made. State ex rel. Kruletz v. District Court, 110 M 36, 98 P2d 883 (1940).

Change of Substance — Order Void: Judgment of foreclosure of a real estate mortgage was based on a provision that if the mortgagor should default in payment of principal or interest on the note secured thereby, the whole debt should become due and collectible and all the rents and profits of the property should immediately accrue to the mortgagee. Nine months after its entry the trial court granted the mortgagor's motion to strike the clause relating to rents and profits. The order did not correct a mere clerical mistake but operated as a change of substantial rights adjudicated by the judgment. When made, the trial court had lost jurisdiction to amend or modify it; hence the order was void. Edgar St. Bank v. Long, 85 M 225, 278 P 108 (1929).

Defect in Affidavit Readily Curable: The District Court may and should, on motion to discharge a Writ of Attachment because of a defective affidavit, in furtherance of justice permit amendment of the affidavit and deny the motion, where the defect is readily amendable. Jenkins v. First Nat'l Bank, 73 M 110, 236 P 1085 (1925).

Affidavit Amended Before Answer: An affidavit, made on information and belief in support of an application for an injunction, was amendable, before demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) or answer, by substituting a verification. Claussen v. Chapin, 69 M 205, 221 P 1073 (1923).

Pleadings Amended After Default: In a divorce suit where the plaintiff inadvertently alleges that the defendant, instead of the plaintiff, has been a resident of the state for more than 1 year prior to the commencement of the action, a mistake apparently affecting the question of jurisdiction, he will be allowed after a default judgment has been entered and after the expiration of the 6 months' limitation, to amend his complaint by substituting the word "plaintiff" for the word "defendant". Eadie v. Eadie, 44 M 391, 120 P 239 (1911). See Ivanhoff v. Teale, 47 M 115, 130 P 972 (1913).

Attachment Proceeding Amendable: The procuring of an attachment and the steps necessary therefor is a proceeding within the spirit of the Code, and if such proceeding is defective the same may be amended in furtherance of justice like any other proceeding. Wilson v. Barbour, 21 M 176, 53 P 315 (1898); Herbst Importing Co. v. Hogan, 16 M 384, 41 P 135 (1895); Newell v. Whitwell, 16 M 243, 40 P 866 (1895); Muth v. Erwin, 14 M 227, 36 P 43 (1894); Josephi v. Mady Clothing Co., 13 M 195, 33 P 1 (1893); Magee v. Fogerty, 6 M 237, 11 P 668 (1886); Langstaff v. Miles, 5 M 554, 6 P 356 (1885); Pierse v. Miles, 5 M 549, 6 P 347 (1885).

Amendment of Void Process: Section 93-3905, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P.), did not confer power upon the court to amend a void jurisdictional writ or process. Sharman v. Huot, 20 M 555, 52 P 558 (1898), distinguished in Kipp v. Burton, 29 M 96, 74 P 85 (1903); Choate v. Spencer, 13 M 127, 32 P 651 (1893), distinguished in Kipp v. Burton, 29 M 96, 74 P 85 (1903).

GENERAL

No Error in Denial of Motion for Relief Given Live Arbitration Controversy: After defendant decided to cut the length of the school year by 1 week, plaintiff filed a motion to compel arbitration on the issue because of the 40-hour cut in wages of plaintiff's bargaining unit employees. Defendant argued that it had the sole authority to reduce the annual salaries of all employees and moved for dismissal of the case. The District Court denied defendant's motion and granted plaintiff's motion to compel arbitration. Rather than appeal the order to compel arbitration, defendant filed a motion under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., for relief from the order on grounds that the matter was moot. Following the order, the parties had agreed to settle a separate grievance concerning a pay increase, but the settlement did not address arbitration. The District Court concluded that the issues in controversy were not moot and denied defendant's motion. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. A live case or controversy regarding arbitration existed thoughout the proceedings in District Court. The case was not moot when the District Court issued its arbitration order, so the order was not void under Rule 60(b)(4), M.R.Civ.P., and denial of defendant's motion for relief was not error. Greater Missoula Area Federation of Early Childhood Educators & Related Personnel v. Child Start, Inc., 2009 MT 362, 353 M 201, 219 P3d 881 (2009).

Dismissal Without Prejudice — Interlocutory Order: While a wrongful death claim was pending, the insurance company filed an action seeking a declaratory judgment that there was no liability coverage for motor vehicle accidents under the driver's policies with the company. The District Court dismissed the action without prejudice, and the insurance company appealed. The Supreme Court held that the order dismissing the action without prejudice was an interlocutory order and was not appealable in the absence of special circumstances. Because special circumstances were not present, the appeal was dismissed without prejudice. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Bodell, 2008 MT 363, 346 M 414, 197 P3d 913 (2008).

Contempt Appropriate for Failure of Party to Abide by Court-Ordered Stipulation — Penalty Reduced to Statutory Maximum: The District Court held defendant in contempt for failure to abide by a stipulation entered by the court ordering Boles to remove a metal roof from her barn because it violated a subdivision's restrictive covenants. The court further ordered that defendant would be charged $300 for each day past the deadline for removal of the roof. Defendant appealed on grounds that the court did not have jurisdiction because defendant was not a named party or served as an original party and because defendant was coerced into signing the stipulation under the guise of changing the covenants to accommodate the roof. The Supreme Court noted that defendant's motion would have been more appropriately framed as a Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., motion seeking relief from judgment because the stipulation was a final order and agreed with the District Court's conclusion that there was no reason under Rule 60(b) to relieve defendant from the final judgment. Even though defendant was not a named party or served as an original party, the District Court did have jurisdiction because defendant had appeared in the case many times without raising the jurisdiction issue at the initial appearance or response, and once defendant recognized the court's jurisdiction, the defense of no personal jurisdiction was waived. Additionally, there was no credible evidence that defendant was coerced into signing the stipulation. Therefore, the contempt conviction was affirmed. However, the Supreme Court did vacate the portion of the order that defendant would be charged $300 for each day past the deadline for removal of the roof because a sanction for contempt that seeks to compel the contemnor to perform an act may not exceed $500, so the sanction was remitted to a maximum of $500. El Dorado Heights Homeowners' Ass'n v. Dewitt, 2008 MT 199, 344 M 77, 186 P3d 1249 (2008).

Standard of Review of Grant or Denial of Rule 60(b) Motion — Dual Lords Standards Clarified: As a general rule, the Supreme Court's review of a District Court's decision to grant or deny a Rule 60(b) motion is for abuse of discretion. One exception to the general rule is when a movant seeks relief from a default judgment, in which case the Supreme Court will apply the two standards of review set out in Lords v. Newman, 212 M 359, 688 P2d 290 (1984). When a trial court has granted a motion to set aside the default and opened up the action for trial on the merits, the ruling will be set aside only upon a showing of manifest abuse, but when the trial court has denied a motion to set aside the default, only a slight abuse is sufficient to reverse the order refusing to set aside the default. However, the Lords standards are based on policy considerations identified in each case with respect to default judgments and should not be applied universally because there is no one set standard of review to be applied in all cases. Essex Ins. Co. v. Moose's Saloon, Inc., 2007 MT 202, 338 M 423, 166 P3d 451 (2007), overruling Wright Oil & Tire Co. v. Goodrich, 284 M 6, 942 P2d 128 (1997), Calcaterra v. Mont. Resources, 1998 MT 187, 289 M 424, 962 P2d 590 (1998), In re Marriage of Zacher, 2004 MT 249, 323 M 54, 98 P3d 309 (2004), and Wombold v. Associates Financial Serv. Co. of Mont., Inc., 2004 MT 397, 325 M 290, 104 P3d 1080 (2004), to the extent that those cases state or suggest that the Lords standards apply to all Rule 60(b) motions, and followed in Engelsberger v. Lake County, 2007 MT 211, 339 M 22, 167 P3d 902 (2007).

Questions of Fact Regarding Ambiguous Contract and Damages — Summary Judgment Inappropriate: Upon remand of a breach of contract action in Bradley v. Crow Tribe of Indians, 2003 MT 82, 315 M 75, 67 P3d 306 (2003), the District Court granted Bradley's motion for summary judgment a second time without considering the merits of defendant's defense to the breach of contract. However, because questions of fact still existed regarding ambiguous language in the contract and potential damages, summary judgment was inappropriate, so the case was again reversed and remanded for further consideration. Bradley v. Crow Tribe of Indians, 2005 MT 309, 329 M 448, 124 P3d 1143 (2005).

Failure to Answer Complaint Not Excusable Neglect — Motion to Set Aside Default Properly Denied: Matthews filed a complaint in a wrongful discharge action, and the summons and complaint with an acknowledgment of service were forwarded to defendant's attorney. The attorney returned the acknowledgment, but the attorney's assistant failed to calendar the answer's due date and misfiled the summons and complaint in a different file. An answer was not timely filed, so Matthews sought and was granted a hearing on a default judgment and damages, but defendant's counsel did not attend the hearing, and a default judgment and damages of $185,000 were entered for Matthews. Defendant moved to set aside the default, but the District Court did not rule on the motion within 60 days, so the motion was considered denied. On appeal, defendant argued that the motion to set aside the default should have been granted on grounds of excusable neglect. However, by the time of the default hearing, the lack of attention to Matthew's complaint was a serious disregard of the judicial process and could not be considered excusable neglect, nor did the situation demonstrate extraordinary circumstances justifying setting aside the default judgment under this rule. Further, the actions of defense counsel did not constitute gross negligence or actual misconduct, and defendant was not completely innocent in the matter, so any neglect of counsel was properly charged to defendant. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to set aside the judgment, and the default judgment was affirmed. Matthews v. Don K Chevrolet, 2005 MT 164, 327 M 456, 115 P3d 201 (2005), applying the standard for setting aside a default in Blume v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 242 M 465, 791 P2d 784 (1990). See also Lords v. Newman, 212 M 359, 688 P2d 290 (1984).

Appropriate Standards for Setting Aside Entry of Default and Default Judgment: Defendant failed to respond to a complaint within 20 days, and default was entered in favor of plaintiff. Defendant sought to set aside the entry of default under the good cause standard provided under Cribb v. Matlock Communications, Inc., 236 M 27, 768 P2d 337 (1989). Plaintiff contended that in order to meet the good cause standard, a party would have to meet the higher excusable neglect standard set out in Blume v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 242 M 465, 791 P2d 784 (1990). The District Court held that the Blume standard applied and that defendant's neglect was inexcusable, so default judgment was entered. On appeal, the Supreme Court took the opportunity to clarify the applicable standards. When the issue is the setting aside of a default judgment under this rule, either alone or in conjunction with an entry of default, the appropriate standard is the Blume excusable neglect standard. When the issue is the setting aside of an entry of default under Rule 55(c), M.R.Civ.P., as opposed to a default judgment, the appropriate standard is the Cribb good cause standard. This case involved setting aside an entry of default, so the court applied the Cribb standard. Defendant failed to show that its default was not willful, instead professing ignorance in the face of repeated warnings that if no answer was filed, a default would be taken. The Cribb standard also compels consideration of the prejudice to plaintiff and whether defendant had a meritorious defense. Plaintiff had a right to be apprised of defendant's defense in a timely manner, and defendant should have raised those claims in a timely fashion rather than ignore plaintiff's repeated attempts to elicit a responsive pleading. Defendant was correct that the proper standard to be applied in this case was the Cribb standard, but defendant nevertheless failed to show good cause to set aside entry of default under that standard. Thus, even though the District Court applied the wrong standard, it reached the correct result for the wrong reason, and the Supreme Court affirmed the default judgment. Essex Ins. Co. v. Jaycie, Inc., 2004 MT 278, 323 M 231, 99 P3d 651 (2004), followed in Peak Dev., LLP v. Juntunen, 2005 MT 82, 326 M 409, 110 P3d 13 (2005). See also Engelsberger v. Abuse of Discretion in Reopening and Amending Final Dissolution Decree Absent Evidence of Fraud or Newly Discovered Evidence: Following judgment in a dissolution proceeding, the husband moved to reopen the case on grounds that the wife's testimony constituted fraud and that the husband had newly discovered evidence that was not available at trial. The District Court reopened the case and held that the husband was not responsible for the wife's dental bills, even though the husband had agreed to pay them. The wife appealed. The record showed that the wife used the present tense in answering a question regarding whether she was providing medical coverage for the husband, even though she had terminated coverage on the husband over a year before. However, the deficient question and answer did not rise to the level of fraud because the husband: (1) knew that coverage had been discontinued and failed to object to the inaccurate answer; (2) was not misled by the response; and (3) was not deprived of the opportunity to rebut the testimony or to present his case. Further, he admitted at a postdissolution hearing that he had no new evidence. Thus, the conditions were not sufficient to justify the reopening of the judgment, and the District Court committed reversible error in reopening and amending the final decree. The Supreme Court remanded with instructions to reinstate the final decree. In re Marriage of Weber, 2004 MT 211, 322 M 341, 96 P3d 716 (2004).

Failure of Defendants to Monitor Litigation — Relief From Default Judgment Properly Denied: Although default judgments are not favored, litigants nevertheless have a duty to monitor litigation. Here, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to set aside a default judgment when defendants: (1) knew that litigation was proceeding; (2) knew that a status conference had been scheduled but failed to attend in person or to hire an attorney to appear in their behalf; (3) failed to notify the court or the opposing party of their intention to miss the conference; (4) were aware that service upon the listed post-office box was considered effective service for all matters regarding the litigation; and (5) neglected to notify the court of a change of address. Caplis v. Caplis, 2004 MT 145, 321 M 450, 91 P3d 1282 (2004), distinguished in In re Marriage of Wendt, 2014 MT 174, 375 Mont. 388, 329 P.3d 567, in which the Supreme Court declined to allow for a default judgment in a parenting plan proceeding solely on the basis of a party's absence at mediation.

Failure to Litigate Claims Justifying Dismissal of Counterclaims With Prejudice — Lack of Specific Findings on Counterclaims Not Erroneous: Defendants failed to litigate the claims against them, resulting in default judgment in plaintiffs' favor and dismissal of defendants' counterclaims with prejudice. On appeal, defendants asserted that the District Court committed reversible error in failing to mention the counterclaims and enter general findings from which the Supreme Court could determine whether the counterclaims had merit. The Supreme Court affirmed dismissal of the counterclaims. Failure to litigate the claims justified dismissal of the counterclaims with prejudice, and entry of the default judgment on the issues in the complaint also served to settle any compulsory counterclaims arising out of the transaction or occurrence that was the subject of the suit. Further, the District Court did not err in failing to make specific findings regarding the counterclaims because the counterclaims were considered dismissed and res judicata upon entry of the default judgment in favor of plaintiffs. Caplis v. Caplis, 2004 MT 145, 321 M 450, 91 P3d 1282 (2004).

Improper Assumption That Defense Verdict in Underlying Negligence Action Precludes Subsequent Unfair Trade Practices Claims — Reversible Error: Plaintiff was involved in an automobile accident when an employee of the Goosebill Ranch struck a vehicle driven by the Cloutiers and then struck plaintiff's vehicle, which was pushed across an intersection and collided with a truck that was proceeding through the intersection. Plaintiff sued Goosebill Ranch for negligence, but the jury returned a verdict for the ranch, and plaintiff appealed. The Cloutiers also sued Goosebill Ranch in a separate action, and in that case, the jury found that the ranch was negligent and awarded the damages to the Cloutiers. The damages were paid by the defendant insurance company. While appeal of plaintiff's negligence case was pending, plaintiff settled, and the judgment against plaintiff was released as part of the settlement, but plaintiff reserved the right to bring a bad faith action against that insurer. Plaintiff then brought an unfair trade practices claim against the insurers, asserting violation of 33-18-242 and alleging claims for outrage or intentional infliction of severe emotional distress. The District Court held that the initial jury verdict for Goosebill Ranch provided the insurers with a reasonable basis defense to plaintiff's subsequent unfair trade practices claim and that plaintiff could not bring a statutory bad faith action claiming liability was reasonably clear when the jury had decided the opposite, so plaintiff's claim was dismissed. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The District Court's assumption that the unfair trade practices claim sought to relitigate the underlying claim and that the issues in both claims were the same was incorrect because the issues were in fact separate. An unfair trade practices claim is considered an independent cause of action. The District Court's reasoning that an unfair trade practices claimant must first establish liability in an underlying claim and that an adverse jury verdict defeats the claim was also erroneous because under 33-18-242, a settlement of the underlying claim is sufficient to allow an unfair trade practices claim, and a defense verdict in the underlying negligence suit was not tantamount to a finding that the insurer did not engage in unfair trade practices. Further, a ruling that a defense verdict provided a reasonable basis defense to a subsequent unfair trade practices claim as a matter of law was also erroneous because insurers would then be encouraged to obtain defense verdicts at any cost to shield themselves from subsequent unfair trade practices claims. Thus, a defense verdict in the underlying negligence claim did not collaterally estop plaintiff from pursuing an unfair trade practices claim. Last, plaintiff's failure to raise the issue of insurer misconduct in a motion under this rule in the underlying negligence case did not preclude pursuit of an unfair trade practices claim because the unfair trade practices claims were not litigated in the underlying case and were not issues that should have been litigated in the negligence suit for personal injuries. No Abuse of Discretion in Granting Marriage Dissolution Default Judgment Given Failure to Establish Good Cause to Set Aside Default: The wife Florence petitioned for a legal separation to which her husband William did not respond. The District Court subsequently entered a default judgment against William, who appealed. The Supreme Court noted that default judgments are not favored and that a finding of even a slight abuse of discretion warrants setting aside a default judgment if good cause is shown. The court then applied the criteria in In re Marriage of McDonald, 261 M 466, 863 P2d 401 (1993), to determine whether William established good cause, which include whether: (1) the defaulting party proceeded with diligence; (2) the defaulting party's neglect was excusable; (3) the defaulting party has a meritorious defense to the claim; and (4) the judgment, if permitted to stand, will injure the defaulting party. William met the first and third criteria, but his neglect was not excusable, nor could he show that default would result in injury. Having failed to meet the McDonald good cause criteria, the court declined to address possible relief under this rule, and default judgment was affirmed. In re Marriage of Shannon, 2004 MT 25, 319 M 357, 84 P3d 645 (2004), distinguishing In re Marriage of Winckler, 2000 MT 116, 299 M 428, 2 P3d 229 (2000).

Deficiency Judgment Embraced Within Assignment Order Seeking to Enforce That Judgment — Appeal of Assignment Order Divesting District Court of Jurisdiction to Address Motion to Set Aside Deficiency Judgment: Andersen executed a promissory note in favor of the Alpine Buffalo, Elk and Llama Ranch, Inc. (Alpine), and secured the note with real property. When no payments were made, Alpine received a judgment and foreclosure decree. After Andersen's property was sold, Alpine also received a deficiency judgment in the amount still owing. Andersen neither appealed the judgment nor made payment. Alpine later learned that Andersen was plaintiff in a pending malpractice claim against her former attorney, so Alpine sought and received an assignment of the prospective proceeds from that action. Andersen appealed the assignment order, and on the same day moved to set aside the deficiency judgment pursuant to this rule, claiming that the judgment was improperly based on the value of the property from the Sheriff's sale rather than the fair market value of the property. The District Court declined to address Andersen's motion under this rule on grounds that the appeal of the assignment order divested the court of jurisdiction. The Supreme Court affirmed. The assignment order and the motion to set aside the deficiency judgment were inextricably intertwined. The motion under this rule challenged the validity of the very deficiency judgment on which the appealed assignment order was based and that the assignment order sought to enforce. The District Court did not err in finding that appeal of the assignment order divested the court of its jurisdiction to address the motion to set aside the deficiency judgment. Alpine Buffalo, Elk & Llama Ranch, Inc. v. Andersen, 2001 MT 307, 307 M 509, 38 P3d 815 (2001), following McCormick v. McCormick, 168 M 136, 541 P2d 765 (1975).

Change in Decisional Law Not Extraordinary Circumstance to Allow Reopening Law of Case: Calcaterra's initial wrongful death action failed because Calcaterra did not raise a genuine issue of material fact regarding whether her husband's employer caused his death through an intentional act or omission. Relying on Schmidt v. St., 286 M 98, 951 P2d 23 (1997), the Supreme Court affirmed in Calcaterra v. Mont. Resources, 1998 MT 187, 289 M 424, 962 P2d 590 (1998), citing the proposition that proof of negligence was insufficient to avoid the exclusive remedy provided in the Workers' Compensation Act. However, in Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990 (2000), the Supreme Court subsequently clarified the definition of intentional and malicious within the context of the Act, holding that the term should be defined according to the plain meaning in 39-71-413 and the definition of actual malice in 27-1-221. Calcaterra then moved for reconsideration under this rule, contending that Sherner changed the definition with respect to the exclusivity provision and created extraordinary circumstances justifying an exception to the doctrine of the law of the case and the reopening of the 1998 case. The Supreme Court disagreed. Both Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec. Co-op, Inc., 180 M 434, 591 P2d 196 (1979), and In re Marriage of Waters, 223 M 183, 724 P2d 726 (1986), support the conclusion that a change in decisional law subsequent to a final judgment does not constitute extraordinary circumstances that would allow reopening of that judgment. Calcaterra v. Mont. Resources, 2001 MT 193, 306 M 249, 32 P3d 764 (2001).

Motion for Relief From Judgment Barred by Res Judicata — Sanctions Appropriate: McLaughlins moved for relief from judgment under this rule, but the motion was denied by the District Court. On appeal, McLaughlins raised 14 different reasons why the District Court's judgment following remand was void. The thrust of their argument was that the District Court failed to follow statutory law when awarding punitive damages against them. In denying the motion under this rule, the District Court noted that the issues raised by the motion had been appealed three times to the Supreme Court and affirmed each time in noncite opinions and held that the motion under this rule was dilatory in nature and without substance in law or fact. On this fourth appeal, the Supreme Court agreed, finding that all of the issues raised by the McLaughlins in their motion under this rule were barred by res judicata because they either had been previously litigated or could have been litigated in prior proceedings. Further, because the latest appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds, it was frivolous pursuant to former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), so sanctions in the form of reasonable costs and attorney fees were ordered to be added to the judgment against McLaughlins on remand. Bragg v. McLaughlin, 1999 MT 320, 297 M 282, 993 P2d 662, 56 St. Rep. 1276 (1999). See also Wellman v. Wellman, 198 M 42, 643 P2d 573 (1982), Searight v. Failure to Submit Available Evidence Precluding Setting Aside of Judgment: At a 1995 hearing on child support, a father was defiantly uncooperative in providing documentation of any kind regarding his finances, assets, the provision of insurance for the children, or past child support payments. At a 1998 hearing on suspension of his driver's, hunting and fishing, and electrician's licenses, he claimed that he should be allowed to present the evidence that he refused to provide earlier. The District Court declined to reopen the 1995 hearing, and the Supreme Court affirmed. If there was anything that prevented the father from a fair submission of the controversy, it was his own defiance of the justice system. His failure to avail himself of the opportunity to present the appropriate information in 1995 and his desire to retroactively argue a factual issue in the case were not sufficient reasons to justify setting aside the judgment. His motion for a new trial was properly denied, and in the interests of finality of litigation, the Supreme Court declined to upset the judgment. Extension of Time Deadline by Rule Inapplicable to Administrative Law Judge's Decision — Dismissal for Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction Proper: The mother petitioned for judicial review of an order by an administrative law judge regarding her child support action. The Child Support Enforcement Division moved to dismiss the petition on grounds that it was not timely filed pursuant to 2-4-702 and that, as a result, the District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to hear the case. The mother filed a motion under Rule 6(b), M.R.Civ.P., seeking an enlargement of time in which to file the petition, asserting that her failure to file the petition within the 30-day deadline was the result of excusable neglect. The motion was denied. The mother then filed for relief under this rule, and that motion was also denied. The mother appealed from the denial of both motions. The Supreme Court held that Rule 6(b), by its terms, applies only to acts required by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure or by court order, but does not apply to acts required within a statutory framework, such as that established in 2-4-702. Thus, the rule does not apply, either by its terms or by analogy, to petitions for judicial review of administrative proceedings because applying the rule in that manner would extend the jurisdiction of District Courts beyond that allowed by the statute. Further, this rule does not provide a basis for relief in this case because the District Court was automatically deprived of jurisdiction once the 30-day period expired, and this rule cannot be applied to revest jurisdiction where none existed in the first place. Dismissal of the mother's petition was not an abuse of discretion, and the District Court order was affirmed. In re Support of McGurran, 1999 MT 192, 295 M 357, 983 P2d 968, 56 St. Rep. 741 (1999).

Summary Judgment Improper Before Meaningful Discovery Conducted: Ranch Recovery Limited Liability Company (Ranch Recovery) was the assignee of the vendor's interest in real property that was subjected to a mortgage foreclosure brought by First Security Bank of Missoula (First Security). Upon the vendee's default, the District Court awarded summary judgment to First Security. Ranch Recovery moved for reconsideration and for permission to amend its counterclaim based on newly discovered evidence, which had come to light during the summary judgment hearing. The evidence consisted of financing authorization documents allegedly incorporated by reference into the contract for deed, as well as privileged bank account information that had been unobtainable prior to the hearing. The District Court denied Ranch Recovery's motions, reasoning that the evidence could have been discovered prior to entry of judgment through the exercise of due diligence. In this case, judgment was the result of a summary proceeding, not the result of a trial on the merits. The record on appeal revealed that First Security's motion for summary judgment was filed before Ranch Recovery had even filed its answer and counterclaim, but there was no indication in the record that any formal discovery had been conducted prior to entry of summary judgment. Thus, the Supreme Court declined to characterize the failure to discover this particular evidence as failure to exercise due diligence for the discovery and presentation of evidence at trial. Ranch Recovery met its burden of establishing that the newly discovered evidence was not "newly discovered" for lack of diligence. The District Court erred in refusing to consider Ranch Recovery's motion to reconsider. First Sec. Bank of Missoula v. Ranch Recovery Ltd. Liab. Co., 1999 MT 43, 293 M 363, 976 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 188 (1999), following Fjelstad v. St., 267 M 211, 883 P2d 106, 51 St. Rep. 1047 (1994). See also Gregorian v. Izvestia, 871 F2d 1515 (9th Cir. 1989).

Judge's Answer to Jury Question Held Not External Influence — Juror Affidavits Not Proper — Motions to Change Verdict Denied: In a civil suit, the special verdict form contained question #5 that read: "Do you find by clear and convincing evidence that Defendants acted either fraudulently and or with malice?" This question was taken nearly verbatim from plaintiff's proposed verdict form except that the proposed form contained a slash ("/") between the "and" and "or" in the question. Plaintiff did not object to this clerical error at or prior to the time that the form was submitted to the jury. During jury deliberations, the jury submitted a question to the judge stating: "Do we have to differencateate [sic] Between [sic] fraud and malice in #5." The judge answered "No" to the jury question, and neither plaintiff nor defendants objected to the answer at the time. After the trial, plaintiff filed alternative posttrial motions requesting the court to order that the answer to question #5 be "Yes", to set aside the jury verdict on question #5, and to either enter judgment against defendant on the issue of punitive damages as a matter of law or grant a new trial on the issue of punitive damages. The motions were based on affidavits of eight jurors alleging mistake or confusion based on the court's "No" answer. The District Court denied the motions. The Supreme Court upheld the denial, determining that plaintiff waived her claims of error by failing to object to the special verdict form submitted to the jury; that based on the "invited error rule", plaintiff participated in the error by submitting the conjunctive-disjunctive question; and that the affidavits were not proper because the jury had not been subject to external influences. Sandman v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 1998 MT 286, 291 M 456, 969 P2d 277, 55 St. Rep. 1165 (1998).

Later Finding of Unconscionability Proper Upon Failure to Make Initial Determination of Conscionability: Wife contended that a dissolution agreement was unconscionable as a matter of law because: (1) her understanding of English was limited; (2) both parties were initially represented by the same attorney; and (3) the agreement did not include a statement of the parties' incomes, property valuations, or child support calculations. Husband maintained that the trial court was estopped from finding unconscionability because of its initial finding that the agreement was not unconscionable. However, in this case, the District Judge did not make a specific inquiry into conscionability because the parties had reached a separation agreement. The Supreme Court held that when a District Court fails to make an initial investigation of conscionability of an agreement, it is not estopped from later finding that the agreement is unconscionable if the decree adopting the agreement is set aside pursuant to subsection (3) of this rule. In re Marriage of Gudmundson, 1998 MT 54, 288 M 70, 955 P2d 648, 55 St. Rep. 226 (1998).

Past Available Records Not Newly Discovered Evidence Warranting New Trial: State Medical Oxygen contended that a new trial was warranted based on newly discovered evidence consisting of two sets of records, but conceded that the evidence was in its possession prior to oral arguments on the summary judgment motion. The evidence could thus not be characterized as newly discovered in the context of this rule. Given the lack of effort on State Medical Oxygen's part to bring the evidence to the court's attention and its failure to request additional time prior to resolution of the summary judgment motion, coupled with the fact that the evidence was not truly newly discovered, it was not error for the trial court to deny a motion for relief from judgment in this case. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc. v. Am. Medical Oxygen Co., 267 M 340, 883 P2d 1241, 51 St. Rep. 1063 (1994). Newly Discovered Evidence of Federally Recommended Highway Guardrail Upgrade — New Trial: Following an automobile collision with a guardrail in which his daughter was injured and his wife and another child were killed, Fjelstad sued the state for negligent guardrail design, installation, and maintenance. The state denied negligence and alleged that its conduct with regard to the guardrail conformed to the applicable standard of care at all times prior to the accident. Following trial, in which the state was held not liable, Fjelstad received additional evidence in the form of recommendations in federal documents regarding upgrade of guardrail installations during overlay projects. The existence of the documents was known by the state prior to trial but not disclosed. The District Court granted Fjelstad's motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence, and the state appealed. The Supreme Court held that the evidence was not cumulative and that it did not simply tend to impeach the state's witnesses. Because the newly discovered evidence would probably produce a different result on retrial, the motion for a new trial was properly granted. Fjelstad v. St., 267 M 211, 883 P2d 106, 51 St. Rep. 1047 (1994), followed in First Sec. Bank of Missoula v. Ranch Recovery Ltd. Liab. Co., 1999 MT 43, 293 M 363, 976 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 188 (1999).

Newly Discovered Evidence — Proof — Summary Judgment Proper: The District Court properly granted defendant summary judgment on a collateral estoppel defense and properly ruled on nonadmissibility of a statement that, at most, would have constituted newly discovered evidence and that plaintiff failed to establish could not have been discovered earlier with due diligence. Farmers Plant Aid, Inc. v. Huggans, 266 M 249, 879 P2d 1173, 51 St. Rep. 803 (1994).

Settlement Agreement From Parties' First Divorce Not to Be Set Aside Sua Sponte by Trial Court: The parties entered into a property settlement agreement that was incorporated into their divorce decree in 1989. Seven months later, they remarried; their marriage was again dissolved in 1993. The lower court found that the parties had not performed or complied with the terms of the prior decree and that they were estopped from asserting any rights under the previous agreement. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had no jurisdiction to declare the agreement null and void because neither party had requested that the agreement be set aside and there had been no finding that the agreement was unconscionable. In re Marriage of Nordberg, 265 M 352, 877 P2d 987, 51 St. Rep. 531 (1994).

Relatively Minor Disputes in Property Valuation — Failure to Appear — Relief Not Granted: The Supreme Court will not mandate relief pursuant to this rule over relatively minor disputes in property valuation or identification when a party does not appear at hearing to present evidence concerning those matters. In re Marriage of Miller, 260 M 15, 858 P2d 338, 50 St. Rep. 912 (1993).

Newly Discovered Evidence of Stock Ownership — Judgment Affirmed by Finding Evidence Would Not Change Result of Trial: Cowles brought an action against Sheeline to quiet title to a Montana mining claim. Evidence at trial consisted of confusing and incomplete evidence of stock transactions. Following a judgment for Cowles, Sheeline moved for relief from judgment on the basis of newly discovered evidence consisting of stock records found in an unlikely place upon moving from her home in Boston. The District Court found a lack of due diligence and that the new evidence would not have changed the result of trial and denied the motion after expiration of the 45-day limit provided in Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court determined that the District Court should have found due diligence but after a review of the new evidence, concurred with the District Court that although some of the evidence was not produced at trial, it was cumulative and duplicative with introduced evidence and would not have altered the outcome of the trial. Cowles v. Sheeline, 259 M 1, 855 P2d 93, 50 St. Rep. 653 (1993).

Failure of Bonding Company to Tender Defense to Known Suit — No Excusable Neglect or Other Reason Justifying Relief: American Casualty Company provided a construction bond to a general contractor, C&D Contractors, for an expansion of the Billings city hall. Because subcontractor Empire Lath & Plaster, Inc., was not paid for all of its work for C&D, Empire submitted a notice of claim against the bond to C&D, Billings, and American Casualty. Over a month later, because it had received no reply to its notice of claim, Empire filed suit on the bond against American Casualty. The claims analyst receiving the complaint sent it to C&D and tendered a defense, but no response was received from C&D. A default judgment was entered against American Casualty, and the District Court refused to set aside the default. Distinguishing Blume v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 242 M 465, 791 P2d 784 (1990), the Supreme Court held that the failure of American Casualty to respond to the complaint, when it knew of the pending action and knew it had received no response from C&D to the tender of defense, was not excusable neglect, nor was there any other reason to relieve American Casualty from the default. Therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion. Empire Lath & Plaster, Inc. v. Am. Cas. Co., 256 M 413, 847 P2d 276, 50 St. Rep. 128 (1993).

Statements Regarding Value of Partnership Assets No Barrier to Presentation of Evidence — New Trial Denied: Wife argued for a new trial based on conflicting information compiled after trial regarding the value of the marital estate. With the exercise of reasonable diligence, the evidence could have been discovered prior to trial. Husband's trial statements concerning partnership assets did not materially thwart wife's ability to present her case, indicating lack of fraud, so a new trial was unwarranted. In re Marriage of Barnes, 251 M 334, 825 P2d 201, 49 St. Rep. 67 (1992).

Failure to Discuss Grounds for Relief Until Reply Brief — Review of Order of Denial Only: Plaintiffs devoted the majority of their initial brief to arguing the merits of the court's grant of summary judgment to defendant and did not even discuss the grounds for relief under this rule until their reply brief. While an order denying a motion under this rule is final and appealable, the appeal brings up for review only the order of the denial itself and not the underlying judgment. Reconsideration of an earlier motion on its merits cannot be the subject of a motion under this rule. Therefore, failure to raise the merits of the grant of summary judgment with a timely appeal or request for consideration precluded Supreme Court review. Donovan v. Graff, 248 M 21, 808 P2d 491, 48 St. Rep. 303 (1991).

Belated Expert Opinion Constituting Newly Discovered Evidence: When presented with the question of whether an opinion of a trial expert, offered for the first time after final judgment and based on a fact asserted by the plaintiff and within her knowledge prior to judgment, constituted newly discovered evidence, the court declined to distinguish between opinion evidence and other kinds of evidence because the opinion evidence met the tests ordinarily required of newly discovered evidence. The failure to produce the evidence at trial must not have been caused by the moving party's lack of due diligence. The evidence must be admissible, credible, and of such a material and controlling nature as will probably change the outcome. Halse v. Murphy, 237 M 509, 774 P2d 418, 46 St. Rep. 1009 (1989), distinguished, on grounds of failure to exercise due diligence in producing required expert testimony, in Estate of Nielsen v. Pardis, 265 M 470, 878 P2d 234, 51 St. Rep. 591 (1994).

Standards Applicable to Setting Aside Default Entry and Default Judgment: The default entry is simply an interlocutory order that in itself determines no rights or remedies, whereas the default judgment is a final judgment that terminates the litigation and decides the dispute. Therefore, the "good cause" standard for setting aside a default entry under Rule 55(c), M.R.Civ.P., is more flexible and lenient than the "excusable neglect" standard for setting aside a default judgment under this rule. Cribb v. Matlock Communications, Inc., 236 M 27, 768 P2d 337, 46 St. Rep. 156 (1989), followed in In re Marriage of Fronk v. Wilson, 250 M 291, 819 P2d 1275, 48 St. Rep. 936 (1991).

Evidence Available but Not Presented — Motion Denied: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying a motion for a new trial or, in the alternative, amending the judgment when evidence claimed to be newly discovered could have been available but was not presented at trial. Goodover v. Lindey's, Inc., 232 M 302, 757 P2d 1290, 45 St. Rep. 1068 (1988), affirmed in 264 M 449, 872 P2d 764, 51 St. Rep. 317 (1994). Lindey's, Inc.'s attempt to quiet title to a newly disputed parcel was held to be res judicata, the matter having already been adjudged and affirmed in this case, in Lindey's, Inc. v. Goodover, 264 M 489, 872 P2d 767, 51 St. Rep. 359 (1994).

Judgment Final — Law of the Case — Issues Outside Scope of Original Action: Plaintiff moved for relitigation of contractual issues on which judgment was final and also moved for consideration of new contractual issues that had arisen after judgment. All issues previously ruled upon were subject to the law of the case doctrine and could not be relitigated. See Schmidt v. Colonial Terrace Associates, 202 M 46, 656 P2d 807, 39 St. Rep. 2318 (1982); on remand, Schmidt v. Colonial Terrace Associates, 215 M 62, 694 P2d 1340, 42 St. Rep. 182 (1985). Contractual issues arising after the judgment were outside the scope of the original action. Rule 60(b)(5), M.R.Civ.P., did not give the court power to preside over controversies throughout the life of the contract. Schmidt v. Colonial Terrace Associates, 223 M 8, 723 P2d 954, 43 St. Rep. 1489 (1986).

Marital Assets Not Considered Child Support — Modification of Payments: Property that was clearly denominated personal property in a division of marital assets may not later be claimed for inclusion as child support simply because it is used primarily for a child. Modification of payments that are part of a property settlement agreement is governed by Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., rather than the rules for modification of support in 40-4-208. In re Marriage of Conklin/Clark, 221 M 30, 716 P2d 629, 43 St. Rep. 611 (1986).

Corrective Order — Not Modification of Judgment: In an action to modify a final decree of dissolution distributing a marital estate, the trial court, under the authority of Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., issued a corrective order to amend the judgment to express what was actually decided and to grant the relief originally intended. The order was not a modification of judgment subject to Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. The court did not have a change of mind or correct a judicial error. In re Marriage of Cannon, 215 M 272, 697 P2d 901, 42 St. Rep. 348 (1985).

Motion for Summary Judgment — Judge's Discretion to Allow Late Briefs and Arguments: The District Court did not err by allowing defendants to submit briefs and argue plaintiffs' summary judgment motion late upon learning why defendants' counsel originally overlooked the matter. Although there are no Montana cases on point, the Supreme Court analogized the judge's discretion to set aside judgments under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., as basis for judges' discretion to allow late briefs and arguments. Todd v. Berner, 214 M 263, 693 P2d 506, 41 St. Rep. 2462 (1984).

Motion to Change Venue After Default Judgment Entered — Denied as Untimely — Proper Course Suggested: A motion for a change of venue may not be made after judgment has been entered. Thus, in this case defendant's motion to change venue was correctly denied as untimely because a default divorce judgment had been granted. Defendant's proper course of action should have been to move for relief from judgment under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P.; then, if granted, she should attempt to withdraw her initial appearance and request a change of venue. Hoyt v. Hoyt, 208 M 83, 675 P2d 392, 41 St. Rep. 183 (1984).

Newly Discovered Evidence — Reopening Proper: Four days after the original hearing on attorney fees was held, counsel for respondent, the prevailing party, moved to reopen the hearing pursuant to this rule. The basis for the motion was that time records which had been misfiled and could not be located prior to the original hearing had been found. Respondent claimed this entitled him to a reopening of the hearing under the "newly discovered evidence" provision of Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. The District Court reopened the hearing, and the Supreme Court affirmed, finding no abuse of discretion by the District Court. Nicholson v. Cannon, 207 M 476, 674 P2d 506, 41 St. Rep. 86 (1984).

Order Conditionally Setting Aside Prior Decree Found to Be Abuse of Discretion: Where the District Court entered a decree in 1981 finding the property settlement agreement of the parties not unconscionable within the meaning of 40-4-201(2) and in 1983 issued an order stating that the property settlement agreement would be set aside if not complied with by the husband by a specific date, the Supreme Court found that the District Court erred in making the 1983 order. The 1981 decree and property settlement could, under the rationale of Hadford v. Hadford, 194 M 518, 633 P2d 1181, 38 St. Rep. 1308 (1981), be modified only if the conditions specified in Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., were found to exist. Because the court issued no findings of fact indicating conditions that justified the reopening of the 1981 decree, the court abused its discretion in making the 1983 order. Lorge v. Lorge, 207 M 423, 675 P2d 115, 41 St. Rep. 50 (1984).

Marital Separation Agreement Not a Judgment Amendable for Failure of Consideration: A marital separation agreement is not a conveyance. A separation agreement incorporated into a divorce decree is enforceable only as a judgment. A judgment can be reopened if obtained through fraud but not for lack of fair consideration. It was error to annul a marital separation agreement under 31-2-311 (now repealed). Witbart v. Witbart, 204 M 446, 666 P2d 1217, 40 St. Rep. 994 (1983).

Amending on Remand Judgment Upheld on First Appeal — Law of Case — Abuse of Discretion: In an original judgment of October 31, 1979, plaintiffs were given the alternatives of either repairing a damaged irrigation ditch or paying damages of $5,500. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court, and in Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981), the court found substantial evidence to support the District Court's findings. This became the law of the case. The case was remanded for a determination of attorney fees to be awarded to defendant. On remand, the District Court amended its conclusions and findings to omit the alternative allowing plaintiffs to repair the ditch and awarded damages without the submission of any additional evidence. On appeal, the Supreme Court found this to be an abuse of discretion, as none of the exceptions found in Rules 52(b), 60(a), or 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., applied. The court abused its discretion in not holding a hearing to determine if either alternative of the original judgment had been complied with. Marta v. Smith, 200 M 414, 650 P2d 1387, 39 St. Rep. 1839 (1982).

Untimely Motion for New Trial — Equivalent to Motion for Relief From Judgment: A motion for new trial under Rule 59(b), M.R.Civ.P., that is not timely may be considered as a motion under this rule when it states the proper grounds for relief. Nomenclature is unimportant. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Relief Under Subsections Exclusive: If a party seeks relief under one subsection of Rule 60(b), Fed.R.Civ.P., then it cannot also claim relief under the general catchall subsection, 60(b)(6). Libby Rod & Gun Club v. Moraski, 519 F. Supp. 643, 38 St. Rep. 1213 (D.C. Mont. 1981), followed in Koch v. School District No. 2, 253 M 261, 833 P2d 181, 49 St. Rep. 517 (1992).

Order Denying Motion for Relief From Default Judgment Properly Appealed — Special Appearance Abolished: When the defendant honey processing company twice moved to vacate and dismiss a default judgment obtained against it by the plaintiff honey producing company, the Supreme Court had jurisdiction over an appeal from the District Court's denial of the second motion to vacate and dismiss. The defendant's first motion was untimely filed, and the fact that it was brought to challenge the personal jurisdiction of the court and characterized as a "special appearance" is of no effect, as special appearances have been abolished and the same requirements for timely appeal applies to all appearances. The second motion was properly appealable as it is considered denied, which denial is a final order, if the court has not ruled on the motion within 15 days after submission. Foster Apiaries, Inc. v. Hubbard Apiaries, Inc., 193 M 156, 630 P2d 1213, 38 St. Rep. 1025 (1981), followed in Wamsley v. Nodak Mut. Ins. Co., 2008 MT 56, 341 M 467, 178 P3d 102 (2008).

Quiet Title — Collateral Attack on Judgments — Reasonable Diligence — Invalid Service — Jurisdiction: While it is a general rule that a judgment cannot be attacked in a collateral action, such attack is permissible if the first judgment is void for lack of jurisdiction. If service of process is improperly made, the court acquires no jurisdiction over that party and it may collaterally attack the judgment. "Reasonable diligence" was not used by appellants in the prior action to locate individuals to be served under Rule 4(D)(2)(f), M.R.Civ.P., because they had dealt with such individuals before and should have been able to contact them and the Secretary of State had the name and address of the corporate agent and director on file. Therefore, service upon the Secretary of State did not confer jurisdiction and collateral attack was proper. Russell Realty v. Kenneally, 185 M 496, 605 P2d 1107 (1980), followed in Baertsch v. Lewis & Clark County, 256 M 114, 845 P2d 106, 49 St. Rep. 1162 (1992).

Jurisdiction Not Retained by District Court After Appeal Taken: When petitioner moved the District Court to set aside its judgment and thereafter filed a notice of appeal to the Supreme Court, the District Court properly asserted that it had no authority to rule on petitioner's motion. Upon a proper appeal being taken, jurisdiction of the cause passes to the Supreme Court, subject to the right of the District Court to correct clerical errors. N. Plains Resource Council v. Bd. of Health & Environmental Sciences, 184 M 466, 603 P2d 684 (1979), followed in Lewistown Propane Co. v. Moncur, 2003 MT 368, 319 M 105, 82 P3d 896 (2003).

Evidence Submitted to Be Timely and in Proper Form — Relief From Judgment Denied: Plaintiff submitted a letter from the State Compensation Insurance Fund in support of a motion to set aside the judgment. The letter was improperly included in appellant's brief for the following reasons: (1) it was not presented in the proper affidavit form as required by Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P.; (2) the opinion set forth in the letter could easily have been presented in timely fashion in opposition to respondent's motion for summary judgment rather than subsequently in support of a motion to set aside the verdict which had been granted on the merits; and (3) the letter sets forth a generalized opinion offered without either foundation or regard to the facts of the case. Since the letter was not in proper form it cannot be considered under Rule 803(a), Montana Rules of Evidence. Scott v. Robson, 182 M 528, 597 P2d 1150 (1979).

Amendments to Decree: Amendments to a decree to reflect plaintiff's true interest in property are permissible if the amendments make the meaning of a judgment or decree more clear and will not act inequitably or to the prejudice of a party. Doble v. Talbott, 180 M 166, 589 P2d 994 (1979).

Setting Aside Satisfaction of Judgment: By giving effect to the plain language used in Rule 60(b) and considering the rule in its entirety, the court held that the intent of the drafters was that a satisfaction of judgment could not be set aside by a motion under this rule. The appropriate proceeding was an independent action in equity. McGee v. Burlington N., Inc., 179 M 1, 585 P2d 1296 (1978).

Newly Discovered Evidence — Motion Properly Denied: Substantial credible evidence existed to support findings of fact and conclusions of law, and were unaffected by alleged "newly discovered" evidence which at best was merely cumulative. Furthermore, because the "new evidence" was at all times in the exclusive possession of appellants, motion for new trial was denied. Kartes v. Kartes, 175 M 210, 573 P2d 191 (1977), followed in Carbon Co. v. Schwend, 212 M 474, 688 P2d 1251, 41 St. Rep. 1874 (1984), and in In re Marriage of Burner, 246 M 394, 803 P2d 1099, 48 St. Rep. 7 (1991).

No Substitute for Appeal: Defendants who had filed an appeal but never perfected it, could not use this rule to raise an issue which had been presented at the original proceedings, or to relitigate matters previously determined. Sheridan v. Martinsen, 164 M 383, 523 P2d 1392 (1974).

Adherence to Time Limits: Default judgment should not have been set aside when time extension limits of Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., were exceeded. Sikorski & Sons, Inc. v. Sikorski, 162 M 442, 512 P2d 1147 (1973).

Finding Equivalent to Denial of Relief: Finding that "The evidence presented does not warrant any setting aside of the default judgment. . ." was equivalent to a denial of relief under this rule. Corban v. Corban, 161 M 93, 504 P2d 985 (1972).

Meritorious Defense — No Affidavit Required: Answer and counterclaim need not be verified when submitted with motion under this rule which stated generally that there was a meritorious defense, and there is no longer a requirement for an affidavit of merit. Keller v. Hanson, 157 M 307, 485 P2d 705 (1971), followed in Maulding v. Hardman, 257 M 18, 847 P2d 292, 50 St. Rep. 141 (1993), which was overruled in part on other grounds by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Motion for Modification of Paternity Decree — Requirements of Rules Not Satisfied — Jurisdiction Precluded: Where a husband filed a "motion for modification of divorce decree" more than 4 years after the divorce in an attempt to relitigate the issue of his paternity of the children of the parties, the District Court was without jurisdiction to hear the petition. As the petition on its face did not seek relief under Rules 59 or 60, M.R.Civ.P., and was based on facts which predated the original finding of paternity, which finding was not appealed, the District Court had no jurisdiction to modify its previous order. Butler v. Brownlee, 152 M 453, 451 P2d 836 (1969).

Scope of Rule — Inaccurate Language Not Covered: Contention that default judgment was erroneous on its face and should be set aside because the judgment and an exhibit attached to the complaint contained inaccurate and erroneous language was outside scope of rule and could not be raised thereunder. Uffleman v. Labbit, 152 M 238, 448 P2d 690 (1968).

Failure to Request Amendment — Appeal Precluded: Where proper notice of hearing on application for judgment of divorce was given defendant in accordance with Rule 55(b), M.R.Civ.P., and no relief different from that demanded in the complaint was granted in violation of Rule 54(c), an appeal on those grounds was dismissed by the Supreme Court on its own motion where no application to set aside the default or judgment was made under this rule. Sowerwine v. Sowerwine, 148 M 195, 418 P2d 859 (1966).

Service Upon Corporation — Proper Agent: The doctrine of ostensible agency appears to have no application when it becomes involved with the question whether service of process has been legally made upon a "managing or general agent". Further, service upon a former employee of a company was not service upon the company itself and default judgment was vacated and set aside. Kraus v. Treasure Belt Min. Co., 146 M 432, 408 P2d 151 (1965).

Adequate Showing Required: The party applying for relief must make a proper and adequate showing, wherein he sets forth the particular facts and circumstances constituting the mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect upon which he relies. White v. Connor, 138 M 1, 354 P2d 722 (1960).

Quashing of Writ as Amendable Judgment: Where order sustained motion to quash a Writ of Certiorari and dismissed action, it amounted to a judgment which could be set aside on the ground of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, but the applicant could not, without vacating the judgment, file an amended application for the Writ. State ex rel. Walker v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 120 M 413, 187 P2d 1013 (1947), distinguished in Kelly v. Harris, 158 F. Supp. 243 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Legal Conclusions Insufficient — Facts to Be Shown: On motion to set aside a default, the applicant must make a statement of facts from which the court can determine whether the mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect urged is within the contemplation of the statute, the bare statement of the conclusion that the default occurred by mistake, etc., being insufficient to move the discretion of the court. Madson v. Petrie Tractor & Equip. Co., 106 M 382, 77 P2d 1038 (1938); Robinson v. Petersen, 63 M 247, 206 P 1092 (1922).

Application to Probate Proceedings: Notwithstanding the former provision that a decree directing the distribution of the property of an estate is conclusive unless reversed, set aside, or modified on appeal, the District Court may set it aside on a showing by an aggrieved party that it had been taken against him through his mistake, surprise, inadvertence, or excusable neglect. State ex rel. O'Neil v. District Court, 96 M 393, 30 P2d 815 (1934).

Adequate Remedy at Law — Failure to Exercise as Bar to Equity: Where a party seeking relief from a judgment has an adequate remedy at law by motion in the original case, equity will not interpose in his favor while that remedy is available, nor thereafter if he does not show a sufficient excuse for not having resorted to it at the proper time, and where he has once resorted to the legal remedy and was denied it because of his own fault he is barred from relief by equity on grounds which were then available or which might have been urged. Meyer v. Lemley, 86 M 83, 282 P 268 (1929), followed in Krein v. Heineman, 226 M 474, 736 P2d 481, 44 St. Rep. 813 (1987).

Execution on Judgment Set Aside: A judgment may be set aside on motion even after it has been satisfied by sale under execution, under proper circumstances. Meyer v. Lemley, 86 M 83, 282 P 268 (1929).

Relief From Default Limited by Statute: One desiring to be relieved from a default must bring his case within one of the grounds mentioned in the statute. Even then relief may not be demanded as a matter of right, the application being addressed to the sound legal discretion of the District Court, with the exercise of which the Supreme Court will not interfere except upon a showing of manifest abuse thereof. Mihelich v. Butte Elec. Ry., 85 M 604, 281 P 540 (1929).

Waiver of Right to Hearing: Where, in an action against a county, the County Attorney joined with the plaintiff in submitting the matter to the District Court without further notice and without argument, he waived the county's right to its day in court and the District Court was justified in disposing of the matter without a hearing. By denying a motion for relief from the decision, the District Court impliedly found that the County Attorney did so waive a hearing. Huntington v. Yellowstone County, 80 M 20, 257 P 1041 (1927).

Application of Six-Month Limitation: The limitation of 6 months (reduced by the 1965 amendment) prescribed by section 93-3905, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P.), within which a default judgment may be vacated, referred to defaults entered through mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect only and therefore had no application to a case where lack of power in the court to enter the judgment appeared upon the face of the judgment roll. Hodson v. O'Keeffe, 71 M 322, 229 P 722 (1924).

Purpose of Provision: The purpose of the statute permitting relief from a judgment is to further the administration of justice so that the very right upon the merits may be determined, and to that end to grant relief from excusable neglect in cases where diligence is shown in applying promptly for the relief sought, provided the opposite party be not deprived of any advantage to which he may properly be entitled. Lovell v. Willis, 46 M 581, 129 P 1052 (1913); Greene v. Mont. Brewing Co., 32 M 102, 79 P 693 (1905); Collier v. Fitzpatrick, 22 M 553, 57 P 181 (1899).

MISTAKE, INADVERTENCE, SURPRISE, OR EXCUSABLE NEGLECT

Assurance by Plaintiffs' Counsel to Not Enter Default — Lack of Notice to Defendants — Four-Prong Test for Good Cause Correctly Applied — Setting Aside of Default Proper: Landlords sued their former tenants, alleging that the tenants had caused considerable damage to the rental property. After the tenants were served with the complaint, a friend of the tenants, on their behalf, contacted the landlords' attorney to negotiate a settlement. The attorney assured the friend that the landlords would not seek a default against the tenants. Nevertheless, the attorney moved for and received a default against the tenants. Thereafter, a new attorney filed a notice of appearance for the landlords as well as an application for entry of default judgment, neither of which was served on the tenants. The District Court issued a default judgment against the tenants on the same day they filed a motion to continue. Following a hearing, however, the District Court set aside the default. On appeal, the landlords argued that the District Court abused its discretion in setting aside the default judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed, first noting that default judgments are generally disfavored, and applying the four-prong test for good cause set out in Blume v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 242 Mont. 465, 791 P.2d 784 (1990). In this case, the landlords' attorney had not honored his promise to not enter a default against the tenants and had failed to provide them the notice required under former Rule 10, M.U.D.C.R. (now superseded). Therefore, there was good cause to set aside the judgment. Benintendi v. Hein, 2011 MT 298, 363 Mont. 32, 265 P.3d 1239.

Lack of Diligence and Failure to Monitor Litigation Preclusion to Setting Aside Default Judgment: A District Court entered a default judgment against defendant, and defendant then argued that the judgment should be set aside The court refused to set aside the judgment on grounds that defendant showed lack of diligence by failing to retain counsel until 23 days after judgment was entered and failed its affirmative duty to monitor the litigation. Defendant argued on appeal that a 23-day delay could not be considered lack of diligence because the motion to set aside judgment was filed within the 60-day filing window. However, the 60-day timeframe merely provides a time bar and cannot be equated with whether a party has proceeded with diligence. Rather, a court may look to surrounding facts and circumstances to make a diligence determination and may use its discretion to decide that a party has not been duly diligent even though the 60-day timeframe has been satisfied. Defendant also argued that despite the District Court's finding that defendant failed to monitor the litigation, its neglect was excusable because plaintiff was negotiating a settlement in ancillary litigation, which would make the present case moot. However, as established in Caplis v. Caplis, 2004 MT 145, 321 M 450, 91 P3d 1282 (2004), settlement discussions and other peripheral litigation are not an excuse to neglect ongoing litigation. Thus, the District Court's refusal to set aside the default judgment was affirmed. Mont. Professional Sports, LLC v. Nat'l Indoor Football League, LLC, 2008 MT 98, 342 M 292, 180 P3d 1142 (2008). See also Blume v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 242 M 465, 791 P2d 784 (1990), In re Marriage of Winckler, 2000 MT 116, 299 M 428, 2 P3d 229 (2000), and DeTienne v. Sandrock, 2017 MT 181, 388 Mont. 179, 400 P.3d 682.

Withdrawal of Counsel — No Requirement That Party Provide Written Notice of Hearing Until Notice of Withdrawal of Counsel Filed: Defendant moved for sanctions and dismissal based on discovery abuses. Notice was sent to plaintiffs' counsel regarding a hearing on the motion, but plaintiffs' counsel had decided to withdraw. Although counsel mentioned the hearing to plaintiffs, plaintiffs failed to appear at the hearing, so defendant's motion was granted. No notice was filed with the court formalizing withdrawal of counsel until after the hearing. Plaintiffs' new counsel moved to set aside the judgment on grounds of mistake, surprise, and excusable neglect, asserting that defendant was required to notify plaintiffs in writing before the hearing, but the motion was denied, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Defendant was not required to provide written notice to plaintiffs until their former counsel filed a notice of withdrawal, and the rules of professional conduct prohibited defendant from contacting plaintiffs in person. Until the notice of withdrawal was filed, defendant was entitled to presume that plaintiffs' former counsel continued to provide representation and that plaintiffs had been properly notified of the hearing by counsel. Under these circumstances, denial of the motion to set aside the judgment was not an abuse of discretion. Flesch v. McDonald's Restaurant, 2005 MT 235, 328 M 407, 121 P3d 527 (2005).

Busy Work Schedule or Season Insufficient: The mere press of a busy schedule or a busy work season does not constitute excusable neglect necessary to overturn a default judgment under this rule. Peak Dev., LLP v. Juntunen, 2005 MT 82, 326 M 409, 110 P3d 13 (2005).

Forgetfulness Insufficient: Failure to enter an appearance through forgetfulness because of other more important business is inexcusable. Peak Dev., LLP v. Juntunen, 2005 MT 82, 326 M 409, 110 P3d 13 (2005); Foster Apiaries, Inc. v. Hubbard Apiaries, Inc., 193 M 156, 630 P2d 1213, 38 St. Rep. 1025 (1981); Schalk v. Bresnahan, 138 M 129, 354 P2d 735 (1960).

Failure of Pro Se Litigant to Include Filing Fee Considered Excusable Neglect Warranting Reversal of Default Judgment: A Texas defendant, acting pro se, filed a timely answer and special appearance in response to plaintiff's complaint and summons, but failed to include the $65 filing fee, which was not mentioned in the summons. By the time that defendant learned that a filing fee was required to be submitted with the response, plaintiff had already applied for and received a default judgment without notice to defendant. Defendant's motion to set aside the default judgment was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that defendant had acted with diligence and that the failure to appear was not due to inexcusable neglect or disrespect for the court, but that defendant mistakenly assumed that if the instructions in the summons were followed, the answer would be filed. Defendant satisfied the good cause criteria in Rule 55(c), M.R.Civ.P., and because defendant's default was not willful, the neglect was excusable under this rule. The District Court's refusal, by operation of law, to set aside the default judgment was at a minimum a slight abuse of discretion. Thus, because of the policy to resolve issues on the merits, the Supreme Court reversed the default judgment and remanded for further proceedings. Sun Mtn. Sports, Inc., v. Gore, 2004 MT 56, 320 M 196, 85 P3d 1286 (2004).

Unintentional Default for Failure to Appear in Dissolution Proceeding — Abuse of Discretion in Refusal to Set Aside Default Judgment: On November 9, 1998, the wife gave her husband a copy of a petition for dissolution and summons. In early December 1998, the wife's Montana attorney contacted the husband by telephone at his home in Nevada and asked if the husband had reviewed the petition. The husband replied that he had only looked at it briefly and had not retained counsel. Following the conversation, the husband signed the acknowledgment of receipt of summons and petition and sent it back to the attorney, who did not receive it until December 10. However, because the acknowledgment had not been received within the specified timeframe, the attorney had the husband served personally on December 8. Believing that he had responded appropriately and that the wife would propose a property settlement agreement, the husband took no further action. On December 29, 1998, default judgment was entered against the husband and on January 5, 1999, a final decree was entered, apportioning most of the marital debt to the husband. Upon receipt of the notice of entry of judgment, the husband retained counsel and, within a week, filed a motion to alter or amend judgment, for a new trial, or for relief from judgment. Both parties were granted extensions for further briefing. Subsequently, the parties realized that because the District Court had not issued a formal opinion within 60 days of the motion, as required in this rule, the husband's motion was considered denied. He appealed, contending that he had met his burden for setting aside the default judgment. The Supreme Court agreed. The husband's default was unintentional, based on the mistaken belief that the wife's attorney was going to prepare a property settlement proposal and that the husband's acknowledgment of service was the only act required of him until the parties negotiated an agreement. The Supreme Court favors resolution on the merits, and because the husband fulfilled the requirements of Rule 55(c), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule, the District Court's refusal to set aside the default judgment amounted to an abuse of discretion and reversible error. In re Marriage of Winckler, 2000 MT 116, 299 M 428, 2 P3d 229, 57 St. Rep. 486 (2000).

Summary Judgment Improper Before Meaningful Discovery Conducted: Ranch Recovery Limited Liability Company (Ranch Recovery) was the assignee of the vendor's interest in real property that was subjected to a mortgage foreclosure brought by First Security Bank of Missoula (First Security). Upon the vendee's default, the District Court awarded summary judgment to First Security. Ranch Recovery moved for reconsideration and for permission to amend its counterclaim based on newly discovered evidence, which had come to light during the summary judgment hearing. The evidence consisted of financing authorization documents allegedly incorporated by reference into the contract for deed, as well as privileged bank account information that had been unobtainable prior to the hearing. The District Court denied Ranch Recovery's motions, reasoning that the evidence could have been discovered prior to entry of judgment through the exercise of due diligence. In this case, judgment was the result of a summary proceeding, not the result of a trial on the merits. The record on appeal revealed that First Security's motion for summary judgment was filed before Ranch Recovery had even filed its answer and counterclaim, but there was no indication in the record that any formal discovery had been conducted prior to entry of summary judgment. Thus, the Supreme Court declined to characterize the failure to discover this particular evidence as failure to exercise due diligence for the discovery and presentation of evidence at trial. Ranch Recovery met its burden of establishing that the newly discovered evidence was not "newly discovered" for lack of diligence. The District Court erred in refusing to consider Ranch Recovery's motion to reconsider. First Sec. Bank of Missoula v. Ranch Recovery Ltd. Liab. Co., 1999 MT 43, 293 M 363, 976 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 188 (1999), following Fjelstad v. St., 267 M 211, 883 P2d 106, 51 St. Rep. 1047 (1994). See also Gregorian v. Izvestia, 871 F2d 1515 (9th Cir. 1989).

Party Misled by Attorney's Actions — Extraordinary Circumstances Warranting Relief Under Rule: The trial court granted defendant's motion to dismiss for failure to prosecute under Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P. Nearly 13 months later, plaintiffs moved to set aside the dismissal order pursuant to this rule because their attorney had failed to make them aware that the case had been dismissed. This rule is an exception to the doctrine of finality of judgments. In the case of an attorney's mistake, inadvertence, misconduct, or neglect, either subsection (1) or (6) of this rule may be applicable, depending on the facts and the nature and seriousness of the mistake, inadvertence, misconduct, or neglect involved. Under ordinary circumstances, subsection (1) will apply. However, when the moving party can meet the higher burden of demonstrating extraordinary circumstances, gross neglect, or actual misconduct and of demonstrating that the client was blameless and acted to set aside the default within a reasonable time, then subsection (6) is available. In this case, plaintiffs' former attorney intentionally misled them into believing that their case was proceeding and concealed the fact that the case had been dismissed. Conduct of such an egregious nature falls within the "any other reason" clause of subsection (6). The District Court properly granted plaintiffs' motion to set aside the default judgment, and because subsection (6) applied, the motion was considered reasonably timely even though filed 13 months after judgment. Karlen v. Evans, 276 M 181, 915 P2d 232, 53 St. Rep. 337 (1996), following In re Marriage of Waters, 223 M 183, 724 P2d 726 (1986). Karlen was followed in Wright Oil & Tire Co. v. Goodrich, 284 M 6, 942 P2d 128, 54 St. Rep. 811 (1997), and Bahm v. Southworth, 2000 MT 244, 301 M 434, 10 P3d 99, 57 St. Rep. 1030 (2000).

Pro Se Dissolution — Defendant's Mistaken Assumption That Response to Complaint Filed With Court — Default Set Aside: After Ranae's attorney filed a petition for dissolution and had a copy served upon her husband Robert, Robert responded by sending a pro se response to the petition to Ranae's attorney. Robert failed to file a copy of the response with the District Court because he misunderstood the summons. After receiving Robert's response, Ranae's attorney filed a note of issue with the District Court. Later, upon discovery that a response had not been filed with the District Court, Ranae's attorney filed a praecipe for default, and a default judgment was granted. The Supreme Court held that Robert was mistaken when he failed to file his response with the District Court and that he was diligent in moving to set aside the default once he discovered the error. The Supreme Court therefore set aside the default and remanded the case to the District Court, noting that Ranae's attorney did nothing to correct Robert's mistake once the attorney discovered that Robert had defaulted, notwithstanding the attorney's filing of the note of issue. In re Marriage of Broere, 263 M 207, 867 P2d 1092, 51 St. Rep. 17 (1994), followed in In re Marriage of Martin, 265 M 95, 874 P2d 1219, 51 St. Rep. 443 (1994).

Mistake of Law Insufficient: A mistake as to the law is not the mistake that will justify relief, and ignorance of the law is not an excuse for a default. In re Marriage of McDonald, 261 M 466, 863 P2d 401, 50 St. Rep. 1411 (1993); Donovan v. Graff, 248 M 21, 808 P2d 491, 48 St. Rep. 303 (1991); Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Gallatin County, 84 M 98, 274 P 288 (1929); Canning v. Fried, 48 M 560, 139 P 448 (1914); Willoburn Ranch Co. v. Yegen, 45 M 254, 122 P 915 (1912); Donlan v. Thompson Falls Copper & Mill. Co., 42 M 257, 112 P 445 (1910); Mantle v. Casey, 31 M 408, 78 P 591 (1904).

Untimely Motion:

Defendant's motion seeking relief from a default judgment under former Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., was untimely as it was filed well after the 60-day time limit. Wittich Law Firm, P.C. v. O'Connell, 2013 MT 122, 370 Mont. 103, 304 P.3d 375.

A motion to set aside a default judgment made 165 days after entry of judgment was not timely made under the rule, and there was no abuse of discretion in denying the motion. Bd. of Directors of Edelweiss Owners' Ass'n v. McIntosh, 251 M 144, 822 P2d 1080, 48 St. Rep. 1131 (1991).

A motion to set aside a default judgment made 118 days after judgment was entered is not timely and may not be granted. Elk Run Ranch v. Green Line Implement Co., 205 M 413, 668 P2d 258, 40 St. Rep. 1397 (1983).

A judgment may be set aside because of excusable neglect under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. However, where the party seeking relief was personally served, motion for such relief must be made within 60 days from entry of judgment. Where party here seeking relief waited until 231 days after judgment was entered, relief is precluded. Schmidt v. Jomac, Inc., 196 M 323, 639 P2d 517, 39 St. Rep. 130 (1982).

When defendant's motion to set aside default judgment in a divorce proceeding was filed approximately 6 months after the default decree was entered, the decree should not have been set aside for excusable neglect. Olson v. Olson, 175 M 444, 574 P2d 1004 (1978).

Slight Abuse Sufficient to Reverse Order Refusing to Set Aside Default Judgment: The plaintiff initiated a wrongful termination suit against her former employer, an out-of-state insurance company. A copy of the complaint was sent to the insurer by the Commissioner of Insurance, and when no answer was received, the plaintiff was awarded a default judgment. Thereafter, the defendant moved to have the judgment set aside, stating that although the complaint had been received by its mail room, the complaint had been lost before it ever reached anyone in the legal department. The lower court denied the motion. The Supreme Court held that the lower court's ruling could be set aside upon a showing of slight abuse of discretion. The court held that the facts showed that the defendant's neglect was excusable. Blume v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 242 M 465, 791 P2d 784, 47 St. Rep. 882 (1990), followed in Waldher v. Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp., 282 M 59, 935 P2d 1101, 54 St. Rep. 241 (1997).

Defendant Not Understanding Procedural Requirement: A pro se defendant failed to file an affidavit in opposition to the plaintiff's summary judgment motion. The defendant moved the lower court to reconsider its grant of the motion, arguing that he had not understood the requirement to file an opposing affidavit. The Supreme Court held that a lack of understanding of procedural requirements was not grounds under this rule for reconsideration. Taylor v. Honnerlaw, 242 M 365, 790 P2d 996, 47 St. Rep. 790 (1990).

No Basis for Discretionary Dismissal After Motion Withdrawn — Mistake or Inadvertence in Involuntary Dismissal: In a wrongful discharge action, petitioner filed a complaint on October 24, 1985, and on December 12, 1986, the state moved to dismiss for failure to prosecute, pursuant to Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P. On December 31, 1986, the state withdrew its motion based on an agreement that the claim would be held in abeyance until resolution of a companion case. However, on January 6, 1987, the District Court entered an order of dismissal but failed to serve either party with notice of dismissal. On January 13, 1988, the District Court ignored its own order of dismissal and held a hearing regarding disputed discovery. Both parties proceeded with discovery until counsel for respondent discovered the order of dismissal while reviewing the court file. Petitioner then moved for relief under Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded for further proceedings after finding that: (1) Rule 41(b) provides no basis for a discretionary dismissal after the motion to dismiss is withdrawn; (2) the order of dismissal was either a mistake or inadvertent as contemplated by this rule; and (3) appellant was not personally notified, so relief was appropriate. Diemert v. St., 242 M 127, 788 P2d 1355, 47 St. Rep. 633 (1990).

Failure of Attorney to Read Findings, Conclusions, and Order Not Excusable Neglect: Defendant prevailed in a case regarding a real estate transaction. The trial court addressed reciprocal award of attorney fees in its findings, conclusions, and order and set a hearing to determine fees. Plaintiff's attorney failed to read the findings, to notice the date of the hearing, or to appear at the hearing. Defendant was subsequently allowed to present his claim for fees and costs. The District Court properly found that the attorney's failure to carefully read the findings, conclusions, and order was not excusable neglect. Watson v. Fultz, 239 M 364, 782 P2d 361, 46 St. Rep. 1751 (1989), followed in In re Marriage of Castor, 249 M 495, 817 P2d 665, 48 St. Rep. 807 (1991).

Defendant's Financial Hardship — Failure to Pay Attorney: The defendant's financial hardship and failure to pay the advance costs and fee retainer required by her attorney, which resulted in the attorney's failure to file an appearance, did not support a finding of excusable neglect. The actions of both the defendant and her attorney contributed to entry of the default order. The attorney's neglect is attributable to the client defendant. Myers v. All W. Transp., 235 M 233, 766 P2d 864, 45 St. Rep. 2345 (1988).

Corporate Neglect Inexcusable: In attempting to prove excusable neglect for failure to appear, it was not sufficient for a company to plead forgetfulness, inattention to pertinent documents, the resignation of a company officer, the taking of a summer vacation by another company officer, and the press of other, more important business. Siewing v. Pearson Co., 226 M 458, 736 P2d 120, 44 St. Rep. 800 (1987), followed in Myers v. All W. Transp., 235 M 233, 766 P2d 864, 45 St. Rep. 2345 (1988), and Roberts v. Empire Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 278 M 135, 923 P2d 550, 53 St. Rep. 871 (1996).

Failure to Read Mail — Excusable Neglect: District Court properly refused to grant defendants' motion to set aside a default judgment entered January 11, 1985, when defendants' attorney had failed to read until February 12 mail received in his office on December 20, 1984, containing letter and copy of complaint and summons served on defendants on December 5. Attorney's neglect is attributable to defendants when they were not diligent in checking on the suit. Griffin v. Scott, 218 M 410, 710 P2d 1337, 42 St. Rep. 1695 (1985). See also Puhto v. Smith Funeral Chapels, Inc., 2011 MT 279, 362 Mont. 447, 264 P.3d 1142.

Neglect of Attorney Attributable to Client: When defendant's attorney received notices and talked on the phone on behalf of his clients but failed to do anything in response to numerous requests by opposing counsel and continued to postpone preparation and filing of a pleading, the attorney's procrastination was a type of neglect which was properly attributable to a client and did not constitute abandonment, which would excuse neglect. The Supreme Court found no abuse of discretion in District Court's conclusion that the attorney's conduct was not excusable neglect. Paxson v. Rice, 217 M 521, 706 P2d 123, 42 St. Rep. 1355 (1985), followed in In re Marriage of Castor, 249 M 495, 817 P2d 665, 48 St. Rep. 807 (1991).

Effect of Stipulation Based on Mistake in Interpretation of Law: At entry of judgment the District Court permitted entry of a stipulation that apportioned attorney fees between the parties on the basis of an incorrect interpretation of the law. The parties agreed that attorney fees are costs in mechanics' lien (now construction lien) foreclosure actions. It was error for the District Court to refuse to alter or amend the judgment upon timely application under Rules 59(g) and 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. A judgment by stipulation is as binding as any judgment or verdict, no more or less. The court was responsible for a correct application of the law in accepting the stipulation and in later ruling on whether to alter or amend the judgment thereby entered. Schillinger v. Brewer, 215 M 333, 697 P2d 919, 42 St. Rep. 408 (1985).

Default Preventable by Attorney — Client Not Absolutely Liable for Attorney's Neglect: It appears from a review of the record that attorney for appellants could have easily acted to prevent entry of default and default judgment. However, the court has moved away from the rule that a client is absolutely responsible for attorney's neglect. Lords v. Newman, 212 M 359, 688 P2d 290, 41 St. Rep. 1793 (1984). Furthermore, the court will not overturn a District Court order setting aside a default unless the order amounts to a manifest abuse of discretion. There are, in the affidavit of appellants' counsel, grounds to overturn the default, and that order must stand. Graham v. Mack, 216 M 165, 699 P2d 590, 41 St. Rep. 2521 (1984).

Standard of Review — Neglect of Attorney: The Supreme Court held that the trial court abused its discretion by failing to set aside a default judgment when the defendants were completely abandoned by their attorney (after he made a general appearance on behalf of the clients who had neither been served with process nor authorized him to so act), proceeded with diligence to rectify the court's action, and alleged a potential defense to the action. The Supreme Court determined that, under the facts of the case, it would be unconscionable to apply the general rule charging the client with the attorney's neglect. The Supreme Court clarified which standard of review applies in default cases: (1) when a trial court has granted a motion to vacate the default, a strict standard of review applies—the trial court's action will only be set aside upon a showing of manifest abuse; (2) when a trial court has denied a motion to set aside a default, a "no great abuse" standard applies—only "slight abuse" is sufficient to reverse an order refusing to set aside a default. Lords v. Newman, 212 M 359, 688 P2d 290, 41 St. Rep. 1793 (1984), followed in Griffin v. Scott, 218 M 410, 710 P2d 1337, 42 St. Rep. 1695 (1985), Siewing v. Pearson Co., 226 M 458, 736 P2d 120, 44 St. Rep. 800 (1987), In re Marriage of Whiting, 259 M 180, 854 P2d 343, 50 St. Rep. 747 (1993), In re Marriage of Martin, 265 M 95, 874 P2d 1219, 51 St. Rep. 443 (1994), and Peak Dev., LLP v. Juntunen, 2005 MT 82, 326 M 409, 110 P3d 13 (2005). Peak was overruled in Essex Ins. Co. v. Moose's Saloon, Inc., 2007 MT 202, 338 M 423, 166 P3d 451 (2007), to the extent that Peak implied that Rule 60(b)(6) required gross neglect or actual misconduct on the part of the movant's attorney in all cases, when that requirement applies only in cases in which the basis of the Rule 60(b)(6) motion is an alleged error by the movant's attorney.

Failure to Pay Fee for Filing Pleading: District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to set aside default judgment against defendant, and the judgment would not be overturned on appeal from denial of motion to set aside the default judgment, where the court found that negligent failure to pay filing fee for answer until 2½ months after filing of the answer was not excusable, that the fee was not filed until after plaintiffs requested entry of default, that the answer did not present a prima facie meritorious defense, that the evidence overwhelmingly indicated there was no defense, and that defendant's reckless disregard for the rights and feelings of the plaintiffs and his attempt to prolong the litigation were adequate reasons to deny his motion to set aside the judgment. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982).

Mistake of Law Not Grounds for Motion: Where appellants sought to set aside default judgment entered against them individually when they failed to answer complaint, on basis that the business they owned was declaring bankruptcy and they thought the automatic stay provision of the Bankruptcy Code, section 362, would bar any action, it was held that the automatic stay provision applied only to debtor in bankruptcy, not to an individual or codebtor not in bankruptcy, and as individuals, appellants had the responsibility to answer the summons. A mistake of law (mistaken reliance on automatic stay provision of Bankruptcy Code) is not a "mistake" under Rule 60(b)(1) that will support vacating a default judgment. Schmidt v. Jomac, Inc., 196 M 323, 639 P2d 517, 39 St. Rep. 130 (1982).

Mistake as to Meaning and Effect of Process Not Supported by Evidence: The District Court properly denied a motion to set aside a default judgment where plaintiff's attorney wrote defendant stating suit had been filed and offering to settle, the summons and complaint served upon defendant were legally sufficient and clearly stated that suit had been filed against him, defendant's reply letter to plaintiff's attorney indicated that he was literate and intelligent, and defendant supported his motion by stating that he did not realize the summons and complaint were official and required him to respond, that he had never been sued before, and that he had believed the papers were an attempt by the attorney for plaintiff to scare him into settling and only required a response to plaintiff's attorney. Gergen v. Pitsch, 194 M 70, 634 P2d 652, 38 St. Rep. 1679 (1981).

Insufficient Reason to Justify Relief From Judgment — Unresponsive Party: The District Court properly refused to grant appellants' motion to set aside a default judgment under Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., where appellants received notice that their counsel had withdrawn from their case and yet had made no attempt (1) to obtain another counsel to assist them in answering interrogatories, (2) to make an adequate showing of why they failed to file interrogatories at any time, or (3) to offer proper answers to the interrogatories. Audit Serv. v. Kraus Constr., 189 M 94, 615 P2d 183 (1980).

"Excusable Neglect"— Illness: A default judgment was entered against defendant in a claim for wages and expenses. Defendant contends that because he was ill and under a doctor's care he left his business in the care of others, which resulted in his neglect of this lawsuit. He contends this was "excusable neglect", for which reason the default judgment should be set aside. Defendant, however, was properly served with the complaint, and the record does not show that he was so ill as to render his neglect excusable. Morris v. Frank Trans. Co., 184 M 74, 601 P2d 698 (1979).

Failure to Appear — Excusable Neglect: Plaintiff entered into a contract to sell real property and a beer license to Dayton, who assigned the contract to Borkoski. Plaintiff later brought an action against Dayton and Borkoski. Borkoski failed to appear and a default judgment was entered. Borkoski believed that he did not have to appear until Dayton was served. He also called the clerk of court, who said that no hearing date had been set. In addition, the defendant only had 6 days from the time served until the default judgment was entered. Borkoski sought to have the default set aside but his motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that these facts constitute excusable neglect and the District Court abused its discretion in not setting aside the default judgment. Kootenai Corp. v. Dayton, 184 M 19, 601 P2d 47 (1979).

Excusable Neglect in Default Judgments — Failure to Update Name of Registered Agent: Where a complaint was served on a person listed as the registered agent of the defendant corporation, but who was no longer the agent of the corporation, and the corporation diligently sought to defend the action upon receipt of actual notice, failure of the defendant corporation to replace the name of its registered agent was excusable neglect and entry of default judgment was an abuse of the trial court's discretion. Clute v. A. B. Concrete, 179 M 475, 587 P2d 392 (1978).

Inadvertence or Excusable Neglect: The court properly denied a motion to set aside a default judgment against a defendant who allegedly received no notice of the action because he failed to meet the burden of proving, as the moving party, inadvertence or excusable neglect. Purington v. Soundwest, 173 M 106, 566 P2d 795 (1977).

Failure to Appear Without Reason: The court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to set aside the default judgment since there was no showing of what excuse the attorney for defendant may have had to not appear for jury trial or to apprise the defendant of the trial date. Credit Counsellors, Inc. v. Alcorn, 173 M 72, 566 P2d 77 (1977).

Setting Aside Default Judgment — When: It was proper for court to set aside default judgment caused by attorney misfiling complaint. The court used its discretion and will not be reversed unless manifest abuse is proved. Judgment by default is not favored. Keller v. Hanson, 157 M 307, 485 P2d 705 (1971).

No Reliance on Judgment or Injustice: Grant of new trial pursuant to Rule 59(a) to permit plaintiff to give additional testimony on damages that had been omitted by excusable neglect was not improper, notwithstanding that such relief should have been given under this section, where no intervening rights had attached in reliance upon judgment and no actual injustice would ensue. John J. Ming, Inc. v. District Court, 155 M 84, 466 P2d 907 (1970).

Quiet Title Action — Colorable Title Required: In quiet title action, District Court properly denied motion to set aside default decree where moving party had no color of title. Under this section, default judgment will be set aside for excusable neglect only if movant is able to show good defense on merits. Diamond Inv. Co. v. Geagan, 154 M 122, 460 P2d 760 (1969).

Mistake of Law as to Contract Held Insufficient: Mistaken belief of party, against whom default judgment was taken, as to legal effect of contract with adverse party was mistake of law rather than mistake of fact, and was not such a "mistake" as would support vacating the default. Uffleman v. Labbit, 152 M 238, 448 P2d 690 (1968).

Slight Abuse Sufficient for Reversal: Slight abuse of discretion in refusing to set aside default judgment for "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect" is sufficient to justify reversal, and when motion to vacate default judgment is supported by showing which leaves court in doubt or upon which reasonable minds might reach different conclusions, the doubt should be resolved in favor of the motion. Uffleman v. Labbit, 152 M 238, 448 P2d 690 (1968).

Change of Counsel: Motion to have judgment vacated as to date and redated so as to permit moving party to file exceptions to findings or take other steps counsel considered necessary for protection of client was improperly denied, and was abuse of discretion where moving party had inadequate time in which to obtain present counsel when conflict of interest arose with prior counsel. Schmidt v. Lloyd, 152 M 158, 447 P2d 485 (1968).

Probate Matters: Final decree of distribution and discharge in probate will not be set aside on ground of inadvertence or fraud either under statute or Rule 60(b) in absence of manifest abuse of court's discretion in case where moving party had every opportunity to protect his claim in probate and failed to do so. Werning v. McFarland, 149 M 137, 423 P2d 851 (1967).

Motion After Default — Discretion of Court: Where record showed that defendant took no action for nearly 3 months after default judgment had been entered, defendant was not prejudiced by plaintiff's failure to give written notice of application for default judgment as required by Rule 55(b)(2), M.R.Civ.P., and District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion to vacate the default judgment under Rule 55(c), M.R.Civ.P. Williams v. Superior Homes, Inc., 148 M 38, 417 P2d 92 (1966).

"Personal Problems" Insufficient: Defendant's contention that "personal problems drove all thought of lesser problems from his mind" was not sufficient to set aside a default judgment under subsection (1) of this section. Dudley v. Stiles, 142 M 566, 386 P2d 342 (1963).

Failure to Read Mail Not Excusable Neglect: Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to vacate a default judgment where the facts advanced as "excusable neglect" were that defendant's counsel failed to read a letter from plaintiff's counsel for 2 or 3 weeks because he was occupied with other urgent matters and because he assumed that the letter was on another matter that was not urgent. U.S. Rubber Co. v. Community Gas & Oil Co., 139 M 36, 359 P2d 375 (1961).

Representations of Plaintiff — Default Properly Opened: The trial court did not err in granting a motion to vacate a default judgment where the defendant made a showing that plaintiff gave him the impression that the matter involved would not be pressed, and that he had therefore made no appearance on account of his impression. Simons v. Keller, 137 M 52, 350 P2d 366 (1960).

Mistake as to Service — Excusable Neglect: Affidavit to the effect that defendant's attorney mistakenly believed that papers were served on his client the same day the client delivered them to his office was a sufficient showing of excusable neglect to justify setting aside of default judgment. Worstell v. DeVine, 135 M 1, 335 P2d 305 (1959).

Party to Be Directly Affected: The purpose of the provision for relief from judgment is to give relief to a party who is directly affected and not to give relief to a stranger who might be indirectly affected. Moore v. Capitol Gas Corp., 117 M 148, 158 P2d 302 (1945).

Attorney's Neglect Imputed to Client: Neglect of an attorney to make proper inquiry into the facts of a case before entering into an agreed statement of facts upon which the case was tried was the neglect of his client, and unless excusable, relief could not be had from the resultant adverse judgment. Rieckhoff v. Woodhull, 106 M 22, 75 P2d 56 (1937).

Default by Nonresident — Mistake as to Foreign Law: The rule of 28-2-411 that mistakes of foreign law are mistakes of fact was not available to nonresident petitioning the court to set aside a judgment on ground of mistake where he brought foreclosure proceedings in Montana through a local attorney and failed to advise attorney of a payment that kept the debt alive in the belief the law here was the same as in his state, and attorney entered into an agreed statement of facts upon the trial of which the court found that the debt was outlawed. Rieckhoff v. Woodhull, 106 M 22, 75 P2d 56 (1937).

Mistake as to Law — Purpose of Rule: Setting aside a judgment on the ground of mistake may not be had where the mistake is one of law, as ignorance of the law is no excuse. Otherwise, there could be no security in legal rights, no certainty in judicial investigations, and no finality in litigation. Rieckhoff v. Woodhull, 106 M 22, 75 P2d 56 (1937).

Motion Addressed to Court's Discretion: An application to set aside a judgment on ground it was taken through applicant's mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect is addressed to the discretion of the trial court, and in absence of manifest abuse of discretion will not be disturbed on appeal. Each application must be determined upon its own facts. Rieckhoff v. Woodhull, 106 M 22, 75 P2d 56 (1937).

Information From Third Party Held Insufficient: Showing in support of a motion to set aside a default made 11 months after entry, to the effect that defendant in an action for slander had been informed by a third person that plaintiff did not intend to do anything with the action and intended to let the matter drop, with the result that she did not think anything more about it and did not consult anyone until she learned of the entry of judgment by default, was insufficient to warrant setting aside of the default, and the court abused its discretion in granting the motion. Kosonen v. Waara, 87 M 24, 285 P2d 668 (1930).

Equitable and Legal Remedy Precluded: Plaintiff mortgage company, holding a first mortgage upon a tract of land, by inadvertence omitted from its complaint for foreclosure a description of the most valuable part of the tract, had judgment and bought the property as described on execution sale. Subsequently it discovered the error and moved to have the decree vacated. The motion was granted, a new decree filed, and a new order of sale issued, but on appeal the new decree was set aside for failure of plaintiff to pursue properly the remedy for relief from judgment. Thereafter the holder of the second mortgage brought suit to foreclose and plaintiff filed a cross-complaint in which, appealing to the equity arm of the court, it sought relief from the earlier judgment. Plaintiff had an adequate remedy by motion, lost it through its own fault, and could not thereafter invoke the equity power of the court to obtain the relief it might have had under its motion. Meyer v. Lemley, 86 M 83, 282 P 268 (1929), followed in Krein v. Heineman, 226 M 474, 736 P2d 481, 44 St. Rep. 813 (1987).

Parties Entitled to Relief: The legal remedy for the vacation of a judgment taken against a party through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect is as available to one in whose favor judgment was rendered as to him against whom it went, providing diligence is exercised in asserting the right. Meyer v. Lemley, 86 M 83, 282 P 268 (1929).

Additional Time to Answer Not Used: Where counsel for plaintiff for 40 days after defendant filed its answer requiring a reply failed to file it, and then upon decision of a motion to strike were granted 20 days in which to further plead but omitted to do so, the court may not be said to have abused its discretion in refusing to set aside the consequent default, even though counsel may have been excusable in that, while in court at the time of the order resulting in the granting of the additional time in which to plead, they did not hear the announcement of the order. Mihelich v. Butte Elec. Ry., 85 M 604, 281 P 540 (1929).

Discharge of Counsel — Default Properly Opened: Where the resident agent of a foreign corporation had been served with summons and mailed it to the general counsel of defendant without knowledge that the latter had been discharged and the general counsel failed to transmit it to his former client, the failure of defendant company to advise its agent of counsel's discharge, resulting in the entry of a judgment by default, was excusable under the circumstances of the case. Reynolds v. Gladys Belle Oil Co., 75 M 332, 243 P 576 (1926), followed in Twenty-Seventh Street, Inc. v. Johnson, 220 M 469, 716 P2d 210, 43 St. Rep. 534 (1986).

Failure of Mails as Excusable Neglect: Miscarriage of a letter sent by defendant to his attorney, asking him to take care of a case pending against him, receipt of which would have avoided an entry of default, is a sufficient showing of excusable neglect to warrant the setting aside of the default. Reynolds v. Gladys Belle Oil Co., 75 M 332, 243 P 576 (1926).

Mental Defective — Mistake as Excusable Neglect: Where defendant had been restored to capacity about 8 months before summons was served on her, and at that time she was still of doubtful mentality and was under the impression that by appearing before a notary public to give her deposition at the instance of plaintiff she had made appearance in the cause, a case of excusable neglect was made and the court abused its discretion in refusing to grant the motion. Brothers v. Brothers, 71 M 378, 230 P 60 (1924).

Attorney's Headache Held Insufficient: Showing made by defendant in aid of his motion to set aside a default judgment, to the effect that he intended to appear on the last day but forgot because of a headache, was insufficient to invoke judicial discretion in his favor and the court in setting aside the judgment committed error. Pac. Acceptance Corp. v. McCue, 71 M 99, 228 P 761 (1924).

Default — Prerequisites for Opening: To warrant the vacation of a default, it is necessary that the party in default show affirmatively that he proceeded with diligence, that the neglect was excusable, that the judgment if permitted to stand will affect him injuriously, and that he has a good defense on the merits. Eder v. Bareolos, 63 M 363, 207 P 471 (1922); Delaney v. Cook, 59 M 92, 195 P 833 (1921).

Distraction of Counsel — Default Properly Opened: In setting aside a default judgment for neglect of counsel for defendant in an action for trespass, the court did not abuse its discretion where counsel had been for some time prior to, and was at, the date for appearance engaged as counsel for defendant in a homicide case of unusual importance and in the conduct of which his attention was so absorbed as to cause him to overlook making appearance, where it further appeared that he acted promptly and had a meritorious defense. Eder v. Bareolos, 63 M 363, 207 P 471 (1922).

Insufficient Facts Alleged — Mistake as to Filing Date: An affidavit of counsel for defendant in support of his application for vacation of default, that he misunderstood the date upon which the appearance of his client was due and mistakenly supposed it to be at a date 10 days later than it actually was, without a statement of any fact or circumstance out of which the misunderstanding arose, was insufficient to move the discretion of the court and therefore an order granting the motion was error. Robinson v. Petersen, 63 M 247, 206 P 1092 (1922).

Inexcusable Delay — Motion Properly Denied: Where defendant knew of the pendency of an action against him 5 months before judgment by default was entered but took no steps looking to a defense on the merits until 7 months after its entry, when he moved to set the judgment aside, asking leave to file his answer, and thereafter for 3 years more neglected to bring his motion on for hearing, denial of the motion on the ground of inexcusable delay was proper. Hinderager v. MacGinniss, 61 M 312, 202 P 200 (1921).

Default Properly Opened: Where defendants' attorney had prepared a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) and intended to file it within the time allowed by statute, but on account of important business engagements elsewhere failed to do so, where during his absence and upon recalling the fact that he had not filed it he advised one of defendants by letter where the demurrer could be found in his office with directions to file it, etc., and where an answer was tendered with the motion, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in granting a motion to set aside a judgment by default. Farmers' Co-op Ass'n v. Roper, 57 M 42, 188 P 141 (1919).

Relief From Default Not a Right: When one who is in default applies to the court for relief, it is incumbent upon him to show affirmatively that the default resulted from mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect. Even when such showing is made, relief cannot be demanded as a matter of right. The statute refers the subject to the sound legal discretion of the trial court. Kersten v. Coleman, 50 M 82, 144 P 1092 (1914).

Mistake as to Filing Date — Default Properly Opened: It is no abuse of discretion to set aside a default judgment entered through a mistake of counsel as to the date when an amended complaint was to have been filed. Voelker v. Golden Curry Consol. Min. Co., 40 M 466, 107 P 414 (1910).

Mistake of Court Not Covered by Rule: Where an order taxing costs in favor of plaintiff, included in a judgment for him, omitted certain items claimed by him which judgment had been affirmed on appeal by defendant, the trial court had no authority after affirmance to make an order taxing such costs, though the failure to tax them originally was an oversight on the part of the court. The provision for relief applies only to the mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect of the party litigant and not of the court. State ex rel. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. District Court, 32 M 20, 79 P 410 (1905).

Time for Answer — Mistake of Law Insufficient: The failure of defendant's counsel to know that a special appearance to move to quash the service of summons did not extend the time for a general appearance and answer is not such surprise or excusable neglect as justifies relief. Mantle v. Casey, 31 M 408, 78 P 591 (1904).

Lack of Consent to Continuance Insufficient: Where, after a case had been set for trial, the attorney for the defendants wrote to the opposing attorney requesting a continuance, but before receiving an answer to his letter he left the place of his residence, and his whereabouts was unknown to the attorney for the plaintiff until it was too late for the latter to inform him that he could not consent to the continuance, and judgment was rendered for the plaintiffs upon the day set for the trial, the facts did not show any surprise, mistake, or excusable neglect authorizing the court to set aside the judgment. Lowell v. Ames, 6 M 187, 9 P 826 (1886), distinguished in Whiteside v. Logan, 7 M 373, 17 P 34 (1888) and Benedict v. Spendiff, 9 M 85, 22 P 500 (1889).

FAILURE OF SERVICE

Improper Use of Secretary of State to Serve Nonresident Defendant — Default Judgment Void: Plaintiffs' business was destroyed by a fire allegedly caused by a defective light ballast manufactured by defendant corporation located in Illinois. Although plaintiffs had contact with defendant's counsel, experts, and insurer in demanding payment for the loss, plaintiffs never attempted to use Rule 4D(2)(e) or Rule 4D(3), M.R.Civ.P., to personally serve defendant with notice that a suit had been filed in Montana, but instead relied on Rule 4D(2)(f), M.R.Civ.P., to complete service of process by service on the Montana Secretary of State. Not having been notified of the suit, defendant failed to answer the complaint and prepared no defense, and default judgment was entered for plaintiffs. When notified of the default judgment, defendant immediately retained counsel and moved to set aside the judgment on grounds that service was inadequate because no one in authority at defendant's corporation ever received the summons and complaint. The District Court failed to act on the motion, so the motion was considered to be denied, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. In order to use Rule 4D(2)(f) to complete service of process by service on the Montana Secretary of State, plaintiff was first required to exercise reasonable diligence to serve notice on a representative of defendant in Montana or, if a representative was not available, to exercise reasonable diligence to ascertain defendant's address (of which plaintiff's counsel in this case was aware) and serve notice at that address. Because plaintiff's counsel did not exercise reasonable diligence and attempt to directly serve defendant before affecting service through the Montana Secretary of State, service was improper and deprived the District Court of personal jurisdiction over defendant, rendering the default judgment void as a matter of law. Nikolaisen v. Advance Transformer Co., 2007 MT 352, 340 M 332, 174 P3d 940 (2007), distinguished in Ptarmigan Owner's Ass'n, Inc. v. Alton, 2013 MT 69, 369 Mont. 274, 298 P.3d 1140.

Lack of Personal Jurisdiction Based on Failure of Service Affirmed: The District Court granted Semenza a default judgment in February 2004 after Semenza stated that defendant was properly served but failed to plead or defend. In May 2004, defendant moved to set aside the default judgment on grounds that defendant was not properly served. Semenza argued that the motion must be denied pursuant to Rule 60(c), M.R.Civ.P., because more than 60 days had elapsed since judgment. The District Court did not rule on Semenza's argument, but instead concluded that because defendant was not properly served, the court had no personal jurisdiction to enter the default judgment. Semenza appealed, contending that defendant knew about the case after having received a letter referencing the action. The Supreme Court noted that actual knowledge of a lawsuit is not a substitute for proper service. Addressing Semenza's argument regarding Rule 60(c), M.R.Civ.P., the Supreme Court held that if service of process is flawed, personal jurisdiction over a party is not acquired and that judgment entered without jurisdiction is void. The District Court was affirmed. Semenza v. Kniss, 2005 MT 268, 329 M 115, 122 P3d 1203 (2005), following Marriage of Blaskovich, 249 M 248, 815 P2d 581 (1991), and followed in Mtn. W. Bank, N.A. v. Glacier Kitchens, Inc., 2012 MT 132, 365 Mont. 276, 281 P.3d 600.

No District Court Jurisdiction to Enter Marriage Dissolution in Favor of One Party Absent Service of Dissolution Petition and Summons on Other Party: On August 15, 2003, the parties entered a property settlement agreement dividing the marital estate, and the wife also signed a consent to entry of judgment agreeing to dissolution if the property settlement agreement was presented to the District Court for approval and made an integral part of the dissolution. The husband then filed a petition for dissolution and included the settlement agreement and the wife's consent to entry of judgment, but did not serve the wife with any of the filings. The District Court held a hearing without the wife being present, adopted the settlement agreement, and entered a decree of dissolution. The husband's counsel mailed a copy of the judgment to the wife, who then filed a motion under this rule to set aside the judgment, claiming that the decree was void because the husband failed to have a summons issued and to serve her with process. The motion was denied, but on appeal, the Supreme Court vacated the judgment. Dissolution proceedings are not exempt from rules regarding service of process, and if one party commences a dissolution proceeding, the other party must be served as provided in the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. Further, a petition for dissolution must be signed under oath by both parties. The wife's execution of the documents prior to the filing of the case did not constitute a voluntary appearance in the action, nor does notice of a hearing substitute for service of summons. A District Court may obtain personal jurisdiction through strict compliance with the mandatory rules for service of process, and in this case, the wife's signing of documents prior to the filing of the dissolution petition did not confer jurisdiction on the court absent service of process. Thus, the District Court abused its discretion in failing to grant the wife's motion to set aside the judgment, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. In re Marriage of Zacher, 2004 MT 249, 323 M 54, 98 P3d 309 (2004), following Marriage of Blaskovich, 249 M 248, 815 P2d 581 (1991), and In re Marriage of Grounds/Coward, 271 M 350, 897 P2d 200 (1995).

Entry of Judgment Not Filed — Time for Filing Appeal Not Running Until Notice of Entry Issued: When no notice of entry of judgment is filed by a party, the time for filing an appeal does not begin to run until the Clerk of Court issues a notice of entry of judgment under Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P., nor does the time to request the court to modify or vacate an order begin to run. In the present case, the filing of a notice of entry of judgment was required under that rule as an action in which an appearance has been made, but neither party filed the notice. As a result, the 60-day filing period required under this rule could not begin to run, so a subsequent motion for relief was not time-barred. In re Marriage of Bell, 2000 MT 88, 299 M 219, 998 P2d 1163, 57 St. Rep. 381 (2000).

Withdrawal of Counsel — "Rule 10 Notice" Sent to Last-Known Address Held "Notice as Required by Law": In a dissolution proceeding between Christina and Laramie, Laramie's counsel withdrew after he had not been contacted by Laramie for approximately 18 months. In the notice of withdrawal, Laramie's counsel provided Christina's counsel with Laramie's last-known address. Christina's counsel then sent a "Rule 10 notice", pursuant to Rule 10, M.U.D.C.R. (Title 25, ch. 19), to Laramie at the address provided by his former counsel, informing Laramie that he must appoint another attorney, that trial was scheduled for a particular date, and that if he did not appoint an attorney or appear, a default judgment might be made against him. That notice was returned by the post office because Laramie was apparently no longer living at that address. After a decree of dissolution was entered, Christina's counsel obtained Laramie's address from his mother and sent Laramie a notice of entry of judgment. Fifty-six days later, Laramie moved, pursuant to this rule, to set aside the judgment, arguing that Christina's counsel did not exercise due diligence in obtaining his correct mailing address and that if Christina's counsel obtained his correct address through his mother after entry of judgment, Christina's counsel could have done so before entry of judgment. Citing McPartlin v. Fransen, 178 M 178, 582 P2d 1255 (1978), and Stanley v. Holms, 281 M 329, 934 P2d 196 (1997), the Supreme Court held that Christina's counsel, by mailing the Rule 10 notice to Laramie's last-known address, satisfied the requirement that he make a good faith effort to notify Laramie and that Christina's counsel had no obligation to "track down" Laramie through his mother. In re Marriage of Wallace, 284 M 360, 944 P2d 227, 54 St. Rep. 920 (1997).

Marriage Dissolution — Insufficient Service of Process Based on Insufficient Affidavit: An affidavit of the husband's lawyer stating that the husband had not heard from his wife was insufficient in that it did not state that the wife was out of state or was concealing herself or that a diligent inquiry had been made as to her whereabouts. Because the affidavit did not allege diligent inquiry, it was not sufficient evidence of diligent inquiry, and service by publication based on the affidavit was insufficient service of process. The District Court abused its discretion in refusing to vacate the default judgment and an order to convey real property. In re Marriage of Shikany, 269 M 493, 887 P2d 153, 51 St. Rep. 1031 (1994).

Invalidity of Default and Summary Judgments for Failure to Give Notice and Other Failures: Kenner's filing of two motions to dismiss constituted appearances in Moran's quiet title action, and Kenner was thus entitled to written notice of Moran's application for default judgment at least 3 days prior to the hearing on the application. The informal communications to Kenner's attorney by Moran's attorney, threatening to proceed with the quiet title action if Kenner did not fulfill the terms of a settlement agreement that the parties had signed, were not the equivalent of and could not substitute for the required notice. The failure to notify was compounded by failure to notify Kenner that the default judgment had been entered. Therefore, default judgment against Kenner was void, and Kenner's motion for summary judgment in Kenner's independent action to set aside the default judgment should have been granted. Furthermore, at the hearing in Kenner's action, Moran's request for summary judgment on Moran's counterclaim for specific performance of the settlement agreement should not have been granted because neither party had entered evidence on that issue, Moran had not moved for summary judgment, and Kenner had no notice of the request for summary judgment. Kenner v. Moran, 263 M 368, 868 P2d 620, 51 St. Rep. 94 (1994).

Notice of Default on Tax Deed Not Personally Served — Order Set Aside: In a case involving the setting aside of a default judgment in a tax deed setting, the defaulting party was not personally served, service being accomplished through legal publication. Because a motion to set aside was timely made and service was not personally made, the party was entitled to use Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., to set aside the order of default. McDonald v. Grassle, 228 M 25, 740 P2d 1122, 44 St. Rep. 1312 (1987).

Default Judgment Void for Failure of Service: The District Court was correct in setting aside the default judgment against Western Supply, Inc. as void under Rule 60(b)(4), M.R.Civ.P., for failure of service of process when the fatal flaw in the service was not merely in a lack of due diligence, but also in the failure to submit a proper and sufficient affidavit in compliance with Rule 4D(2)(f), M.R.Civ.P., in support of substituted service on the Secretary of State. Jurisdiction cannot be acquired without strict compliance with the statute. Shields v. Pirkle Refrigerated Freightlines, Inc., 181 M 37, 591 P2d 1120 (1979), followed in Ihnot v. Ihnot, 2000 MT 77, 299 M 137, 999 P2d 303, 57 St. Rep. 338 (2000).

Default Judgment Set Aside — Improper Service: Because service upon a former employee was not service upon the company itself, default judgment was void for want of jurisdiction and set aside. Kraus v. Treasure Belt Min. Co., 146 M 432, 408 P2d 151 (1965).

Failure of Service — Time for Motion: The 12 months' period (reduced by 1965 amendment to 180 days) after rendition of judgment within which a defaulting party not personally served with summons may be permitted to answer to the merits begins to run from the date of such rendition, and the limitation applies to the time when the motion is made and not to when it is heard. State ex rel. Hahn v. District Court, 83 M 400, 272 P 525 (1928).

Failure of Service Not Shown Upon Complaint: Where a decree of divorce against an insane husband was procured without personal service of summons and is therefore void for want of jurisdiction, there can be no relief after the expiration of the time limit fixed except by an action in equity to set aside the decree, as it is fair upon its face, and the defect of jurisdiction must be made to appear by evidence dehors the record. The defendant is not to be denied relief in equity because he did not proceed under the provision for setting aside a decree where no lack or want of diligence is imputed to him. State ex rel. Happel v. District Court, 38 M 166, 99 P 291 (1909), distinguished in Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937).

FRAUD

Error in Denial of Motion to Set Aside Past-Due Child Support Judgment for Fraud — Payments Improperly Applied to Barred Debt: In 1998, a mother sought $33,350 in past-due child support owed over a 20-year period. The District Court found that the statute of limitations in 27-2-201 limited recovery to arrearages incurred only in the 10 years prior to filing the complaint. At trial, the father provided documentation that some support had been paid, but the mother denied ever receiving any payments. After trial, the father attempted to introduce evidence of additional payments, but the evidence was disallowed. The District Court then calculated the amount of child support owed since 1988, but applied payments made since 1988 to the obligations incurred prior to 1988, irrespective of the statute of limitations. The father then moved to set aside the judgment because the mother committed fraud by denying the receipt of certain payments, but that motion was denied without reaching the issue of fraud. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in denying the motion. Although a District Court should apply any payment of child support to the earliest arrearage, an award may be applied only to arrearages due within 10 years of a suit for enforcement. It is incongruous for a court to bar a plaintiff from bringing an action to enforce a certain debt, but then apply payments toward that barred debt. Thus, the District Court erred in applying payments made since 1988 to the obligations incurred prior to 1988, and in turn erred in failing to address the merits of the father's motion alleging fraud. The case was remanded for further consideration. Roberts v. Nickey, 2002 MT 37, 308 M 335, 43 P3d 263 (2002). See also In re Adoption of C.J.H., W.L.H., & T.A.H., 246 M 52, 803 P2d 214 (1990), and In re Marriage of Hooper & Crittendon, 247 M 322, 806 P2d 541 (1991).

Equitable Action — Type of Fraud for Which Relief May Be Granted: A father was assessed back child support but claimed that he was entitled to a new trial on the issue because at the hearing, the mother had represented that the children had lived with her the entire time, when in fact, the children lived with their father for a period, which he claimed was fraud upon the court, entitling him to relief. Citing Brown v. Jensen, 231 M 340, 753 P2d 870, 45 St. Rep. 665 (1988), the Supreme Court noted that the type of fraud for which relief may be granted in an independent equitable action is extrinsic or collateral, rather than intrinsic fraud. Extrinsic fraud is an intentional act by the prevailing party that prevents the unsuccessful party from having a fair submission of the controversy. False or fraudulent representations, concealments, and perjured testimony by a party during court proceedings constitute only intrinsic fraud and do not rise to the level of fraud upon the court. In this case, the father presented testimony at the hearing rebutting the mother's representation of the living arrangements. Thus, the court was aware of the father's contention, so it could not be claimed that the mother acted fraudulently or that her representations were misleading or relied upon by the father to his prejudice. The father failed to demonstrate that the mother committed extrinsic or intrinsic fraud upon the court, and his motion for relief was properly denied. In re Marriage of Hopper, 1999 MT 310, 297 M 225, 991 P2d 960, 56 St. Rep. 1247 (1999). See also In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995), and In re Estate of Cooney, 2019 MT 293, 398 Mont. 166, 454 P.3d 1190.

Fraud Must Be Extrinsic — Motion for Relief May Be Barred by Res Judicata: Loney was sued by his law firm for fees owed for representing him in bankruptcy proceedings. Loney failed to answer the complaint, and a default judgment was entered. Loney subsequently filed a complaint to have the judgment declared void on the basis that the debt had been discharged in bankruptcy. Loney also argued that the judgment should be set aside on the basis that the law firm's failure in its suit against him to notify the court that the fees had not been approved by the bankruptcy court constituted fraud. The Supreme Court held that Loney could have litigated the issues of the discharge of the debt and fraud on the part of the law firm when the law firm sued him. Therefore, he was barred by the doctrine of res judicata from litigating those issues again in his suit to have the firm's judgment set aside. The Supreme Court also held that any fraud by the law firm was intrinsic and that the fraud had to be extrinsic to warrant setting aside the judgment on that basis. Loney v. Milodragovich, Dale & Dye, P.C., 273 M 506, 905 P2d 158, 52 St. Rep. 1093 (1995), followed in Butler v. Colwell, 1998 MT 241, 291 M 134, 967 P2d 779, 55 St. Rep. 1007 (1998).

Intrinsic Fraud — Motion for Relief Subject to Sixty-Day Time Limitation: Upon the divorce of John and Andrea, John agreed to pay certain jointly held debts, and the District Court entered the agreement into its decree. Later, after John filed a Chapter 11 bankruptcy proceeding, Andrea obtained a modification of the original decree on the basis that John's representations of payment constituted extrinsic fraud. The modification was obtained by a motion made long after the expiration of the 60-day deadline provided in this rule. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court, holding that the representations made by John did not come within the scope of the residual clause of the rule because those representations did not constitute a fraud upon the court or serve as the basis for an independent action for extrinsic fraud. Thus, the Supreme Court held that the motion for relief was untimely made and improperly granted. In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Fraud Between Parties Not Fraud Upon Court: More than 2 years after the dissolution order, Wise brought a motion to set aside the property settlement agreement drawn up by her attorney, contending that her husband had committed fraud against her and the court in that he told her that his work pension was not a marital asset. The statute of limitations had run for appealing the order on the basis of fraud between the parties, but the lower court found that the husband's statements to his wife constituted an extrinsic fraud upon the court. The Supreme Court held that fraud upon the court includes only the most egregious conduct and that generally fraud between the parties does not rise to that level, particularly in the present case when Wise's attorney drew up the property settlement agreement. Wise v. Nirider, 261 M 310, 862 P2d 1128, 50 St. Rep. 1334 (1993), followed in In re Marriage of Hopper, 1999 MT 310, 297 M 225, 991 P2d 960, 56 St. Rep. 1247 (1999).

Allegations Plaintiff and Its Lawyers Engaged in Perjury, Misrepresentations, Deception, Subversion of Justice, and Fictitious Theories of the Case — No Extrinsic Fraud: For purposes of relief from a judgment through an independent equitable action under this rule, extrinsic fraud is fraud that prevented the unsuccessful party from presenting the party's case, is collateral to the matters tried by the court, and is not fraud in the matters on which the judgment was rendered. Perjury and false or fraudulent allegations used in obtaining a judgment are not extrinsic fraud. Appellants' claims that the bank and lawyers conspired to deceive the court and subvert justice, misrepresented facts, committed perjury, and used forceful arguments and artful pleading to develop a fictitious theory of the case that misled the court did not allege extrinsic fraud. Moreover, the allegations did not constitute fraud upon the court. Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604, 50 St. Rep. 509 (1993), followed in In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Fraud Between Parties — No Fraud Upon Court: Fraud between parties to a case does not, without more, constitute fraud upon the court. Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604, 50 St. Rep. 509 (1993), followed in In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995), and In re Marriage of Hopper, 1999 MT 310, 297 M 225, 991 P2d 960, 56 St. Rep. 1247 (1999). Failure to Show Unfair Denial of Opportunity to Have Case Heard — Res Judicata: Richland County sought to enforce a 6¼% oil, gas, and mineral royalty interest reserved prior to a 1937 quiet title decree by asserting that there was extrinsic fraud upon the court because plaintiff's attorney in the quiet title action, who also happened to be the Richland County Attorney, failed to appear on behalf of the county, resulting in a default judgment against the county and denying the county the opportunity to litigate the reservation. However, the county failed to produce facts to substantiate its theory that the county's interest was subverted or that the county was unfairly denied an opportunity to have its case heard. Absent such a showing, relitigation of the reservation claim was barred by res judicata. Filler v. Richland County, 247 M 285, 806 P2d 537, 48 St. Rep. 200 (1991).

Trial on Merits Not Warranted in Every Case of Fraud: Appellant contended the distinction between intrinsic and extrinsic fraud was so difficult to ascertain that a trial on the merits must be allowed in every case. The Supreme Court recognized that allegations of fraud must be carefully scrutinized on a case-by-case basis but disagreed that distinctions between extrinsic and intrinsic fraud were so elusive as to warrant trial in every case. Brown v. Jensen, 231 M 340, 753 P2d 870, 45 St. Rep. 665 (1988).

Failure to Disclose Debts — Extrinsic Fraud: A couple's failure to disclose certain debts in their property settlement agreement misled the trial court as to the actual financial status of the marital estate. This failure to disclose was extrinsic fraud. It misled the court to a false judgment that wrongfully insulated the couple's property from creditors. Extrinsic fraud justifies invoking the inherent equitable power of a court to reopen and set aside a judgment. Relief from a judgment obtained by extrinsic fraud may be granted on motion in the original action or in a separate suit in equity. In re Marriage of Witbart, 216 M 178, 701 P2d 339, 42 St. Rep. 725 (1985), overruled in part in In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Motion Not Timely Filed — Intrinsic Fraud Not Grounds for Motion: Appellant asserted sex- or race-based discrimination when the University of Montana (now University of Montana-Missoula) failed to renew her teaching contract. At trial, the head of appellant's department testified that there were no funds available to renew appellant's contract. The District Court determined no unlawful discrimination had occurred. Subsequently, the head of the department pleaded guilty to misuse of federal funds granted to the University and diversion of such funds far in excess of appellant's salary. Appellant filed a motion under Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., to vacate the judgment on the grounds of fraud. The District Court denied the motion, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The Supreme Court found the claim was time-barred under the rule because it was filed after the 60-day time limit. The claim was not allowed under the residual clause in Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., because the fraud fell short of what is legally required to vacate a final judgment. The Supreme Court found the misappropriation of funds did not materially and directly affect the outcome of the case and the false in-court testimony was intrinsic fraud upon the court, rather than extrinsic, and therefore did not constitute sufficient grounds to vacate a judgment under the residual clause. Salway v. Arkava, 215 M 135, 695 P2d 1302, 42 St. Rep. 241 (1985), followed in Filler v. Richland County, 247 M 285, 806 P2d 537, 48 St. Rep. 200 (1991), and In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Property Settlement — Extrinsic Fraud: The husband retained an attorney in a dissolution proceeding. Husband convinced the wife that only one attorney was necessary, and that attorney represented both parties, with the wife being named as the petitioner. The husband and the attorney failed to disclose to the court the balloon payment due on the house given to the wife and the value of the husband's pension. This failure to disclose relevant information to the court was extrinsic fraud and was the basis upon which to reopen a judgment dividing the marital estate. In re Marriage of Madden, 211 M 237, 683 P2d 493, 41 St. Rep. 1332 (1984), overruled in part in In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Dissolution of Marriage — Fraud as Ground for Relief From Property Disposition — No Fraud Found: The trial court properly dismissed a motion to set aside a decree of dissolution incorporating a property settlement agreement that was essentially drafted by the petitioner and executed against the advice of counsel. There was no fraud evidenced. The wife settled for a disproportionate settlement, then several years later, changed her mind with regard to what property she wanted from the marital estate. Schaak v. Schaak, 210 M 242, 681 P2d 1089, 41 St. Rep. 1033 (1984).

Intrinsic Fraud Not Grounds for Motion — Motion Not Timely Filed: Appellant was personally served with a petition for dissolution of marriage and a property settlement. Appellant failed to answer or otherwise appear, and a default was entered. One and one-half years after the default was entered, appellant moved to have the default set aside upon the ground of fraud. Appellant argued that the value of certain property was exaggerated by his spouse in her testimony. The court held that if fraud existed it was intrinsic fraud, and intrinsic fraud is not grounds for reopening a decree or judgment. In addition, the motion to reopen the decree 1½ years after the decree had been entered is not timely as a 60-day motion under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. In re the Marriage of Lance v. Lance, 195 M 176, 635 P2d 571, 38 St. Rep. 1772 (1981), followed in Salway v. Arkava, 213 M 135, 695 P2d 1302, 42 St. Rep. 241 (1985), In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995), Falcon v. Faulkner, 273 M 327, 903 P2d 197, 52 St. Rep. 1011 (1995), and In re Marriage of Hopper, 1999 MT 310, 297 M 225, 991 P2d 960, 56 St. Rep. 1247 (1999).

Fraudulent Inducement — Signing of Admission of Service: Appellant contends that respondent fraudulently induced the clerk of court to enter a default judgment against appellant. Appellant contends that since she signed a document stating that she voluntarily entered her general appearance and admitted service of documents, that it was extrinsic fraud to enter a default judgment without giving her her day in court. However, on the same certificate there was language to the effect that respondent declined to answer and conserved that her default be entered. Appellant is constrained by the whole document and there was no extrinsic fraud. Miller v. Miller, 187 M 286, 609 P2d 1185 (1980).

Intrinsic Fraud: Husband's concealment of a statement as to property holdings at a trial of a dissolution of marriage is intrinsic fraud and does not warrant relief on appeal. This is particularly so where husband's statements or concealments in no material way thwarted appellant's ability to present her case. Miller v. Miller, 187 M 286, 609 P2d 1185 (1980), following Minter v. Minter, 103 M 219, 62 P2d 283 (1936).

Dissolution of Marriage — Fraud as Ground for Relief From Property Disposition: Under this rule and 40-4-208(1)(b)(ii), the District Court has jurisdiction to determine whether fraud has been committed upon the court. The power of the court to set aside a judgment on the basis of fraud is inherent and independent of statute, and this rule's 60-day time limitation does not apply. However, the District Court properly denied the motion as untimely because after 60 days the issue cannot be raised by motion but must be raised in an independent action for relief and because the 60-day limit applied in any case since the court found no fraud had been committed. The wife's failure to disclose her recently secured employment was not fraud since it was not an intentional concealment or misrepresentation and since the judgment was based on an agreement between the parties. Hopper v. Hopper, 183 M 543, 601 P2d 29 (1979).

Alleged Fraud — Failure to Appeal — Effect: After motion to set aside judgment on grounds of fraud was denied and evidence of fraud was rejected by the court, plaintiff's remedy was to appeal the denial, and his failure to do so rendered the decision res judicata and barred the filing of a second action to litigate the same claim or issues. Kamp Implement Co. v. Amsterdam Lumber, Inc., 166 M 435, 533 P2d 1072 (1975), followed in Krein v. Heineman, 226 M 474, 736 P2d 481, 44 St. Rep. 813 (1987).

Fraudulently Obtained Judgments — Time Limitation Inapplicable: Time within which trial court could set aside judgment on basis of fraud upon the court depended upon equity and discretion, not time limitation of this rule. In re Bad Yellow Hair, 162 M 107, 509 P2d 9 (1973), overruled in part in In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Judgment Obtained by Fraud — Inherent Powers of Court: Court of equity has inherent power, independent of statute, to vacate judgment obtained by fraud in violation of last sentence of Rule 60(b) even though party seeking relief was not necessary party in original action, and motion to vacate was not made within liberal time limits prescribed by rule but was nevertheless timely, considering that aggrieved party engaged attorney to file motion to vacate within 30 days after discovery of existence of judgment. Selway v. Burns, 150 M 1, 429 P2d 640 (1967), distinguished in Kamp Implement Co. v. Amsterdam Lumber Co., 166 M 435, 533 P2d 1072 (1975).

Probate Matters: Final decree of distribution and discharge in probate will not be set aside on ground of inadvertence or fraud either under statute or Rule 60(b) in absence of manifest abuse of court's discretion in case where moving party had every opportunity to protect his claim in probate and failed to do so. Werning v. McFarland, 149 M 137, 423 P2d 851 (1967).

Divorce by Fraud — Remedy: Where a divorce judgment was taken against defendant through plaintiff's extrinsic fraud on both the defendant and the court, the court could grant relief at any time either on motion in original suit or in a separate equity suit. Gillen v. Gillen, 117 M 496, 159 P2d 511 (1945), distinguished in Deich v. Deich, 136 M 566, 323 P2d 35 (1958).

Remedy for Fraud — Equitable Relief: Where fraud entered into the rendition of a judgment or it was brought about by the misconduct of the one in whose favor it was rendered, or, though fair on its face, there was a want of jurisdiction, or the statutory remedy for setting it aside is inadequate, or the aggrieved party has been deprived of his legal remedy without any fault of his own, equity will assume jurisdiction and set it aside, under such circumstances the statutory remedy being considered cumulative or concurrent. Meyer v. Lemley, 86 M 83, 282 P 268 (1929).

JUDGMENT VOID OR VOIDABLE

Slight Abuse of Discretion in Failure to Set Aside Default Judgment in Excess of Value of Property: Plaintiff purchased armored vehicles from defendant, and after experiencing several problems with the vehicles, plaintiff sued for breach of warranty, breach of duty of good faith, strict liability, fraud, and constructive fraud. When defendant failed to file a timely answer, default judgment was entered for plaintiff for $130,239.43. Defendant subsequently moved to set aside the default judgment, but the hearing on the motion was ultimately vacated, and defendant appealed. Noting that the default amount exceeded both the sale price and the cost of repairs of the trucks, the Supreme Court concluded that it was reasonable to assume that the default judgment would injure defendant in light of the injuries alleged and the value of the trucks, so the District Court slightly abused its discretion by failing to set aside the default judgment, warranting reversal. The default judgment was therefore vacated and defendant was granted 20 days to file an answer. Grizzly Security Armored Express, Inc. v. The Armored Group, LLC, 2009 MT 396, 353 M 399, 220 P3d 661 (2009).

De Novo Standard of Review of District Court Decision to Set Aside Void Judgment: The Supreme Court reviews de novo a District Court's ruling on a motion to set aside a judgment as void because the question of the validity of a judgment is a legal one. Essex Ins. Co. v. Moose's Saloon, Inc., 2007 MT 202, 338 M 423, 166 P3d 451 (2007), overruling Butler v. Colwell, 1998 MT 241, 291 M 134, 967 P2d 779 (1998), Bragg v. McLaughlin, 1999 MT 320, 297 M 282, 993 P2d 662 (1999), and In re Marriage of Zacher, 2004 MT 249, 323 M 54, 98 P3d 309 (2004), to the extent that those cases suggest otherwise.

Insufficient Service — Judgment Void — Error in Dismissal of Action to Set Aside Default Judgment: In March of 1995, John conveyed a farm and residence to his brother Richard by quitclaim deed. One year later, after arranging for another person to farm the property and live in the residence, Richard left for the Philippines to be married. One month later, John filed an action seeking to cancel the quitclaim deed, serving the summons and complaint upon Richard by publication because John stated that he was unable to determine Richard's address. Default judgment was entered for John 2 months later. In 1999, Richard moved to set aside the default judgment, alleging that service by publication and the resulting judgment were void because of extrinsic fraud by John and because John did not comply with the service requirements of Rule 4D(5)(e), M.R.Civ.P. The District Court dismissed Richard's action, and he appealed. The Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion in dismissing Richard's claim. The District Court did not provide any findings of fact, conclusions of law, memorandum, or legal authority for its decision. Insufficient service of process is an ample ground to vacate a default judgment. Because of the absence of any hearing or oral argument in the matter, an unsupported cursory order, and an overall undeveloped record, the Supreme Court remanded for a hearing to address whether Richard's claim for relief under this rule was filed within a reasonable time. Ihnot v. Ihnot, 2000 MT 77, 299 M 137, 999 P2d 303, 57 St. Rep. 338 (2000). See also Shields v. Pirkle Refrigerated Freightlines, Inc., 181 M 37, 591 P2d 1120 (1979), and In re Marriage of Fonk/Ulsher, 260 M 379, 860 P2d 145, 50 St. Rep. 1112 (1993).

Dissolution of Marriage — Hearing Requirement Not Jurisdictional: Wife sought to have judgment dissolving her marriage declared void and vacated under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., on the grounds that the trial judge did not hold a hearing and receive evidence on the issue of irretrievable breakdown of marriage and was therefore without jurisdiction to dissolve the marriage. Supreme Court affirmed District Court decision that the judgment was premature because there was no hearing, but that failure to hold a hearing was a procedural rather than jurisdictional defect rendering the judgment voidable but not void. The premature summary judgment in this case is not yet ripe for appeal because issues collateral to the dissolution remain undecided. The premature summary judgment could be reviewed by the Supreme Court at this point only with a Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., certification, which plaintiff had not attempted. In re Marriage of Kraut, 215 M 170, 696 P2d 981, 42 St. Rep. 268 (1985), followed, regarding the need for evidence and hearing but not for express testimony on irretrievable breakdown, in In re Marriage of Miller, 260 M 15, 858 P2d 338, 50 St. Rep. 912 (1993), and In re Marriage of Geror, 2000 MT 60, 299 M 33, 996 P2d 381, 57 St. Rep. 285 (2000), regarding the determination that a marriage is irretrievably broken is a judicial function, rather than a conclusive presumption arising from the parties' testimony or from the petition for dissolution.

Suit Attacking Judgment After Motion to Set Aside — New Issue Raised — Res Judicata Applied: In 1971 a default judgment had been entered against present plaintiffs, granting sole ownership of certain property to present defendant E.G.W., who sold the property to present codefendants in 1972. Plaintiffs' 1971 motion to set aside the default was denied. In 1981 plaintiffs sued for a one-half quieted interest, or in the alternative, an accounting and one-half the proceeds of the 1972 sale. The complaint was based on the claim that the 1971 judgment was void because it granted relief beyond that prayed for in the pleadings and the court lacked jurisdiction to grant the relief it granted. Res judicata barred litigation of the voidness issue because plaintiffs failed to raise it in their 1971 motion to set aside the default. Once there has been full opportunity to present an issue for judicial decision in a given proceeding, including jurisdiction issues, the court's determination in that proceeding must be accorded full finality as to all issues raised or which fairly could have been raised and their later consideration is precluded by res judicata. Wellman v. Wellman, 198 M 42, 643 P2d 573, 39 St. Rep. 752 (1982). See also First Bank v. District Court, 226 M 515, 737 P2d 1132, 44 St. Rep. 861 (1987), St. v. Kimberlin, 2000 MT 24, 298 M 176, 994 P2d 1114, 57 St. Rep. 125 (2000).

Default Judgment Void for Failure of Service: The District Court was correct in setting aside the default judgment against Western Supply, Inc. as void under Rule 60(b)(4), M.R.Civ.P., for failure of service of process when the fatal flaw in the service was not merely in a lack of due diligence, but also in the failure to submit a proper and sufficient affidavit in compliance with Rule 4D(2)(f), M.R.Civ.P., in support of substituted service on the Secretary of State. Jurisdiction cannot be acquired without strict compliance with the statute. Shields v. Pirkle Refrigerated Freightlines, Inc., 181 M 37, 591 P2d 1120 (1979), followed in Ihnot v. Ihnot, 2000 MT 77, 299 M 137, 999 P2d 303, 57 St. Rep. 338 (2000).

Applicability to Voidable Judgment: This rule has no applicability to a default judgment that is merely voidable. Sowerwine v. Sowerwine, 145 M 81, 399 P2d 233 (1965).

Premature Default Judgment Not Covered: This rule has no application to prematurely entered default judgments since it applies to void and not voidable judgments. Sowerwine v. Sowerwine, 145 M 81, 399 P2d 233 (1965).

No Application to Voidable Judgment: This rule does not apply to voidable judgments. Interstate Counseling Serv. v. Emeline, 144 M 409, 396 P2d 727 (1964).

Failure of Service Not Shown Upon Complaint: Where a decree of divorce against an insane husband was procured without personal service of summons and is therefore void for want of jurisdiction, there can be no relief after the expiration of the time limit fixed except by an action in equity to set aside the decree, as it is fair upon its face, and the defect of jurisdiction must be made to appear by evidence dehors the record. The defendant is not to be denied relief in equity because he did not proceed under the provision for setting aside a decree where no lack or want of diligence is imputed to him. State ex rel. Happel v. District Court, 38 M 166, 99 P 291 (1909), distinguished in Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937).

Judgment Void on Its Face: Though a judgment void on its face may be set aside on motion at any time, this may not be done where the judgment is fair on its face, the infirmity of which must be made to appear by evidence dehors the record. State ex rel. Happel v. District Court, 38 M 166, 99 P 291 (1909), distinguished in Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937).

PRIOR JUDGMENT REVERSED

Change in Governmental Immunity Law — Extraordinary Circumstance Warranting Reversal of Prior Judgment — Reasonable Time for Filing Claim for Relief: Although generally a change in decisional law is not a valid reason under which a prior judgment may be reversed pursuant to subsection (5) of this rule, extraordinary circumstances may warrant modification, under subsection (6) of this rule, of a final judgment. Legislative revision of 2-9-111, enacted in response to the decisions in Eccleston v. District Court, 240 M 44, 783 P2d 363 (1990), and Crowell v. School District No. 7, 247 M 38, 805 P2d 522 (1991), significantly changed the statute and modified the theories expressed in those immunity cases so as to constitute circumstances extraordinary enough to warrant reversal. This does not establish a general rule for reopening a final judgment merely because there has been a substantial change in statutory law upon which that judgment was based because only when extraordinary circumstances are found to exist may subsection (6) of this rule be used to modify a final judgment. Further, the fact that plaintiffs' motion was filed 48 days after the Crowell decision was not so unreasonable as to make the motion untimely. The discretion of the Supreme Court to revisit a final judgment is flexible enough to allow reconsideration of individual case facts in the interests of justice. Koch v. Billings School District No. 2, 253 M 261, 833 P2d 181, 49 St. Rep. 517 (1992).

Military Pension Considered Marital Asset — Retroactive Modification of Decree Allowed: Six years after husband retired from the Air Force and began receiving a military pension, the husband and wife dissolved the marriage. At the time, Montana treated military pensions as a marital asset. Before entry of the final decree, however, the U.S. Supreme Court in McCarty ruled that federal law precluded state courts from dividing military pensions. As a result, the District Court ruled that the husband's pension was not a marital asset and awarded the wife $300 a month in maintenance. Passage of the Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act (USFSPA) allowed state courts to once again consider military pensions when making property distribution. Subsequently, the wife filed a petition under Rule 60(b)(5), M.R.Civ.P., to modify the dissolution decree, contending that the USFSPA should be applied retroactively to allow her a share of the husband's pension. The District Court denied the husband's motion to dismiss, entering a judgment awarding the wife one-half of the pension. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, ruling that the USFSPA should be applied retroactively to modify dissolution decrees that were final after McCarty but before the USFSPA effective date. In re Marriage of Waters, 223 M 183, 724 P2d 726, 43 St. Rep. 1642 (1986).

Reversal of Prior Judgment — Not a Basis for Relief: Although Rule 60(b), Fed.R.Civ.P., authorizes relief from a judgment on the ground that the prior judgment upon which the present judgment is based has been overturned, the rule does not authorize relief from a judgment on the ground that the law applied by the court in making its adjudication has been subsequently overruled or declared erroneous in another unrelated proceeding. Libby Rod & Gun Club v. Moraski, 519 F. Supp. 643, 38 St. Rep. 1213 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Vacation of Judgment Under Rule 60(b)(5) and (6): Based on the decision in Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec. Co-op, Inc., 180 M 434, 591 P2d 196 (1979), known as Fiscus II, the Supreme Court found that the District Court exceeded its scope of authority under Rule 60(b)(5) and (6), M.R.Civ.P., in vacating summary judgment in the instant case. The District Court vacated the judgment because Fiscus I (Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec. Co-op, Inc., 164 M 319, 522 P2d 87 (1974)) was overruled in Piper v. Lockwood Water Users Assoc., 175 M 242, 573 P2d 646 (1978). When a decisional law change occurs subsequent to final judgment in another case, that final judgment should not be altered. State ex rel Rhodes v. District Court, 183 M 394, 600 P2d 182 (1979). However, see Koch v. Billings School District No. 2, 253 M 261, 833 P2d 181, 49 St. Rep. 517

(1992), in which the existence of extraordinary circumstances created because of the substantive revision of statutory law was sufficient to warrant reversal of a final judgment under the "other reasons" rationale of subsection (6) of this rule.

Law of the Case: When a decisional law change occurs subsequent to final judgment in a particular case the "law of the case" is that final judgment should not be altered. Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec. Co-op, Inc., 180 M 434, 591 P2d 196 (1979), followed in In re Marriage of Scott, 283 M 169, 939 P2d 998, 54 St. Rep. 548 (1997). In re Marriage of Scott was followed in Hafner v. Conoco, Inc., 1999 MT 68, 293 M 542, 977 P2d 330, 56 St. Rep. 277 (1999).

TIME LIMITATIONS

Motion for Posttrial Relief Untimely — Posttrial Motion to Correct Clerical Mistakes Proper — Motion for Posttrial Relief Not Substitute for Appeal: Following notice of entry of judgment in a marriage dissolution trial, the husband had 10 days to file a motion under Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., but missed the deadline by 2 days, so the motion was properly ruled untimely. The husband had 30 days to file a notice of appeal, but the untimely Rule 59 motion did not toll the time for appeal, and that time also expired. The decree became final, subject only to the husband's motion for relief under the various provisions of Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P. The District Court erred in not applying Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., to correct clerical mistakes in the findings of facts. However, a Rule 60 motion may not be used as a substitute for appeal, so the husband's Rule 60 motion essentially seeking to set aside the decree based on insufficient evidence was properly denied. In re Marriage of Schoenthal, 2005 MT 24, 326 M 15, 106 P3d 1162 (2005).

Motion for Relief From Termination of Parental Rights Filed Two Years After Termination Untimely as Matter of Law: Both parents were charged in Idaho with sexual abuse crimes against their children, but the parents eluded authorities for several years. P.D.L. was born while the parents were fugitives. Both parents were eventually captured and convicted, and the father was incarcerated for a 17-year term in Idaho. Following service of a petition in prison, the father's parental rights were terminated. More than 2 years later, the father filed a motion for relief from the termination order under this rule, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted the finality provision in 42-2-620, which attempts to provide finality to parental rights termination proceedings so that a child may be safely adopted without the threat of the adoption being set aside at some future date. The termination order was immune from collateral attack 6 months after it was entered, and the father's motion for relief filed more than 2 years later was untimely as a matter of law. In re P.D.L., 2004 MT 346, 324 M 327, 102 P3d 1225 (2004).

Failure to File Timely Reply to Counterclaim — Default Judgment Proper: The District Court directed plaintiff to respond to a counterclaim within 10 days. Plaintiff failed to comply within the designated time, so default judgment was entered against plaintiff, and plaintiff appealed on grounds that the default judgment should be set aside under this rule. The Supreme Court disagreed. As an attorney, plaintiff was sufficiently literate and intelligent to understand the document presented by opposing counsel and to respond accordingly. Any mistake complained of by plaintiff did not rise to a level warranting setting aside of the default judgment. Plaintiff did not meet the burden of proof under this rule to set aside the judgment and did not establish any abuse of discretion by the trial court, so the default judgment was affirmed. Tschida v. Rowe, 2003 MT 192, 316 M 503, 74 P3d 1043 (2003).

Alleged Newly Discovered Evidence That Could Have Been Produced at Trial — Motion for New Parental Rights Termination Trial Properly Denied: The District Court denied a petition to terminate a mother's parental rights and ordered her child returned to her within 30 days. The guardian ad litem appealed, contending that the judgment should be set aside based on newly discovered evidence. The guardian ad litem presented the alleged newly discovered evidence through affidavits, contending that the mother left her apartment in poor condition with empty beer cans, was evicted, was fired twice from her employment, was seen driving a stolen vehicle, and had continued ongoing communication with the child's father. The District Court noted that this was one of the hardest fought and most lengthy parental rights termination trials in the court's experience and found it extremely unlikely that the alleged newly discovered evidence could not with reasonable diligence have been discovered and produced at trial. The District Court weighed the affidavit information and did not act arbitrarily or abuse its discretion in denying the motion to set aside the judgment based on newly discovered evidence. The District Court was affirmed. In re B.B., 2001 MT 285, 307 M 379, 37 P3d 715 (2001).

Criteria for Intervention in Adoption Proceeding — Unfounded and Untimely Motion to Intervene Properly Denied: Couple A adopted a child through a judicial decree in the District Court of the Twenty-First Judicial District. Couple B also wanted to adopt the child and filed a motion, in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District where they lived, to intervene and set aside the final decree of adoption, despite the fact that some 6 months had passed since the final adoption decree was issued. Initially, neither District Court was aware of the competing adoption petitions. The Department of Public Health and Human Services had been reviewing both couples as potential adoptive resources at the same time and ultimately determined that because the child had formed a strong bond during placement with couple A for nearly 2 years, it would be in the child's best interests to be adopted by couple A. Couple B contended that the child was a member of their extended family and that the Department should have given them priority as adoptive parents. The Twenty-First District Court held that couple B had no standing to intervene as a matter of right pursuant to Rule 24(a), M.R.Civ.P., and that permissive intervention under Rule 24(b), M.R.Civ.P., was untimely and would undermine the purpose of adoption to the detriment of the child. Couple B's motion to set aside the final decree pursuant to this rule was also denied on grounds that as nonparties to couple A's adoption petition, couple B had no standing to make the motion and that, in any case, it was untimely because it was made more than 180 days after the final decree. Couple B appealed the denial of both motions, arguing first that they had a legal interest by virtue of the family placement preference in the Indian Child Welfare Act (ICWA) and legislative and Departmental policies favoring adoptive placement with extended family members. The Supreme Court noted that a mere claim of interest is insufficient to support intervention as a matter of right and that a party seeking intervention must make a prima facie showing of a direct, substantial, legally protectable interest in the proceedings. No such showing was made here because the child was not Indian and therefore not subject to the ICWA, nor did the relationship of second cousins meet the definition of extended family member. Couple B next argued that they should have been allowed to intervene under the permissive standard of Rule 24(b), M.R.Civ.P., because the competing adoption petitions had common issues of law and fact. Couple B contended that their delay should be excused by their reliance on misrepresentations made by the Department. The Supreme Court agreed that the Department could have taken a more forthright approach and saved all the parties considerable time and expense, but couple B bore the responsibility for ensuring the timely filing of the motion to intervene. The Supreme Court noted that timeliness is a threshold issue when intervention is sought and that, although none of the factors are dispositive, most courts look to four factors in considering whether a motion to intervene is timely filed: (1) the length of time that the intervenor knew or should have known of its interest in the case before moving to intervene; (2) prejudice to the original parties, if intervention is granted, resulting from the intervenor's delay; (3) prejudice to the intervenor if the motion is denied; and (4) any unusual circumstances mitigating for or against a determination that the application is timely. The Supreme Court considered each factor in detail. Although the third factor weighed in favor of couple B, because denial of the motion to intervene effectively precluded any hope of their adoption of the child, the other factors weighed strongly against them. The District Court made a reasoned analysis when it determined that the motion to intervene was untimely and did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion. Last, because couple B did not address the threshold issues of this rule on appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that denial of the motion to set aside the final adoption decree on grounds of standing and timeliness was proper. In re Adoption of C.C.L.B., 2001 MT 66, 305 M 22, 22 P3d 646 (2001).

Fatally Tardy Request to Set Aside Default Judgment — Elements of Res Judicata Met: Pro se plaintiff filed to set aside a default judgment entered against him over 1 ½ years earlier. The District Court dismissed the motion on grounds of res judicata, noting that plaintiff did not proceed with diligence after being personally served, having ignored the service of the initial complaint, the personal service of defendants' notice of intent to enter default and default judgment, and service of the court's entry of judgment and writ of assistance. Plaintiff argued that as a pro se litigant, he should be accorded extra latitude. The Supreme Court noted that although pro se litigants may be given a certain amount of latitude, that latitude cannot be so wide as to prejudice the other party and that even pro se litigants are expected to adhere to procedural rules. Plaintiff's motion was fatally tardy. Citing Hollister v. Forsythe, 277 M 23, 918 P2d 665 (1996), the court found that the elements of res judicata existed because the parties were the same, the subject matter of the claim was the same, the issues were the same and related to the same subject matter, and the capacities of the persons were the same in reference to the subject matter and the issues. The District Court did not err in dismissing plaintiff's complaint pursuant to res judicata. Greenup v. Russell, 2000 MT 154, 300 M 136, 3 P3d 124, 57 St. Rep. 610 (2000).

No Limit to Number of Timely Motions: The plain language of this rule does not limit the number of motions that a party may make or prescribe the earliest date following judgment on which a motion may be filed. The only restriction and possible bar to a motion filed pursuant to subsection (3) of this rule is that it cannot be filed more than 60 days after service of notice of entry of judgment. In re Marriage of Gudmundson, 1998 MT 54, 288 M 70, 955 P2d 648, 55 St. Rep. 226 (1998).

Time Limitations — Begin to Run Upon Filing of Remittitur: On a subsequent appeal of a partial summary judgment ruling, the time deadline for the court to act on remittitur of the first appeal did not begin to run until the filing of remittitur on the first appeal. Kirchner v. W. Mont. Mental Health Center, 272 M 110, 899 P2d 1102, 52 St. Rep. 753 (1995).

Appeal of Grant of New Trial Made After Second Trial — Moot by Failure to Object or Timely Appeal: Following a trial on the distribution of marital property, wife requested and the District Court ordered a new trial. Husband waited until after the second trial to object to the order, contending that the court abused its discretion in granting a new trial because: (1) wife was incorrectly allowed to argue matters additional to those raised in the motion for a new trial; (2) the court did not rule on his motion to reconsider the order granting a new trial; and (3) the court did not state with particularity the reasons for granting a new trial. The Supreme Court held that husband's grounds for appeal must fail because he failed to object or bring an appeal in a timely fashion. The question of the propriety of the trial court's order is one that should have been considered earlier and was rendered moot by the fact that the second trial had already occurred. Husband's attempt to raise the issue for the first time on appeal was barred by the doctrine of laches. In re Marriage of Danelson, 253 M 310, 833 P2d 215, 49 St. Rep. 597 (1992).

Failure to Appeal Not Fatal — Court Discretion to Reverse Judgment in Light of Statutory Changes: Koch chose not to appeal an adverse District Court decision regarding governmental immunity based on the case law developed on that issue by the Supreme Court. More than 1 year later, following substantive legislative revision of statutory immunity law, Koch sought relief under this rule. Generally, failure to appeal for almost any reason is fatal to a motion to reopen judgment under this rule because if allowed, it would in essence make a motion under this rule a substitute for appeal, which is an improper use of the motion. Even so, failure to appeal may not be fatal. Relief under this rule is not inflexibly withheld in a case in which an appeal has been abandoned or not taken because of a clearly applicable adverse rule of law and in which there is a later clear and authoritative change in governing law. Therefore, in the present case, the existence of extraordinary circumstances created because of the substantive revision of statutory law was sufficient to warrant reversal of a final judgment under the "other reasons" rationale of subsection (6) of this rule. Having met the standards for relief under the rule, failure to appeal did not bar that relief. Koch v. Billings School District No. 2, 253 M 261, 833 P2d 181, 49 St. Rep. 517 (1992), following Polites v. U.S., 364 US 426, 5 L Ed 2d 173, 81 S Ct 202 (1960), and U.S. v. Wyle, 889 F2d 242 (9th Cir. 1989).

Confession of Judgment Not Set Aside: The defendants argued that the confession of judgment that allowed the plaintiff to attach their bank account should be set aside on the grounds that one of the defendants was under the influence of mind altering drugs at the time he agreed to the judgment. The Supreme Court held that the lower court was entitled to refuse to set aside the judgment because both parties had been represented by counsel at the time and more than 60 days had passed before the defendants had moved to have the judgment set aside. Mont. Deaconess Medical Center v. Doherty, 241 M 243, 786 P2d 669, 47 St. Rep. 267 (1990).

Relief From Judgment Denied — Newly Discovered Evidence Not Presented in Time: The plaintiffs' suit against a used car dealer for negligence in servicing the brakes on a truck they purchased was dismissed pursuant to a summary judgment motion. More than 12 months later, the plaintiffs made a motion for relief from the judgment on the basis of newly discovered evidence. The Supreme Court ruled that the motion could not be brought because it was not filed within the 60-day time limit required by this rule. Murnion v. Heberle Ford Co., 241 M 215, 786 P2d 653, 47 St. Rep. 219 (1990).

Court Failure to Rule Within Forty-Five Days on Motion to Set Aside or Amend — Loss of Jurisdiction Over That Issue: Subsequent to obtaining a decree of dissolution, the husband died intestate and his ex-wife moved to have the decree set aside. More than 45 days later, the District Court set aside the decree and also granted the ex-wife's motion to substitute as personal representative. The Supreme Court reversed, stating that a postjudgment motion not ruled on within 45 days is considered denied and at that time, the lower court lost its jurisdiction with respect to setting aside the decree. The court also held that the 45 days run from the time the motion to set aside or amend is filed and is not affected by when the notice of entry of judgment is filed. In re Marriage of Miller, 238 M 108, 776 P2d 1218, 46 St. Rep. 1128 (1989), followed in Bechhold v. Chacon, 248 M 111, 809 P2d 586, 48 St. Rep. 357 (1991), and in In re Marriage of McKinnon, 251 M 347, 825 P2d 551, 49 St. Rep. 69 (1992). All three cases have been overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

No Judicial Discretion to Alter Statute of Limitations: Plaintiffs' complaint was dismissed because it was not timely filed, missing the statute of limitations by 1 day. Plaintiffs moved for relief under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., because of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. The statute of limitations does not discriminate between a just and unjust claim. The statute represents legislative and public policy controlling the rights of potential litigants. A trial court does not have judicial discretion to alter, change, or lessen statutory limits for commencement of actions. Schaffer v. Champion Home Builders Co., 229 M 533, 747 P2d 872, 44 St. Rep. 2196 (1987).

Reasonable Time: Notice of entry of default judgment was mailed to wife on August 31, 1984. On September 14, 1984, wife filed her motion to set aside the default judgment. This was within a reasonable time as contemplated in this Rule, therefore the motion was timely filed. In re Marriage of Neneman, 217 M 155, 703 P2d 164, 42 St. Rep. 1095 (1985).

Motion Not Timely Filed — Intrinsic Fraud Not Grounds for Motion: Appellant asserted sex- or race-based discrimination when the University of Montana (now University of Montana-Missoula) failed to renew her teaching contract. At trial, the head of appellant's department testified that there were no funds available to renew appellant's contract. The District Court determined no unlawful discrimination had occurred. Subsequently, the head of the department pleaded guilty to misuse of federal funds granted to the University and diversion of such funds far in excess of appellant's salary. Appellant filed a motion under Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., to vacate the judgment on the grounds of fraud. The District Court denied the motion, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The Supreme Court found the claim was time-barred under the rule because it was filed after the 60-day time limit. The claim was not allowed under the residual clause in Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., because the fraud fell short of what is legally required to vacate a final judgment. The Supreme Court found the misappropriation of funds did not materially and directly affect the outcome of the case and the false in-court testimony was intrinsic fraud upon the court, rather than extrinsic, and therefore did not constitute sufficient grounds to vacate a judgment under the residual clause. Salway v. Arkava, 213 M 135, 695 P2d 1302, 42 St. Rep. 241 (1985), followed in Brown v. Small, 251 M 414, 825 P2d 1209, 49 St. Rep. 98 (1992).

Dismissal Under Statute of Limitations — Appeal Appropriate Relief: A complaint was dismissed because the applicable Statute of Limitations had run out. This rule could not be used to attack that dismissal. The appropriate avenue for relief is an appeal. Lussy v. Dye, 215 M 91, 695 P2d 465, 42 St. Rep. 205 (1985).

Action to Reopen and Modify Dissolution Decree After Sixty Days — Not Timely: The husband and wife were married in 1945. In 1975, the wife vanished and her whereabouts is unknown. In 1976, the husband filed for dissolution. The wife was served by publication. The court entered its decree but made no order with respect to distribution of property. In 1983, the husband started a quiet title action to jointly held property. Three months later, the daughter commenced an action in which her mother was determined to be presumed dead. The daughter was named personal representative of the mother's estate. As personal representative, the daughter filed a motion in the dissolution action to reopen and modify the decree regarding property disposition. The District Court refused to reopen the decree. On appeal, the Supreme Court pointed out that 40-1-105 makes the Rules of Civil Procedure applicable to all proceedings relating to marital dissolutions. Section 40-4-208 provides that the provisions of the decree relating to property disposition may not be revoked or modified by the court unless it finds conditions justifying the reopening of a judgment. The court held that even if the District Court failed in its mandatory duty to equitably apportion the property, the decree was final, and that under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., the motion to reopen had to be brought within 60 days. Once the judgment was final, it was too late to raise issues of misrepresentation which could have been contested in the cause prior to entry of judgment. In re Marriage of Woolsey, 214 M 106, 692 P2d 451, 41 St. Rep. 2349 (1984).

No Basis to Reopen Dissolution Decree: The appellant did not claim the existence of unconscionability, fraud, or any other inequitable situation that would give a court a legal basis upon which to reopen a dissolution decree. She attempted to enhance enforcement of the judgment that incorporated the parties' stipulations as to the property division by making a motion to modify. She was precluded by statutory time limits and by the fact that she had no legal basis to compel a court to reopen the judgment. Since no conditions existed that would justify reopening the judgment, the District Court was not required to enter findings of fact. Keirle v. Keirle, 210 M 214, 681 P2d 703, 41 St. Rep. 1016 (1984).

Timeliness of Motion — Clerical Errors to Be Corrected at Any Time: The parties' marriage was dissolved on April 14, 1980, and a portion of the decree provided that the wife was to receive monthly payments equal to one-half the value of stock. On April 23, 1980, the wife moved under Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P., to amend the findings and judgment to correct the valuation of the stock. The motion was properly noticed for hearing under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. On May 1, 1980, the judge continued the hearing for 30 days upon written stipulation of counsel. The hearing was held on June 5, 1980, but no order was entered. The wife moved to revalue the stock again on January 22, 1981. The court held a hearing on May 4, 1981, and in an order dated October 7, 1981, denied her request. On appeal the wife contended that her January 22 motion should be considered a motion under Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., on the grounds of newly discovered evidence. Montana's Rule 60(b) requires the motion to be within 60 days following the entry of judgment. However, it can be considered if the relief could have been granted because the substance of the motion brought it under Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P. This was foreclosed here by the District Court ruling on the motion on its merits. The Supreme Court did resolve an apparent conflict between Rule 60(a) and Rule 60(c), M.R.Civ.P., by holding that when a clerical mistake occurs in a judgment, order, or other part of a court record and the error is admitted or can be corrected or clarified without inequity or prejudice to a party, the error can be corrected by the court at any time, either nunc pro tunc or by a new order. In re Marriage of Winn, 200 M 402, 651 P2d 51, 39 St. Rep. 1831 (1982), overruled in part on other grounds by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Motion Before Judgment: A motion for relief from judgment made before judgment is premature and may be disregarded. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Untimely Motion for New Trial — Equivalent to Motion for Relief From Judgment: A motion for new trial under Rule 59(b), M.R.Civ.P., that is not timely may be considered as a motion under this rule when it states the proper grounds for relief. Nomenclature is unimportant. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Intrinsic Fraud Not Grounds for Motion — Motion Not Timely Filed: Appellant was personally served with a petition for dissolution of marriage and a property settlement. Appellant failed to answer or otherwise appear, and a default was entered. One and one-half years after the default was entered, appellant moved to have the default set aside upon the ground of fraud. Appellant argued that the value of certain property was exaggerated by his spouse in her testimony. The court held that if fraud existed it was intrinsic fraud, and intrinsic fraud is not grounds for reopening a decree or judgment. In addition, the motion to reopen the decree 1½ years after the decree had been entered is not timely as a 60-day motion under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. In re the Marriage of Lance v. Lance, 195 M 176, 635 P2d 571, 38 St. Rep. 1772 (1981), followed in Falcon v. Faulkner, 273 M 327, 903 P2d 197, 52 St. Rep. 1011 (1995), and In re Marriage of Hopper, 1999 MT 310, 297 M 225, 991 P2d 960, 56 St. Rep. 1247 (1999).

Timeliness of Motion to Set Aside Default Judgment: A default judgment was entered against defendant for wrongful taking of plaintiffs' inheritance. Defendant was personally served with a copy of the judgment but did not move the District Court to set aside the judgment until 4 months later. Defendant's motion was properly denied by the District Court. Schneider v. Ostwald, 190 M 29, 617 P2d 1293, 37 St. Rep. 1728 (1980).

Request for Modification of Property Settlement — Determination of "Reasonable Time" for Motion: At the conclusion of a hearing on the enforcement of his divorce settlement agreement several months after his divorce, the former husband moved to amend the findings of deficiency of the agreement or, in the alternative, to grant a new trial. The motion was denied and the former husband appealed. Because the former wife's request for additional property was made orally to the court over 6 months after entry of the legal separation decree and approval of the written agreement, the former husband argued on appeal that the request was barred by Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court said that this may have been a crucial issue at the trial court but that the husband's failure to object makes timeliness a nonjudicable issue on appeal. Without an objection there need be no ruling, and the Supreme Court concluded that without a ruling the wife made her request within the "reasonable time" required by Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. Harris v. Harris, 189 M 509, 616 P2d 1099, 37 St. Rep. 1696 (1980).

Dissolution of Marriage — Fraud as Ground for Relief From Property Disposition: Under this rule and 40-4-208(1)(b)(ii), the District Court has jurisdiction to determine whether fraud has been committed upon the court. The power of the court to set aside a judgment on the basis of fraud is inherent and independent of statute, and this rule's 60-day time limitation does not apply. However, the District Court properly denied the motion as untimely because after 60 days the issue cannot be raised by motion but must be raised in an independent action for relief and because the 60-day limit applied in any case since the court found no fraud had been committed. The wife's failure to disclose her recently secured employment was not fraud since it was not an intentional concealment or misrepresentation and since the judgment was based on an agreement between the parties. Hopper v. Hopper, 183 M 543, 601 P2d 29 (1979).

Reasonable Time: County Commissioners' motion to dismiss peremptory Writ of Mandate was made within a reasonable time where it was made within the time allowed for an appeal and promptly after Commissioners learned that statutes controlling dispute had been amended. Snyder v. McKinley, 164 M 309, 521 P2d 919 (1974).

Fraudulently Obtained Judgments — Time Limitation Inapplicable: Time within which trial court could set aside judgment on basis of fraud upon the court depended upon equity and discretion, not time limitation of this rule. In re Bad Yellow Hair, 162 M 107, 509 P2d 9 (1973), overruled in part in In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Judgment Obtained by Fraud — Inherent Powers of Court: Court of equity has inherent power, independent of statute, to vacate judgment obtained by fraud in violation of last sentence of Rule 60(b) even though party seeking relief was not necessary party in original action, and motion to vacate was not made within liberal time limits prescribed by rule but was nevertheless timely, considering that aggrieved party engaged attorney to file motion to vacate within 30 days after discovery of existence of judgment. Selway v. Burns, 150 M 1, 429 P2d 640 (1967), distinguished in Kamp Implement Co. v. Amsterdam Lumber Co., 166 M 435, 533 P2d 1072 (1975).

Expiration of Time Limit — Diligence of No Avail: The District Court is without power to relieve a party from his default after the expiration of the period mentioned in the statute even on a showing of due diligence. State ex rel. Hahn v. District Court, 83 M 400, 272 P 525 (1928), overruling State ex rel. Kolbow v. District Court, 38 M 415, 100 P 207 (1909).

Failure of Service — Time for Motion: The 12 months' period (reduced by 1965 amendment to 180 days) after rendition of judgment within which a defaulting party not personally served with summons may be permitted to answer to the merits begins to run from the date of such rendition, and the limitation applies to the time when the motion is made and not to when it is heard. State ex rel. Hahn v. District Court, 83 M 400, 272 P 525 (1928).

No Jurisdiction After Expiration of Time Limit: After the expiration of the time limit fixed in the statute, the power of the court over the judgment absolutely ceases and it is without jurisdiction to vacate or modify it. Smith v. McCormick, 52 M 324, 157 P 1010 (1916); State ex rel. Smotherman v. District Court, 51 M 495, 153 P 1019 (1915); State ex rel. Happel v. District Court, 38 M 166, 99 P 291 (1909).

Parties — Application of Time Limit: The period of 6 months mentioned in section 93-3905, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P.), within which a motion to vacate a judgment must be presented, applied in terms only to the case of one who seeks relief from the consequences of his own mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. It cannot apply to one who has never been served with summons, and who has not appeared, but whose default has been entered through the the inadvertence of someone else. Morehouse v. Bynum, 51 M 289, 152 P 477 (1915).

INDEPENDENT ACTION

Entry of Judgment by Court of General Jurisdiction in Foreclosure Action Affirmed — Collateral Attack Precluded: Glickman contended that the District Court acted outside or in excess of its jurisdiction by decreeing that the purchaser of Glickman's property at a Sheriff's foreclosure sale be "let into possession". A judgment entered by a court lacking subject matter jurisdiction is subject to attack at any time. A collateral attack on a judgment is possible only if the judgment is void on its face and if it appears affirmatively from the judgment roll that the court did not have jurisdiction or committed an act in excess of jurisdiction. Absent any authority that a court of general jurisdiction may not enter a judgment in a foreclosure sale, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not act outside or in excess of its jurisdiction by decreeing that the purchaser of the property at a Sheriff's foreclosure sale be "let into possession". Further, Glickman's failure to allege any statutory causes of action in his original petition precluded him from bringing an independent action under the residual clause of this rule. Glickman v. Whitefish Credit Union Ass'n, 1998 MT 8, 287 M 161, 951 P2d 1388, 55 St. Rep. 27 (1998).

Allegations Plaintiff and Its Lawyers Engaged in Perjury, Misrepresentations, Deception, Subversion of Justice, and Fictitious Theories of the Case — No Extrinsic Fraud: For purposes of relief from a judgment through an independent equitable action under this rule, extrinsic fraud is fraud that prevented the unsuccessful party from presenting the party's case, is collateral to the matters tried by the court, and is not fraud in the matters on which the judgment was rendered. Perjury and false or fraudulent allegations used in obtaining a judgment are not extrinsic fraud. Appellants' claims that the bank and lawyers conspired to deceive the court and subvert justice, misrepresented facts, committed perjury, and used forceful arguments and artful pleading to develop a fictitious theory of the case that misled the court did not allege extrinsic fraud. Moreover, the allegations did not constitute fraud upon the court. Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604, 50 St. Rep. 509 (1993).

Independent Action to Set Marital Property Disposition Aside — Failure of Fraud and Notice Claims: Wife seeking to have court set aside that part of decree of dissolution of marriage that distributed the marital property elected not to file a timely motion for relief under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., and instead elected to file an independent action for relief as allowed by the last part of Rule 60(b). Her action was properly dismissed insofar as it sought relief on grounds of mistake, inadvertence, excusable neglect, and fraud on herself, which could be the basis for relief only under a timely Rule 60(b) motion. Her independent action claim of no actual personal notification of the divorce proceeding must fail, since she signed the response to the petition (though perhaps not completely sober at the time), indicating actual personal notice. An independent action is not a remedy for inadvertence or oversight by the party losing the original action. Her independent action claim grounded in fraud on the court must fail because she failed to plead with particularity all the elements of the fraud. Her mere suspicion of fraud was not sufficient to sustain her action. The postnuptial agreement she signed some 3 years before her husband filed for a divorce proceeding at which she was not represented by an attorney must stand, since she signed a response to the petition that affirmed the fairness and terms of the agreement and did not appear at the final hearing at which the court approved the agreement with a change favoring her. In re Marriage of Hoyt, 215 M 449, 698 P2d 418, 42 St. Rep. 532 (1985).

Dissolution of Marriage — Fraud as Ground for Relief From Property Disposition: Under this rule and 40-4-208(1)(b)(ii), the District Court has jurisdiction to determine whether fraud has been committed upon the court. The power of the court to set aside a judgment on the basis of fraud is inherent and independent of statute, and this rule's 60-day time limitation does not apply. However, the District Court properly denied the motion as untimely because after 60 days the issue cannot be raised by motion but must be raised in an independent action for relief and because the 60-day limit applied in any case since the court found no fraud had been committed. The wife's failure to disclose her recently secured employment was not fraud since it was not an intentional concealment or misrepresentation and since the judgment was based on an agreement between the parties. Hopper v. Hopper, 183 M 543, 601 P2d 29 (1979).

Failure to File in Time — Separate Action Not Affected: Defendant's motion to vacate default judgment was properly denied under this rule where the motion was not filed until more than 480 days after the entry of judgment despite fact that defendant was served with neither summons nor complaint. Filing of motion to vacate default judgment under this rule did not constitute a selection of remedies and movant, after denial of motion, was still free to bring an independent action to vacate the judgment for failure to receive service which action would not be subject to the 180-day limitation contained in this rule. Thomas v. Savage, 161 M 192, 505 P2d 118 (1973).

Independent Action — Time Limit to Vacate Exceeded: An independent action is available to vacate judgment for failure to serve process because the 180-day limitation is not applicable to such an action. Thomas v. Savage, 161 M 192, 505 P2d 118 (1973).

Independent Actions — Not Subject to Time Limitations: An independent action to set aside a default judgment is not subject to the time limitation for motions to set aside defaults in the original action. Elliston Lime Co. v. Prentice Lumber Co., 157 M 64, 483 P2d 264 (1971).

Extrinsic Fraud — Remedy: A court of general jurisdiction has the right, entirely independent of statute, to grant relief against a judgment obtained by extrinsic fraud, and may grant that relief either on motion in the original cause or upon a separate equity suit. Cure v. Southwick, 137 M 1, 349 P2d 575 (1960).

Divorce by Fraud — Remedy: Where a divorce judgment was taken against defendant through plaintiff's extrinsic fraud on both the defendant and the court, the court could grant relief at any time either on motion in original suit or in a separate equity suit. Gillen v. Gillen, 117 M 496, 159 P2d 511 (1945), distinguished in Deich v. Deich, 136 M 566, 323 P2d 35 (1958).

ANY OTHER REASON JUSTIFYING RELIEF

Timeliness of Motion to Set Aside Default — Pro Se Litigant Entitled to Relief From Judgment: Summary judgment was granted for multiple represented defendants in a dispute over a home inspection after it was established that the plaintiff had imputed knowledge of defects in the house. Because the handwritten response of an unrepresented defendant home inspector did not comply with court rules, a default judgment was entered against him for over $200,000. The pro se home inspector filed to have the judgment set aside 8 months later, 1 month after the resolution of an appeal. The District Court erred by denying the home inspector's motion to set aside the default judgment as untimely by applying a 60-day deadline rather than "a reasonable time" under former Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Further, the home inspector was entitled to relief from the judgment because he made efforts to respond to the complaint and defend his case although his efforts were not accurately reflected by the case record, defendants who were represented by counsel were relieved of liability because the plaintiff's legal claims were found to be meritless, and default judgment was entered without a hearing to determine the amount of damages. Hall v. Hall, 2015 MT 226, 380 Mont. 224, 354 P.3d 1224.

Neglect by Counsel — Equitable Apportionment of Marital Property: Under 40-4-202, imposing on the District Court an obligation to equitably apportion marital property, the District Court abused its discretion by denying a timely filed motion by new counsel to set aside the decree under former Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), due to no fault of the party but because of the gross neglect of the original counsel. Without evidence regarding value of the marital estate, the only object of contention, the District Court could not equitably apportion its value as required by statute, thus requiring that the proceeding be set aside. In re Marriage of Orcutt, 2011 MT 107, 360 Mont. 353, 253 P.3d 884.

Erroneous Denial of Removal of Assessment of Postjudgment Interest When Principal Paid by City Within Two Years: Funke was awarded damages for injuries incurred when a deck collapsed, including 5% liability against the city of Polson. The District Court ordered that the judgment would bear interest at 10% from the date of the original judgment. The city paid its portion of the judgment within 2 years and filed a motion under Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., to amend the judgment on grounds that it was a clerical error to charge the city interest when the principal was paid within 2 years of judgment as provided in 2-9-317. The motion was denied and the city appealed. The Supreme Court agreed that the District Court properly denied the Rule 60(a) motion because the attempt to shoehorn consideration of 2-9-317 into the clerical error category failed, inasmuch as the District Court did not intend to apply the statute when the judgment was entered, and because the city had not yet paid the judgment, application of the statute at that time was premature. However, the District Court's failure to subsequently apply 2-9-317 was an error of law. When the city paid the judgment within 2 years of entry of judgment, the portion of the judgment requiring the city to pay interest was rendered invalid. Thus, the assessment of postjudgment interest against the city was stricken and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Funke v. Estate of Shultz, 2009 MT 411, 353 M 492, 223 P3d 839 (2009).

Extraordinary Circumstances Supporting Motion to Set Aside Default Judgment — No Abuse of Discretion: Following an auto collision in 2001, defendant reported the accident to her insurer, and Safeco, the insurance provider, made numerous attempts over a span of years, including no less than 34 written and telephone contacts, to obtain information from plaintiff in order to settle the claim. Plaintiff never provided most of the requested information or informed Safeco whether he was represented by counsel. Eventually Safeco offered plaintiff a final offer of $500 to settle the claim, informing plaintiff that a reply was necessary within 30 days or Safeco would consider the claim settled. Plaintiff then filed an action against defendant personally, and defendant gave the papers to her local agent, who attempted to fax the documents to Safeco, but Safeco claimed that it never received the complaint. The Clerk of Court subsequently entered a default against defendant. Plaintiff then requested a hearing on damages, after which the District Court entered a default judgment against defendant and granted plaintiff $101,300 in damages, even though Safeco was absent from the proceedings. Most of the medical claims had never been submitted to Safeco, nor did plaintiff's counsel mention Safeco's 34 contacts with plaintiff. Plaintiff's counsel sent letters to Safeco demanding payment of the default judgment, but Safeco claimed it never received the first two letters. Plaintiff died in April 2007. Safeco finally received a copy of the demand letter in September 2007 and began an investigation into the incident. Safeco then moved to set aside the default judgment on grounds of mistake, inadvertence, and excusable neglect. The District Court granted the motion, citing the language in Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P., regarding any other reasons justifying relief. Plaintiff's estate appealed. The Supreme Court held that it could not conclude that the District Court committed a manifest abuse of discretion in determining that extraordinary circumstances supported Safeco's motion to set aside the default judgment or that the District Court committed an obvious, evident, unmistakable abuse of discretion when it set aside the default judgment pursuant to Rule 60(b)(6). The District Court was affirmed. Bartell v. Zabawa, 2009 MT 204, 351 M 211, 214 P3d 735 (2009).

Lack of Circumstances to Grant Relief From Default Judgment on Issue of Service of Process: Defendant sought to vacate a default judgment on grounds that process was not properly served.

The District Court did not rule on the motion and the motion was considered to be denied. On appeal, defendant contended that the court erred by not granting the motion to vacate. Whether defendant was properly served before default was entered was the only circumstance that warranted relief from the default judgment, and the District Court answered that question of fact by denying the motion to set aside the default judgment. The Supreme Court found no extraordinary circumstances to justify setting aside the default judgment, and the District Court was affirmed. Ford Motor Credit Co. v. Wellnitz, 2008 MT 314, 346 M 61, 194 P3d 630 (2008), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Scope and Applicability of Rule 60(b)(6) Motion — Extraordinary Circumstances: Relief under subsection (6) of this rule is appropriate only in extraordinary circumstances that go beyond those covered in the first five subsections of the rule. Before a party may be allowed to modify a judgment under subsection (6) of this rule, the party must first show that none of the reasons in the other five subsections apply. Additionally, it is not the intent of subsection (6) of this rule to be a substitute for appeal, and a motion for relief under subsection (6) of this rule must contain more than a request for rehearing or a request that the District Court change its mind. Rather, it must be shown that something prevented a full presentation of the cause or an accurate determination on the merits and that for reasons of fairness and equity, redress is justified. Essex Ins. Co. v. Moose's Saloon, Inc., 2007 MT 202, 338 M 423, 166 P3d 451 (2007), following Lussy v. Dye, 215 M 91, 695 P2d 465 (1985). O'Connell, 2013 MT 122, 370 Mont. 103, 304 P.3d 375.

Attorney's Gross Neglect Constituting Extraordinary Circumstance Justifying Relief From Judgment: A judgment establishing the rights of parties will not ordinarily be disturbed, except as provided in this rule. Under subsection (6) of this rule, relief from final judgments or orders is available for situations other than those enumerated in the first five subsections of the rule. As established in Karlen v. Evans, 276 M 181, 915 P2d 232 (1996), when the moving party can meet the higher burden of demonstrating extraordinary circumstances, gross neglect, or actual misconduct and of demonstrating that the client was blameless and acted to set aside the default within a reasonable time, then relief under subsection (6) is available. In this case, defendant timely provided objections to property surveys to his attorney, but the attorney never filed the objections, failed to notify the court of address changes, failed to investigate why orders or motions were not received from the court or opposing counsel, and told defendant not to worry about deadlines. The Supreme Court held that defendant demonstrated that the attorney's conduct constituted gross neglect, that defendant filed for relief within a reasonable time, and that defendant was blameless, thus meeting the burden of showing a slight abuse of discretion in the District Court's failure to grant defendant's motion for relief from the order approving the survey and the supplemental judgment. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Skogen v. Murray, 2007 MT 104, 337 M 139, 157 P3d 1143 (2007).

Error to Dismiss Action in Light of Evidence That Plaintiff Did Not Receive Motion: City Judge Dorrington cited attorney Fennessy for contempt of court for allegedly making false statements to the court and for a lack of responsibility in the performance of duties and lack of respect for the court. Fennessy filed a motion in District Court to stay the contempt proceeding in City Court, contending that Dorrington did not have jurisdiction to issue the contempt citation and was prohibited from acting as the complaining witness, prosecutor, and judge for the contempt proceedings. Dorrington then filed a motion to dismiss and 3 days later moved to continue the hearing and quash subpoenas. In his response to the motion to continue, Fennessy stated that if Dorrington had filed a motion to dismiss, Fennessy had not received the motion thus he had no opportunity to review it. Nevertheless, that same day the District Court granted the motion to dismiss. Fennessy moved to reconsider and included affidavits from his attorney and staff stating that a motion to dismiss had never been received, but the motion to reconsider was denied, so Fennessy appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. A motion to dismiss is viewed with disfavor and rarely granted, and dismissal of an action is justified only when the allegations of a complaint clearly demonstrate that plaintiff does not have a claim. A court may not dismiss a claim unless it appears that plaintiff is not entitled to relief under any set of facts that could be proved in support of a claim. In this case, the District Court failed to follow Rule 2, M.U.D.C.R. (Title 25, ch. 19), by dismissing Fennessy's motion before the 10-day time limit to respond had expired and abused its discretion by refusing to reconsider its order of dismissal even though there was evidence that Fennessy had not received the motion to dismiss and thus was unable to respond to or review it. Fennessy v. Dorrington, 2001 MT 204, 306 M 307, 32 P3d 1250 (2001).

Failure to Provide Evidence of Extraordinary Circumstances to Warrant Setting Aside Default Judgment: Bahm brought an action concerning a dispute over the possession of real estate, and default judgment was entered against the Southworths; however, that judgment was set aside, and an expedited discovery and trial schedule was set. Following the scheduling conference, Bahm properly served written discovery requests and noticed the Southworths' depositions, but the Southworths did not appear for their depositions and failed to respond to the discovery requests, having left Montana for 45 days and neglecting to maintain contact with their attorney. The District Court again entered default judgment against the Southworths, who filed a pro se motion to set aside the default judgment. The District Court declined to rule on the motion, clarifying for the Southworths that no pro se filings would be considered while they had counsel. Nearly 7 months later, the Southworths again moved to set aside the default judgment through a different attorney. That motion was denied on grounds that more than 60 days had passed since entry of judgment and because the record contained no evidence of extraordinary circumstances that would allow application of the more expansive "reasonable time" provision in subsection (6) of this rule. The Southworths appealed. Under Karlen v. Evans, 276 M 181, 915 P2d 232 (1996), relief is available under subsection (6) of this rule when a movant demonstrates each of the following elements: (1) there were extraordinary circumstances, including gross neglect or actual misconduct by an attorney; (2) the movant acted to set aside the judgment within a reasonable time; and (3) the movant was blameless. In this case, the Southworths failed to provide any evidence of extraordinary circumstances, relying instead on unsworn allegations and information contained in an affidavit that was not submitted to the court. Further, the Southworths had the opportunity to rectify any alleged attorney mistake or negligence by filing a timely motion to set aside the judgment, yet when they were told that their pro se motion would not be accepted, they did not file a timely motion, but rather waited another 5 months to file a new motion to set aside, which was not considered a reasonable time. Lastly, their absence from the state following the scheduling conference and their failure to appear for their depositions and to respond to discovery requests showed that they were neither diligent nor blameless. Thus, the order refusing to set aside the default judgment was affirmed. Bahm v. Southworth, 2000 MT 244, 301 M 434, 10 P3d 99, 57 St. Rep. 1030 (2000), followed, with regard to elements necessary for a successful Rule 60(b)(6) motion, in Essex Ins. Co. v. Moose's Saloon, Inc., 2007 MT 202, 338 M 423, 166 P3d 451 (2007).

Denial of Contractual Liability by Both Defendant Entities — Claims Put in Issue — Burden of Proof — Proposed Findings to Be Based Upon Evidence — No Evidence of Intent to Mislead as Basis for Relief From Judgment: Wright Oil sued Goodrich for petroleum products allegedly delivered but not paid for. Goodrich denied liability, claiming that the products were for the use of West Yellowstone Snowmobile Rentals, Inc. (WYSR), which owned Westgate Texaco, operated by Goodrich. Wright Oil amended its complaint to include WYSR, and after a bench trial, the District Court held against Goodrich because no evidence had been presented proving a contract between WYSR and Wright Oil. Wright Oil then filed a motion for relief from judgment under subsection (6) of this rule, seeking relief from the District Court's failure to hold against WYSR. On the basis of evidence not presented at trial, the District Court granted the motion and ordered an evidentiary hearing to reopen the case against WYSR regarding WYSR's contractual liability to Wright Oil. WYSR appealed. The Supreme Court held that the District Court incorrectly granted the motion because the circumstances of the District Court's failure to hold WYSR liable for the debt to Wright Oil were not so extraordinary as to warrant relief from judgment under subsection (6) of this rule. The Supreme Court noted that WYSR's denial of its liability put the allegation of its contractual liability at issue under Rule 8(b), M.R.Civ.P., and under 26-1-401 and 26-1-402, Wright Oil had the burden of going forward with the evidence of WYSR's contractual liability but failed to present evidence of a contractual relationship between WYSR and Wright Oil. The fact that Goodrich alleged that WYSR was liable for the debt could not, the Supreme Court held, be taken as an admission by WYSR that it was liable for the amounts due. Further, the Supreme Court noted that Wright Oil should not have been surprised by WYSR's proposed findings of fact that it was not liable for the debt because under Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., a party's proposed findings of fact must be supported by the evidence, and Wright Oil failed to produce that evidence of liability. Wright Oil & Tire Co. v. Goodrich, 284 M 6, 942 P2d 128, 54 St. Rep. 811 (1997).

Disqualification in Malpractice Action of Judge Who Represented Plaintiff in Underlying Matter: A judge who had represented plaintiff on the underlying guardianship accounting matter prior to the time that the attorney being sued for malpractice began to represent plaintiff as to the accounting should have disqualified himself from presiding over the malpractice action.

A judge may preside over a matter involving a former client if the action over which the judge presides involves a matter different from the one as to which the judge represented the client. In this case, the malpractice action is technically a separate action from the underlying accounting proceeding; however, the malpractice action arose from the legal representation in the accounting proceeding. Default judgment for plaintiff for failure of attorney to plead or in any manner appear was reversed and remanded for a ruling, before another judge, on attorney's motion for relief from judgment for excusable neglect. Shultz v. Hooks, 263 M 234, 867 P2d 1110, 51 St. Rep. 34 (1994), overruled in In re Marriage of Markegard, 2006 MT 111, 332 M 187, 136 P3d 532 (2006), to the extent that Shultz states that 3-1-803(3) precludes a judge from sitting on a case in which the judge has rendered services for a person before an action is filed or has acted as a party's attorney in a separate related case.

Paternity Issues Not Extraordinary — Relief Not Justified: Husband advanced several arguments relating to the issue of paternity that he sought to characterize as other reasons justifying relief under this rule. He argued that the case was not ready for litigation because neither wife nor child had submitted blood for paternity testing. The argument was without merit because testing was never ordered for them. He contended that the wife amended her petition by conceding the paternity issue on the date of hearing but that he was not allowed to respond to the amendment. However, the concession neither added nor removed a claim before the court and was in accord with husband's position, thus providing no basis for relief. He argued that because he was the prevailing party on the paternity issue, the court erred by failing to require the wife to reimburse one-half of his expense in obtaining the blood test pursuant to court order. The issue may have been appropriately raised at the hearing or in proposed findings and conclusions, but did not constitute a circumstance justifying relief from the decree. Absent the extraordinary circumstances necessary to trigger relief under subsection (6) of this rule, relief from judgment was denied. In re Marriage of Miller, 260 M 15, 858 P2d 338, 50 St. Rep. 912 (1993).

Motion Made in Reasonable Time When Other Basis for Relief Time-Barred by Intentional Act of Party's Attorney — Motion Granted: Maulding obtained a default judgment for $81,306.31 against Hardman for injuries received in a car accident. Maulding's attorney wrote Hardman's insurance company 60 days after entry of judgment, offering to settle the case for $75,000 if paid immediately. Four days later the insurance company's counsel moved to set aside the default. Noting that the timing of Maulding's attorney's letter prevented Hardman from moving for relief under other subsections of this rule, the Supreme Court held that the motion under subsection (6) to set aside the default was made within a reasonable time and with due diligence under these circumstances. Citing the manner in which Maulding's attorney handled the case and the manner in which damages were established and awarded, the Supreme Court also held that the facts of the case justified relief from the default under subsection (6). Maulding v. Hardman, 257 M 18, 847 P2d 292, 50 St. Rep. 141 (1993), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729, and distinguished in Wright Oil & Tire Co. v. Goodrich, 284 M 6, 942 P2d 128, 54 St. Rep. 811 (1997), and Mont. Professional Sports, LLC v. Nat'l Indoor Football League, LLC, 2008 MT 98, 342 M 292, 180 P3d 1142 (2008).

Reason for Relief Mutually Exclusive — Power of Court to Determine Proper Subsection: Maulding obtained a default judgment against Hardman, which Hardman moved to set aside, citing subsections (1), (3), and (6) of this rule. Citing Libby Rod & Gun Club v. Moraski, 519 F. Supp. 643 (D.C. Mont. 1981), Hardman argued that because relief under subsections (1) and (3) was time-barred, relief could not be had under subsection (6) either. Relying upon Wright and Miller, the Supreme Court held that a party is precluded from relief under subsection (6) when the same facts or circumstances bring the case under one of the other five subsections. Citing Koch v. Billings School District No. 2, 253 M 261, 833 P2d 181, 49 St. Rep. 517 (1992), the Supreme Court held that the facts that relief under subsections (1) and (3) was time-barred and that Hardman did not choose between subsections (1) and (3) or subsection (6) were not fatal to the motion because the District Court and the Supreme Court could determine which of the subsections was proper in this case. Maulding v. Hardman, 257 M 18, 847 P2d 292, 50 St. Rep. 141 (1993), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Stipulated Modification Limitation — Events Following Dissolution Not Justification for Reopening Judgment: The parties signed a property settlement agreement that included a modification limitation authorized under 40-4-201 and that required the agreement of both parties for modification. Wife contended that several events substantially altered the valuation of the marital estate, qualifying her for relief under subsection (6) of this rule, including: (1) the forgiveness of a substantial debt owed to husband's parents, knowledge of which was allegedly withheld from wife during settlement negotiations; (2) gifts of stock interests made to husband by his parents after dissolution; (3) the diagnosis of cancer in wife's father and his pending divorce, which precluded his financial help to her; and (4) action by her former attorney for unpaid fees. Under the rationale of Koch v. Billings School District No. 2, 253 M 261, 833 P2d 181, 49 St. Rep. 517 (1992), these events did not constitute extraordinary circumstances sufficient to justify reopening the judgment. In re Marriage of Hamilton, 254 M 31, 835 P2d 702, 49 St. Rep. 604 (1992).

Reopening of Dissolution Decree Without Finding of Unconscionability — Reversible Error: A dissolution decree found that although husband's military pension was not included in a separation agreement, it was included in the general terminology of the agreement. The District Court applied subsection (6) of this rule in granting wife's motion for reconsideration because wife had been advised by counsel that she had a vested interest in the pension and that mention of the pension was therefore not required. The District Court found that the lack of mention of the pension was intentional and did not constitute a waiver or relinquishment of the pension by wife. After reopening the decree, the court granted wife 50% of the pension and made further modifications in property disposition. On appeal, the Supreme Court applied 40-4-201(3), which governs separation agreements, in stating that the standard that justifies reopening the judgment is unconscionability. As in Patzer v. Patzer, 243 M 34, 792 P2d 1101 (1990), absent facts or allegations by wife that the agreement was unconscionable, reopening the decree constituted reversible error. In re Marriage of Laskey, 252 M 369, 829 P2d 935, 49 St. Rep. 322 (1992).

Unsigned Affidavit Not Basis for Relief From Default Judgment: After a default judgment was entered against defendant property management firm for conversion of plaintiffs' rentals, one of the defendants filed an unsigned affidavit with the District Court, alleging that defendants were Canadian citizens unfamiliar with Montana laws, that they were representing themselves pro se, that they in fact did file an answer, and other factual allegations. The Supreme Court held that the facts alleged were not established by an unsigned affidavit and, citing Gergen v. Pitsch, 194 M 70, 634 P2d 652 (1981), concluded that defendants were both intelligent and literate and could not have so misunderstood the proceedings against them as to warrant setting the judgment aside. The court, citing Schmidt v. Jomac, Inc., 196 M 323, 639 P2d 517 (1982), further held that the default judgment should not be set aside for failure of defendants to receive notice of the entry of the default judgment because notice was not required to be sent by the Clerk of the District Court. Bd. of Directors of Edelweiss Owners' Ass'n v. McIntosh, 251 M 144, 822 P2d 1080, 48 St. Rep. 1131 (1991).

Default Dissolution Set Aside: The wife was entitled to have the default judgment set aside because of the entirety of the circumstances of the case. After her second attorney withdrew, the court fixed September 11 as the next hearing date. However, pursuant to 37-61-405, the husband's counsel gave notice for her to appoint other counsel or appear in person on August 6, a date of no significance. When the wife did not appear on that date the husband filed a motion for default judgment, which was granted by the court on August 14 without a hearing. No copy of the application was mailed to the wife, and she did not respond. Taking all the facts into consideration, the circumstances justified setting aside the default judgment. In re Marriage of Neneman, 217 M 155, 703 P2d 164, 42 St. Rep. 1095 (1985).

Physically Disabled Defendant — Default Divorce Set Aside: The plaintiff obtained a default divorce against his wife of over 30 years and was awarded the ownership of the family farm. It was error for the District Court to refuse to set aside the default judgment where there was medical evidence that the wife was totally and permanently physically disabled by multiple sclerosis and was confined to a nursing home, and where there was no evidence that she made a knowing and voluntary relinquishment of her interest in the family farm. Tesch v. Tesch, 199 M 240, 648 P2d 293, 39 St. Rep. 1318 (1982).

Incompetent Counsel: Appellant moved for relief from judgment on the grounds that his former attorney was suffering from severe emotional problems during the trial. Subsection (6), not subsection (1), is broad enough to permit relief when personal problems of counsel cause him to grossly neglect a case. Equity requires that a hearing be held to determine the matter. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Vacation of Judgment Under Rule 60(b)(5) and (6): Based on the decision in Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec. Co-op, Inc., 180 M 434, 591 P2d 196 (1979), known as Fiscus II, the Supreme Court found that the District Court exceeded its scope of authority under Rule 60(b)(5) and (6), M.R.Civ.P., in vacating summary judgment in the instant case. The District Court vacated the Judgment because Fiscus I (Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec. Co-op, Inc., 164 M 319, 522 P2d 87 (1974)) was overruled in Piper v. Lockwood Water Users Assoc., 175 M 242, 573 P2d 646 (1978). When a decisional law change occurs subsequent to final judgment in another case, that final judgment should not be altered. State ex rel Rhodes v. District Court, 183 M 394, 600 P2d 182 (1979).s

EQUITABLE RELIEF

Failure of Judge to Recuse Based on Prepetition Consultation Not Grounds for Equitable Relief: The wife, following a dissolution proceeding, contended that the judge should have recused herself based on a prepetition consultation with the wife prior to the judge's taking the bench and sought relief under this rule. The judge did not recall the consultation and stated that the consultation had no effect on the dissolution proceedings. The Supreme Court found no impropriety and affirmed. The wife could not prove that she was entitled to relief under subsection (2) of this rule because the consultation could not be considered newly discovered evidence, nor was the wife entitled to relief under subsection (6) of this rule because she was not prevented from presenting her case for reasons of fairness or equity because the judge was never an attorney or counsel in the dissolution proceeding. In re Marriage of Markegard, 2006 MT 111, 332 M 187, 136 P3d 532 (2006), overruling Shultz v. Hooks, 263 M 234, 867 P2d 1110 (1994), to the extent that Shultz states that 3-1-803(3) precludes a judge from sitting on a case in which the judge has rendered services for a person before an action is filed or has acted as a party's attorney in a separate related case.

No Statutory Authority for Setting Aside Workers' Compensation Court Judgment — Equitable Relief: Although under some circumstances the Workers' Compensation Court may have inherent equitable power to set aside its judgment, as in cases under this rule, requiring equitable relief because of extrinsic fraud, in a case in which findings established at most intrinsic fraud, it was error for the court to set aside its judgment based on a petition filed more than 60 days after it was entered. The Supreme Court further declined to apply the civil procedure in 25-11-102 to an untimely motion to set aside a judgment based on newly discovered evidence in a workers' compensation case. St. Comp. Ins. Fund v. Chapman, 267 M 484, 885 P2d 407, 51 St. Rep. 1070 (1994).

Allegations Plaintiff and Its Lawyers Engaged in Perjury, Misrepresentations, Deception, Subversion of Justice, and Fictitious Theories of the Case — No Extrinsic Fraud: For purposes of relief from a judgment through an independent equitable action under this rule, extrinsic fraud is fraud that prevented the unsuccessful party from presenting the party's case, is collateral to the matters tried by the court, and is not fraud in the matters on which the judgment was rendered. Perjury and false or fraudulent allegations used in obtaining a judgment are not extrinsic fraud. Appellants' claims that the bank and lawyers conspired to deceive the court and subvert justice, misrepresented facts, committed perjury, and used forceful arguments and artful pleading to develop a fictitious theory of the case that misled the court did not allege extrinsic fraud. Moreover, the allegations did not constitute fraud upon the court. Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604, 50 St. Rep. 509 (1993).

Prospective Application Held Equitable: The portion of Rule 60(b), Fed.R.Civ.P., that states reversal may be based on the fact that it is no longer equitable that a judgment should have prospective application assumes that the propriety of the injunction as issued has passed beyond debate and requires some change in conditions that make continued enforcement inequitable. Nothing less than a clear showing of grievous wrong evoked by new and unforeseen conditions is required for relief. Defendant's claim that plaintiffs would not have standing if their case were to be brought after the judgment does not satisfy these requirements. Libby Rod & Gun Club v. Moraski, 519 F. Supp. 643, 38 St. Rep. 1213 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Vacation of Judgment Under Rule 60(b)(5) and (6): Based on the decision in Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec. Co-op, Inc., 180 M 434, 591 P2d 196 (1979), known as Fiscus II, the Supreme Court found that the District Court exceeded its scope of authority under Rule 60(b)(5) and (6), M.R.Civ.P., in vacating summary judgment in the instant case. The District Court vacated the Judgment because Fiscus I (Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec. Co-op, Inc., 164 M 319, 522 P2d 87 (1974)) was overruled in Piper v. Lockwood Water Users Assoc., 175 M 242, 573 P2d 646 (1978). When a decisional law change occurs subsequent to final judgment in another case, that final judgment should not be altered. State ex rel Rhodes v. District Court, 183 M 394, 600 P2d 182 (1979).

Fraudulently Obtained Judgments — Time Limitation Inapplicable: Time within which trial court could set aside judgment on basis of fraud upon the court depended upon equity and discretion, not time limitation of this rule. In re Bad Yellow Hair, 162 M 107, 509 P2d 9 (1973), overruled in part in In re Marriage of Miller, 273 M 286, 902 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 977 (1995).

Judgment Obtained by Fraud — Inherent Powers of Court: Court of equity has inherent power, independent of statute, to vacate judgment obtained by fraud in violation of last sentence of Rule 60(b) even though party seeking relief was not necessary party in original action, and motion to vacate was not made within liberal time limits prescribed by rule but was nevertheless timely, considering that aggrieved party engaged attorney to file motion to vacate within 30 days after discovery of existence of judgment. Selway v. Burns, 150 M 1, 429 P2d 640 (1967), distinguished in Kamp Implement Co. v. Amsterdam Lumber Co., 166 M 435, 533 P2d 1072 (1975).

Extrinsic Fraud — Remedy: A court of general jurisdiction has the right, entirely independent of statute, to grant relief against a judgment obtained by extrinsic fraud, and may grant that relief either on motion in the original cause or upon a separate equity suit. Cure v. Southwick, 137 M 1, 349 P2d 575 (1960).

Divorce by Fraud — Remedy: Where a divorce judgment was taken against defendant through plaintiff's extrinsic fraud on both the defendant and the court, the court could grant relief at any time either on motion in original suit or in a separate equity suit. Gillen v. Gillen, 117 M 496, 159 P2d 511 (1945), distinguished in Deich v. Deich, 136 M 566, 323 P2d 35 (1958).

Remedy for Fraud — Equitable Relief: Where fraud entered into the rendition of a judgment or it was brought about by the misconduct of the one in whose favor it was rendered, or, though fair on its face, there was a want of jurisdiction, or the statutory remedy for setting it aside is inadequate, or the aggrieved party has been deprived of his legal remedy without any fault of his own, equity will assume jurisdiction and set it aside, under such circumstances the statutory remedy being considered cumulative or concurrent. Meyer v. Lemley, 86 M 83, 282 P 268 (1929).

Former Rule 60(c). Time for determining motions

Slight Abuse of Discretion in Failure to Set Aside Default Judgment in Excess of Value of Property: Plaintiff purchased armored vehicles from defendant, and after experiencing several problems with the vehicles, plaintiff sued for breach of warranty, breach of duty of good faith, strict liability, fraud, and constructive fraud. When defendant failed to file a timely answer, default judgment was entered for plaintiff for $130,239.43. Defendant subsequently moved to set aside the default judgment, but the hearing on the motion was ultimately vacated, and defendant appealed. Noting that the default amount exceeded both the sale price and the cost of repairs of the trucks, the Supreme Court concluded that it was reasonable to assume that the default judgment would injure defendant in light of the injuries alleged and the value of the trucks, so the District Court slightly abused its discretion by failing to set aside the default judgment, warranting reversal. The default judgment was therefore vacated and defendant was granted 20 days to file an answer. Grizzly Security Armored Express, Inc. v. The Armored Group, LLC, 2009 MT 396, 353 M 399, 220 P3d 661 (2009).

Lack of Personal Jurisdiction Based on Failure of Service Affirmed: The District Court granted Semenza a default judgment in February 2004 after Semenza stated that defendant was properly served but failed to plead or defend. In May 2004, defendant moved to set aside the default judgment on grounds that defendant was not properly served. Semenza argued that the motion must be denied pursuant to this rule because more than 60 days had elapsed since judgment. The District Court did not rule on Semenza's argument, but instead concluded that because defendant was not properly served, the court had no personal jurisdiction to enter the default judgment. Semenza appealed, contending that defendant knew about the case after having received a letter referencing the action. The Supreme Court noted that actual knowledge of a lawsuit is not a substitute for proper service. Addressing Semenza's argument regarding this rule, the Supreme Court held that if service of process is flawed, personal jurisdiction over a party is not acquired and that judgment entered without jurisdiction is void. The District Court was affirmed. Semenza v. Kniss, 2005 MT 268, 329 M 115, 122 P3d 1203 (2005), following Marriage of Blaskovich, 249 M 248, 815 P2d 581 (1991), and followed in Mtn. W. Bank, N.A. v. Glacier Kitchens, Inc., 2012 MT 132, 365 Mont. 276, 281 P.3d 600.

Motion to Disqualify Other Party's Attorney Does Not Stay Sixty-Day Requirement for Judge to Rule on Motion to Vacate Default Judgment: Johnson's attorney obtained a default judgment on behalf of his client, and when an attorney appeared for the defendant and moved to have the default judgment set aside, Johnson's attorney moved to have the attorney disqualified because the trial court judge was related to a member of the defense attorney's law firm. The judge recused himself, and the new judge entered an order setting aside the default judgment. The Supreme Court held that the 60-day period for the lower court to rule on the motion to vacate ran from the time that the motion was filed, not from the time that the second judge assumed jurisdiction, and because the time had expired, the motion to vacate was considered denied. The lower court did not have jurisdiction over the issue and could not thereafter set aside the default judgment. Johnson v. Eagles Lodge Aerie 3913, 284 M 474, 945 P2d 62, 54 St. Rep. 984 (1997), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction Over Tribe — Motion for Relief From Judgment Not Subject to Time Constraints: After protracted litigation involving a tribal security interest in cows of tribal members, the Blackfeet Tribe filed a motion for relief from judgment pursuant to Rule 60(b)(4), M.R.Civ.P., based upon a contention that the District Court lacked jurisdiction. No response to the motion was ever made by the District Court. Eighteen months later, the Blackfeet Tribe then filed a motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, and the District Court granted the motion approximately 6 years later. The Supreme Court held that even though under normal circumstances the motion was considered denied after 45 days and the District Court would then have lost jurisdiction, the ability of a party to invoke the rules concerning subject matter jurisdiction transcend normal procedural consideration. Thus, the Blackfeet Tribe's motion to dismiss was not subject to time constraints. The fact that it was filed 18 months after judgment was entered and the fact that the District Court took 6 years to rule on the motion did not deprive the District Court of jurisdiction. Wippert v. The Blackfeet Tribe, 260 M 93, 859 P2d 420, 50 St. Rep. 973 (1993), overruled in part on other grounds by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Denial of Motion for Extension of Time Allowed for Filing Notice of Appeal as Appealable Order — Applicability of Forty-Five-Day Rule: The denial of a motion made pursuant to former Rule 5(a)(5), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), for an extension of the time allowed for filing a notice of appeal is an appealable order. However, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying plaintiff's extension request because the 45-day limit for filing a motion for relief from summary judgment, as set out in Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule, had expired. It was the responsibility of plaintiff's counsel to be aware of the 45-day rule, and lack of knowledge of a clear rule of civil procedure is not an excuse for relief from the rules. Sadowsky v. Glendive, 259 M 419, 856 P2d 556, 50 St. Rep. 860 (1993), citing Shields v. Pirkle Refrigerated Freightlines, 181 M 37, 591 P2d 1120 (1979), and distinguishing Zell v. Zell, 172 M 496, 565 P2d 311 (1977).

Time Limit: The 45-day time limit in this rule did not begin to run until the motion for substitution of counsel, filed pursuant to Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P., was granted. Saltzman v. Dept. of Transportation, 259 M 386, 856 P2d 965, 50 St. Rep. 845 (1993).

Power of Supreme Court to Consider District Court Proceedings Held Without Jurisdiction: After a default judgment was entered against Hardman for injuries caused to Maulding in a car accident, Hardman moved on May 22 to set aside the default, and the District Court scheduled a hearing for July 16. At the hearing, Maulding raised the timeliness of the hearing, contending that when this rule was read with Rules 59(d) and 59(g), M.R.Civ.P., the District Court had to rule on the motion within 45 days or it was considered denied. The District Court took that issue under advisement and heard testimony on the motion to set aside the default. Maulding argued on appeal that there was no evidence for the Supreme Court to consider on the issue of the default because the evidence taken by the trial court was taken at a hearing that was held without jurisdiction. The Supreme Court held that because those proceedings affect the substantial rights of the parties, consideration of the evidence developed at the hearing was within its powers under 3-2-204. Maulding v. Hardman, 257 M 18, 847 P2d 292, 50 St. Rep. 141 (1993), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Appeal of Grant of New Trial Made After Second Trial — Moot by Failure to Object or Timely Appeal: Following a trial on the distribution of marital property, wife requested and the District Court ordered a new trial. Husband waited until after the second trial to object to the order, contending that the court abused its discretion in granting a new trial because: (1) wife was incorrectly allowed to argue matters additional to those raised in the motion for a new trial; (2) the court did not rule on his motion to reconsider the order granting a new trial; and (3) the court did not state with particularity the reasons for granting a new trial. The Supreme Court held that husband's grounds for appeal must fail because he failed to object or bring an appeal in a timely fashion. The question of the propriety of the trial court's order is one that should have been considered earlier and was rendered moot by the fact that the second trial had already occurred. Husband's attempt to raise the issue for the first time on appeal was barred by the doctrine of laches. In re Marriage of Danelson, 253 M 310, 833 P2d 215, 49 St. Rep. 597 (1992).

Motion to Set Aside Enforcement of Unserved Warrant of Distraint as Independent Action — Not Subject to Time Limitation: The Department of Revenue was assigned the right of child support and attempted to recoup money paid by the state as Aid to Families With Dependent Children by filing warrants of distraint and Writs of Execution to attach any accounts in which the father had an interest, but the father was never served a notice of accruing debt or informed of his right to a hearing on each warrant. The father moved for relief from the warrants of distraint and for stay of execution, but the issue was not heard until 48 days after the motion, which the Department contended was sufficient to remove jurisdiction from the District Court. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that the motion to set aside enforcement of the unserved warrants of distraint was an independent action and thus was not subject to the 45-day limitation of Rule 60(c), M.R.Civ.P. St. v. Frank, 226 M 283, 735 P2d 290, 44 St. Rep. 657 (1987), distinguished in Bechhold v. Chacon, 248 M 111, 809 P2d 586, 48 St. Rep. 357 (1991), which was overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Motion Mistitled — Time for Filing Appeal: When the state filed a motion for rehearing of the District Court's order reinstating respondent's driver's license pursuant to Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., on the basis that the Division of Motor Vehicles should be relieved from the order, even though the motion was mistitled, the state obviously was making a Rule 60(b) motion for relief from a District Court order. The request for a rehearing was tangential to the real purpose of the motion. The full time for appeal commences to run upon the granting or denying of the motion, rather than from the date of the order from which the state appeals. Despite defects in the motion, the state identified with particularity the grounds for its motion and the relief sought; therefore, the flaws are not grounds for dismissal of the appeal. In re Petition of Burnham, 217 M 513, 705 P2d 603, 42 St. Rep. 1342 (1985).

Time Limits of Rule 59(d) — Jurisdictional: Under the provisions of Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., the District Court lacked jurisdiction to set aside a default judgment when no hearing had been held within 30 days from the date originally set for a hearing on the motion. At that time the motion is considered denied. Wallinder v. Lagerquist, 201 M 212, 653 P2d 840, 39 St. Rep. 2063 (1982), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Hearing on Motion to Vacate to Be Within Ten Days of Service: The District Court entered judgment on May 22, 1980. On May 22, 1981, the defendant served plaintiff with a motion to vacate the judgment. On June 3, 1981, the District Court set a hearing on the motion for June 30, 1981. Because the District Court failed to hold the hearing within 10 days after the motion was served as required by Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., the motion was considered denied on June 1, 1981. Lerum v. Logue, 198 M 194, 645 P2d 418, 39 St. Rep. 873 (1982).

Disqualification of Judge After Entry of Findings and Conclusions — Ruling on Motions Prohibited: Defendants filed affidavits of disqualification of the District Judge in a property dispute case after the entry of the judge's findings of fact and conclusions of law. Defendants contended that this precluded the judge from entering judgment in accordance with his findings and conclusions. The disqualification was attempted under section 93-901, R.C.M. 1947 (since superseded), which was in effect at the time. The findings and conclusions entered by the judge prior to the filing of the affidavit of disqualification expressly directed that a judgment be prepared "in accordance with" the findings and conclusions. Under these circumstances, the judgment was a part of the findings and conclusions. Accordingly, although the disqualification prevented the District Judge from ruling on posttrial motions under Rules 59 and 60, M.R.Civ.P., and from withdrawing the findings and conclusions previously entered, it was not effective to prevent entry of judgment in favor of plaintiff in accordance with findings and conclusions entered prior to the filing of the affidavit for disqualification. Macpherson v. Smoyer, 191 M 53, 622 P2d 188, 37 St. Rep. 2079 (1980).

When Time Limits Inapplicable: The inherent power of the court to enter such orders as are necessary to enforce a judgment is not limited by the time limits in Rules 59 and 60, M.R.Civ.P., because such orders are interlocutory orders, not final ones. Smith v. Foss, 177 M 443, 582 P2d 329 (1978), followed in In re Marriage of Blair, 271 M 196, 894 P2d 958, 52 St. Rep. 401 (1995).

Time Limits Adhered To: Default judgment should not have been set aside when time extension limits of Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., were exceeded. Sikorski & Sons, Inc. v. Sikorski, 162 M 442, 512 P2d 1147 (1973).

Nonreversible Error in Not Allowing Attorney Serving as Guardian Ad Litem to Testify at Final Custody Hearing — Parent's Substantial Rights Not Affected: At a final custody hearing, the District Court refused to allow the testimony and cross-examination of an attorney who was acting as a guardian ad litem because attorneys are not normally allowed to testify under the Montana Rules of Professional Conduct for attorneys. The mother appealed on grounds that it was a denial of due process to give a guardian ad litem authority to investigate and report to the court and then prevent the guardian's testimony based on the Rules of Professional Conduct and that cross-examination was necessary to ensure that the children's best interests were protected. The Supreme Court held that when an attorney is appointed as a guardian ad litem, the guardian ad litem is not to act as an attorney unless directed to do so by the appointing court. Rather, the guardian ad litem is required to fulfill the statutory role to objectively aid the court in decisions regarding a child's best interests, which includes the duty to testify and be cross-examined if the guardian ad litem gives evidence concerning an investigation. Thus, the District Court in this case erred in not allowing the testimony of the guardian ad litem. However, the error did not require reversal because it was not so significant as to materially prejudice the mother, who was given numerous meaningful opportunities to examine the guardian ad litem during the 1 ½ years of proceedings and to question the guardian ad litem's assertions and credibility. Jacobsen v. Thomas, 2004 MT 273, 323 M 183, 100 P3d 106 (2004). See also In re R.M.T., 2011 MT 164, 361 Mont. 159, 256 P.3d 935.

Admission of Criminal Justice Information as Evidence in Tort Action Upheld: David, his wife Susan, their minor child, and the parties' defunct business sued Pierce Flooring and others for damages, including damages for emotional distress, stemming from criminal acts of vandalism taken against the plaintiffs' competing business. In the course of the trial, the District Court allowed the defendants to inspect, copy, and introduce evidence in police records concerning domestic violence complaints made by Susan against David. The Supreme Court held that the evidence was relevant because it showed that there may have been another cause for the Blacks' emotional distress other than the acts of vandalism. The Supreme Court also held that the record showed that the District Court properly exercised its discretion under Rule 403, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), in allowing the admission of some of the evidence but excluding other evidence because the Blacks' right to privacy exceeded the public's right to know. The Supreme Court held that the District Court's failure to make the written finding required by 44-5-303(1) was harmless error. Rocky Mtn. Enterprises, Inc. v. Pierce Flooring, 286 M 282, 951 P2d 1326, 54 St. Rep. 1410 (1997).

Argument — Comment on Lack of Testimony When Witness Testimony Barred by Court Order — Harmless Error: In a civil action for damages against Huggins and the Carpet Barn, stemming from criminal acts damaging plaintiffs David and Susan Black's automobiles, defendants made a motion in limine to exclude certain expert witnesses for the plaintiffs from testifying. After the motion was granted, defendants commented to the jury during final arguments that the plaintiffs had failed to produce any expert witnesses on the issue for which those witnesses had been excluded by the District Court's order and also commented on the fact that Susan had not testified, even though her deposition was not admitted by virtue of the District Court's ruling. The Supreme Court held that because the plaintiffs had violated a scheduling order that resulted in the expert witnesses' testimony being excluded, the defendants could properly comment upon the lack of evidence and, although the District Court erred in excluding Susan Black's deposition, that error was harmless error because the deposition was cumulative evidence. Rocky Mtn. Enterprises, Inc. v. Pierce Flooring, 286 M 282, 951 P2d 1326, 54 St. Rep. 1410 (1997).

Error as Basis for New Trial: For error to be the basis for a new trial, it must be so significant as to materially affect the substantial right of the complaining party. When the admission of evidence was clearly prejudicial and misleading, a new trial was warranted. Zeke's Distrib. Co. v. Brown-Forman Corp., 239 M 272, 779 P2d 908, 46 St. Rep. 1678 (1989), followed in Hansen v. Hansen, 254 M 152, 835 P2d 748, 49 St. Rep. 677 (1992), In re Marriage of Lopez, 255 M 238, 841 P2d 1122, 49 St. Rep. 890 (1992), In re Marriage of Truax, 271 M 122, 894 P2d 936, 52 St. Rep. 347 (1995), Houdashelt v. Lutes, 282 M 435, 938 P2d 665, 54 St. Rep. 420 (1997), and Unmack v. Deaconess Medical Center, 1998 MT 262, 291 M 280, 967 P2d 783, 55 St. Rep. 1080 (1998).

Voidable Judgment — No Reason to Set Aside: Although the District Court's summary judgment on issue of dissolution of marriage based on irretrievable breakdown was voidable for lack of a required hearing, it would not be set aside on appeal because the appellant failed to show that the premature judgment had denied her substantial rights. In re Marriage of Kraut, 220 M 267, 714 P2d 167, 43 St. Rep. 350 (1986).

Slight Dollar Amount Errors in Findings — Harmless Error: That certain monetary amounts in the findings varied slightly from the proof at the trial was harmless error not requiring reversal, when the variation had no effect on the outcome of the issues. Farmers St. Bank of Victor v. Imperial Cattle Co., 218 M 89, 708 P2d 223, 42 St. Rep. 1419 (1985).

Voir Dire — Jurors' Beliefs as Taxpayers — Harmless Error: Although taxpayer status is not a ground for juror disqualification, voir dire as to prospective jurors' beliefs, as taxpayers, concerning the financial outcome of a case in which the state is a defendant should be permitted if requested. Failure of the trial court to permit such voir dire is error. However, the error is harmless when the jury returns a verdict for the defendant and does not reach the question of damages. Goodnough v. St., 199 M 9, 647 P2d 364, 39 St. Rep. 1170 (1982).

Counsel's Remarks Concerning Evidence Not Given: The Supreme Court held that the defense counsel's remarks about the failure of the plaintiff to call his doctor to testify or to provide the doctor's records did not constitute misconduct amounting to reversible error. Gunnels v. Hoyt, 194 M 265, 633 P2d 1187, 38 St. Rep. 1492 (1981). See also Krueger v. Gen. Motors Corp., 240 M 266, 783 P2d 1340, 46 St. Rep. 2114 (1989).

Denial of Further Discovery as Harmless Error: In a case in which a Sheriff was charged with receiving a fee in violation of law, the State contended on appeal that the denial of a continuance to pursue discovery procedures to secure further facts from reluctant witnesses was error. The Supreme Court held that, because it had decided earlier in its opinion that the reward money received by the Sheriff was not a prohibited fee under 7-4-2519, the development of further facts could not change the result in the case and the State could not have been prejudiced by denial of further discovery of facts. The case turned on law, not on facts. St. v. DeMers, 192 M 367, 628 P2d 676, 38 St. Rep. 877 (1981).

Failure to Rule on Affirmative Defense as Harmless Error: Plaintiff, buyer of cattle from the defendant, signed a contract for delivery of cattle in mid-November, 45 days after weaning. The seller's wife actually owned the calves, but the seller alone executed the contract and received a downpayment. Subsequently, the seller informed the buyer he could not deliver until after January 1. Discussions about replacement calves ensued. Delivery by December 15 was demanded. The calves were sold in December, January, and February to others. The buyer prevailed in a suit against the seller, who appealed. The seller alleged as an affirmative defense that the buyer's action was barred for failure to register the name of his business under the fictitious name statute (now repealed). Because the seller failed to prove his allegations, the trial court's failure to rule on his motions resulted in, at most, harmless error. Miller v. Titeca, 192 M 357, 628 P2d 670, 38 St. Rep. 853 (1981).

When Contract Impossible or Void — Failure to Rule on Motion for Summary Judgment as Harmless Error: A seller argued on appeal from a verdict for a purchaser in a breach of contract action that the cattle sales contract was void because he did not own the calves at the time of execution of the contract. The seller claimed the contract was wholly impossible and unlawful under 28-2-603. The Supreme Court said that the mere fact that a party contracts to sell something he does not own did not raise the defense of impossibility. The burden of proving impossibility rested on the party asserting it, and he had to show he took virtually every action within his powers to perform his duties under the contract. Here, the seller offered no evidence why it was impossible for him to obtain his wife's consent to the sale or to buy her out. The object of a contract had to be lawful when the contract was made and possible by the time the contract was to be performed. The District Court's failure to rule on the seller's motion for summary judgment on this ground was harmless error because the motion should have been denied. Miller v. Titeca, 192 M 357, 628 P2d 670, 38 St. Rep. 853 (1981).

Motion Granted Without Notice Held Not Prejudicial — Doctrine of "Compensatory Error": In an action from which nonresident defendants were dismissed for lack of jurisdiction, the trial court's granting of plaintiffs' motions to add parties to the suits without prior notice to the defendants was held not prejudicial to the defendants. The issue was first raised on appeal, and the Supreme Court refused to consider it under the doctrine of "compensatory error". Knoepke v. SW. Ry., 190 M 238, 620 P2d 1185, 37 St. Rep. 1910 (1980).

Proof of Credit Purchase — Requisite Proof of Warranty Breach — Erroneous Disallowance of Counterclaims Not Prejudicial: In an action to collect the purchase price of tires purchased on credit, the defendant (buyer) filed a counterclaim for breach of warranty against the plaintiff (seller). The defendant's counterclaims were improperly denied but the defendant failed to prove a prima facie case. Defendant appealed, alleging that there was no proof of some of the purchases. The Supreme Court said that an open account between the seller and buyer can be proved by evidence that the seller's records show that the goods were sold, that invoices had been sent to the buyer who failed to object to them, and that the seller's records are accurate. Here the buyer's rebuttal testimony was indefinite, and the credibility of the buyer's witness was a question for the District Court. No breach of warranty was proven; only the testimony of the buyer was given and no solid evidence, such as any tires, records of the amount of use of the tires, or maintenance records, was produced. This, with findings of possible alternative causes of the problems with the tires, was a sufficient record to support the finding that breach of warranty was not proved by sufficient evidence and the erroneous disallowance of the counterclaims was therefore not prejudicial. Defendant therefore was liable for the price of the tires. D & K Distrib. v. Ford, 189 M 505, 616 P2d 1097, 37 St. Rep. 1693 (1980).

Failure to Serve Attorney — Not Reversible Error: The defendant failed to serve the plaintiff's attorney in violation of Rule 5(b), M.R.Civ.P. Whether this is reversible error depends on the facts. The defendant's motion was set for hearing the same day as one of the plaintiff's motions. The two motions did not pertain to identical issues but both motions pertained to the same divorce decree and property settlement agreement. No attempt was made to get a continuance. The plaintiff was allowed to testify fully as to his financial affairs, and he has pointed to no evidence on appeal which was not before the trial court. The plaintiff was not prejudiced by the lack of service on his attorney. Phennicie v. Phennicie, 185 M 120, 604 P2d 787 (1979).

Error in Granting New Trial Where Objectionable Exhibit Never Admitted: In an action for damages for injuries suffered from an auto accident the lower court erred in granting a new trial to the State since its substantial rights were not affected by plaintiff's offer of an exhibit in the form of a petition signed by residents protesting conditions of the highway in the vicinity of the accident. No prejudice existed because the offered exhibit was never admitted as evidence. Giles v. Flint Valley Forest Prod., 179 M 382, 588 P2d 535 (1979).

Testimony in Probate Proceedings — Harmless Error: The admission of testimony relating to possible motives of individuals other than the decedent has no relevance to an appeal concerned with the sufficiency of evidence to support a jury verdict declaring the decedent competent, but such error is harmless. In re Holms, Holms v. Parsons, 179 M 375, 588 P2d 531 (1979).

Ruling on Motion — When: A District Court must rule on a motion to dismiss when made at the close of plaintiff's evidence or reserve its ruling until the close of all evidence, but a specific ruling must be made prior to final decision of the case; however, in this case failure to do so was harmless error. Brown v. Webb, 173 M 275, 567 P2d 450 (1977).

Instructions: The fact that the jury was charged orally and not in writing was harmless error. Seder v. Kiewit Sons Co., 156 M 322, 479 P2d 448 (1971).

Refusal to Poll Jury — Harmless Error: Lower court abused discretion in granting new trial based solely on ground that it had erred in refusing request for poll of jury since error, if any, was harmless in light of evidence affirmatively showing that verdict was rendered in open court in presence of all counsel, that in response to question by judge, foreman of jury advised him they had agreed upon verdict, and that following reading of verdict signed by foreman, judge inquired of jury if it was true verdict of at least eight of them and jury answered in affirmative. Martello v. Darlow, 151 M 232, 441 P2d 175 (1968).

Joint Enterprise: Court's rulings with respect to issue of joint enterprise, if error, was harmless error since driver was sole proximate cause of accident in which passenger suing owner of cattle was injured when car struck cattle on highway. Ratcliff v. Murphy, 150 M 31, 430 P2d 627 (1967).

Clerk's Error — Failure to Require Default Affidavit: Omission of clerk of court to require affidavit of amount due under Rule 55(b)(1) before entry of default judgment in favor of plaintiff is not fatal unless refusal to take action with respect to the omission appears to the court inconsistent with substantial justice. Interstate Counseling Serv. v. Emeline, 144 M 409, 396 P2d 727 (1964).

Inconsistent Findings — Judgment Not Void: In action by sellers of hotel business against buyers for balance due on contract, findings of District Court that damages found for buyers would never exceed amount owed to sellers, and denial of recovery to sellers, did not void judgment and it was modified on appeal giving judgment to sellers for difference between that owed on the contract and total damages that buyers would sustain. Swecker v. Badura, 141 M 329, 377 P2d 752 (1963).

Admission in Court — Conflicting Order as Harmless Error: Where defendant in divorce action admitted that certain stocks in her name belonged to plaintiff and that she would endorse them and turn them over to plaintiff if produced, any error in the order of the court quieting title to the stock in plaintiff and ordering defendant to transfer and convey the stock to plaintiff was harmless. Rogers v. Rogers, 123 M 52, 209 P2d 998 (1949), explained in Key v. Clements, 133 M 344, 323 P2d 603 (1958).

Jurisdiction Not Acquired — Rule Inapplicable: Section 93-3909, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 61, M.R.Civ.P.), did not apply to an action where jurisdiction has not been properly acquired. In re Woodside-Florence Irrigation District, 121 M 346, 194 P2d 241 (1948); Choate v. Spencer, 13 M 127, 32 P 651 (1893), distinguished in Kipp v. Burton, 29 M 96, 74 P 85 (1903).

Clerical Error of Clerk: The entry of a default by the clerk under subsection (2) of section 93-4801, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 55(a) and (b), M.R.Civ.P.), was purely ministerial, and the fact that it was not "properly signed" would at best be but a clerical error or mistake which could not affect the substantial rights of the parties and which the court must disregard. Galbreath v. Aubert, 116 M 490, 157 P2d 105 (1944).

Burden of Proof Placed on Defendant — Harmless Error: Where a temporary restraining order was issued upon the filing of the complaint to recover possession of lands in the hands of a cropper and order to show cause why an injunction pendente lite should not issue, and defendant moved to dissolve the temporary order, while court erred in placing the burden of proof upon defendant, the error, in absence of showing of prejudice, will be considered immaterial because order of proof is discretionary and on final analysis determination is dependent on where preponderance of the evidence lay. Gibbons v. Huntsinger, 105 M 562, 74 P2d 443 (1927).

Technical Errors in Findings Immaterial: Technical error in making an immaterial finding does not warrant reversal of a judgment. Averill Mach. Co. v. Taylor, 70 M 70, 223 P 918 (1924).

Directed Verdict Instead of Dismissal — Harmless Error: Where no evidence was introduced in a claim and delivery action, an order directing the jury to find in favor of defendant, instead of ordering a nonsuit or dismissal, was technical error. However, the error was harmless, the action taken by the court having placed plaintiff in no worse position than he would have been if the statute had been strictly pursued. Barrett v. Shipley, 63 M 152, 206 P 430 (1922).

Substantial Error in Verdict — Rule Inapplicable: Section 93-3909, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 61, M.R.Civ.P.), had no application to substantial errors, as where the verdict in claim and delivery fails to find that there was an unlawful taking or detention. Olcott v. Gebo, 54 M 35, 166 P 300 (1917).

Discharge of Jury or Directed Verdict: It is not important whether the District Court directs the jury to render a verdict for either party, or discharges the jury and renders judgment. In either case the result is the decision of the District Court. If the District Court pursues the latter course it is at most a mere irregularity which will be disregarded by the Supreme Court. Consol. Gold & Sapphire Min. Co. v. Struthers, 41 M 565, 111 P 152 (1910).

Technical Irregularity of Pleadings as Harmless Error: Where, after a trial amendment, the case proceeded and was tried upon the issues formed by the amended complaint and answer, and it appeared that defendants were afforded every opportunity to present their entire case, the judgment should not be reversed upon the purely technical irregularity in the proceedings of the court with reference to the amendment. Christiansen v. Aldrich, 30 M 446, 76 P 1007 (1904).

Misjoinder of Causes: Where defendant rightly demurred (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) on the ground that two causes of action had been improperly united in the complaint, and the court, at the instance of the plaintiff without objection by the defendant, dismissed the complaint as to the second cause of action, at the same time overruling the demurrer, no costs being taxed to defendant, the overruling of the demurrer when considered with the dismissal did not affect any substantial right of the defendant requiring the judgment to be reversed. Caplice Commercial Co. v. Cassidy, 25 M 81, 63 P 799 (1901).

Judicial Sale: An order confirming a receiver's sale of partnership property will not be set aside on an appeal therefrom, where it is not shown that the property was not sold at its full value, or that the appellant was prejudiced thereby. Murphy v. Patterson, 24 M 591, 63 P 380 (1901).

MANIFEST JUSTICE

Grant or Denial of New Trial in Discretion of Court: Granting or refusing of a motion for a new trial rests in the trial court's discretion. Under this rule, the court must determine whether refusal to grant a motion would appear inconsistent with substantial justice. The Supreme Court will not overturn denial of a motion for a new trial absent a showing of manifest abuse of discretion. Hanzel v. Marler, 237 M 521, 774 P2d 426, 46 St. Rep. 1020 (1989).

Writ of Mandamus Manifestly Just: Where the issuing of a Writ of Mandamus restoring a policeman to office has been manifestly just, and the rights of the municipality against which the Writ is directed are not prejudicially affected, any errors committed at the hearing are to be disregarded on appeal. State ex rel. McDonald v. Getchell, 51 M 323, 152 P 480 (1915).

Judgment for Defendant Not to Be Reversed: A judgment for the defendant will not be reversed for error committed during the trial where the plaintiff is not, in any view of the case, entitled to a judgment. Howell v. Bent, 48 M 268, 137 P 49 (1913).

Purpose of Rule — Appellate Review: Section 93-3909, R.C.M 1947 (superseded by Rule 61, M.R.Civ.P.), was intended to put a speedy end to litigation when that object can be attained without injustice. Its design was to prevent reversals of causes wherein substantial justice has already been done. The Supreme Court was commanded by it to give judgment on appeal without regard to errors which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties. Copenhaver v. N. Pac. Ry., 42 M 453, 113 P 467 (1911).

PLEADING ERRORS

Harmless Error Rule Inapplicable to Substantial Defects: The rule that courts must at every stage of an action disregard any error or defect in the pleadings or proceedings which does not affect the substantial rights of the parties, has reference only to nonessential allegations or formative defects, and may not be relied upon by a plaintiff who failed to allege all facts in his complaint necessary to a cause of action. Dickason v. Dickason, 84 M 52, 274 P 145 (1929).

Defendant Not Misled — No Reversal for Defects in Complaint: Where defendant was not misled by any allegations or lack of allegations in the complaint but was fully prepared to defend the action upon the merits, the judgment in favor of plaintiff will not be reversed for mere technical defect in the pleading raised by general demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed). Davis v. Freisheimer, 68 M 322, 219 P 236 (1923).

Refusal of Motion to Strike: Error in refusing to grant a motion, in an action in conversion, to strike out a portion of the replication which, referring to proceedings on attachment had in a Justice's Court, was said to contain allegations argumentative in character and charging defendants with gross wrongdoing, was harmless, where, during the trial, the entire record of the proceedings had in the Justice's Court was on plaintiff's motion excluded, and where the court in its instructions submitted only the issues presented by the complaint and the denials in the answer. Shandy v. McDonald, 38 M 393, 100 P 203 (1909).

Count in Complaint Abandoned at Trial: Where, in an action to recover for services alleged to have been performed as brokers to sell real estate, plaintiffs at the opening of the trial abandoned a count in their complaint based upon a quantum meruit, introduced no proof in support of it, and the trial proceeded upon the issues presented by the answer to a count based on a written contract, and the instructions of the District Court were formulated accordingly, the error of the District Court in overruling a special demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) to the count based upon the quantum meruit, if error, was harmless. Blankenship v. Decker, 34 M 292, 85 P 1035 (1906).

Technical Objection to Complaint After Judgment: A technical objection to a complaint in a suit for specific performance not affecting the substantial rights of the parties is not available after judgment. Christiansen v. Aldrich, 30 M 446, 76 P 1007 (1904).

FAIR TRIAL

Improper Argument Concerning Witness Not Called Not Requiring Reversal: Moralli sued Lake County for a back injury that resulted from slipping and falling in the Lake County jail. During the closing argument at trial, Moralli's counsel commented upon the failure of the county to call the jailer as a witness, saying that the jailer's testimony would have hurt the county badly. Upon objection by the county, the District Court gave a curative instruction, admonishing the jury that it could not consider what the jailer might or might not say. The Supreme Court held that the argument was less prejudicial than the argument based upon excluded testimony considered by the Supreme Court in Gunnels v. Hoyt, 194 M 265, 633 P2d 1187 (1981). As in Gunnels, the Supreme Court held that the argument was improper but was not so prejudicial that it could not be cured by the District Court's instruction to the jury. Moralli v. Lake County, 255 M 23, 839 P2d 1287, 49 St. Rep. 872 (1992). However, see Harne v. Deadmond, 1998 MT 22, 287 M 255, 954 P2d 732, 55 St. Rep. 80 (1998).

Permissible Use of Records of Juvenile Crimes — Impeachment: Before his trial on charges of sexual intercourse without consent and sexual assault, the defendant filed a motion to allow his counsel to inspect the Youth Court records of any complaining witnesses on the grounds that the records might have a bearing on the competency and veracity of those witnesses. The motion was denied, and the judge said he would examine the records to determine if any of the girls should be examined by a psychologist before testifying. The Supreme Court found that the judge's ruling denying the defendant's motion to inspect denied him the right to confront the witnesses against him. However, its review of the juvenile records convinced the Supreme Court that the error here was harmless. It declined to adopt a rule allowing evidence of prior juvenile convictions to be used as evidence to attack the general credibility of a witness. The permissible use of those juvenile records was confined to demonstrating, by cross-examination, a witness' bias, prejudice, or motive. It was within the discretion of the trial judge to determine competency, and his findings would not be overturned absent an abuse of discretion. St. v. Camitsch, 192 M 124, 626 P2d 1250, 38 St. Rep. 563 (1981).

Failure to Serve Attorney — Not Reversible Error: The defendant failed to serve the plaintiff's attorney in violation of Rule 5(b), M.R.Civ.P. Whether this is reversible error depends on the facts. The defendant's motion was set for hearing the same day as one of the plaintiff's motions. The two motions did not pertain to identical issues but both motions pertained to the same divorce decree and property settlement agreement. No attempt was made to get a continuance. The plaintiff was allowed to testify fully as to his financial affairs, and he has pointed to no evidence on appeal which was not before the trial court. The plaintiff was not prejudiced by the lack of service on his attorney. Phennicie v. Phennicie, 185 M 120, 604 P2d 787 (1979).

Fair Trial and Impartial Judge Required: The provisions for disregarding harmless error are not applicable where the substantial right of the litigants to have a fair trial before an impartial judge is involved. In re Woodside-Florence Irrigation District, 121 M 346, 194 P2d 241 (1948).

Prejudice Not Presumed — Substantial Rights to Be Affected: On appeal prejudice is not presumed, and in order to work a reversal it must be affirmatively made to appear that substantial rights have been affected by the errors assigned. Conway v. Fabian, 108 M 287, 89 P2d 1022 (1939); Lindeberg v. Howe, 67 M 195, 215 P 230 (1923).

Argument by Counsel: Even though the defendant, in a proceeding to condemn land for a power plant, had the right to open and close on the question of damages, which right, however, was given by the court to the plaintiff, he was not entitled to a new trial on this ground unless he could show that he had suffered some prejudice by reason of the court's action. Interstate Power Co. v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 52 M 509, 159 P 408 (1916).

Curing of Error: Error committed during a trial which is rendered harmless during its progress, and therefore cannot prejudice the complaining party, is insufficient to impeach a judgment. Fowlie v. Cruse, 52 M 222, 157 P 958 (1916).

EVIDENTIARY RULINGS

Admission of Hearsay Held Harmless Error — Refusal to Grant Mistrial Upheld: During the trial of a negligence action against the state for failure to properly supervise on parole a convicted execution-style murderer, the plaintiff testified that during the criminal trial of the parolee in another state, a firearms expert testified as to the age of the parolee's handgun. The state objected to the plaintiff's testimony but was overruled and later moved for a mistrial on the grounds that the plaintiff's counsel knowingly used false testimony because that counsel had a transcript of the previous criminal trial containing the expert's statements. The District Court reviewed the transcript from the criminal trial, concluded that the plaintiff's statements were based upon her own erroneous impressions from that trial, and refused to grant the mistrial. The Supreme Court held that the plaintiff's statement was hearsay and that it was error to admit the statement but, because the plaintiff's statement was cumulative, that admission of the statement was harmless error. The Supreme Court also noted that what the state was requesting by the motion for mistrial was that the Supreme Court substitute its judgment for that of the District Court concerning the District Court's findings that the testimony was presented knowing it was false, which the Supreme Court refused to do. Starkenburg v. St., 282 M 1, 934 P2d 1018, 54 St. Rep. 214 (1997).

Judicial Comment on Evidence — Harmless Error: In a trial for negligence in the death of the plaintiff's wife by carbon monoxide poisoning resulting from a faulty exhaust system on a used car sold by defendant, the District Court sustained defendant's objection to evidence regarding federal emission standards and, in the process, explained the reasons for sustaining the objection. Plaintiff appealed on the grounds that the judge had improperly commented on the evidence in the presence of the jury. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the statement did not constitute reversible error. Not every statement made by the court constitutes an impermissible comment on the evidence. Plaintiff failed to establish how the comments substantially prejudiced the case. Foley v. Harrison Ave. Motor Co., 267 M 200, 883 P2d 100, 51 St. Rep. 1042 (1994).

Incorrect Calculations Inappropriate for Judicial Notice — Harmless Error: The trial court took judicial notice of two calculations that proved incorrect. The inferences drawn from these figures were used to support the court's decision. The Supreme Court stated that the trial court erred by taking judicial notice of facts not appropriate for judicial notice, but the error was harmless since other evidence supported the court's decision. Rose v. Myers, 223 M 13, 724 P2d 176, 43 St. Rep. 1493 (1986).

Admission of Hearsay Statements Harmless Error: Recollection by a witness of statements made by out-of-court declarants regarding paternity of an infant in a proceeding to terminate parental rights was hearsay, but was admissible to determine if the infant fell within the definition of "Indian child" under the Indian Child Welfare Act, and not to prove the truth of paternity. Other hearsay objections overruled by the trial court were properly raised, but the court failed to reverse the District Court since the erroneous admission of evidence was harmless. The objectionable statements were cumulative and amply corroborated by competent evidence. In re R.M.B., Youth in Need of Care, 213 M 29, 689 P2d 281, 41 St. Rep. 1925 (1984).

Lay Witness Opinion Testimony Conclusory and Lacking in Probative Value — Admission Harmless Error: The Supreme Court refused to find reversible error in the admission by the trial court of lay opinion testimony that was conclusory and lacked probative value, finding that the error was harmless in view of the voluminous record in the case. Barmeyer v. Mont. Power Co., 202 M 185, 657 P2d 594, 40 St. Rep. 23 (1983).

Denial of Further Discovery as Harmless Error: In a case in which a Sheriff was charged with receiving a fee in violation of law, the State contended on appeal that the denial of a continuance to pursue discovery procedures to secure further facts from reluctant witnesses was error. The Supreme Court held that, because it had decided earlier in its opinion that the reward money received by the Sheriff was not a prohibited fee under 7-4-2519, the development of further facts could not change the result in the case and the State could not have been prejudiced by denial of further discovery of facts. The case turned on law, not on facts. St. v. DeMers, 192 M 367, 628 P2d 676, 38 St. Rep. 877 (1981).

Permissible Use of Records of Juvenile Crimes — Impeachment: Before his trial on charges of sexual intercourse without consent and sexual assault, the defendant filed a motion to allow his counsel to inspect the Youth Court records of any complaining witnesses on the grounds that the records might have a bearing on the competency and veracity of those witnesses. The motion was denied, and the judge said he would examine the records to determine if any of the girls should be examined by a psychologist before testifying. The Supreme Court found that the judge's ruling denying the defendant's motion to inspect denied him the right to confront the witnesses against him. However, its review of the juvenile records convinced the Supreme Court that the error here was harmless. It declined to adopt a rule allowing evidence of prior juvenile convictions to be used as evidence to attack the general credibility of a witness. The permissible use of those juvenile records was confined to demonstrating, by cross-examination, a witness' bias, prejudice, or motive. It was within the discretion of the trial judge to determine competency, and his findings would not be overturned absent an abuse of discretion. St. v. Camitsch, 192 M 124, 626 P2d 1250, 38 St. Rep. 563 (1981).

Exception to Parol Evidence Rule — Harmless Error: The defendant appealed from a judgment granting specific performance of an option agreement to the plaintiff and ordering the property involved conveyed to the plaintiff. The defendant argued that the judgment should be reversed because the trial court erred in excluding his testimony on matters going to the validity of the contract. He claimed he had no authority to sign the agreement, he had no intent to sign a contract, and he raised the question whether anyone had directed that a writing be made. The trial court had excluded the offered evidence as a violation of the parol evidence rule. The offered testimony went to the validity of the contract and therefore constituted an exception to the rule under 28-2-905, but no prejudice occurred because such testimony was admitted later in the trial. Van Atta v. Schillinger, 191 M 472, 625 P2d 73, 38 St. Rep. 426 (1981).

Harmless Error — Consideration of Records Not Presented at Hearing — Workers' Compensation: Where no timely objection was made at the time the workers' compensation judge made known that he would consider an additional physical examination of the claimant after the close of the hearing, it was not error to include the results of the examination in the findings and conclusions filed by the judge. The judge also considered claimant's Veterans' Administration (now Department of Veterans Affairs) medical records, which were not presented at the hearing. Since these records corroborated claimant's testimony, however, it was harmless error to consider them. Hume v. St. Regis Paper Co., 187 M 53, 608 P2d 1063 (1980).

Error in Granting New Trial Where Objectionable Exhibit Never Admitted: In an action for damages for injuries suffered from an auto accident the lower court erred in granting a new trial to the State since its substantial rights were not affected by plaintiff's offer of an exhibit in the form of a petition signed by residents protesting conditions of the highway in the vicinity of the accident. No prejudice existed because the offered exhibit was never admitted as evidence. Giles v. Flint Valley Forest Prod., 179 M 382, 588 P2d 535 (1979).

Testimony in Probate Proceeding — Harmless Error: The admission of testimony relating to possible motives of individuals other than the decedent has no relevance to an appeal concerned with the sufficiency of evidence to support a jury verdict declaring the decedent competent, but such error is harmless. In re Holms, Holms v. Parsons, 179 M 375, 588 P2d 531 (1979).

Hypothetical Question: Defendant tractor owner was not prejudiced by the court's allowing highway patrolman to answer hypothetical questions which assumed, among other facts, that a driver in a position the same as that of plaintiff's decedent was watching the right side of the road as he passed the glare of the tractor headlights where it had been previously established that decedent could not have avoided hitting the tractor-trailer had he been looking directly ahead. Hurly v. Star Transfer Co., 141 M 176, 376 P2d 504 (1962).

Evidence as to Suicide: In an action to recover on a life insurance policy defended on the ground of suicide, admission of testimony on good reputation of decedent, that the Chief of Police had never known of a like case of suicide, identification of picture of deceased by his fiancee, and that of a firearms expert that a revolver could be accidentally discharged by intentionally pulling the trigger, if error, was harmless as not affecting the substantial rights of the parties. Lewis v. New York Life Ins. Co., 113 M 151, 124 P2d 579 (1942).

Improper Admission or Cross-Examination — Reversal Warranted: Errors in the admission of improper evidence or in the permission of improper cross-examination have been held in and of themselves sufficiently prejudicial to justify the reversal of a judgment. St. v. Patton, 102 M 51, 55 P2d 1290 (1936).

Evidence of Physical Condition — Lapse of Time: While it was error to admit evidence as to the condition of a tractor 2 years after its alleged wrongful seizure and return to the owner, in view of further testimony that it had in the interim been extensively used and repairs had been made on it, it may not be held of sufficient force to prejudice defendant in the eyes of the jury. Roper v. Caterpillar Tractor Co., 98 M 76, 37 P2d 812 (1934).

Failure to Rule on Evidence: Where all evidence offered in a condemnation proceeding was admitted, failure of the court to rule on an objection to appellant's evidence could not have adversely affected his rights, and therefore, while a ruling should have been made in order to preserve a proper record, its failure so to do was harmless error. St. v. Whitcomb, 94 M 415, 22 P2d 823 (1933).

Immaterial Testimony Admitted: Error in admitting immaterial testimony which could not have prejudiced appellant will be treated as harmless. Russell v. Sunburst Ref. Co., 83 M 452, 272 P 998 (1928).

Receipt of Evidence "Subject to Objection": Repeated failure of the trial court in a proceeding to vacate a decree of divorce to rule upon objections to offered evidence and its action in permitting it to be received "subject to the objections", thus depriving counsel of knowledge whether it was or was not before the trial court in arriving at its decision, if error, was nonprejudicial where the evidence in each instance was not of any substantial materiality and could not have affected the result. Hall v. Hall, 70 M 460, 226 P 469 (1924).

Presumption as to Reception of Incompetent Testimony: The rule that on appeal in an action tried without a jury it will be presumed that the trial court did not consider incompetent testimony in reaching its conclusion, applies only where nothing substantial appears in the record to the contrary or where the testimony was trifling and of no import. Therefore, where palpably incompetent testimony was of import and went to the very matter covered by the court's findings, the presumption cannot be indulged and the judgment will be reversed. State ex rel. Rankin v. Martin, 68 M 392, 219 P 632 (1923).

Error in Cross-Examination Permitted: Though the court permits a technical violation of the rule of cross-examination, the error is not prejudicial where it is not shown that substantial rights have suffered, and it will therefore be disregarded. Hanson Sheep Co. v. Farmers' & Traders' St. Bank, 53 M 324, 163 P 1151 (1917).

Technical Error Not Grounds for Reversal: Technical error in the admission of evidence is not grounds for reversal unless it appears that the rights of the party complaining have been prejudiced by it. Rea v. Alfalfa Prod. Co., 53 M 90, 161 P 708 (1917); White v. Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Ry., 49 M 419, 143 P 561 (1914).

INSTRUCTIONS TO JURY

Harmless Error Regarding General Verdict Form: Although several claims were submitted erroneously to the jury on the general verdict form, the error was not reversible error. Reversal of the verdict on the remaining proper claims would constitute substantial injustice. R.H. Grover, Inc. v. Flynn Ins. Co., 238 M 278, 777 P2d 338, 46 St. Rep. 1266 (1989).

Contract Dispute — Damages — Harmless Error: Plaintiffs, sellers of a motel, sued for repossession of the motel and the defendants counterclaimed for actual and punitive damages.

The District Court jury awarded judgment in favor of the defendants. The plaintiffs appealed, claiming the District Court erred by instructing the jury that an oral waiver could alter a written contract and by submitting to the jury an issue of bad faith between the parties. The Supreme Court held that the defendants' testimony as to the plaintiffs' waiver was sufficient to uphold the jury decision and that the failure of the District Court to distinguish between damages arising from a breach of contract provision and damages for the tort of bad faith is in this case harmless in view of the jury verdict awarding only compensatory damages. Thiel v. Johnson, 219 M 271, 711 P2d 829, 42 St. Rep. 2010 (1985).

Horseback Riding Injury — Jury Instructions Properly Refused — Harmless Error: Where, as a result of an injury occurring prior to the effective date of the comparative negligence statute, the plaintiff sued the defendant for injuries received when the plaintiff was thrown from his horse, the District Court did not err in refusing to give the plaintiff's jury instructions relating to the defendant's negligence. Because the jury based its decision on the plaintiff's contributory negligence, the defendant's negligence could not have affected the result in this case. If any error occurred, it was harmless. Waatti v. Dollan, 193 M 329, 631 P2d 1279, 38 St. Rep. 1060 (1981).

Adverse Possession — Failure to Instruct on Permissive Use: In a case involving alleged adverse possession, one issue on appeal was the failure of the trial court to instruct the jury on permissive use in conjunction with adverse possession. The Supreme Court cited case law that implied acquiescence is not the same as permission. Possession may be adverse even though the owner does not interfere with entry and the possessor understands that there will be no future interference with his possession. Upon review of the trial evidence, the Supreme Court found no evidence of permissive use. It noted that the testator on whose behalf the case was brought had treated the land he possessed as his own, paid taxes on the property, and improved it. In the absence of any evidence supporting this portion of the defendant's case, the Supreme Court found no reversible error could have occurred as a result of the District Court's refusal to give a permissive use instruction. Cremer v. Cremer Rodeo Land and Livestock Co., 192 M 208, 627 P2d 1199, 38 St. Rep. 574 (1981).

Personal Injury — When Strict Liability Applies — Harmless Error: Plaintiffs purchased a used motorcycle from the defendant. Both plaintiffs were injured riding the motorcycle and brought an action in strict liability, and alternately, in negligence. The case was submitted to the jury on the negligence theory only. The jury found that the plaintiff's actions were the proximate cause of the accident in both cases and that the defendant was not negligent. On appeal, the plaintiffs alleged error in the failure of the court to instruct the jury on the theory of strict liability. The Supreme Court held that the plaintiffs could not have been prejudiced by the court's failure to instruct on strict liability because, in this particular case, the jury's findings of no negligence on the part of the defendant in adjusting the brakes would foreclose a finding of defect by reason of brake maladjustment and because the plaintiffs did not carry their burden to establish a causal relationship between brake maladjustment and the accident in that their testimony failed to prove that the accident was caused by defective brakes rather than caused by the bike hitting the ditch at a time the driver was unattentive. Likewise, since the jury found the defendant to be not negligent, any error in instructions on affirmative defenses was harmless. Therefore, the instructions pertaining to assumption of risk did not require review. Evangeline v. Billings Cycle Center, 192 M 106, 626 P2d 841, 38 St. Rep. 550 (1981).

Headlamp Illumination Requirements Erroneously Stated — Harmless Error: A jury instruction regarding the applicable statutory provisions governing the degree of illumination required of headlamps of motor vehicles, although erroneously stated by a judge, constituted only harmless error since the outcome of the verdict against defendant was not affected and since the statute that was erroneously involved actually helped defendant. Lauman v. Lee, 192 M 84, 626 P2d 830, 38 St. Rep. 499 (1981).

Oral Instructions as Harmless Error: The fact that the jury was charged orally and not in writing was harmless error. Seder v. Kiewit Sons Co., 156 M 322, 479 P2d 448 (1971).

Contributory Negligence Instruction as Harmless Error — No Evidence: In a wrongful death action by father of 8½-year-old boy, who while riding a bicycle was struck and killed by automobile, court's instruction that deceased boy was incapable of contributory negligence and court's refusal of defendant's offered instruction on contributory negligence was not reversible error, irrespective of question of boy's capacity, since there was no substantial credible evidence of contributory negligence in fact on part of deceased boy. Graham v. Rolandson, 150 M 270, 435 P2d 263 (1967).

Giving Issue to Jury as Harmless Error: Submitting issue of contributory negligence to jury was harmless error in light of substantial evidence showing that defendant was not negligent, and substantial evidence that even if defendant was negligent plaintiff was not injured in accident or injury was not result of defendant's negligence. Brown v. Reel, 148 M 381, 421 P2d 454 (1966).

Appeal After Favorable Verdict: Where, on appeal from a verdict in his favor, many of plaintiff's assignments of error related to instructions dealing only with matters affecting the question of liability and since their adoption or refusal could not have prejudiced the plaintiff, the jury having found in his favor, the instructions could not be considered on appeal. Dasinger v. Andersen, 136 M 277, 347 P2d 747 (1959).

No Injury From Inapplicable Instructions: Where no injury was caused the appellant by giving of inapplicable instruction, Supreme Court will disregard error. Maynard v. Helena, 117 M 402, 160 P2d 484 (1945).

Criminal Proceeding — Substantial Justice Done: The trial court in a criminal prosecution may neither instruct the jury as though a disputed fact had been proved, nor comment upon the weight of the evidence. But if its charge as a whole leaves the disputed facts to the determination of the jury, and it does not appear that the jurors have been misled by the assumption of a fact as true, and it appears from the whole case that substantial justice has been done, the technical error committed will not work a reversal of the judgment of conviction. St. v. Daems, 97 M 486, 37 P2d 322 (1934).

Correct Result Based on Improper Instructions — No Reversal Required: Where the correct result was reached in the trial of a law action, the judgment should be affirmed even though the jury was incorrectly instructed, such a case falling within the rule forbidding the Supreme Court from reversing a judgment because of any error or defect in the proceedings not affecting the substantial rights of the parties. Berthelote v. Loy Oil Co., 95 M 434, 28 P2d 187 (1933).

Condition of Sidewalk — No Prejudice Shown: In an action by a pedestrian based upon an accident on a city street in daytime, while it was error to instruct the jury that defendant city was required to keep its sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition "by night as well as day", in the absence of an affirmative showing of prejudice to defendant's substantial rights, the error must be considered harmless. Olson v. Butte, 86 M 240, 283 P 222 (1929).

Damages — Instruction Nonprejudicial: Where the jury had been advised that every element essential to a recovery must be established by a preponderance of the evidence, error in an instruction that if they found the issues in favor of plaintiff they might award damages in such amount as "they believed" would compensate her, etc., was nonprejudicial. Kelly v. John R. Daily Co., 56 M 63, 181 P 326 (1919).

Imputed Negligence Incorrect: Where an automobile collided with an engine at a railroad crossing, through the negligence of the driver of the automobile, judgment for the railroad in an action by a passenger in the automobile will not be reversed where the plaintiff was himself negligent, because of an erroneous instruction that the driver's negligence could be imputed to the plaintiff. Sherris v. N. Pac. Ry., 55 M 189, 175 P 269 (1918).

JURY ERROR

Incorrect Order Corrected on Appeal — New Trial Unnecessary: In an action for money had and received, where the jury verdict and judgment were in strict conformity to the prayer of the complaint, even though there was an additional order merging a note and mortgage changing the nature of the judgment from one for money had and received to one of foreclosure, the judgment could be corrected by the Supreme Court without a new trial. Puterbaugh v. Ash, 135 M 463, 342 P2d 742 (1959).

Verdict Exceeded Undisputed Damages — Modified Judgment: Where verdict of jury was for $10 more than proof showed loss to be and there was no conflict in the evidence, the judgment entered on such verdict would not be reversed but the judgment would be modified by reducing it by $10. Miller v. Emerson, 120 M 380, 186 P2d 220 (1947).

Verdict Larger Than Intended — Remand Proper: Where it is apparent from the record that the jury intended to fix the damages in an action in conversion at the limit fixed in the court's instructions, but either by clerical error or inadvertence returned a verdict for a larger amount, and the evidence shows clearly that plaintiff is entitled to recover, the judgment will not be reversed but the cause remanded with directions to modify the judgment to comport with the intention of the jury. Kane v. Oehler, 62 M 417, 205 P 245 (1922).

Former Rule 62. Stay of proceedings to enforce a judgment

Rules 59 and 62 Distinguished: The denial of a motion for a new trial is not in effect a denial of a stay of proceedings to enforce a judgment. State ex rel. Dawson v. Butte, 145 M 316, 400 P2d 629 (1965).

Former Rule 62(c). Injunction pending appeal

No Basis Upon Which to Appeal Denial of Motion: When the District Court dismissed the plaintiff's complaint for a permanent injunction against the defendant, the plaintiff sought an injunction pending appeal. At the hearing, the plaintiff was not prepared to present evidence although the defendant indicated a willingness to proceed. At the suggestion of plaintiff, the court denied the motion, opening the way for an appeal. On appeal, the Supreme Court found from the record that plaintiff had no grounds upon which to appeal from a denial of the Rule 62(c), M.R.Civ.P., motion. The motion was therefore properly denied. Intermountain Tel. & Power Co. v. Mid-Rivers Tel. Co-op, Inc., 201 M 448, 655 P2d 491, 39 St. Rep. 2226 (1982).

Former Rule 62(e). Stay in favor of the state of Montana or agency thereof Payment Pending Appeal: In eminent domain proceeding State was forced to deposit amount of award granted by condemnation commission pending appeal. Dept. of Highways v. Scrivani, 172 M 177, 561 P2d 1321 (1976).

Eminent Domain Proceeding — No Security Required: Where Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) filed notice of appeal and perfected its appeal after Writ of Execution under 70-30-308 had been issued, the appeal stayed the judgment although no bond was filed as required by section 93-8011, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by former Rules 6 and 7, M.R.App.P., now superseded), since under this rule no security was required from the State. Robertson v. Highway Comm'n, 148 M 275, 420 P2d 21 (1966).

Former Rule 62(g). Power of appellate court not limited

Issuance of License — Stay of Writ of Mandate: Though there is no provision for a stay of execution in case a Writ of Mandate is issued by a District Court to compel the issuance of a license, the Supreme Court may nevertheless issue any appropriate writ to insure an appeal. Gill v. Rafn, 133 M 505, 326 P2d 974 (1958), distinguished in State ex rel. Ronish v. School District, 136 M 453, 348 P2d 797 (1960).

Transfer of Cause — Stay of Writ of Mandate: Though there is no provision for a stay of execution, in case a Writ of Mandate is issued by the District Court to compel the transfer of a cause from a police to a Justice's Court, the Supreme Court may nevertheless issue any appropriate writ to insure an appeal. State ex rel. Brass v. Horn, 36 M 418, 93 P 351 (1907).

Former Rule 62(h). Stay of judgment upon multiple claims

Inability to Apply "Capable of Repetition Yet Evading Review" Exception to Mootness Doctrine Based on Failure to Preserve Appeal: The Billings Gazette requested documents related to the conduct of certain Billings school teachers. The teachers' union and the teachers declined to produce the documents based on the teachers' privacy. The District Court decided that as public employees, the teachers had no reasonable expectation of privacy in the information and ordered the school district to release the documents. The school district complied, but the teachers' union and the teachers appealed the order. The Supreme Court found that because the documents in question had already been released and the teachers could not be restored to their original position, the issue was moot. Nevertheless, the teachers' union and the teachers requested that the Supreme Court address the merits of the issue under the exception to the mootness doctrine for constitutional questions that are capable of recurring but which could evade effective review. Because the inquiry of whether the expectation of privacy clearly exceeds the merits of public disclosure must be undertaken in the context of the facts of each case, it could not be said that there was a reasonable expectation that the same action comprising the same factual scenario would arise again, so the Supreme Court declined to apply the exception. In addition, the teachers failed to use applicable civil procedures to preserve their ability to appeal, so the Supreme Court declined to address the merits of the privacy issue. In re Petition of Billings High School District No. 2 v. Billings Gazette, 2006 MT 329, 335 M 94, 149 P3d 565 (2006), following Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799 (1996).

Former Rule 65. Injunctions

Rule Different From Federal: This rule is different from its federal counterpart because statutes control the rules relating to injunctions. Therefore, former decisions remain in effect. Holtz v. Babcock, 143 M 341, 389 P2d 869 (1963).

Former Rule 67. Deposit in court

Partial Payment of Interest on Promissory Note Not Precluding Appeal: Plaintiff owed defendant $200,000 plus interest on a promissory note. The same day that plaintiff filed a claim for misrepresentation and failure to disclose, plaintiff also deposited the first promissory note payment with the Clerk of the District Court. Following judgment for plaintiff, the District Court ordered release of the funds, which defendant accepted. Plaintiff argued that by accepting the funds and the fruits of the judgment, defendant was prohibited from prosecuting an appeal to reverse the judgment. Defendant responded that because the judgment could not possibly affect the benefit that was accepted, the right to appeal was not waived. The long-recognized general rule is that the right to accept the fruits of a judgment and at the same time prosecute an appeal from it are not concurrent, but rather wholly inconsistent, rights and that the election of one excludes the enjoyment of the other (see Peck v. Bersanti, 101 M 6, 52 P2d 168 (1935)). The exception is that when reversal of the judgment cannot possibly affect the appellant's right to the benefit accepted under a judgment, then appeal may be taken and sustained despite the fact that the benefit was sought and secured (see Niles v. Carbon County, 174 M 20, 568 P2d 524 (1977)). The acceptance of payments that were not contested or that were irrevocably conceded as due by the opposing party does not preclude appeal. Here, when defendant accepted the funds, it simply accepted what plaintiff already conceded was due and no more than it conceded would be due in the event that the appeal was successful. Therefore, defendant did not waive the right to appeal. H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000).

Former Rule 68. Offer of judgment

No Error in Refusal to Instruct Jury in UTPA Claim — Proposed Instructions Properly Denied: In a bad faith insurance claim filed pursuant to the Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA), the plaintiff sought a jury instruction stating in part that a person shall operate a vehicle at a reduced speed no greater than is reasonable and prudent. The plaintiff also sought an instruction stating that "the lack of any traffic citations does not equate to the lack of civil negligence." The District Court did not err in refusing the instructions since the ultimate issue in the bad faith insurance case was the reasonableness of the insured's conduct. Peterson v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 2010 MT 187, 357 Mont. 293, 239 P.3d 904.

Offer of Judgment in Federal Court Not Admission of "Reasonably Clear" Liability under UTPA: The plaintiff claimed that the District Court erred when it concluded as a matter of law that the defendant insurer's offer of judgment in federal District Court did not constitute an admission for purposes of establishing "reasonably clear" liability under the Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA). The Supreme Court held that an offer of judgment may constitute an admission of liability for the underlying accident in some circumstances, but it does not constitute an admission of "reasonably clear" liability or have preclusive effect with respect to UTPA. Peterson v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 2010 MT 187, 357 Mont. 293, 239 P.3d 904.

Refusal to Instruct Jury on Theory That Attorney Acted as Agent of Insurer Proper — Insured Is Sole Client of Defense Counsel: The plaintiff was injured in a head-on automobile collision with the insured. At the time of the accident, the insured worked for a Canadian company operating in Montana and was insured by the defendant insurer. The plaintiff filed suit against the company in federal District Court after the defendant insurer refused to pay the plaintiff's claims. The plaintiff ultimately accepted an offer of judgment and thereafter filed a bad faith insurance claim against the insurer in state court. Prior to trial, the plaintiff filed a motion in limine arguing that the attorney for the insurer acted as the insurer's agent in his defense of the underlying federal court negligence suit. The District Court denied the motion and a corresponding jury instruction on the issue. The plaintiff alleged that the District Court erred by refusing to instruct the jury on the theory that an attorney who was hired by the insurer to handle the defense of the employer in the underlying negligence claim acted as the agent of the insurer in the denial of the claim. In the claims file, the attorney noted that the insured employee was at least 50% liable for the accident. Under In re Rules, 2000 MT 110, 299 Mont. 321, 2 P.3d 806, in which the Supreme Court held that the insured is the sole client of defense counsel, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the instruction. Peterson v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 2010 MT 187, 357 Mont. 293, 239 P.3d 904.

No Prevailing Party Under Offer of Judgment — No Attorney Fees Under General Rule: Defendant entered a 3-year commercial lease with plaintiff but vacated the premises shortly after taking possession. Plaintiff sued for breach of the lease, and defendant counterclaimed for fraud and breach of contract. Ultimately, defendant's offer of judgment was accepted and entered by the court. Plaintiff moved for attorney fees as the prevailing party, but the District Court determined that neither party prevailed and denied the motion. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Under the offer of judgment, plaintiff gave up about 80% of its damage claims, while defendant gave up its counterclaim but paid only 20% of plaintiff's damages. Thus, the District Court did not err in holding that neither party prevailed and that attorney fees were not owing under the general rule. Whipps, L.L.C. v. Kaufman, Vidal, Hileman & Ramlow, P.C., 2007 MT 66, 336 M 386, 156 P3d 11 (2007).

Offer of Judgment to Plainly Alert Opposing Party That Acceptance Will Resolve All Claims: An offer of judgment under settlement practices conducted pursuant to this rule should plainly, clearly, and unambiguously alert the opposing party that acceptance of the offer will resolve all counts and claims, including attorney fees. Whipps, L.L.C. v. Kaufman, Vidal, Hileman & Ramlow, P.C., 2007 MT 66, 336 M 386, 156 P3d 11 (2007).

Costs of Contested Employment Discrimination Administrative Hearing Not Allowed Absent Adoption of Rules of Civil Procedure by Agency: The Department of Labor and Industry conducted an administrative hearing to address plaintiff's employment discrimination claim. Defendants made an offer of judgment that plaintiff refused, but defendants ultimately prevailed and then contended that plaintiff was responsible for the costs of the hearing under 25-10-501, 49-2-505, and this rule. The Department determined that the general legislative mandate to follow the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure did not empower the agency to award costs in a contested case hearing. The District Court agreed, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Under 49-2-505, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure apply only in agency hearings to the extent that the rules are adopted by the agency. This rule, which allows recovery of costs after a judgment, has not been adopted by the Department to apply in agency-conducted administrative hearings related to employment discrimination. Absent a statutory basis, the award of costs was not proper. Pannoni v. Browning School District No. 9 Bd. of Trustees, 2004 MT 130, 321 M 311, 90 P3d 438 (2004).

Offer of Judgment to State That Attorney Fees Not Included to Effect Waiver of Discretionary Attorney Fees: Plaintiff, a nonprofit corporation formed to protect and increase equal housing opportunities, filed an administrative complaint against defendants for violating Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Human Rights Act, by denying equal housing opportunities based on familial status, age, and marital status. Following an administrative investigation, the Commission for Human Rights found that plaintiff's allegations were supported by substantial evidence and that there was reasonable cause to believe that defendants violated state fair housing laws. Defendants ultimately served plaintiff an offer of judgment pursuant to this rule, which stipulated that judgment would be taken against defendants in the amount of $2,000 "together with costs only that accrued". Plaintiff accepted the offer, and judgment was entered against defendants. Plaintiff subsequently sought attorney fees as the prevailing party, but the request was denied by the District Court because the offer of judgment did not expressly include attorney fees, so plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court noted that it is in the interests of both parties that an offer of judgment be clear and unambiguous in order to effect a waiver of attorney fees; however, the offer itself need not include the term "attorney fees" to effect a waiver. In the present case, the offer of judgment included costs, but it was not clear whether attorney fees were included, nor did the offer state that the sum to be paid was consideration for the resolution of all counts. Thus, it was ambiguous whether plaintiff, by accepting the offer, waived the right to attorney fees. The offer of judgment did not include a specific waiver of attorney fees, so the District Court erred in concluding that plaintiff's acceptance of the offer constituted a waiver of attorney fees. The Supreme Court remanded for a determination of whether to award plaintiff discretionary attorney fees under the Human Rights Act. Mont. Fair Housing, Inc. v. Barnes, 2002 MT 353, 313 M 409, 61 P3d 170 (2002), distinguished, with regard to an offer of full payment, in Wyant v. Kenda, 2004 MT 348, 324 M 342, 102 P3d 1260 (2004). See also Nordby v. Anchor Hocking Packaging Co., 199 F3d 390 (7th Cir. 1999).

Application of Rule 68, M.R.Civ.P., Does Not Preclude Award of Presettlement Offer Costs: In a contract dispute, the state had made a pretrial offer of settlement that was rejected by the plaintiff contractors. The recovery by the contractors was for less than the pretrial settlement offer, and the lower court awarded the state its postoffer costs as mandated by this rule. The lower court also awarded the state its presettlement offer costs. The contractors argued that the rule limits allowable costs to those incurred after the offer of settlement. The Supreme Court held that the rule mandates an award of postsettlement offer costs but that it does not limit the discretion granted a court under 25-10-103 to award presettlement offer costs. Idaho Asphalt Supply v. Dept. of Transportation, 2001 MT 27, 304 M 157, 18 P3d 1018 (2001).

"Costs" Held Not to Include Expenses of Deposition for Perpetuation of Testimony Incurred After Offer of Judgment: The Valeos sued Tabish for damage to the Valeos' road allegedly caused by Tabish's trucks. Tabish answered alleging contributory negligence. Thereafter, Tabish made an offer of judgment that the Valeos did not accept and subsequently incurred $609.29 for cost of airfare, hotel, and car rental in the taking of a deposition for perpetuation of testimony. The jury returned a verdict for Tabish, and the District Court entered judgment to include the $609.29 claimed by Tabish in his memorandum of costs. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court's opinion and held that "costs", as used in this rule, should not be construed more broadly than the same word in 25-10-201 and held that its previous opinion in Fisher v. St. Farm Ins. Co., 281 M 236, 934 P2d 163 (1997), supported that conclusion. The Supreme Court also rejected Tabish's argument that the word "costs", as used in this rule, must provide an independent right to receive costs other than as defined and provided in 25-10-101 and 25-10-102 or this rule would otherwise serve no independent purpose to encourage the settlement of litigation. The Supreme Court noted that Tabish provided no authority for that argument and that the language of 25-10-101 and 25-10-102 is significantly different from the language of this rule. Valeo v. Tabish, 1999 MT 146, 295 M 34, 983 P2d 334, 56 St. Rep. 579 (1999).

Taxation of Costs in Offer of Judgment — Disallowance of Deposition Expenses: Fisher sought to recover the costs of depositions taken in a case that was settled by offer of judgment pursuant to this rule, contending that costs should be allowable because they were necessary for the prosecution of the claim, even though it did not proceed to trial. Applying the definition of "costs" in 25-10-201, the Supreme Court noted that costs for depositions are allowed in only limited circumstances when the depositions are relied upon by the trial court or used in a trial setting. The court found that in the present case, acceptance of the offer of judgment averted a trial and that as a result, the depositions were not used as evidence, for purposes of impeachment, or in deciding a dispositive summary judgment motion. Denial of Fisher's request to recover deposition costs was proper. Fisher v. St. Farm Ins. Co., 281 M 236, 934 P2d 163, 54 St. Rep. 151 (1997), followed in Valeo v. Tabish, 1999 MT 146, 295 M 34, 983 P2d 334, 56 St. Rep. 579 (1999).

"Costs Incurred" — Attorney Fees Not Included: The "costs incurred" that may be awarded to an offeror under this rule do not include attorney fees. Schillinger v. Brewer, 215 M 333, 697 P2d 919, 42 St. Rep. 408 (1985). The general rule that costs do not include attorney fees was distinguished with regard to attorney fees chargeable as costs under 39-3-214 in a wage protection case, Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999).

Entry of Offer of Judgment — Liability Becomes Moot: Because this rule specifies that an offer of judgment made after a finding of liability but before determination of damages has the same effect as an offer made before trial, an offer of judgment made and entered prior to trial pursuant to this rule renders the issue of liability moot and hence nonappealable. Weston v. Kuntz, 194 M 52, 635 P2d 269, 38 St. Rep. 1691 (1981), followed in In re Certain Justice Court Expenses, 264 M 510, 872 P2d 795, 51 St. Rep. 372 (1994).

Offer in Same Amount as Subsequent Judgment: Costs of suit were properly awarded to defendant where defendant made an offer of judgment in the exact amount that was eventually recovered by plaintiff. Riefflin v. Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection & Ins. Co., 164 M 287, 521 P2d 675 (1974).

Fraud on Court — Remedy: Although proper procedure was followed under rule providing for offer of judgment, conduct of parties in perpetrating fraud on court required that judgment be vacated on motion of aggrieved beneficiary who was not party to suit against estate. Selway v. Burns, 150 M 1, 429 P2d 640 (1967).

Unaccepted Offer — Effect: An "offer to do equity" in the answer, when not accepted, cannot be used in evidence nor can it be regarded as an admission that defendants had waived any of their defenses. Rachou v. McQuitty, 125 M 1, 229 P2d 965 (1951).

Offer Required by Rule: Tender or payment after suit brought, to be effectual to prevent further costs, must be of the sum due with costs accrued up to that time, and interest if interest be due. Pape v. Chauvin-Fant Furniture Co., 25 M 417, 65 P 424 (1901).

Former Rule 69. Execution

No Liability When Creditor Did Not Direct Wrongful Levy of Execution: In an action alleging wrongful execution and conversion, the defendant-creditor's motion for summary judgment was granted properly. The creditor was not liable for wrongful execution as it did not advise, direct, or assist in the commission of the wrongful execution upon the plaintiffs' bank account but merely obtained a Writ of Execution and forwarded it to the Sheriff. The general rule of law that an execution creditor who advises, directs, or assists in a wrongful execution is liable does not apply in this case. The creditor did not participate in or direct the wrongful execution. Foley v. Audit Serv., Inc., 214 M 403, 693 P2d 528, 42 St. Rep. 49 (1985).

Former Rule 70. Judgment for specific acts — vesting title

Deficiency Judgment — Order to Assign Future Proceeds From Separate Cause of Action to Judgment Creditor Not Erroneous: Andersen executed a promissory note in favor of the Alpine Buffalo, Elk and Llama Ranch, Inc. (Alpine), and secured the note with real property. When no payments were made, Alpine received a judgment and foreclosure decree. After Andersen's property was sold, Alpine also received a deficiency judgment in the amount still owing. Andersen neither appealed the judgment nor made payment. Alpine later learned that Andersen was plaintiff in a pending malpractice claim against her former attorney, so Alpine sought and received an assignment of the prospective proceeds from that action. Andersen appealed the assignment order, claiming that Alpine's reliance on this rule was misplaced because this rule is a civil contempt statute that applies only to a contemptuous party. Alpine conceded the inapplicability of this rule, but the Supreme Court pointed out that this rule was not the sole basis for Alpine's motion for assignment, citing Smith v. Foss, 177 M 443, 582 P2d 329 (1978), for the proposition that a District Court possesses jurisdiction to enter any necessary orders to enforce its judgments. The District Court's assignment order did not assign Andersen's legal malpractice cause of action to Alpine, nor did Alpine receive all legal rights and title to that action. Rather, the assignment order merely required Andersen to assign future proceeds from the other litigation to Alpine in an amount limited to the funds necessary to satisfy the deficiency judgment amount. Andersen failed to establish error in the District Court's order requiring Andersen, as judgment debtor, to assign future proceeds from the separate cause of action to Alpine, the judgment creditor. Alpine Buffalo, Elk & Llama Ranch, Inc. v. Andersen, 2001 MT 307, 307 M 509, 38 P3d 815 (2001), distinguishing Coty v. Cogswell, 100 M 496, 50 P2d 249 (1935), and Youngblood v. Am. St. Ins. Co., 262 M 391, 866 P2d 203 (1993).

Motion to Set Aside Easement for Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction Denied — Sanctions Imposed: After several hearings and appeals concerning the building of an airstrip, the appellants sought to have an easement grant set aside on the basis that the original judgment included no reference to an easement that could be enforced under this rule. The Supreme Court, citing Wellman v. Wellman, 198 M 42, 643 P2d 573 (1982), stated that the appellants had been afforded ample opportunity to contest all issues, including subject matter jurisdiction, and that public policy dictated that at some point litigation must cease. The court further held that the appellants were merely trying to relitigate settled issues and imposed damages of $500 on the appellants. Searight v. Cimino, 230 M 96, 777 P2d 335, 46 St. Rep. 1217 (1989).

Contradictory and Inconsistent Actions Warranting Sanctions: The District Court found an easement was warranted, and appellant testified that he intended to grant one, but later appellant informed respondent that no easement would be forthcoming. Respondent used Rule 70, M.R.Civ.P., as a basis for a motion for an easement. The District Court found appellant had acted in a contradictory and inconsistent manner with regard to the easement and that Rule 11, M.R.Civ.P., sanctions were proper. Respondent's use of Rule 70 was inappropriate because no judgment had been entered, but that did not defeat his motion because it was not unreasonable under the circumstances. Searight v. Cimino, 230 M 96, 748 P2d 948, 45 St. Rep. 46 (1988).

Aggrieved Parties: Because defendants were accorded full review in proceeding by plaintiff to dismiss defendants' motion to stay judgment pending appeal and to assess costs, defendants were no longer "aggrieved parties" entitled to further appeal rights. Morris v. Monk, 158 M 163, 489 P2d 1029 (1971).

Former Rule 72. Appeal from a district court to the supreme court

No Showing of Damages or That Client Would Have Prevailed on Lost Appeal of Marital Dissolution Case — Failure of Legal Malpractice Claim: Richards brought a malpractice claim against an attorney who negligently failed to appeal Richards' marriage dissolution proceeding prior to the deadline for appeal. The District Court dismissed the claim, ruling that the court, rather than a jury, should decide the consequences of the attorney's failure to file the appeal and that the lost appeal would not have succeeded. Richards appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Even though the attorney admitted malpractice by allowing the claim to expire, the attorney contended that no damages occurred. When a malpractice claim changes to the question of whether an attorney perfected an appeal, the analysis shifts from one of fact to one of law, which is properly considered by the court rather than a jury. The question of the probable outcome of a lost appeal also presents a question of law for the trial court to decide based on the special expertise required to analyze the relevant law and rules of appellate procedure, and the review is limited to the transcript and record of the underlying action and arguments presented by counsel. Here, there was substantial credible evidence regarding primary parenting time, valuation of the marital estate, and child support payments showing that Richards' lost appeal would not have resulted in a successful or favorable outcome. Further, one element of a legal malpractice claim requires a showing that the attorney's conduct proximately caused damages suffered by the claimant. Because Richards failed to show that the lost appeal would have been successful, he also failed to show that the attorney's breach caused any damages, so the malpractice claim failed. Richards v. Knuchel, 2005 MT 133, 327 M 249, 115 P3d 189 (2005).

Time Bar on Writ of Certiorari to Review Contempt Proceedings: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court was asked to establish a timeframe within which a petition for review of a contempt order must be filed. The issue was whether the time limitation should come from Title 25, which includes the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure and the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure, or from Title 27, which prescribes the various statutes of limitation for the commencement of actions. The court noted that there is no appeal, as such, from an order of contempt in a civil proceeding and that the exclusive method of review of civil contempt orders (with certain exceptions) is through a writ of certiorari or writ of review. That review is generally limited to jurisdictional questions and whether evidence supports the contempt. Therefore, the issue of timeliness for filing a petition for a writ of certiorari or review is not a statute of limitations issue, and to mechanically characterize those writs for the review of contempt proceedings as original proceedings governed by the 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231 would be to deny the basic nature of appellate review. Further, petitions for writs of certiorari to review contempt proceedings are fundamentally different from other original proceedings commenced in the Supreme Court and from petitions for writs of supervisory control, which do not so much involve appellate review of and a decision on the underlying proceedings as they involve the court dealing with discreet questions of law during the pendency of the underlying proceedings. Because the timeframe in which to file petitions for writs of certiorari to review contempt proceedings is a procedural issue analogous to the procedure for filing a notice of appeal, the Supreme Court held that former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), former Rule 17, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), 27-25-103, and this rule require that the timeframe for those petitions be determined by the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure (now superseded). Specifically, pursuant to former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), a petition for a writ of certiorari to review contempt proceedings must be filed with the Clerk of the District Court within 30 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding, unless the state is a party, in which case the petition must be filed within 60 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding. This may not be construed to limit the Supreme Court's power to grant writs of supervisory control or to consider applications for other types of original proceedings. The Supreme Court chose not to establish a precedent that allows contempt proceedings to be delayed until the underlying cause is resolved. Jones v. District Court, 2001 MT 276, 307 M 305, 37 P3d 682 (2001), overruling Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937), to the extent that Shaffroth holds that the general 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231 applies to all writs of review authorized in 27-25-102.

Filing Notice of Appeal — District Court Deprived of Jurisdiction: A judgment entered after filing of a notice of appeal was invalid because the notice of appeal deprived the District Court of further jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Carlson, 220 M 204, 714 P2d 116, 43 St. Rep. 295 (1986).

Granting Witness Air Fare Costs Following Appeal: The filing of a notice of appeal did not deprive the District Court of jurisdiction to grant a pending bill for costs. However, the court properly disallowed as a cost the air fares for witnesses. Powers Mfg. Co. v. Leon Jacobs Enterprises, 216 M 407, 701 P2d 1377, 42 St. Rep. 906 (1985).

Amending Notice of Appeal: Amendment of a notice of appeal to the Supreme Court after the time period for notice has run is not possible. Payne v. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. Co., 142 M 406, 385 P2d 100 (1963).

Former Rule 77(a). District courts always open

Faxed Return of Service of Summons Received on Evening of Final Day of Filing Considered Timely — Courts Always Open: White filed a complaint September 8, 1995, and summons was served on Klosterman September 8, 1998. The Sheriff's dispatcher faxed the return of service to the Clerk of Court at 8:23 p.m. the same day. The District Court held that the return of service was late because it was not filed with the Clerk of Court by 5 p.m. on the last day that filing was permitted. However, the Supreme Court found nothing in the plain language of the judicial rules of procedure or any Montana authority that provides those requirements. Rather, Rule 41(e), M.R.Civ.P., requires that return of service be filed within 3 years; Rule 5(e), M.R.Civ.P., allows filing by facsimile or other electronic means; 25-3-501 gives faxed documents the same force and effect as an original; this rule requires that District Courts always be open for filing; and 1-1-301 provides that each day ends at midnight. The District Court's decision was reversed on grounds that filing was timely. White v. Klosterman, 1999 MT 316, 297 M 259, 990 P2d 1249, 56 St. Rep. 1265 (1999).

Former Rule 77(b). Trials and hearings — orders in chambers

Time for Hearing: Notwithstanding that hearing on defendant's motion for summary judgment was held one day prior to scheduled date, such procedure was permissible under this section since hearing was held with consent of both court and counsel. Israelson v. Mtn. Tractor Co., 155 M 69, 467 P2d 149 (1970).

Former Rule 77(d). Notice of entry of judgment or order served

No Entry of Judgment Filed — Decree Open to Modification: In a divorce action, if no notice of entry of judgment was ever filed as required by this rule, a party is free to ask the District Court to modify the decree at any time. In re Marriage of Alexander, 2011 MT 1, 359 Mont. 89, 246 P.3d 712.

Amendment of Final Judgment — Jurisdiction of District Court to Determine Costs and Fees When No Entry of Final Judgment Filed: A party may appeal from a final judgment. A final judgment conclusively determines the rights of the parties and settles all claims in controversy in an action or proceeding, including any necessary determination of the amount of costs or attorney fees awarded or sanctions imposed. In this case, neither party served notice of entry of judgment, so the District Court retained jurisdiction to alter or amend the judgment because the 10-day period for filing a motion to amend the judgment had not begun to run. Thus, defendant's motion for an award of attorney fees was timely, even though it was filed almost 7 weeks after summary judgment, and the case was remanded for a determination of whether attorney fees were warranted and if so, the amount of the fees. Estate of Pruyn v. Axmen Propane, Inc., 2008 MT 329, 346 M 162, 194 P3d 650 (2008).

Service of Notice of Entry of Order of Judgment on Trust Beneficiaries Required: Trust beneficiaries are indispensable parties to formal statutory proceedings who are considered to have "appeared" as a matter of law and are entitled to receive notice of the proceedings and notice of entry of the order of judgment. In this case, defendant trust beneficiaries did not move for a new trial until 11 years after entry of the order of judgment, but because defendants never received notice of the entry of the judgment as required by 72-35-306, the statute of limitations on filing postjudgment motions had not expired when their motion for a new trial was filed with the District Court and therefore was properly granted. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Kaml, 2008 MT 153, 343 M 240, 184 P3d 296 (2008).

Unsuccessful Intervenor Not Party to Action — Notice of Entry of Judgment Not Required: A successful intervenor becomes a party to the action, but an unsuccessful intervenor does not. As a nonparty, an unsuccessful intervenor is not entitled to service of notice of entry of judgment. Clark Fork Coalition v. Dept. of Environmental Quality, 2007 MT 176, 338 M 205, 164 P3d 902 (2007).

Time Limit for Appeal of Termination of Parental Rights Running From Service of Notice of Entry of Judgment — Laches Inapplicable: The District Court determined that a mother abandoned her children and terminated the mother's parental rights; however, the mother was never served with notice of entry of judgment regarding the termination. The mother moved to vacate or void the order and requested a hearing on the termination, but the motion was denied. The state contended that further consideration of the issue was barred by 42-2-620 or by laches. The Supreme Court disagreed that the mother's appeal was barred by 42-2-620 because the statute does not alter the filing period for timely appeals but merely sets a 6-month time limit on all other challenges to orders terminating parental rights. Rather, this rule applied. The rule requires service of notice of entry of judgment, and former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), provided that the 60-day time limit for appeals did not apply until service of notice of entry of judgment, but the mother was never served. The equitable doctrine of laches also did not apply because the state failed to discharge its simple affirmative duty to notify the mother of entry of judgment. Thus, the mother's appeal was timely. In re T.H. & C.D.F., 2005 MT 237, 328 M 428, 121 P3d 541 (2005), clarifying In re P.D.L., 2004 MT 346, 324 M 327, 102 P3d 1225 (2004).

No Loss of District Court Jurisdiction Upon Filing of Notice of Entry of Judgment — Amended Complaint Allowed: About 2 weeks after defendant filed a notice of entry of judgment, plaintiff filed a motion to amend the original complaint, and the District Court granted the motion. About 3 weeks after the amended complaint was filed, the court entered an order nunc pro tunc stating that it no longer had discretionary authority to grant leave to amend because it lost jurisdiction when defendant filed the notice of entry of judgment. The court held that the order allowing plaintiff's motion to amend was void and should be stricken. Plaintiff appealed the nunc pro tunc order, and the Supreme Court reversed. The filing of a notice of entry of judgment starts the clock running for the time to appeal, but does not divest the District Court of jurisdiction. Rather, the District Court loses jurisdiction when a notice of appeal is filed. Thus, the order issued nunc pro tunc was based on a mistaken interpretation of law because when the motion to amend was granted, the District Court still had jurisdiction. Kruckenberg v. Kalispell, 2004 MT 185, 322 M 177, 94 P3d 748 (2004). See also McCormick v. McCormick, 168 M 136, 541 P2d 765 (1975), Hankinson v. Picotte, 235 M 143, 766 P2d 242 (1988), and Alpine Buffalo, Elk & Llama Ranch, Inc. v. Andersen, 2001 MT 307, 307 M 509, 38 P3d 815 (2001).

Entry of Judgment Not Filed — Time for Filing Appeal Not Running Until Notice of Entry Issued: When no notice of entry of judgment is filed by a party, the time for filing an appeal does not begin to run until the Clerk of Court issues a notice of entry of judgment under this rule, nor does the time to request the court to modify or vacate an order begin to run. In the present case, the filing of a notice of entry of judgment was required under that rule as an action in which an appearance has been made, but neither party filed the notice. As a result, the 60-day filing period required under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., could not begin to run, so a subsequent motion for relief was not time-barred. In re Marriage of Bell, 2000 MT 88, 299 M 219, 998 P2d 1163, 57 St. Rep. 381 (2000).

Civil Procedure Rule That Notice of Entry of Order Be Served by Prevailing Party Inapplicable in Postconviction Relief Proceeding: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court addressed whether the notice of entry of judgment requirement under this rule applied to postconviction relief proceedings governed by Title 46, ch. 21. The court previously held in cases unrelated to postconviction proceedings that only when the notice is served does a prospective appellant's time for filing a notice of appeal begin to run. (See In re Marriage of Robertson, 237 M 406, 773 P2d 1213 (1989), Buckley v. Wordal, 262 M 306, 865 P2d 240, 50 St. Rep. 1570 (1993), and Troglia v. Bartoletti, 266 M 240, 879 P2d 1169, 51 St. Rep. 783 (1994).) Here, Garner was convicted of forgery and felony theft and contended that because the state was the "prevailing party", notice should have been provided to him of the entry of the District Court's order and that because notice was not provided, the 60 days within which to appeal could not have expired because it never commenced to run. However, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure apply in a postconviction relief proceeding only when they are applicable and not inconsistent with postconviction statutes. Section 46-21-203 specifically requires that an appeal in postconviction proceedings be taken within 60 days of the entry of the order, which is inconsistent with the general notice rule in this rule. The Supreme Court applied the particular provision over the general provision and concluded that this rule has no application in postconviction relief proceedings, so the 60-day filing deadline in 46-21-203 commences in all instances and without more upon entry of the court's order granting or denying postconviction relief. St. v. Garner, 1999 MT 295, 297 M 89, 990 P2d 175, 56 St. Rep. 1180 (1999).

Motion for Reconsideration Held Not to Be Motion to Alter or Amend Judgment — Former Rule 5(a)(1), M.R.App.P. (Now Superseded), Held Applicable — Notice of Appeal Filed Before Receipt of Notice of Entry of Judgment Not Premature: In an action to enforce the Individuals With Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), the Shieldses filed a motion for reconsideration shortly after the District Court dismissed their first amended complaint. Before the District Court ruled on the motion for reconsideration, the Shieldses filed a notice of appeal. The defendants claimed that the motion for reconsideration should be treated as a motion to alter or amend judgment under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P., and that because former Rule 5(a)(4), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), specifies that a notice of appeal filed before the disposition of a motion to alter or amend judgment has no effect until the motion to alter or amend judgment is disposed of, the Shieldses' notice of appeal was ineffective. The Supreme Court noted that a motion for reconsideration is not one of the motions provided for or authorized by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. The Supreme Court reviewed the substance of the motion for reconsideration to determine whether, under Haugen v. Blaine Bank of Mont., 279 M 1, 926 P2d 1364 (1996), the motion could be treated as a motion to alter or amend judgment and held that the motion could not be so treated. Because the motion could not be treated as a motion to alter or amend judgment, the time for the Shieldses to file a notice of appeal was governed by former Rule 5(a)(1), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and not former Rule 5(a)(4), M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Under former Rule 5(a)(1) (now superseded), the Shieldses had 30 days from the time of notice of entry of judgment under this rule in which to file their notice of appeal. However, the Supreme Court also noted that there was nothing in the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure that prevented the Shieldses from filing their notice of appeal earlier than provided under this rule, and for that reason, the Supreme Court held the filing of the notice of appeal to be effective. Shields v. Helena School District No. 1, 284 M 138, 943 P2d 999, 54 St. Rep. 815 (1997).

Time for Filing Appeal When Required Service of Notice of Entry of Judgment Not Made: As the prevailing party, defendants were required by this rule to serve plaintiffs with notice of entry of judgment. Under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), when such a notice is required, the time for filing a notice of appeal is within 30 days after service of the notice of entry of judgment. Because defendants failed to serve plaintiffs with a notice of entry of judgment, the 30 days never began to run. Therefore, notice of appeal filed on November 8, 1995, from an order filed on August 29, 1995, was timely. Haugen v. Blaine Bank of Mont., 279 M 1, 926 P2d 1364, 53 St. Rep. 1024 (1996).

Invalidity of Default and Summary Judgments for Failure to Give Notice and Other Failures: Kenner's filing of two motions to dismiss constituted appearances in Moran's quiet title action, and Kenner was thus entitled to written notice of Moran's application for default judgment at least 3 days prior to the hearing on the application. The informal communications to Kenner's attorney by Moran's attorney, threatening to proceed with the quiet title action if Kenner did not fulfill the terms of a settlement agreement that the parties had signed, were not the equivalent of and could not substitute for the required notice. The failure to notify was compounded by failure to notify Kenner that the default judgment had been entered. Therefore, default judgment against Kenner was void, and Kenner's motion for summary judgment in Kenner's independent action to set aside the default judgment should have been granted. Furthermore, at the hearing in Kenner's action, Moran's request for summary judgment on Moran's counterclaim for specific performance of the settlement agreement should not have been granted because neither party had entered evidence on that issue, Moran had not moved for summary judgment, and Kenner had no notice of the request for summary judgment. Kenner v. Moran, 263 M 368, 868 P2d 620, 51 St. Rep. 94 (1994).

Notice of Entry of Default Judgment Unnecessary: After a default judgment was entered against defendant property management firm for conversion of plaintiffs' rentals, the defendants argued, inter alia, that they should be relieved of the default because they had not received notice of entry of the default judgment. The Supreme Court, citing Schmidt v. Jomac, Inc., 196 M 323, 639 P2d 517 (1982), held that the default judgment should not be set aside because the defendants failed to receive notice of the entry of the default judgment since notice was not required to be sent by the Clerk of the District Court. Bd. of Directors of Edelweiss Owners' Ass'n v. McIntosh, 251 M 144, 822 P2d 1080, 48 St. Rep. 1131 (1991).

Time for Appeal — Begins to Run When Notice Filed: Notice of entry of judgment must be served by the prevailing party upon all parties who appeared, and the time for appeal does not begin to run until the notice is filed. Thus, even if the judge made oral comments during the hearing that left no doubt as to what he would order, the time for appeal did not begin to run on the date of the hearing, and the appeal was timely since no entry of judgment was served. In re Marriage of Robertson, 237 M 406, 773 P2d 1213, 46 St. Rep. 904 (1989), followed in Buckley v. Wordal, 262 M 306, 865 P2d 240, 50 St. Rep. 1570 (1993), and Troglia v. Bartoletti, 266 M 240, 879 P2d 1169, 51 St. Rep. 783 (1994).

Failure to File Notice of Entry of Judgment — Amended Complaint Allowed: Defendant, who was successful in having an action dismissed on a Rule 12(b) motion, failed to file a notice of entry of judgment. The plaintiffs' 30-day period for filing a notice of appeal did not run, the order of dismissal of the original complaint did not become final, and the District Court had jurisdiction to grant plaintiffs leave to file an amended complaint. The District Court had not lost subject matter jurisdiction. Hankinson v. Picotte, 235 M 143, 766 P2d 242, 45 St. Rep. 2259 (1988).

More Than One "Prevailing Party" — Effect of Failure to Timely File Notice of Entry of Judgment — Appeal Allowed: Where the plaintiff was successful in his claim for conversion and the defendant was successful in his counterclaim for trespass, both parties were considered to have prevailed and both parties were responsible for the failure to technically comply with the filing requirements of this rule. The defendant could not enforce technical compliance with the rule against the plaintiff when he had not complied with the same requirements. In this case, the time limitations for filing an appeal began to run on the date the plaintiff filed a notice of entry of judgment, 71 days after judgment on the posttrial motions. The appeal, filed on the same day, was timely filed, and the Supreme Court had jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Kenney v. Koch, 227 M 155, 737 P2d 491, 44 St. Rep. 960 (1987).

Prevailing Party — Proper Notice of Entry of Judgment: The prevailing party in an action has the duty of serving notice of entry of judgment, together with a copy of the judgment or a description of the nature and amount of relief and damages granted, on all parties who have made an appearance. If proper notice of entry of judgment is never served, the time for filing a notice of appeal never begins to run. El-Ce Storms Trust v. Svetahor, 223 M 113, 724 P2d 704, 43 St. Rep. 1575 (1986).

Judgment — Setoff Based on Stipulation: Plaintiff received a judgment against defendant. Defendant appealed, and the appeal was dismissed with prejudice when defendant advised the court that defendant did not wish to proceed with it. Defendant then filed a motion for a setoff of an amount that plaintiff and defendant were both liable to pay to a third party. Defendant's attorney and plaintiff's attorney had entered into a stipulation that plaintiff was primarily liable and defendant secondarily liable for that amount and that if defendant paid it, the payment would be set off against any judgment granted plaintiff against defendant. The lower court properly set off that amount as partial satisfaction of the judgment. Although the motion was not made within the time required by the rules, it was properly considered because the Clerk of Court did not give defendant notice of entry of the judgment against defendant; therefore, the time for filing the motion had not commenced to run, since the motion was to be made within a certain time from the notice of entry of judgment. AAR Constr., Inc. v. Fergus Elec. Co-op., Inc., 215 M 102, 695 P2d 819, 42 St. Rep. 214 (1985).

Technical Compliance With Rule on Notice of Entry of Judgment Required: It is the filing of the notice of entry of judgment that begins the running of the time limitations for filing a notice of appeal. Even though findings of fact, conclusions of law, and a decree were mailed to the parties by the Clerk of Court, no notice of entry of judgment was filed, and the time for filing a notice of appeal did not begin to run at that time. Morrison v. Higbee, 204 M 515, 668 P2d 1025, 40 St. Rep. 1031 (1983).

Appeal From Workers' Compensation Court — Starting Point for the Period for the Filing of Appeal: For an appeal from a final decision of the Workers' Compensation Judge to be filed in the manner provided by law for appeals from the District Court in civil cases, there must be a date that is the starting point for the period for filing notice of appeal under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). In that there is no judgment book in the Workers' Compensation Court in which to enter the judgment and therefore there can be no notice of entry of judgment, the court established, under the powers granted by Art. VII, sec. 2, Mont. Const., that the date on which a decision becomes final under ARM 2.52.222 (now repealed) shall be the starting point for the period for filing the notice of appeal. In this case the court therefore had jurisdiction over the appeal. McMahon v. The Anaconda Co., 38 St. Rep. 1233 (1981) (apparently not reported in Pacific Reporter or Montana Reports).

New Trial Motion Untimely: The District Court erred in granting a motion for new trial because the requirements of Rule 59(b), M.R.Civ.P., were not complied with. The notice of entry of judgment, although prepared and signed by Gilbert, was served on the Gordons by the Clerk of the Court on July 25, 1979. The motion for a new trial, however, was not filed or served on opposing counsel until January 1980, some 6 months later. This court will not disregard the 10-day time limitation. Additionally, there is no requirement that the notice of entry of judgment be signed by the Clerk or be prepared and given to the Clerk by the "prevailing party". In re Gordon, 192 M 499, 628 P2d 1117, 38 St. Rep. 887 (1981).

Effect of Failure to Send Notice of Entry of Order in Formal Probate Proceeding: Under 72-3-318, the court may vacate orders in a formal probate proceeding within the time allowed for appeal. Since the clerk failed to send notice of entry of an order as required by Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P., the time allowed for appeal had not begun to run and the party was still entitled to request the court to modify or vacate its order. Estate of Holmes, 183 M 290, 599 P2d 344 (1979).

Named Devisees Entitled to Notice of Entry of Order in a Formal Probate Proceeding: Named devisees are "interested persons" under 72-1-103 and must be given notice of the initiation of formal probate proceedings under 72-3-305, which indicates that the Legislature intended named devisees to be parties to formal probate proceedings and as such they are entitled to notice of the entry of an order in the proceeding as required by Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P. Estate of Holmes, 183 M 290, 599 P2d 344 (1979).

Notice of Entry of Order in Formal Probate Proceeding: The notice required on the entry of an order in a formal probate proceeding is controlled by the M.R.Civ.P. Estate of Holmes, 183 M 290, 599 P2d 344 (1979).

Computation of Time Limit for Appeal in Workers' Compensation Case — Civil Procedure Rules Applied: A person who appeals from a final decision of the workers' compensation court should in all fundamental fairness be given the same benefit of that provision of former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), which states that ". . . except that in cases where service of notice of entry of judgment is required by Rule 77(d) of the M.R.Civ.P. the time shall be 30 days from the service of notice of entry of judgment". When service of notice of the final decision is made as mandated by 2-4-623 and that service is made by mail, the provisions of former Rule 21(c), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), are automatically put into play, adding 3 days to the prescribed 30-day time limit for filing the notice of appeal set by former Rule 4(a), M.R.App.P. (now superseded). However, when the final day of the period falls on a Sunday, former Rule 21(a), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), comes into play extending the time limit to the next day. Dumont v. Aetna Fire Underwriters, 183 M 190, 598 P2d 1099 (1979).

Violation of Montana Rules of Civil Procedure — Effect: Since counsel for petitioner violated Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P., by giving notice of entry of judgment himself rather than having the clerk of court serve notice of entry of judgment, opposing counsel was not required to adhere to the 30-day period for filing of notice of appeal until proper service was made. Thus, the court committed no error in denying petitioner's motion to strike all posttrial motions as untimely. Pierce Packing Co. v. District Court, 177 M 51, 579 P2d 760 (1978).

Appeal Not Timely: When a motion to vacate and set aside a portion of a judgment was made 46 days beyond the authority of Rule 52, M.R.Civ.P., it did not suspend the running of time permitted to file appeal under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Appellant's contention that Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., was applicable did not operate to vest the Supreme Court with jurisdiction to hear the appeal. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown v. Fry, 176 M 58, 575 P2d 1325 (1978).

Notice of Entry of Judgment Omitted: The date of service of notice of entry of judgment is the arbitrary point in time from which the time limits for appeal begin to run. If no notice of entry of judgment has been served upon the losing party, the right to appeal has not expired. Haywood v. Sedillo, 167 M 101, 535 P2d 1014 (1975).

Notice of Decree Conditioned Upon Defendants' Inaction: When defendants in quiet title action had notice through their attorney that decree quieting title in plaintiffs would be entered if defendants did not deposit sum to use of plaintiffs' tax purchasers by certain date, rule requiring service of notice of entry of judgment was not applicable to judgment entered for plaintiffs after defendants failed to make deposit, since Rule 81, M.R.Civ.P., is applicable. Rosen v. Midkiff, 164 M 116, 519 P2d 416 (1974).

Sufficiency of Notice: Notice sent to plaintiff's attorney that judgment had been entered in favor of defendant and stating that a copy of the order adjudging a dismissal with prejudice was attached, was sufficient for compliance with this rule even though a copy of the order was not actually attached. Jackson v. Tinker, 161 M 51, 504 P2d 692 (1972).

Former Rule 80. Stenographer — stenographic report or transcript as evidence

Property Disposition — Insufficient Evidence: Lack of a court reporter's record was not a fatal error. As substitute, a bystander's bill and exhibits admitted at trial disclosed insufficient credible evidence to support a property disposition because certain assets were not considered. Martinez v. Martinez, 175 M 280, 573 P2d 667 (1978).

Former Rule 81(a). Special statutory proceedings

Dual Nature of Habeas Corpus — Extradition: Habeas corpus is a civil proceeding when involved in child custody and related cases. Decisions made by the courts in those actions are appealable and res judicata as to certain matters heard at the District Court level. Habeas corpus is a criminal proceeding when the action in which it is originally brought is criminal in nature, such as extradition proceedings. In criminal actions denial of the Writ is not appealable but successive applications for the Writ may be brought directly to the Supreme Court until the judicial power of the State has been exhausted. In re Hart, 178 M 235, 583 P2d 411 (1978).

District Court Review of Police Commission Proceedings: District Court review of questions of law and fact arising from Police Commission proceedings is a special statutory proceeding when there is no right to a jury trial. Helena v. District Court, 166 M 74, 530 P2d 464 (1975).

Review of Police Commission Proceedings: District Court review of questions of law and fact arising from Police Commission proceedings is a special statutory proceeding when there is no right to a jury trial. Helena v. District Court, 166 M 74, 530 P2d 464 (1975).

Notice of Decree Conditioned Upon Defendants' Inaction: When defendants in quiet title action had notice through their attorney that decree quieting title in plaintiffs would be entered if defendants did not deposit sum to use of plaintiffs' tax purchasers by certain date, rule requiring service of notice of entry of judgment was not applicable to judgment entered for plaintiffs after defendants failed to make deposit, since Rule 81, M.R.Civ.P., is applicable. Rosen v. Midkiff, 164 M 116, 519 P2d 416 (1974).

Application to Public Service Commission: Rules are not applicable to special proceeding to review actions of the Public Service Commission. P.S.C. v. District Court, 162 M 225, 511 P2d 334 (1973).

Privileged Matter — Public Service Commission: Interrogatories which sought privileged material and were irrelevant were not required to be answered by the Public Service Commission. P.S.C. v. District Court, 162 M 225, 511 P2d 334 (1973).

Action to Remove Administrator — Rules Applicable: In statutory action for removal of administrator for misappropriation of funds of estate, administrator could be examined as adverse witness under Rule 43 notwithstanding provisions of Rule 81. In re Estate & Guardianship of Wyman, 149 M 525, 429 P2d 629 (1967).

Former Rule 81(b). Appeals to district courts

Trial De Novo Allowed in District Court Despite Failure to Request Jury Trial in Justice's Court — No Waiver of Right to Jury Trial: The District Court erred in determining that under 25-33-301, a waiver of the right to a jury trial in Justice's Court waives the right to a jury trial de novo on appeal in District Court. The court disregarded the interplay of Rule 3, M.R.Civ.P., with Rule 38, M.R.Civ.P., and 25-33-301 in attempting to harmonize the statute and the rules. The language in 25-33-301, limiting appeals from Justice's Court to the pleadings filed in Justice's Court, does not limit jury trial demands in appeals from Justice's Court because jury trial demands are not pleadings. The plain meaning of this rule requires that Rules 3 and 38 be given meanings that are consistent with 25-33-301 and the right to trial by jury. Thus, when a party makes a jury trial demand under Rule 38 for a trial de novo on appeal in District Court, the action commences when the party serves and files notice of appeal pursuant to 25-33-102 and 25-33-103. In appeals from Justice's Court, jury trial demands must be made within 10 days of the filing of notice of appeal. Further, participation in a bench trial in District Court without objection does not constitute waiver of the right to a jury trial so long as a timely jury trial demand is made in District Court. Balyeat Law, P.C. v. Harrison, 1999 MT 144, 295 M 13, 983 P2d 902, 56 St. Rep. 566 (1999), following U.S. v. Calif. Mobile Home Park Management Co., 107 F3d 1374 (9th Cir. 1997), and Woirhaye v. District Court, 1998 MT 320, 292 M 185, 972 P2d 800, 55 St. Rep. 1298 (1998).

Former Rule 81(c). Rules incorporated into statutes

Order Not Final When Time to Appeal Not Expired — Rules of Civil Procedure Applicable to Formal Probate Proceedings: An order becomes final only when the time to appeal has expired. In this case, plaintiff bank asserted that the District Court's order approving a trust accounting was conclusive on all persons pursuant to 72-35-206, so the accounting could not be reopened on defendants' motion for a new trial. However, the time to appeal had not expired when defendants moved for a new trial, so the order was not final and the accounting was subject to a postjudgment motion for a new trial. Further, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure supplied an appropriate mechanism for filing a motion after entry of a trust order because the rules apply to formal probate proceedings. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Kaml, 2008 MT 153, 343 M 240, 184 P3d 296 (2008).

Rules of Civil Procedure Not Applicable to Informal Probate Proceeding: This rule does not interject the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure into other statutory schemes that provide different procedural requirements and thus does not make the rules applicable to informal probate proceedings. In re Estate of Spencer, 2002 MT 304, 313 M 40, 59 P3d 1160 (2002). See Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Kaml, 2008 MT 153, 343 M 240, 184 P3d 296 (2008), in which it was clarified that the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure apply to formal probate proceedings.

Personal Service on Defendant or Defendant's Counsel Not Required for Execution Sales: Mikelson argued that Rule 5(a) and this rule, when read together, required that notice of a Sheriff's sale of Mikelson's property be served personally on Mikelson or his counsel. However, those rules deal with notice within District Court proceedings and do not relate to notice in execution sales, which are governed by 25-13-701. Nothing in 25-13-701 requires that notice of an execution sale be served personally on Mikelson or his counsel. Bank of Baker v. Mikelson Land Co., 1999 MT 76, 294 M 64, 979 P2d 180, 56 St. Rep. 315 (1999).

Former Rule 82. Jurisdiction and venue unaffected

Time for Filing of Petition for Judicial Review — Time of "Service" of Final Agency Decision Defined: Following proceedings in an administrative action before the Public Service Commission, the Commission mailed a copy of its decision to MCI on May 19, 1992, but MCI did not receive the decision until May 21, 1992. On June 19, 1992, MCI filed its petition for judicial review under 2-4-702. The District Court dismissed the petition as being untimely filed. The Supreme Court held that 2-4-702 did not define the time of "service" at which the 30-day period for filing a petition for review began to run. Section 2-4-106 requires that Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P., be applied to define when service by mail is complete for administrative decisions. Rule 6(e) requires that when service is made by mail, an additional 3 days must be added to the time for taking action. Thus, the time for judicial review began to run on May 23, and MCI's petition was filed within the 30-day time period provided by 2-4-702. MCI Telecommunications Corp. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 260 M 175, 858 P2d 364, 50 St. Rep. 989 (1993), followed in Molnar v. Mont. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2008 MT 49, 341 M 420, 177 P3d 1048 (2008), and distinguished in In re Support of McGurran, 1999 MT 192, 295 M 357, 983 P2d 968, 56 St. Rep. 741 (1999).

Class Action — Venue: Venue for a class action is determined just as it is for a comparable nonclass action. Thus, venue must be satisfied as to all named class representatives, just as it must be to all plaintiffs and defendants in a nonclass action. State ex rel. Kesterson v. District Court, 189 M 20, 614 P2d 1050 (1980).

Former Rule 83. Rules by district courts

Uniform Rules for District Courts — Time Limit for Filing Brief in Support of Rule 12 Motion: In an action for strict liability in tort for personal injuries, defendant filed a motion for change of venue on November 17, 1982, and a brief in support of the motion on November 24, 1982. The motion was denied by the District Court for failure to file a supporting brief within 5 days, the time limit allowed by Rule II of the Uniform Rules for District Courts of Montana. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case to District Court, ruling that under Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P., three of the days intervening between the time of filing of the motion and the time of filing of the brief are excluded from the calculation of the maximum permissible time, so the filing of the brief was timely. Tanniehill v. Remington Arms Co., 207 M 501, 675 P2d 948, 41 St. Rep. 103 (1984).

Local Rule as Conflicting With Montana Rules of Civil Procedure: Local court Rule 3, Park County District Court, states in part that a party opposing a motion has 10 days after the filing and service of the moving party's brief to serve and file a reply brief. When applied to a motion for summary judgment, local Rule 3 conflicts with Rule 56(c), M.R.Civ.P. Whenever a local rule conflicts with the M.R.Civ.P., the local rule must be set aside. Krusemark v. Hansen, 186 M 174, 606 P2d 1082 (1980).

Ex Parte Trial Briefs: A District Court rule allowing for the filing of ex parte trial briefs used solely by defendant to inform the trial court of complex arguments to be presented at trial does not violate the plaintiff's due process rights. Hill v. Squibb & Sons, 181 M 199, 592 P2d 1383 (1979).

Briefs Required on Preliminary Motion: Trial court rule requiring filing of briefs in support of preliminary motion is proper exercise of authority under this rule and may be enforced by summary denial of motion where brief has not been filed. Hansen v. Kiernan, 159 M 448, 499 P2d 787 (1972).

Former Rule 86(a). Effective date and application to pending proceedings

GENERAL

Relation Back of Complaint: Question of relation back of complaint amended after adoption of rules is governed by provisions of rules even though action originated prior to effective date of rules in absence of finding by court having jurisdiction that rules should not control. Rozan v. Rosen, 150 M 121, 431 P2d 870 (1967).

Failure to Serve Summons — Effect — Rule Not in Effect: Notwithstanding the fact that the rules were not in effect, the court exceeded its jurisdiction in denying motion to quash the service of summons when it was not served and returned within 3 years. State ex rel. Belwin, Inc. v. Davison, 148 M 345, 420 P2d 842 (1966).

Retroactivity of Rules of Procedure: Although legislative intent to give retrospective force to a statute must appear and all doubt will be resolved against retrospective application, the Rules of Civil Procedure apply retrospectively. State ex rel. Johnson v. District Court, 148 M 22, 417 P2d 109 (1966); Lumbermen's Mut. Cas. Co. v. Babcock & Wilcox Co., 34 F.R.D. 515 (D.C. Mont. 1964); Weber v. Hydroponics, Inc., 226 F. Supp. 177 (D.C. Mont. 1962).

RETROACTIVE APPLICATION

Service on Nonresident — Application of Rule: Rule 4B(1), M.R.Civ.P., applied to act of alleged malpractice occurring in Montana prior to effective date of the M.R.Civ.P., and doctor who had not resided in Montana since the effective date of the rules could properly be served with process, under Rule 4D(3), in California. State ex rel. Johnson v. District Court, 148 M 22, 417 P2d 109 (1966).

Discretion of Court — Application of Old Rule: District Court had the power to consider motion under procedure that was in effect when the motion was filed where the District Court believed application of amended rule would work an injury. State ex rel. Rozan v. District Court, 147 M 532, 416 P2d 19 (1966).

Application of Rules Not Prohibited — Retroactive Application: The giving effect to the service of summons provisions of Rule 4, subdivision B, M.R.Civ.P., when the operative facts of the case to which the rule applied had taken place prior to the effective date provided in this section, was not a prohibited retroactive application of Rule 4, subdivision B, within the meaning of 1-2-109. Weber v. Hydroponics, Inc., 226 F. Supp. 117 (D.C. Mont. 1962).

Chapter Attorney General's Opinions

Authentication of Foreign Judgment: A foreign judgment filed under the Uniform Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act must be authenticated in accordance with the provisions of subsection (1) of former Rule 44(a), M.R.Civ.P. 44 A.G. Op. 38 (1992).

I. Scope of Rules; Form of Action

Rule 1. Scope of Rules.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 1 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

The former reference to "suits of a civil nature" is changed to the more modern "civil actions and proceedings." This is not meant to be a substantive change.

The rules minimize the use of inherently ambiguous words. For example, the word "shall" is removed because it is inherently ambiguous in that it can mean "must," "may," or something else depending on the context. "Shall" is replaced with "must," "may," or "should," depending on which one the context and established interpretation make correct in each rule.

Language has been added to make it clear that the Civil Rules apply to probate proceedings except where the Probate Code specifies different procedures. This is consistent with section 72-1-207.

Case Notes

Wife Not Domiciled in State for 90 Days Preceding Petition for Dissolution — Cured by Supplemental Pleading: The wife filed for dissolution of marriage and later filed a supplemental pleading establishing Montana residency meeting the 90-day requirement in 40-4-104. The husband did not dispute the supplemental pleading; however, he moved to dismiss because the wife had not resided in Montana for 90 days prior to the initial pleading. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the legislative purpose underlying the 90-day domicile requirement was not harmed by allowing the case to proceed and the supplemental pleading cured any jurisdictional defect. In re Marriage of Buck, 2014 MT 344, 377 Mont. 393, 340 P.3d 546.

Rule 2. One form of Action.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 2 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

II. Commencing an Action; Service of Process, Pleadings, Motions, and Orders

Rule 3. Commencing an Action.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 3 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

Case Notes

Agency Letter Seeking Repayment of Alleged Medicaid Overpayments — No Action Commenced: Following an audit, the Department of Public Health and Human Services determined that the petitioner, a Medicaid medical supplier, had been overpaid and sent a letter to the petitioner requesting repayment. After a fair hearing in which the hearings officer upheld the Department's overpayment determination and concluded that an 8-year statute of limitations applied to the overpayment claim, the petitioner sought judicial review. The District Court concluded that the 2-year statute of limitations found in 27-2-211 applied and that the action was commenced when the Department sent the overpayment letter to the petitioner. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, noting that the statute of limitations issue was relevant only if an action had been commenced. Because the Department had merely sent a letter and had never filed a complaint, it had not commenced an action within the meaning of 27-2-102 and Rule 3, M.R.Civ.P. Independence Medical Supply, Inc. v. Dept. of Pub. Health and Human Serv., 2018 MT 57, 391 Mont. 1, 414 P.3d 781.

Rule 4. Persons Subject to Jurisdiction; Process; Service.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 4 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

Rule 4(a)(11) was added by the Montana Supreme Court.

Rules 4(c)(2)(C) and 4(c)(2)(D) contain language from previous Rules 4D(4) and 4D(5)(h) for the purpose of including all rules regarding the form of a summons in the same rule.

The first two sentences of previous Rule 4D(2) have been moved to Rule 4(d)(1) to make the rule more easily understood and to conform to the Federal Rule.

Rules 4(i) and 4(j) remove the language in previous Rule 4D(2)(e)(iii), because this language in pertinent part simply repeats the language in Rule 4(i)(3)(B). The language regarding the sheriff in previous Rule 4D(2)(e)(iii) is superfluous.

The rule removes the language "organized under the laws of the state, or against a corporation or limited liability company organized under the laws of any other state or country" at the beginning of previous Rule 4D(2)(f), because such language includes all corporations and limited liability companies.

The rule adds "any business entity filed in the office of the secretary of state" in the list of entities which constitute business or nonprofit entities for purpose of this rule.

Previous Rule 4D(4) has been moved to Rule 4(c)(2)(C) for the purpose of including all the rules regarding the form of a summons in the same rule.

Rule 4(d)(3)(C) (acknowledgment of summons) has been changed from 20 to 21 days for the reasons stated in Committee Notes to Rule 6.

Rule 4(o) removes the language "whether known or unknown" from previous Rules 4D(5)(a), 4D(5)(a)(i), and 4D(5)(b), because such language includes all defendants.

Rule 4(o) moves previous Rule 4D(5)(h) to Rule 4(c)(2)(D) for the purpose of including all rules regarding the form of a summons in the same rule.

Rule 4(q) removes the adjective "clearly" to avoid potential ambiguity.

Rule 4(r)(3) incorporates the last sentence of previous Rule 4D(8)(e). This change is meant to apply the principle that "failure to make proof of service does not affect the validity of service" to all situations, thereby putting Rule 4(r) in agreement with the Federal Rule. Rule 4(r)(4) incorporates previous Rule 4D(9) to avoid duplication and foster clarity.

Rule 4(t) removes reference to issuance of summons in favor of a single deadline regarding service of process for simplicity. For process to be served in three years, summons must also have been issued within three years.

Rule 4(t) removes the deadline for the plaintiff to file the summons with the clerk of the court, because the failure to meet this deadline in the rule has no practical effect.

Case Notes

Car Accident on Montana Roadways — Conduct Under Montana Long-Arm Statute Even Though Car Designed and Manufactured Out of State: The owner of a car died in an accident on the Montana interstate. The owner's personal representative sued the car's manufacturer for design defect, failure to warn, and negligence. The manufacturer argued that its conduct did not satisfy Montana's long-arm statute because the car was designed and manufactured out of state and thus the events giving rise to the alleged tort did not occur in Montana. Exercising supervisory control, the Supreme Court found that the manufacturer's conduct fell under Montana's long-arm statute because the claims, if proven, would have resulted in the accrual of a tort in Montana. Ford Motor Co. v. 8th Judicial District Court, 2019 MT 115, 395 Mont. 478, 443 P.3d 407.

Minimum Contacts for Specific Personal Jurisdiction Satisfied — Stream of Commerce Plus: A 1996 Ford Explorer was assembled in Kentucky, sold in Washington, resold and registered in Montana, and involved in an accident in Montana in 2015. The car's owner died in the accident, and his personal representative sued the car's manufacturer. After the District Court denied the manufacturer's motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, the manufacturer petitioned the Supreme Court to exercise supervisory control. The Supreme Court accepted and upheld the District Court's ruling. Analyzing the facts under the "stream of commerce plus" theory introduced by the U.S. Supreme Court in Asahi Metal Indus. Co. v. Superior Court of Cal., 480 US 102 (1987), the Montana Supreme Court found that the manufacturer had purposefully availed itself of the privilege of conducting business in Montana by delivering its vehicles and parts into the stream of commerce with the expectation that Montana customers will use them, advertising in Montana, registering to do business in Montana, operating subsidiary companies in Montana, operating dealerships in Montana, and providing automotive services in Montana. Ford Motor Co. v. 8th Judicial District Court, 2019 MT 115, 395 Mont. 478, 443 P.3d 407.

Specific Personal Jurisdiction — Conduct Arose Out of Forum-Related Activities: A 1996 Ford Explorer was assembled in Kentucky, sold in Washington, resold and registered in Montana, and involved in an accident in Montana in 2015. The car's owner died in the accident, and his personal representative sued the car's manufacturer for design defect, failure to warn, and negligence. After the District Court denied the manufacturer's motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, the manufacturer petitioned the Supreme Court to exercise supervisory control. The Supreme Court accepted and upheld the District Court's ruling. The manufacturer argued that the claims against it, even if proven, did not arise out of its contacts with Montana because it did not design or manufacture the Explorer in Montana and first sold the Explorer outside the state. The Supreme Court held that as long as the long-arm statute is satisfied and the defendant has purposefully availed itself of the privilege of conducting activities in Montana, a plaintiff's claims will arise out of or relate to the defendant's forum-related activities if (1) a nexus exists between the product and the defendant's in-state activity; and (2) the defendant could have reasonably foreseen its product being used in Montana. In this case, the Supreme Court found that the nexus requirement was satisfied because the manufacturer advertises, sells, and services vehicles in Montana and makes it convenient for Montana residents to drive its vehicles by offering maintenance, repair, and recall services. It found that the foreseeability requirement was satisfied because the product was specifically built to travel. Ford Motor Co. v. 8th Judicial District Court, 2019 MT 115, 395 Mont. 478, 443 P.3d 407.

Specific Personal Jurisdiction Not Otherwise Unreasonable: A 1996 Ford Explorer was assembled in Kentucky, sold in Washington, resold and registered in Montana, and involved in an accident in Montana in 2015. The car's owner died in the accident, and his personal representative sued the car's manufacturer for design defect, failure to warn, and negligence. After the District Court denied the manufacturer's motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, the manufacturer petitioned the Supreme Court to exercise supervisory control. The Supreme Court accepted and upheld the District Court's ruling. The manufacturer argued that the claims against it, even if proven, did not arise out of its contacts with Montana because it did not design or manufacture the Explorer in Montana and first sold the Explorer outside the state. The Supreme Court held that as long as the long-arm statute is satisfied, the defendant has purposefully availed itself of the privilege of conducting activities in Montana, and the plaintiff's claims arise out of or relate to the defendant's forum-related activities, specific personal jurisdiction will be exercised unless the defendant can prove that the exercise of personal jurisdiction would be unreasonable. In this case, the Supreme Court found that it was fair and reasonable to require the manufacturer to defend a lawsuit in Montana due to the manufacturer's extensive interjection into Montana, the lack of burden on the manufacturer to defend a lawsuit in Montana, the lack of a conflict between Montana and the manufacturer's home state, Montana's strong interest in adjudicating the dispute, the efficiency of resolving the controversy in the same location as the accident, and the plaintiff's interest in a convenient forum. Ford Motor Co. v. 8th Judicial District Court, 2019 MT 115, 395 Mont. 478, 443 P.3d 407.

No Personal Jurisdiction Based on Registration and Conducting Business in State — Dismissal of FELA Claims Affirmed: Three of the defendant's employees, one who resided in Missouri and two in Texas, filed cases under the Federal Employers' Liability Act against their employer in Montana District Court. The defendant filed a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction. The plaintiffs argued that Montana had personal jurisdiction over the defendant because it conducted business in Montana and had registered to do business in the state. After the District Court granted the defendant's motion to dismiss, the plaintiffs appealed to the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that personal jurisdiction cannot be achieved under such circumstances unless the defendant consents to jurisdiction. DeLeon v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2018 MT 219, 392 Mont. 446, 426 P.3d 1.

Dismissal for Lack of Specific Personal Jurisdiction Over Defendant — Reversed and Remanded for Evidentiary Hearing on Disputed Jurisdictional Issues: The plaintiff's husband was killed when he was exposed to high levels of hydrocarbon vapors while working for the defendant in a oil production site in western North Dakota. The plaintiff filed a lawsuit in Montana District Court alleging that the defendant was liable for his death. The defendant, an Oklahoma corporation registered to do business in Montana, filed a motion to dismiss the lawsuit, claiming that it was not subject to personal jurisdiction in Montana. The District Court agreed, and the plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court reversed, noting that the District Court had dismissed the complaint without any factual findings or substantive analysis even though there were material jurisdictional facts in dispute. The Supreme Court remanded the matter for the District Court to conduct an evidentiary hearing on whether the defendant was subject to specific personal jurisdiction in Montana. Buckles v. Continental Resources, Inc., 2017 MT 235, 388 Mont. 517, 402 P.3d 1213.

Informal Mail Service on Defendant Corporation Insufficient to Establish Personal Jurisdiction — Pro Se Litigant — Service of Process: Although pro se litigants are often granted wide latitude regarding substantive pleading requirements, the District Court correctly dismissed a pro se litigant's complaint due to his failure to strictly comply with the mandatory procedural rules for proper service of process on a defendant corporation, regardless of whether the defendant corporation had actual knowledge of the complaint. Nolan v. Riverstone Health Care, 2017 MT 63, 387 Mont. 97, 391 P.3d 95.

Refusal of Deannexation by City Council — Claims Preclusion Proper: The plaintiffs successfully petitioned the defendant, a city, to have their property annexed to the city. Five years later, the plaintiffs sought to have the same property deannexed, which the defendant denied. The plaintiffs filed a lawsuit against the defendant, which the District Court dismissed because the complaint had not been timely served and the statute of limitations for the plaintiffs' claims barred them from being refiled. One month after the District Court's ruling, the plaintiffs filed another suit against the defendant, and the District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendant, holding that claims preclusion barred the plaintiffs' second suit. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the four-part test for claims preclusion had been satisfied. Schweitzer v. Whitefish, 2016 MT 254, 385 Mont. 142, 383 P.3d 735.

General Personal Jurisdiction Over Railway Under FELA: In two separate actions filed in two different Montana District Courts, each plaintiff pleaded violations of the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA), 45 U.S.C. 51 through 60, while employed by and working for the defendant railway in states other than Montana. The defendant moved to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction in both actions: one judge denied the motion, and the other judge granted the motion. The plaintiffs consolidated their appeals. The Supreme Court affirmed in part and reversed in part, holding that Montana courts have general personal jurisdiction over the defendant railway under FELA because the defendant railway does business in Montana and that Montana courts therefore also have general personal jurisdiction over the defendant railway under FELA for cases brought by nonresidents. The court remanded both cases for further proceedings. Tyrrell v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2016 MT 126, 383 Mont. 417, 373 P.3d 1.

Service by Publication in Termination Proceeding: Under 42-2-605, service by publication is proper in an adoption proceeding to terminate parental rights. However, publication must be ordered by the court and may not be ordered by the clerk of court. In addition, the publication must inform the parent that failure to appear at the termination hearing will result in termination of parental rights. Merely informing the parent that failing to appear at the hearing will result in judgment being taken against the parent by default for the relief requested in the petition is insufficient. In re A.M.S., 2016 MT 22, 382 Mont. 145, 364 P.3d 1261.

Vehicle Forfeiture — Sham Ownership Improperly Determined Unilaterally — Personal Service Required for Joint Owners Listed on Title: Although a vehicle title serves as prima facie evidence of ownership, police unilaterally determined that a mother listed jointly with her son on a vehicle's title registration was a sham owner and did not name or serve her in the vehicle's forfeiture proceedings. The District Court dismissed the mother's claim that she was not served with the forfeiture petition and summons under 44-12-201 (now repealed) because it determined that she became a party to the forfeiture action when she voluntarily appeared in the forfeiture action to request the release of the vehicle. On appeal, however, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that the mother's presumed knowledge of the subsequent forfeiture hearing was not a substitute for timely service of the summons and petition and that the forfeiture proceeding was ineffective in terminating her interest in the vehicle. Muir v. Bilderback, 2015 MT 181, 379 Mont. 468, 353 P.3d 479.

Transaction Initiated by Plaintiff With Out-of-State Company — Purchased Goods Delivered to Out-of-State Site — No Long-Arm Jurisdiction: The plaintiff had ordered products from the defendant, an out-of-state company, on several occasions. In the transaction that prompted this case, the product ordered by the plaintiff from the defendant was delivered to Utah, where it was discovered that the product was unusable. The plaintiff eventually filed suit in Montana against the defendant, and the defendant filed a motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction, arguing that the defendant was not "found within" Montana and that, because the transaction took place out of state, Montana did not have personal jurisdiction over the defendant. The District Court agreed and dismissed the plaintiff's lawsuit. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, emphasizing that the defendant had not initiated the transaction and that online marketing alone does not establish jurisdiction. The Milky Whey, Inc. v. Dairy Partners, LLC, 2015 MT 18, 378 Mont. 75, 342 P.3d 13, factually distinguished in Ford Motor Co. v. 8th Judicial District Court, 2019 MT 115, 395 Mont. 478, 443 P.3d 407, in which personal jurisdiction existed when a car was assembled in Kentucky, sold in Washington, and involved in an accident on a Montana interstate 19 years later.

TRO in Dissolution Proceedings Never Served — Change of Beneficiary After Deadline for Service Expired — Change of Beneficiary Allowed: Four years before his death, the decedent filed a petition for dissolution of marriage and a temporary restraining order (TRO) was issued. Under the TRO, the decedent could not change the beneficiary of his IRA; however, he never had his spouse served with the TRO. One month before his death, the decedent amended the beneficiary of his IRA to be his children instead of his wife. The wife made a claim against the estate for her elective share of the IRA. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the estate, ruling that although the decedent violated the TRO, equity would not support voiding the change of the beneficiary. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, but it disagreed with the District Court's reasoning. Instead, the Supreme Court held that the decedent's failure to serve the dissolution papers on the wife within 3 years rendered the TRO ineffective. Therefore, the Supreme Court reasoned, nothing prohibited the decedent from amending his IRA beneficiary. In re Estate of Corrigan, 2014 MT 337, 377 Mont. 364, 341 P.3d 623.

Single Montana Bank Transaction Insufficient to Trigger Personal Jurisdiction: The plaintiff sued the defendants in Montana concerning a Florida real estate transaction. The defendants moved to dismiss for a lack of personal jurisdiction, arguing that they were not Montana residents, they were not physically located in Montana, they were not doing business with the Montana resident, and the only connection to Montana was that the plaintiff wired money from his Montana bank account. The District Court found that there was no general personal jurisdiction because the defendant lacked continuous or systematic contacts with Montana. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the minimum contacts analysis looks to the defendant's contacts with the forum state itself, not the defendant's contacts with the persons who reside there. Thus, the single bank transaction out of Montana was insufficient to cause the claim to accrue in Montana. Tackett v. Duncan, 2014 MT 253, 376 Mont. 348, 334 P.3d 920.

Service of Suit Against City on County Attorney Improper — Past Actions of Accepting Service Through County Attorney Irrelevant — Motion to Dismiss Properly Granted: The plaintiff filed suit against the city of Bozeman related to a subdivision. Nearly 3 years after the filing of the complaint, a process server attempted to serve it and a summons on the city by hand-delivering them to a deputy city attorney. The city filed a motion to quash for improper service and to dismiss the complaint because the process server had not served the city in accordance with Rule 4(k), M.R.Civ.P. (formerly Rule 4E(1)). Under this rule, in order to serve a local government entity, one must serve a commissioner, trustee, board member, mayor, or head of its legislative department. The District Court granted the city's motion and the plaintiff appealed, arguing that the county attorney had apparent authority to accept service and that by serving her, the plaintiff clearly provided the city with notice of the lawsuit. The Supreme Court disagreed and ruled that serving a deputy county attorney did not substitute for valid service under Rule 4(k), nor did the attorney have apparent authority to accept it as an agent for the city. The plaintiff also argued that under the theory of equitable estoppel, because the city had previously accepted service through the county attorney's office it should not be allowed to challenge service here. The Supreme Court concluded that the past practices of the city did not alter the plaintiff's obligation to serve the city according to the Rules of Civil Procedure and affirmed the District Court. Cascade Dev., Inc. v. Bozeman, 2012 MT 79, 364 Mont. 442, 276 P.3d 862.

Rule 4.1. Limited Representation Permitted — Process.

Committee Notes

The Court enacted Rules 4.1 and 4.2 as Rules 4.2 and 4.3 on March 15, 2011, to take effect on October 1, 2011. Rules 4.1 and 4.2 have been renumbered to fit in with the comprehensive 2011 M. R. Civ. P. revisions.

Rule 4.2. Notice of Limited Appearance and Withdrawal as Attorney.

Committee Notes

The Court enacted Rules 4.1 and 4.2 as Rules 4.2 and 4.3 on March 15, 2011, to take effect on October 1, 2011. Rules 4.1 and 4.2 have been renumbered to fit in with the comprehensive 2011 M. R. Civ. P. revisions.

Rule 5. Serving and Filing Pleadings and other Papers.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 5 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

Rule 5(a)(1)(E) removes the term "designation of record" because it is already addressed in the Appellate Rules.

Rule 5(b)(2)(E) has been added to conform to the Federal Rules. It is added in recognition of the practice of service by admission.

Rule 5(d)(3) allows for electronic filing, including by facsimile. It follows the Federal Rules.

Rule 5.1. Constitutional Challenge to a Statute — Notice and Intervention.

Committee Notes

Rule 5.1, which replaces previous Rule 24(d), has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

The Committee decided it was more appropriate to place this Rule at 5.1, consistent with the Federal Rules.

Rule 5.2. Privacy Protection for Filings Made With the Court.

Committee Notes

Rule 5.2 is similar to the Federal Rule 5.2, and is consistent with the Rules for Privacy and Public Access to Court Records in Montana. The rule is designed to be a reference point for attorneys and parties seeking guidance on how to handle personal and private information that is included in documents filed with the courts.

Rule 5.2 provides instruction on how to redact protected information. For example, only the year of an individual's birth may be included in a document filed with the court, not the entire birth date. For a social security or financial account number, only the last four digits may be included.

Under certain circumstances, a non-redacted document may be included in the court file without the protected information contained in it being made public. Rule 5.2(c) allows the court to order a filing to be made under seal without redaction while Rule 5.2(e) allows a party who makes a redacted filing to also submit a non-redacted document under seal. This is often necessary in family law cases where including information such as social security numbers in key documents is required by federal and state statutes.

Rule 5.2(f) provides an alternate method for protecting personal information. A party may submit a reference list under seal that includes a unique identifier to match each item of protected information involved in the case. The party then may use the unique identifier in its filed documents instead of redacting these documents.

The Montana Supreme Court has adopted Rules 10(7) and 13(2), M. R. App. P., for confidentiality in filings.

Rule 6. Computing and Extending Time; Time for Motion Papers.

Committee Notes

The December 1, 2009 Federal Rule 6 has been adopted almost verbatim (several parts are deleted which apply strictly to the Federal Rule). The Federal rationale for changing the time calculation provisions of Rule 6 is set forth in the following Federal Commission Comment, and has been adopted:

Subdivision (a). Subdivision (a) has been amended to simplify and clarify the provisions that describe how deadlines are computed. Subdivision (a) governs the computation of any time period found in these rules, in any local rule or court order, or in any statute that does not specify a method of computing time. In accordance with Rule 83(a)(1), a local rule may not direct that a deadline be computed in a manner inconsistent with subdivision (a).

The time-computation provisions of subdivision (a) apply only when a time period must be computed. They do not apply when a fixed time to act is set. The amendments thus carry forward the approach taken in Violette v. P.A. Days, Inc., 427 F.3d 1015, 1016 (6th Cir. 2005) (holding that Civil Rule 6(a) "does not apply to situations where the court has established a specific calendar day as a deadline"), and reject the contrary holding of In re American Healthcare Management, Inc., 900 F.2d 827, 832 (5th Cir. 1990) (holding that Bankruptcy Rule 9006(a) governs treatment of date-certain deadline set by court order). If, for example, the date for filing is "no later than November 1, 2007," subdivision (a) does not govern. But if a filing is required to be made "within 10 days" or "within 72 hours," subdivision (a) describes how that deadline is computed.

Subdivision (a) does not apply when computing a time period set by a statute if the statute specifies a method of computing time . . .

Subdivision (a)(1). New subdivision (a)(1) addresses the computation of time periods that are stated in days. It also applies to time periods that are stated in weeks, months, or years. See, e.g., Rule 60(c)(1). Subdivision (a)(1)(B)'s directive to "count every day" is relevant only if the period is stated in days (not weeks, months or years).

Under former Rule 6(a), a period of 11 days or more was computed differently than a period of less than 11 days. Intermediate Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays were included in computing the longer periods, but excluded in computing the shorter periods. Former Rule 6(a) thus made computing deadlines unnecessarily complicated and led to counterintuitive results. For example, a 10-day period and a 14-day period that started on the same day usually ended on the same day — and the 10-day period not infrequently ended later than the 14-day period. See Miltimore Sales, Inc. v. Int'l Rectifier, Inc., 412 F.3d 685, 686 (6th Cir. 2005).

Under new subdivision (a)(1), all deadlines stated in days (no matter the length) are computed in the same way. The day of the event that triggers the deadline is not counted. All other days — including intermediate Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays — are counted, with only one exception: If the period ends on a Saturday, Sunday, or legal holiday, then the deadline falls on the next day that is not a Saturday, Sunday, or legal holiday. An illustration is provided below in the discussion of subdivision (a)(5). Subdivision (a)(3) addresses filing deadlines that expire on a day when the clerk's office is inaccessible.

Where subdivision (a) formerly referred to the "act, event, or default" that triggers the deadline, new subdivision (a) refers simply to the "event" that triggers the deadline; this change in terminology is adopted for brevity and simplicity, and is not intended to change meaning.

Periods previously expressed as less than 11 days will be shortened as a practical matter by the decision to count intermediate Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays in computing all periods. Many of those periods have been lengthened to compensate for the change. See, e.g., Rule 14(a)(1).

Most of the 10-day periods were adjusted to meet the change in computation method by setting 14 days as the new period. A 14-day period corresponds to the most frequent result of a 10-day period under the former computation method — two Saturdays and two Sundays were excluded, giving 14 days in all. A 14-day period has an additional advantage. The final day falls on the same day of the week as the event that triggered the period — the 14th day after a Monday, for example, is a Monday. This advantage of using week-long periods led to adopting 7-day periods to replace some of the periods set at less than 10 days, and 21-day periods to replace 20-day periods. Thirty-day and longer periods, however, were generally retained without change.

Subdivision (a)(2). New subdivision (a)(2) addresses the computation of time periods that are stated in hours. No such deadline currently appears in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. But some statutes contain deadlines stated in hours, as do some court orders issued in expedited proceedings.

Under subdivision (a)(2), a deadline stated in hours starts to run immediately on the occurrence of the event that triggers the deadline. The deadline generally ends when the time expires. If, however, the time period expires at a specific time (say, 2:17 p.m.) on a Saturday, Sunday, or legal holiday, then the deadline is extended to the same time (2:17 p.m.) on the next day that is not a Saturday, Sunday, or legal holiday. Periods stated in hours are not to be "rounded up" to the next whole hour. Subdivision (a)(3) addresses situations when the clerk's office is inaccessible during the last hour before a filing deadline expires.

Subdivision (a)(2)(B) directs that every hour be counted. Thus, for example, a 72-hour period that commences at 10:23 a.m. on Friday, November 2, 2007, will run until 9:23 a.m. on Monday, November 5; the discrepancy in start and end times in this example results from the intervening shift from daylight saving time to standard time.

Subdivision (a)(3). When determining the last day of a filing period stated in days or a longer unit of time, a day on which the clerk's office is not accessible because of the weather or another reason is treated like a Saturday, Sunday, or legal holiday. When determining the end of a filing period stated in hours, if the clerk's office is inaccessible during the last hour of the filing period computed under subdivision (a)(2) then the period is extended to the same time on the next day that is not a weekend, holiday, or day when the clerk's office is inaccessible.

Subdivision (a)(3)'s extensions apply "[u]nless the court orders otherwise." In some circumstances, the court might not wish a period of inaccessibility to trigger a full 24-hour extension; in those instances, the court can specify a briefer extension.

The text of the rule no longer refers to "weather or other conditions" as the reason for the inaccessibility of the clerk's office. The reference to "weather" was deleted from the text to underscore that inaccessibility can occur for reasons unrelated to weather, such as an outage of the electronic filing system. Weather can still be a reason for inaccessibility of the clerk's office. The rule does not attempt to define inaccessibility. Rather, the concept will continue to develop through case law, see, e.g., William G. Phelps, When Is Office of Clerk of Court Inaccessible Due to Weather or Other Conditions for Purpose of Computing Time Period for Filing Papers Under Rule 6(a) of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 135 A.L.R. Fed. 259 (1996) (collecting cases). In addition, many local provisions address inaccessibility for purposes of electronic filing, see, e.g., D. Kan. Rule 5.4.11 ("A Filing User whose filing is made untimely as the result of a technical failure may seek appropriate relief from the court.").

Subdivision (a)(4). New subdivision (a)(4) defines the end of the last day of a period for purposes of subdivision (a)(1). Subdivision (a)(4) does not apply in computing periods stated in hours under subdivision (a)(2), and does not apply if a different time is set by a statute, local rule, or order in the case. . . .

Subdivision (a)(5). New subdivision (a)(5) defines the "next" day for purposes of subdivisions (a)(1)(C) and (a)(2)(C). The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure contain both forward-looking time periods and backward-looking time periods. A forward-looking time period requires something to be done within a period of time after an event. See, e.g., Rule 59(b) (motion for new trial "must be filed no later than 28 days after entry of the judgment"). A backward-looking time period requires something to be done within a period of time before an event. See, e.g., Rule 26(f) (parties must hold Rule 26(f) conference "as soon as practicable and in any event at least 21 days before a scheduling conference is held or a scheduling order is due under Rule 16(b)"). In determining what is the "next" day for purposes of subdivisions (a)(1)(C) and (a)(2)(C), one should continue counting in the same direction — that is, forward when computing a forward-looking period and backward when computing a backward-looking period. If, for example, a filing is due within 30 days after an event, and the thirtieth day falls on Saturday, September 1, 2007, then the filing is due on Tuesday, September 4, 2007 (Monday, September 3, is Labor Day). But if a filing is due 21 days before an event, and the twenty-first day falls on Saturday, September 1, then the filing is due on Friday, August 31. If the clerk's office is inaccessible on August 31, then subdivision (a)(3) extends the filing deadline forward to the next accessible day that is not a Saturday, Sunday, or legal holiday — no later than Tuesday, September 4.

Subdivision (a)(6). New subdivision (a)(6) defines "legal holiday" for purposes of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, including the time-computation provisions of subdivision (a). Subdivision (a)(6) continues to include within the definition of "legal holiday" days that are declared a holiday by the President or Congress.

For forward-counted periods — i.e., periods that are measured after an event — subdivision (a)(6)(C) includes certain state holidays within the definition of legal holidays. However, state legal holidays are not recognized in computing backward-counted periods. For both forward- and backward-counted periods, the rule thus protects those who may be unsure of the effect of state holidays. For forward-counted deadlines, treating state holidays the same as federal holidays extends the deadline. Thus, someone who thought that the federal courts might be closed on a state holiday would be safeguarded against an inadvertent late filing. In contrast, for backward-counted deadlines, not giving state holidays the treatment of federal holidays allows filing on the state holiday itself rather than the day before. Take, for example, Monday, April 21, 2008 (Patriot's Day, a legal holiday in the relevant state). If a filing is due 14 days after an event, and the fourteenth day is April 21, then the filing is due on Tuesday, April 22 because Monday, April 21 counts as a legal holiday. But if a filing is due 14 days before an event, and the fourteenth day is April 21, the filing is due on Monday, April 21; the fact that April 21 is a state holiday does not make April 21 a legal holiday for purposes of computing this backward-counted deadline. But note that if the clerk's office is inaccessible on Monday, April 21, then subdivision (a)(3) extends the April 21 filing deadline forward to the next accessible day that is not a Saturday, Sunday or legal holiday — no earlier than Tuesday, April 22.

The times set in the former rule at 1 or 5 days have been revised to 7 or 14 days.

Montana has deviated from the Federal Rule in two minor respects. First, Rule 6(a) deleted the words "in any local rule" and Rule 6(a)(4) deleted the words "local rule." For that reason, unlike the Federal Rules, the time calculation procedure provisions of Rule 6 may not be varied by local rules.

Rule 6(a)(4)(A) provides for electronic filing until midnight. The Committee expressly recognizes and endorses the existing practice of facsimile filing in Montana as provided in Rule 5(d)(3). However, until a system of electronic filing is adopted for the district courts, the balance of the language of Rule 6(a)(4)(A) should not be interpreted to allow electronic filing other than by facsimile. For that reason, the Committee expressly notes that e-mail and other electronic filing, except for facsimile filing, is not allowed by this Rule until the Montana Supreme Court indicates otherwise through the adoption of some type of electronic filing system for the district courts.

Rules 6(a)(4)(A) and 6(a)(4)(B) define the recognized legal holidays.

Rule 6(c) has been modified to conform Montana's Rule to Federal Rule 6(c). This provides that notice of a hearing, if any, must be served at least 14 days before the hearing. Montana substituted the word "any" for "the," modifying hearing, so there is no implication that a hearing is mandatory. This may need to be harmonized with Uniform District Court Rule 2, "Motions."

Case Notes

Partnership Governed by Partnership Agreement — Jurisdiction: The plaintiff appealed the judgment of the District Court that invalidated her efforts to force out her twin brother from the family's limited liability partnership created to steward the family ranch and property in eastern Montana. The brother counterclaimed on the issue of attorney fees, alleging that the District Court did not have authority to grant the award. Noting that under 35-10-106, the partnership agreement controlled the rights and duties of the partners, the Supreme Court reversed in part, concluding that the District Court erred by holding that the brother's interest was not subject to the buy-out provision of the partnership agreement and, therefore, judicial dissolution was not necessary. The Supreme Court held that, under Rule 6, M.R.Civ.P., the District Court did not have jurisdiction to award attorney fees because the award was made more than 60 days after the motion for fees was filed. Thus, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court's order awarding attorney fees and remanded for further proceedings. The court affirmed the remainder of the District Court's judgment. Ballou v. Walker, 2017 MT 197, 388 Mont. 283, 400 P.3d 234.

Computation of Time for Filing Bill of Costs — 5 Calendar Days: The defendant submitted its bill of costs after trial, but the District Court rejected it as untimely. The defendant argued that it had submitted the bill of costs within 5 business days, consistent with Doyle v. Clark, 2011 MT 117, 360 Mont. 450, 254 P.3d 570, and therefore the bill was timely. The District Court concluded that under Rule 6, M.R.Civ.P., which was amended in 2011 after Doyle was issued, the 5-day period for filing a bill of costs under 25-10-501 is 5 calendar days, not 5 business days. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed that the 5-day deadline was 5 calendar days under the amended rule and that the amended rule superseded the holding in Doyle. Peterson-Tuell v. First Student Transp., LLC, 2014 MT 307, 377 Mont. 113, 339 P.3d 16.

III. Pleadings and Motions

Rule 7. Pleadings Allowed; Form of Motions and Other Papers.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 7 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

Previous Rule 7(c) is deleted because it has done its work. If a motion or pleading is described as a demurrer, plea, or exception for insufficiency, the court will treat the paper as if properly captioned.

Rule 7.1. Disclosure Statement.

Committee Notes

Rule 7.1 adopts the relevant language of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Montana did not previously have a current Rule 7.1.

Rule 8. General Rules of Pleading.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 8 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

Case Notes

Apportioning Fault to Third Party Must Be Affirmatively Stated: Defendants in a strict liability suit did not disclose expert testimony regarding third-party fault. The District Court ruled against allowing such testimony, which had to have been affirmatively pleaded. The Supreme Court reviewed for abuse of discretion and affirmed the District Court. Covey v. Brishka, 2019 MT 164, 396 Mont. 362, 445 P.3d 785.

General Partners Not Specifically Identified in Prior Action — Res Judicata Satisfied: The plaintiffs, defendant, and third-party defendant to a case signed a mutual release and settlement, and the court dismissed the case with prejudice. Then the plaintiffs from the first case sued the defendant company from the first case and its general partners, who had not been listed as defendants in the first case. The company and its general partners then filed a third-party complaint for indemnification and contribution if they were found liable against the third-party defendant from the first case. The District Court found that privity existed between the general partners and the company to enough extent that their interests had been legally represented in the first case and the release and settlement operated just as effectively on them as on the company. The Supreme Court affirmed. Adams v. Two Rivers Apartments, LLLP, 2019 MT 157, 396 Mont. 315, 444 P.3d 415.

Plaintiff Debtor Not Equitably Estopped — No Evidence Plaintiff Knew Rights Under U.C.C. — No Language in Debtor-Supplied Release Document Regarding U.C.C. Rights: Because all six elements of equitable estoppel could not be satisfied, the District Court erred in granting the defendant creditor summary judgment based on its determination that the plaintiff debtor was equitably estopped from pursuing her claims. There was no language in the release document that was prepared by the defendant to suggest that the plaintiff knew of her rights under the Uniform Commercial Code (U.C.C.) or knew that the release was an attempt to waive all of her rights under the U.C.C. Kapor v. RJC Inv., Inc., 2019 MT 41, 394 Mont. 311, 434 P.3d 869.

ERISA — Motion to Amend Answer — Abuse of Discretion for Granting Insurance Company Leave to Amend — Undue Prejudice to Class Not Considered — No Reasonable Justification Presented by Insurance Company: The District Court abused its discretion by granting the defendant insurance company leave to amend its answer to assert Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) preemption. The Supreme Court reasoned there were no extraordinary circumstances that would warrant granting the defendant's motion to amend. The plaintiff and the class cited to three specific reasons prejudice would occur: (1) the length of the delay, (2) the parties had conducted extensive discovery, and (3) the case had already been appealed to the Supreme Court for class certification based on state law claims. Conversely, the defendant did not offer any reasonable justification for the delay. Allowing the defendant to amend to include ERISA preemption would have effectively destroyed the class, forcing the plaintiff and the class to either seek recertification based on ERISA claims or proceed alone, 10 years after the plaintiff's injury and more than 7 years after she filed suit. Consequently, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff and the class she represented would be unduly prejudiced by allowing the defendant to amend and that the District Court conducted an inadequate inquiry of the extraordinary circumstances of the case. Reliance on Numerous Extensions of Loan to Receive Another — No Excuse for Nonpayment of Debt — Foreclosure — No Error: The defendant argued that the plaintiff bank waived its right to the mature debt of a loan at the end of a seventh extension period by continuing to give extensions, and the defendant did not pay off the loan because he assumed he would receive another extension. However, the plaintiff waived its rights only for a defined period within the extension agreements, not its right to full, eventual payment. Because the defendant was not promised another extension period and the evidence indicated that the plaintiff informed the defendant the loan would not be extended again, there was no issue of material fact to excuse the defendant's nonpayment of the debt, and the District Court did not err in granting the plaintiff summary judgment to foreclose. Furthermore, the plaintiff was not obligated by the covenant of good faith and fair dealing to extend the loan repayment an eighth time. HSBC Bank USA, N.A. v. Anderson, 2017 MT 257, 389 Mont. 106, 406 P.3d 416.

Alternative Claims Based on Same Breach of Same Legal Duty Duplicative: The plaintiff was a nonprobationary police officer whose employment was terminated after the plaintiff advocated for the Whitefish Police Protective Association (WPPA) to affiliate with the defendant, the Montana Public Employees' Association (MPEA). At termination, the defendant was the exclusive bargaining agent for the WPPA under the collective bargaining agreement and Title 39, ch. 31. WPPA's in-house counsel was exclusively responsible for handling the officer's grievance on behalf of the defendant; however, in-house counsel took no action on the officer's behalf, prompting the officer to retain separate counsel. The plaintiff filed a complaint in District Court asserting a wrongful discharge claim against the city and a duty of fair representation (DFR) claim and common law fraud claims against the defendant. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court incorrectly concluded that the plaintiff's common law fraud claim was distinct from the plaintiff's DFR claim. The court held that the plaintiff's common law fraud claim was subsumed in the DFR claim, because claims based on the same breach of the same legal duty are not independently cognizable in the same action. Folsom v. Mont. Pub. Employees Ass'n, 2017 MT 204, 388 Mont. 307, 400 P.3d 706.

Defendant's Own Documents — No Prejudice in Lack of Opportunity to Respond: The defendants were not prejudiced by the lack of opportunity to address documents provided in the plaintiff's reply brief because the documents were created by the defendants, and the District Court did not err in granting the plaintiff summary judgment on the equitable estoppel claim. Capital One, NA v. Guthrie, 2017 MT 75, 387 Mont. 147, 392 P.3d 158.

Third-Party Scrivener's Error — Statute of Limitations — Not Counterclaim or Affirmative Defense: The plaintiffs paid off one of two loans with deeds of trust, but due to a scrivener's error the wrong lien payoff was recorded. Subsequently recorded instruments corrected the mistake, but the plaintiffs argued that the statute of limitations precluded the bank from foreclosure proceedings. However, a third-party scrivener's error did not create a mutual mistake between the parties, and the scrivener's error was not a counterclaim or affirmative defense subject to the statute of limitations. Reeves v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n, 2017 MT 70, 387 Mont. 138, 391 P.3d 742.

Construction of Road on Easement — Three-Year Delay in Landowner Bringing Claims Against Easement Holder — Laches Properly Applied: The plaintiff brought negligence, trespass, and other claims, and filed a notice of lis pendens against his neighbors after they had completed construction of a road that ran along their easement across the plaintiff's land. The District Court granted summary judgment to the neighbors, ruling that the claims were barred by laches. The plaintiff appealed to the Supreme Court. The court affirmed, agreeing that the equitable doctrine of laches applied because the plaintiff had known that the neighbors were constructing a road that destroyed his access trail and did not inform them until 3 years after the road had been completed at great expense to them. The court also emphasized that the neighbors had been significantly prejudiced by the plaintiff's delay in filing a notice of lis pendens until the week before the sale of their property was scheduled to close. Algee v. Hren, 2016 MT 166, 384 Mont. 93, 375 P.3d 386.

Statute of Limitations Not Expired — Laches Properly Applied: The plaintiff brought claims of negligence, trespass, and other claims, and filed a notice of lis pendens against his neighbors after they had completed construction of a road that ran along their easement across the plaintiff's land. The District Court granted summary judgment to the neighbors, ruling that the claims were barred by laches even though the statute of limitations had not expired on all of the claims. The plaintiff appealed to the Supreme Court. The court agreed that the equitable doctrine of laches applied even to claims on which the statute of limitations had not expired given that the plaintiff's delay in filing the claims had significantly prejudiced the defendants. Algee v. Hren, 2016 MT 166, 384 Mont. 93, 375 P.3d 386.

Res Judicata Defense on Appeal When Not Properly Raised Before District Court — Consideration Declined by Supreme Court: On appeal, the appellant argued that the appellee's claim was barred by res judicata. Noting that res judicata must be pleaded as an affirmative defense and that failure to affirmatively plead a defense under this rule results in a waiver of the defense, the Supreme Court declined to address the argument because the appellant's trial counsel did not properly raise the issue before the District Court. Petaja v. Mont. Pub. Employees' Ass'n, 2016 MT 143, 383 Mont. 516, 373 P.3d 40.

Claim Preclusion Applicable Based on Common Facts — Speculation Not Allowed Regarding Federal Court Consideration of State Law Claims: The plaintiff's state law claims for indemnification from the defendant seller of a Superfund site were denied because the claims were not raised in an earlier federal District Court proceeding. The Supreme Court reasoned there was a common nucleus of operating facts underlying both actions and the plaintiff could have sought to amend its complaint at the federal level after learning new facts. The argument that the defendant concealed facts that were not known was not a determining factor, as the facts were known prior to final judgment in the federal action. Additionally, the Supreme Court declined to speculate whether the federal District Court would have continued to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the state law claims, as such speculation defeated the policy of judicial economy and a definite end to litigation that the claim preclusion doctrine is intended to advance. Asarco LLC v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2016 MT 90, 383 Mont. 174, 369 P.3d 1019

Environmental Group Precluded From Relitigating Similar Claims — Collateral Estoppel — Mine Reclamation: In 2011, the plaintiff, an environmental group, sued the defendants, the Department of Environmental Quality and a mining company, relating to a proposed open pit mine. The group argued that the Department's plan to reclaim the pit violated Art. IX, sec. 2, Mont. Const., because it did not require the natural resources to be "fully reclaimed" to their previous condition. The District Court ruled in favor of the Department and the mining company in a final order, and there was no appeal. In 2014, the plaintiff sued the defendants again regarding a similar open pit and reclamation plan. The plaintiff made the same constitutional argument as in the 2011 action, in addition to alleging that the plan violated the Montana Metal Mine Reclamation Act (MMRA). The District Court concluded that the plaintiff was collaterally estopped from relitigating the issue. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that although the plan involved a different pit and MMRA theory, the factual differences were of no legal significance. Mont. Envtl. Information Center. v. Dept. of Environmental Quality, 2016 MT 9, 382 Mont. 102, 365 P.3d 454.

District Court's Application of Montana Law Improper — Motion to Apply Michigan Law Improperly Denied as Untimely — Breach of Contract: In an action involving several complex business transactions, before the District Court's final pretrial motion date, the defendant bank moved that the District Court apply Michigan law. The District Court denied the motion as untimely. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The Supreme Court declined to hold that choice-of-law motions constituted an affirmative defense, finding instead that the parties negotiated a clear and unambiguous choice-of-law provision that applied Michigan law. As a result, the District Court improperly allowed the jury to consider issues of constructive fraud, intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, deceit, and punitive damages. Masters Group Int'l, Inc. v. Comerica Bank, 2015 MT 192, 380 Mont. 1, 352 P.3d 1101.

Application of Laches — Statute Not Yet Tolled: The defendants argued that laches barred an action for damages brought 5 years after a breach of a contract concerning the sale of their business interests to the plaintiff, but they failed to submit evidence showing extraordinary circumstances or prejudice sufficient to justify the application of laches when the statute of limitations had not yet tolled. Although the business at issue was worth substantially less at the time of the action's filing than it was at the time of the breach of contract, the evidence did not show that the delay in filing changed the nature of the damages, other than the potential amount of interest due. Bottrell Family Investments Ltd. Partnership v. Diversified Financial, Inc., 2015 MT 185, 379 Mont. 504, 352 P.3d 620.

Probate Not Barred by Laches— Contestants Unaware of Will's Existence: Laches did not bar the probating of a 1997 will because the individuals contesting the probate were not aware of the existence of the will until the estate's personal representative initiated informal probate proceedings 14 years after the testator's death. However, laches would have barred an earlier will benefiting the contestants because at least one contestant was aware of the will's existence and did not seek to probate it for 14 years. In re Estate of Harris, 2015 MT 182, 379 Mont. 474, 352 P.3d 20.

Alerting State to Charging Error Through Motion to Preclude Evidence — Appointed Counsel Not Ineffective — Defendant Not Entitled to Wait to Object to Charging Errors Midtrial: The defendant was charged with criminal distribution of dangerous drugs. His court-appointed attorney filed a motion to preclude evidence of the defendant's accountability for the same charge. The state subsequently filed an amended information to include an accountability charge. After the defendant unsuccessfully objected to the filing of the amended information, he was convicted of accountability. On appeal, the defendant claimed ineffective assistance of counsel, alleging that his attorney had improperly alerted the state to its initial charging error by filing a motion to preclude evidence of accountability. The Supreme Court rejected the notion that a defendant is allowed to wait until midtrial to object to the state's charges and affirmed his conviction. St. v. Carter, 2014 MT 65, 374 Mont. 206, 320 P.3d 451.

Tardy Public Duty Doctrine Defense Not Allowed: In a suit for negligent firefighting techniques, the state submitted a proposed pretrial order claiming that the public duty doctrine applied and that the state did not owe a specific duty to the plaintiff. The District Court determined that the public duty doctrine was an affirmative defense that was waived after the state failed to plead or otherwise raise it, and alternatively, even if it was not an affirmative defense it prejudiced the plaintiffs. On appeal, the Supreme Court declined to analyze whether the public duty doctrine must be raised as an affirmative defense, and it upheld the District Court on the grounds that raising the defense at such a late stage in the proceedings would unfairly prejudice the plaintiffs. Weaver v. St., 2013 MT 247, 371 Mont. 476, 310 P.3d 495.

Rule 9. Pleading Special Matters.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 9 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and conform them to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

Case Notes

Evidence Presented After Trial Insufficient to Maintain Oppression Claim: The plaintiff presented a signed affidavit suggesting that the defendant, an individual who was not a corporate director but who was appointed by the court to serve as a co-conservator of an estate that included several corporations, engaged in illegal conduct that could prove an oppression claim. However, the affidavit was presented to the District Court after trial as part of the posttrial attorney fee proceedings. Thus, the District Court did not err by determining that the plaintiff presented no evidence at trial that the defendant engaged in fraud and by concluding that an oppression claim could not be maintained against the defendant. McCann v. McCann, 2018 MT 207, 392 Mont. 385, 425 P.3d 682.

Random References Inadequate to Plead Fraud: As a part of refinancing a marital home, the defendant quitclaimed her interest, right, and title to the home to her husband, who died the following year. Ultimately, the loan went into default and the plaintiff bank served the defendant notice to leave the home, which she refused. The plaintiff then filed a complaint for unlawful detainer and also filed cross-claims that referred to fraud. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the plaintiff. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that the defendant's general allegations of fraud did not satisfy the particularity required to plead fraud. Bank of America, N.A. v. Alexander, 2017 MT 31, 386 Mont. 305, 389 P.3d 1020.

Rule 10. Form of Pleadings.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 10 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and conform them to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

Rule 11. Signing Pleadings, Motions, and other Papers; Representations to the Court; Sanctions.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 11 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

Rule 11(a)(2)[sic] requires the signor of pleadings to include a telephone number consistent with the revised Federal Rules and most local rules.

Rule 11(c)(2) is substantively changed to follow the Federal approach which provides that a sanctions motion must be served but not filed until 21 days after service. This gives the targeted party the chance to withdraw the offending document.

The Court adopted the language in Rule 11(e) as part of rule amendments to encourage limited scope representation, by order dated March 15, 2011. It has been renumbered to fit in with the comprehensive 2011 revision of these rules.

Case Notes

Sanctions Against Conservator Proper: In a guardianship and conservatorship proceeding, a conservator appealed a District Court order that required him to personally pay the guardian's reasonable fees for preparing for hearings at which the conservator challenged the fees of one of his joint conservators. The Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in imposing sanctions because the conservator's objections to the joint conservator's fees lacked substance and were filed for an improper purpose. In re Guardianship of A.M.M., 2015 MT 250, 380 Mont. 451, 356 P.3d 474.

Sanctions Against Lawyer and Client — Procedural Concerns Not Substantial: The plaintiff sued the defendants over their attempt to collect a dental bill. The District Court ultimately granted summary judgment against the plaintiff and sanctioned her and her counsel for discovery abuses, vexatious litigation, misrepresentations, and failure to attend a pretrial conference. On appeal of the sanctions, the plaintiff's counsel argued that the District Court did not follow sanction motion procedures outlined in Rule 11, M.R.Civ.P. While the Supreme Court reversed some of the sanctions applying to vexatious litigation, it affirmed other sanctions, holding that the District Court was justified in awarding some of the sanctions under Rule 61, M.R.Civ.P., as the procedural error did not affect any party's substantial rights. Serrania v. LPH, Inc., 2015 MT 113, 379 Mont. 17, 347 P.3d 1237.

Sanctions Upheld: An attorney appealed the District Court's imposition of monetary sanctions against her, arguing that the sanctions were too severe when compared to the sanctions imposed in other reported cases. The Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that each case of Rule 11, M.R.Civ.P., sanctions must be based on its own facts and circumstances and that, given the facts and circumstances of the present case, the District Court did not abuse its discretion. In re Morin, 2013 MT 146, 370 Mont. 305, 302 P.3d 96.

Rule 12. Defenses and Objections: When and How Presented; Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings; Consolidating Motions; Waiving Defenses; Pretrial Hearing.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 12 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. The times set in the former Rule at 10 or 20 days have been revised to 14 or 21 days. See Committee Notes to Rule 6.

Rule 12(a)(3) is a substantive amendment taken from the 2000 Amendments to the Federal Rules. The Federal Committee Note explains: "Time is needed for the [State] to determine whether to provide representation to the defendant officer or employee. If the [State] provides representation, the need for an extended answer period is the same as in actions against the [State], a [State] agency, or a [State] officer sued in an official capacity." The time set for the State to answer in Rules 12(a)(2) and (3) is 42 days, following the 7-day increment approach of Rule 6.

Rule 12(a)(4) is a clarifying amendment taken from the restyled 2007 Federal Rules. The Federal Committee Note explains: "Former Rule [12(a)] referred to an [action] that postpones disposition of a motion 'until [ ] trial on the merits.' Rule 12(a)(4) now refers to postponing disposition 'until trial.' The new expression avoids the ambiguity that inheres in 'trial on the merits,' which may become confusing when there is a separate trial of a single issue or another event different from a single all-encompassing trial."

Rule 12(b)(3) reincorporates improper venue as a Rule 12(b) defense, replacing the 1965 Amendment adding subsections 12(b)(i)(iii), which originally were intended to clarify the procedure for change of venue under section 25-2-201. Subsection (i) was an unnecessary reference to the venue statute, which like other statutory defenses presentable under Rule 12(b) controls regardless of whether it is incorporated into the rules. Subsection (ii) required presentation of "every defense in law or fact" in a change of venue motion, and reserved consideration of those other defenses for the new court if the original court granted the change in venue; Rules 12(g)(2) and 12(h)(1) already require the presentation of all available defenses under 12(b)(2)(5) in a Rule 12(b) motion under penalty of waiver, and the final sentence of Rule 12(b) retains the reservation of non-venue defenses for the new court. Subsection (iii) repeats the 21-day response requirement applicable to all 12(b) motions, but provides for later change of venue within 21 days after the discovery of reason to believe that an impartial trial cannot be had in the original venue; this exception to the 21-day response rule has been relocated to Rule 12(h), which addresses waiver and preservation of defenses.

Rule 12(d), addressing hearings on 12(b) defenses before trial, and Rule 12(i), addressing the conversion of a Rule 12 motion presenting matters outside the pleadings to a Rule 56 motion for summary judgment, have been switched to reflect the usual order in which they may be asserted in a case. This revision conforms with the restyled Federal Rules of Civil Procedure effective December 1, 2007.

Case Notes

District Court Required to Consider Only Factual Allegations for Motion for Judgment on Pleadings: When considering a motion for judgment on the pleadings under Rule 12(c), M.R.Civ.P., a District Court is required to consider only well-pleaded factual allegations. The court is not mandated to accept as true any legal conclusions regarding contract or statutory interpretations. Flathead Management Partners, LLC v. Jystad, 2019 MT 289, 398 Mont. 121, 454 P.3d 679.

Breach of Contract Claim — Contract Clear and Unambiguous — Judgment on Pleadings Proper: The parties entered into a contract for the defendants to purchase an airplane from the plaintiff. The contract provided that the defendants would conduct an inspection of the plane; however, they withdrew their offer without inspecting the plane. The plaintiff filed suit alleging breach of contract, and the District Court granted the plaintiff judgment on the pleadings. The defendants appealed, arguing that the language in the contract was ambiguous and that extrinsic evidence should be allowed. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment on the pleadings, holding that the language in the contract was clear and unambiguous and that the District Court had been correct to exclude extrinsic evidence. Kalispell Aircraft Co., LLC v. Patterson, 2019 MT 142, 396 Mont. 182, 443 P.3d 1100.

Broad Restrictive Covenants — Business Use Applicable to Owner as Well as Tenants — Noxious or Offensive Activity — Summary Judgment Improper: A restrictive covenant between two parties, including an assisted living service provider that provided assisted living services to its tenants, prohibited the use of certain real property for business or commercial use and noxious or offensive activity. The District Court found that the complaint failed to state a claim concerning violations of the restrictive covenants by a tenant conducting business on the premises, but the court erred in dismissing the complaint because the plaintiff was asserting that the assisted living service owner, not the tenants, was conducting business on the property in a way that exceeded residential use. Likewise, the District Court erred in dismissing a claim concerning quiet enjoyment because the covenants applied broadly, both to activities and actors covered, and the complaint pleaded sufficient facts to allege a violation. Cossitt v. Flathead Indus., Inc., 2018 MT 82, 391 Mont. 156, 415 P.3d 486.

Failure of Amended Complaint to State Sufficient Facts — District Court's Failure to Convert Motion to Dismiss Claim to Motion for Summary Judgment Proper: The District Court correctly concluded that the plaintiffs' amended compliant failed to state sufficient facts under the standards of Rule 12(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P., entitling them to relief on all essential elements of their asserted negligence, negligent misrepresentation, fraud, and Montana Consumer Protection Act claims. The complaint stated insufficient facts to give rise to a fiduciary relationship on the part of the defendant lender, and a lender has no duty to forego or prevent foreclosure and may refuse to modify or renegotiate a loan. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in failing to convert the defendant's motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment sua sponte because, regardless of a mere affidavit in opposition to a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(d), M.R.Civ.P., a District Court retains the discretion to convert a motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment. Anderson v. ReconTrust Co., 2017 MT 313, 390 Mont. 12, 407 P.3d 692.

County Financial Mismanagement — Insufficient Taxpayer Standing: The plaintiff taxpayers argued that the failure of the defendant, Glacier County, to cure its alleged financial mismanagement would foreseeably result in property tax increases, but Glacier County had adequate financial resources to meet its liabilities and it had planned corrective actions in response to audit deficiencies. Even if Glacier County had inadequately budgeted for certain funds, the plaintiffs' alleged foreseeable economic injury was insufficient to establish the constitutional "case-or controversy" requirement for standing to sue the county. Mitchell v. Glacier County, 2017 MT 258, 389 Mont. 122, 406 P.3d 427.

Informal Mail Service on Defendant Corporation Insufficient to Establish Personal Jurisdiction — Pro Se Litigant — Service of Process: Although pro se litigants are often granted wide latitude regarding substantive pleading requirements, the District Court correctly dismissed a pro se litigant's complaint due to his failure to strictly comply with the mandatory procedural rules for proper service of process on a defendant corporation, regardless of whether the defendant corporation had actual knowledge of the complaint. Nolan v. Riverstone Health Care, 2017 MT 63, 387 Mont. 97, 391 P.3d 95.

Insurance Company Indemnification Agreement Valid — Partial Summary Judgment on Pleadings Proper: The District Court did not err in granting partial summary judgment on the pleadings to a plaintiff insurance company. The District Court properly limited its decision on partial summary judgment to the issue of whether the indemnity agreements allowed the plaintiff to seek indemnity for appropriate expenses while reserving the issue of damages and the amount of damages for the trier of fact. Moreover, the indemnity agreements did not violate 28-2-701 and 28-2-702 because they did not provide the plaintiff with carte blanche indemnification and the defendant insured was not required to indemnify the plaintiff for any illegal actions. Ohio Farmers Ins. Co. v. Jem Contracting, Inc., 2016 MT 343, 386 Mont. 49, 386 P.3d 613.

Claims Against Tribal Government Dismissed — Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Sovereign Immunity: The plaintiff was pulled over on an Indian reservation and was arrested on a warrant for outstanding parole violations. He sued the tribal officer, the tribal police department, and the tribal government, alleging claims of libel, defamation, and false imprisonment, among others. The District Court dismissed the plaintiff's case based on its lack of subject matter jurisdiction and the sovereign immunity of the tribe. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the District Court did not have jurisdiction over the plaintiff's claims. Crawford v. Couture, 2016 MT 291, 385 Mont. 350, 384 P.3d 1038.

Claims for Breach of Duties Against Corporate Representatives Not Prohibited by Corporate Dissolution: The plaintiff sued the defendant, a corporation owned by the plaintiff and his estranged siblings, seeking dissolution of the entity and damages. The plaintiff alleged breach of fiduciary duties and misappropriation of corporate funds. After the parties eventually agreed to the dissolution, the District Court dissolved the company and appointed a receiver. Subsequently, the plaintiff filed a motion seeking to amend his complaint to assert punitive damages and clarify compensatory damages and other discovery motions. The District Court dismissed the complaint for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, reasoning that the case was not justiciable due to the dissolution. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that while the plaintiff achieved one of his interests in the dissolution, his other claims persisted; thus the District Court improperly concluded that it lacked subject matter jurisdiction. Kulko v. Davail, Inc., 2015 MT 340, 381 Mont. 511, 363 P.3d 430.

Dismissal Based on Expired Statute of Limitations Improper — Date Claims Accrued Unclear: Plaintiffs were radiologists who had contracted with the defendant hospital for a number of years to provide radiology services to its patients. After the hospital closed its radiology department to all nonemployee physicians in 2011, the plaintiffs filed a complaint alleging unfair trade practices and intentional interference with prospective advantage. The District Court granted the defendant's motion to dismiss the complaint as untimely, concluding that the statute of limitations started running from the time the parties' exclusive contract for services had expired, in 2009. The plaintiffs appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed the District Court and remanded the case for further proceedings, holding that dismissal was improper because the Supreme Court could not determine from the pleadings when the plaintiffs' claims had accrued. Mont. Interventional & Diagnostic Radiology Specialists v. St. Peter's Hospital, 2015 MT 258, 381 Mont. 25, 355 P.3d 777.

Undisputed Relevant Material Facts — No Abuse of Discretion to Deny Evidentiary Hearing on Subject Matter Jurisdiction: The plaintiff was an Ohio resident who worked for the defendant, a company whose principal place of business was Montana. After he was terminated, the plaintiff filed a wrongful discharge suit against the defendant in Montana. The defendant filed a motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, which the District Court granted. On appeal, the plaintiff argued that the District Court erred in granting the motion without holding an evidentiary hearing. The Supreme Court disagreed because the most relevant facts for resolving the motion, that is, where the plaintiff entered into his employment agreement and where he performed his employment, were not in dispute. Therefore, the Supreme Court concluded the District Court did not abuse its discretion in ruling on the motion without holding an evidentiary hearing. Harrington v. Energy West, Inc., 2015 MT 233, 380 Mont. 298, 356 P.3d 441.

Water Court's Consideration of Objection to Preliminary Decree — Rule 12(b)(6) Jurisprudence Inapplicable: The Water Court is not required to apply Rule 12(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P., and accept the truth of factual allegations when considering an objection to a preliminary decree. Rather, a properly filed claim of water right constitutes prima facie proof of its content until the issuance of a final decree. In re Crow Water Compact, 2015 MT 217, 380 Mont. 168, 354 P.3d 1217.

Allegation of Unequal Treatment and Unequal Opportunity Sufficient for Standing: A plaintiff's allegation that a hospital's billing practices and the Montana Preferred Provider Agreements Act violated Montana antitrust laws and the Montana Constitution by discriminating against her on the basis of uninsured status was sufficient for plaintiff to pursue her claim. The Supreme Court reasoned that alleged unequal treatment and unequal opportunity to obtain a benefit is an injury for standing purposes. Gazelka v. St. Peter's Hosp., 2015 MT 127, 379 Mont. 142, 347 P.3d 1287.

District Court Decision Regarding Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction Appropriate — Oral Hearing Not Required — No Due Process Concerns for Failure to Provide Hearing: In a child custody dispute, the District Court did not abuse its discretion by dismissing the case for lack of subject matter jurisdiction without providing for the opportunity for an oral hearing. The Supreme Court determined that Rule 2(c), M.U.D.C.R. (Title 25, ch. 19), and Rule 12(i), M.R.Civ.P., do not require the District Court to hold an oral hearing. As applied to the facts, there was ample evidence, based on affidavits and other filings of the parties, upon which the District Court could base its subject matter jurisdiction decision. Moreover, the District Court did not fail to afford due process by refusing to hold a hearing, as a decision was not issued regarding the child custody issue, and the petitioning parent was not deprived of a liberty interest. In re Marriage of Sampley, 2015 MT 121, 379 Mont. 131, 347 P.3d 1281.

Express Easement Created by Virtue of Writing — Not Easement by Necessity: The plaintiffs owned land that was subject to a written easement allowing ingress and egress to the defendant's property. The easement was the only access to the defendant's property when it was recorded in 1978, but subsequent access was created and used. The plaintiffs claimed the easement was an implied easement created by necessity, the necessity no longer existed, external evidence should be considered regarding its creation, the defendant's potential use could overburden the estate, and the defendant had abandoned the easement. The District Court granted the defendant's motion to dismiss based on the plaintiffs' failure to state a justiciable claim for relief. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the easement was an express easement by virtue of being in writing, that the terms of the easement did not require external evidence, that ingress and egress allowed for a road and for vehicle use, and that mere nonuse did not establish abandonment. Woods v. Shannon, 2015 MT 76, 378 Mont. 365, 344 P.3d 413.

Notice of Appearance Not Initial Pleading for Waiver of Personal Jurisdiction: The plaintiff filed suit against an out-of-state company. The defendant's counsel filed a notice of appearance and, 2 weeks later, a motion to dismiss the lawsuit based on lack of personal jurisdiction over the defendant. The plaintiff argued that the defendant had waived jurisdiction because it did not raise the defense in the notice of appearance. The District Court disagreed, ruling that the notice was not a pleading under Rule 12, M.R.Civ.P. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's conclusion that a notice of appearance itself is not a responsive pleading and does not acquiesce to the jurisdiction of the court unless it is accompanied by a motion or a responsive pleading. The Milky Whey, Inc. v. Dairy Partners, LLC, 2015 MT 18, 378 Mont. 75, 342 P.3d 13.

Single Montana Bank Transaction Insufficient to Trigger Personal Jurisdiction: The plaintiff sued the defendants in Montana concerning a Florida real estate transaction. The defendants moved to dismiss for a lack of personal jurisdiction, arguing that they were not Montana residents, they were not physically located in Montana, they were not doing business with the Montana resident, and the only connection to Montana was that the plaintiff wired money from his Montana bank account. The District Court found that there was no general personal jurisdiction because the defendant lacked continuous or systematic contacts with Montana. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the minimum contacts analysis looks to the defendant's contacts with the forum state itself, not the defendant's contacts with the persons who reside there. Thus, the single bank transaction out of Montana was insufficient to cause the claim to accrue in Montana. Tackett v. Duncan, 2014 MT 253, 376 Mont. 348, 334 P.3d 920.

District Court's Order Dismissing Complaint Appealable Order: Because the plaintiff is barred by the expiration of the statute of limitations from refiling his complaint, the District Court's order acts as a final judgment and is appealable. Seamster v. Musselshell County Sheriff's Office, 2014 MT 84, 374 Mont. 358, 321 P.3d 829.

District Court Assuming Subject Matter Jurisdiction Over Estate When Tribal Council Unequivocally Declined to Assert Subject Matter Jurisdiction — No Error: A court may take judicial notice of records of any court of this state or of any court of record of the United States or any court of record of any state of the United States. A tribal court order, though not expressly listed in the rule, is a record analogous to those listed in Rule 202(b)(6), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), and is thus law of which the Supreme Court may take judicial notice. In re Estate of Gopher, 2013 MT 264, 372 Mont. 9, 310 P.3d 521.

No Violation of Due Process Rights for Failure to Hold Hearing on Motion to Dismiss: The plaintiff alleged his constitutional due process rights were violated when the District Court failed to hold a hearing on the defendant's motion to dismiss, but there is no authority for the assertion that the District Court was required to hold a hearing when a hearing on the motion was not requested by the parties. Kananen v. South, 2013 MT 232, 371 Mont. 289, 307 P.3d 309.

Same-Sex Couples Seeking Declaratory and Injunctive Relief for Rights Afforded Married Couples — Relief Exceeds Bounds of Justiciable Controversy — Remanded to Allow Plaintiffs to Amend Complaint: Six same-sex couples filed suit against the state seeking declaratory and injunctive relief in order to receive protections and benefits equal to those provided to married couples under state law. Although they claimed that Montana's statutory scheme denied them several rights under Article II of the Montana Constitution — among them, the rights to equal protection, due process, and dignity — the plaintiffs did not seek a declaration that particular statutes were unconstitutional. The District Court granted the state's motion to dismiss, concluding that the matter exceeded the bounds of a justiciable controversy and that to grant the plaintiffs the broad injunction and declaratory judgment they sought would not terminate the controversy giving rise to the proceeding. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal but remanded the matter to the District Court to allow the plaintiffs the opportunity to amend their complaint to identify the statutes they claim violate their constitutional rights. Donaldson v. St., 2012 MT 288, 367 Mont. 228, 292 P.3d 364.

Dismissal for Failure to State Claim Improper — Encroaching Tree May Constitute Trespass: While the plaintiff failed to state a claim for nuisance based on view obstruction, the plaintiff did allege facts sufficient to support a complaint for trespass since the complaint alleged that the defendant's tree roots entered, remained on, and damaged the plaintiff's property, which is sufficient to state a legal claim for trespass under Montana law. Martin v. Artis, 2012 MT 249, 366 Mont. 513, 290 P.3d 687.

Rule 13. Counterclaim and Crossclaim.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 13 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

Rule 13(b) is a clarifying amendment taken from the restyled 2007 Federal Rules. The Federal Committee Note explains: "The meaning of former Rule 13(b) is better expressed by deleting 'not arising out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the opposing party's claim.' Both as a matter of intended meaning and current practice, a party may state as a permissive counterclaim a claim that does not grow out of the same transaction or occurrence as an opposing party's claim even though one of the exceptions in Rule 13(a) means the claim is not a compulsory counterclaim."

The Committee followed the Federal lead in deleting Rule 13(f) as redundant of Rule 15 and potentially confusing because of that. The following Federal Comment to the 2009 Amendment to Rule 13 explains the purpose of the deletion:

Rule 13(f) is deleted as largely redundant and potentially misleading. An amendment to add a counterclaim will be governed by Rule 15. Rule 15(a)(1) permits some amendments to be made as a matter of course or with the opposing party's written consent. When the court's leave is required, the reasons described in Rule 13(f) for permitting amendment of a pleading to add an omitted counterclaim sound different from the general amendment standard in Rule 15(a)(2), but seem to be administered — as they should be — according to the same standard directing that leave should be freely given when justice so requires. The independent existence of Rule 13(f) has, however, created some uncertainty as to the availability of relation back of the amendment under Rule 15(c). See 6 C. Wright, A. Miller & M. Kane, Federal Practice & Procedure: Civil 2d, § 1430 (1990). Deletion of Rule 13(f) ensures that relation back is governed by the tests that apply to all other pleading amendments.

The Committee recommends that, in order to conform to the Federal numbering and lettering system as closely as possible, Rule 13(f) will maintain its place as 13(f) in the Rule but with the simple indication of "Abrogated." Rules 13(g), (h), and (i) remain as lettered.

Rule 14. Third-Party Practice.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 14 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. To conform to the Federal Rule, the time in Rule 14(a)(1) has been changed from 30 to 14 days (the time in which a third party plaintiff must, by motion, obtain the court's leave if it files the third-party complaint after serving its original answer).

Rules 13(a)(2)(B)[sic] and (a)(3) contain clarifying amendments taken from the restyled 2007 Federal Rules. The Federal Committee Note explains: "Former Rule 14 twice refers to counterclaims under Rule 13. In each case, the operation of Rule 13(a) depends on the state of the action at the time the pleading is filed. If plaintiff and third-party defendant have become opposing parties because one has made a claim for relief against the other, Rule 13(a) requires assertion of any counterclaim that grows out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of that claim. Rules 14(a)(2)(B) and (a)(3) reflect the distinction between compulsory and permissive counterclaims."

Rule 14(b) contains a "style-substance" amendment changing the term "counterclaim" to "claim" taken from the restyled 2007 Federal Rules. The Federal Committee Note explains: "A plaintiff should be on equal footing with the defendant in making third-party claims, whether the claim against the plaintiff is asserted as a counterclaim or as another form of claim. The limit imposed by the former reference to 'counterclaim' is deleted."

Case Notes

District Court's Failure to Rule on Severance Motion Not Abuse of Discretion: In an action involving several complex business transactions, the defendant bank filed a severance motion. The District Court failed to rule on the motion, and the motion was deemed denied under local District Court rules. On appeal, the defendant argued that failure to rule on its motion consisted of a per se abuse of discretion. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that a failure to rule on a motion does not constitute an abuse of discretion. Masters Group Int'l, Inc. v. Comerica Bank, 2015 MT 192, 380 Mont. 1, 352 P.3d 1101.

Rule 15. Amended and Supplemental Pleadings.

Committee Notes

Rule 15 of the Federal Rules was substantially modified and Montana has elected to follow these Federal modifications. The Federal Committee Comment to Rule 15, which explains the changes and the rationale, is as follows:

Rule 15(a)(1) is amended to make three changes in the time allowed to make one amendment as a matter of course.

Former Rule 15(a) addressed amendment of a pleading to which a responsive pleading is required by distinguishing between the means used to challenge the pleading. Serving a responsive pleading terminated the right to amend. Serving a motion attacking the pleading did not terminate the right to amend, because a motion is not a "pleading" as defined in Rule 7. The right to amend survived beyond decision of the motion unless the decision expressly cut off the right to amend.

The distinction drawn in former Rule 15(a) is changed in two ways. First, the right to amend once as a matter of course terminates 21 days after service of a motion under Rule 12(b), (e), or (f). This provision will force the pleader to consider carefully and promptly the wisdom of amending to meet the arguments in the motion. A responsive amendment may avoid the need to decide the motion or reduce the number of issues to be decided, and will expedite determination of issues that otherwise might be raised seriatim. It also should advance other pretrial proceedings.

Second, the right to amend once as a matter of course is no longer terminated by service of a responsive pleading. The responsive pleading may point out issues that the original pleader had not considered and persuade the pleader that amendment is wise. Just as amendment was permitted by former Rule 15(a) in response to a motion, so the amended rule permits one amendment as a matter of course in response to a responsive pleading. The right is subject to the same 21-day limit as the right to amend in response to a motion.

The 21-day periods to amend once as a matter of course after service of a responsive pleading or after service of a designated motion are not cumulative. If a responsive pleading is served after one of the designated motions is served, for example, there is no new 21-day period.

Finally, amended Rule 15(a)(1) extends from 20 to 21 days the period to amend a pleading to which no responsive pleading is allowed and omits the provision that cuts off the right if the action is on the trial calendar. Rule 40 no longer refers to a trial calendar, and many courts have abandoned formal trial calendars. It is more effective to rely on scheduling orders or other pretrial directions to establish time limits for amendment in the few situations that otherwise might allow one amendment as a matter of course at a time that would disrupt trial preparations. Leave to amend still can be sought under Rule 15(a)(2), or at and after trial under Rule 15(b).

Amended Rule 15(a)(3) extends from 10 to 14 days the period to respond to an amended pleading.

Abrogation of Rule 13(f) establishes Rule 15 as the sole rule governing amendment of a pleading to add a counterclaim.

The times set in the former rule at 10 or 20 days have been revised to 14 or 21 days. See the Note to Rule 6.

Rule 15(c)(1)(C)(i) is a clarifying amendment taken from the restyled 2007 Federal Rules. The Federal Committee Note explains: "Former Rule 15(c)(3)(A) called for notice of the 'institution' of the action. Rule 15(c)(1)(C)(i) omits the reference to 'institution' as potentially confusing. What counts is that the party to be brought in has notice of the existence of the action, whether or not the notice includes details as to its 'institution.'"

Case Notes

Claims Developed During Litigation: In protracted litigation between the city of Billings and the police union, the District Court decided not to rule on certain claims for overtime payment. On appeal, the city argued that such claims were outside the pleadings. The Supreme Court remanded for consideration of the issue, noting that the claims were developed during discovery and were testified to during trial and that the city had the chance to address them on the merits. Based on Rule 15(b)(2), M.R.Civ.P., the Supreme Court stated that the failure to amend the complaint was not fatal to the issue. Watters v. Billings, 2019 MT 255, 397 Mont. 428, 451 P.3d 60.

Denial of Motion to Amend Filed Within Motions Deadline — Abuse of Discretion — Judgment Vacated: The plaintiff, a financial services company, financed the defendant's purchase of a fifth-wheel trailer from a dealership. Although the dealership had told the defendant that the trailer was brand new, it required thousands of dollars in repairs shortly after she purchased it. After the defendant stopped making payments on the trailer, the plaintiff subsequently filed a lawsuit seeking possession of the trailer based on the loan's default. The dealership later joined in the lawsuit as a third-party defendant. After the plaintiff filed a motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff moved to amend her pleading within the motions deadline. However, the District Court denied the motion, finding that it would unduly prejudice the dealership, and issued a judgment in favor of the dealership. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed and vacated the judgment, noting that the dealership could not claim undue prejudice because it had not filed a motion for summary judgment and holding that the District Court had abused its discretion in not allowing the defendant to amend her pleading. Ally Financial, Inc. v. Stevenson, 2018 MT 278, 393 Mont. 332, 430 P.3d 522.

ERISA — Motion to Amend Answer — Abuse of Discretion for Granting Insurance Company Leave to Amend — Undue Prejudice to Class Not Considered — No Reasonable Justification Presented by Insurance Company: The District Court abused its discretion by granting the defendant insurance company leave to amend its answer to assert Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) preemption. The Supreme Court reasoned there were no extraordinary circumstances that would warrant granting the defendant's motion to amend. The plaintiff and the class cited to three specific reasons prejudice would occur: (1) the length of the delay, (2) the parties had conducted extensive discovery, and (3) the case had already been appealed to the Supreme Court for class certification based on state law claims. Conversely, the defendant did not offer any reasonable justification for the delay. Allowing the defendant to amend to include ERISA preemption would have effectively destroyed the class, forcing the plaintiff and the class to either seek recertification based on ERISA claims or proceed alone, 10 years after the plaintiff's injury and more than 7 years after she filed suit. Consequently, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff and the class she represented would be unduly prejudiced by allowing the defendant to amend and that the District Court conducted an inadequate inquiry of the extraordinary circumstances of the case. Motion to Amend Complaint to Strike All But One Original Claim and to Assert Five New Legal Theories — Denial of Motion Proper: The defendant terminated the plaintiff's employment, and the plaintiff filed suit in Montana even though many events surrounding his employment took place in Ohio. In earlier litigation, Harrington v. Energy West, Inc., 2015 MT 233, 380 Mont. 298, 356 P.3d 441 (Harrington I), the Supreme Court affirmed that Montana courts had subject matter jurisdiction over the plaintiff's claims and remanded the case to the District Court for further proceedings. The plaintiff then filed a motion to amend his complaint to drop all but one of his original claims and to assert five new legal theories. The District Court denied the motion to amend. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, agreeing that the amendment, which had been filed 2 years after the initial complaint, would prejudice the defendant and was contrary to the court's remand instructions in Harrington I. Harrington v. Energy West, Inc., 2017 MT 141, 387 Mont. 497, 396 P.3d 114.

Petition to Probate 13 Years After Death — Decedent Died Intestate: Prior to his death, the decedent dictated a will to his niece and her husband. The couple did not petition to probate the will until 13 years after his death. The decedent's nephew challenged the will. The District Court ultimately held that the decedent died intestate. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that none of the statutory exceptions to the 3-year time bar in 72-3-122 applied, that the estate's motion to amend its pleadings was properly denied, that the nephew's motion to amend his pleadings was properly granted because it was timely and based on newly discovered evidence, that the decedent died intestate, and that the District Court properly awarded costs under 72-12-206. In re Estate of Kurth, 2016 MT 188, 384 Mont. 261, 378 P.3d 1151.

Request to Amend Complaint After Motion for Summary Judgment Properly Denied — No Extraordinary Circumstances: In an easement dispute, plaintiffs sought to amend their complaint to include new theories regarding the existence of an easement and by naming the actual titleholder of the property. The request to amend was sought nearly a year and a half after the original complaint was filed and after the defendants filed a motion for summary judgment. Upon objection by the defendants, the District Court denied the request to amend and the plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court concluded that no extraordinary circumstances existed to allow the complaint to be amended nearly a year and a half after the action was initiated and after the defendants had already filed a motion for summary judgment. Bardsley v. Pluger, 2015 MT 301, 381 Mont. 284, 358 P.3d 907, following Peuse v. Malkuch, 275 Mont. 221, 911 P.2d 1153 (1996).

New Plaintiffs' Claims — Relation Back to Original Complaint: Because the underlying transactions were induced by common misrepresentations, the claims of the new plaintiffs arose out of the same conduct, transaction, or occurrence and relate back to the original complaint. Garza v. Forquest Ventures, Inc., 2015 MT 284, 381 Mont. 189, 358 P.3d 189.

Wife Not Domiciled in State for 90 Days Preceding Petition for Dissolution — Cured by Supplemental Pleading: The wife filed for dissolution of marriage and later filed a supplemental pleading establishing Montana residency meeting the 90-day requirement in 40-4-104. The husband did not dispute the supplemental pleading; however, he moved to dismiss because the wife had not resided in Montana for 90 days prior to the initial pleading. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the legislative purpose underlying the 90-day domicile requirement was not harmed by allowing the case to proceed and the supplemental pleading cured any jurisdictional defect. In re Marriage of Buck, 2014 MT 344, 377 Mont. 393, 340 P.3d 546.

Property Owners Barred From Amending Petition — Rules of Civil Procedure Inapplicable: The plaintiff property owners filed a petition for review of an annexation ordinance before the 30-day statutory deadline. However, the plaintiffs initially filed the petition without a majority of real property owners, instead naming John Does 1-200. The plaintiffs eventually amended the petition by including more property owners pursuant to the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. The District Court dismissed the petition, holding that the plaintiffs failed to meet the 30-day deadline and rejecting the amendment of the petition. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the Rules of Civil Procedure do not supersede the provisions of statutes relating to appeals to or review by the District Courts. When the rules are inconsistent with statutory provisions, the statutory provisions govern. Sharp v. Eureka, 2014 MT 216, 376 Mont. 221, 331 P.3d 840.

District Court's Order Denying Motion to Amend — Abuse of Discretion: When the plaintiff's motion to amend was not made in bad faith, would not prejudice the opposing party, and resulted in substantial prejudice to the plaintiff, the denial of the motion to amend constitutes an abuse of discretion. Seamster v. Musselshell County Sheriff's Office, 2014 MT 84, 374 Mont. 358, 321 P.3d 829.

District Court's Order Dismissing Complaint Appealable Order: Because the plaintiff is barred by the expiration of the statute of limitations from refiling his complaint, the District Court's order acts as a final judgment and is appealable. Seamster v. Musselshell County Sheriff's Office, 2014 MT 84, 374 Mont. 358, 321 P.3d 829.

Plaintiff's Failure to File Accurate Complaint Not Detrimental — Defendant Had Notice of Nature of Claim: A tenant filed a complaint with the Human Rights Commission alleging that her landlord committed sexual harassment under the public accommodations provision in 49-2-304. The Commission determined that 49-2-304 was inapplicable, as the rental property was private property, but it allowed the tenant to pursue a claim based on the real estate transaction provision in 49-2-305. The landlord then petitioned the District Court for judicial review, reasoning that his due process rights would be violated if the tenant was allowed to pursue a claim under 49-2-305. The District Court agreed with the landlord and reversed the Commission, but the Supreme Court, in turn, reversed the District Court and determined that while the tenant could have been clearer in asserting a claim under 49-2-305, the landlord had sufficient notice of the nature of the claim and no evidence was presented showing that the landlord would have presented any additional evidence in a 49-2-305 defense. Bates v. Neva, 2013 MT 246, 371 Mont. 466, 308 P.3d 114.

Same-Sex Couples Seeking Declaratory and Injunctive Relief for Rights Afforded Married Couples — Relief Exceeds Bounds of Justiciable Controversy — Remanded to Allow Plaintiffs to Amend Complaint: Six same-sex couples filed suit against the state seeking declaratory and injunctive relief in order to receive protections and benefits equal to those provided to married couples under state law. Although they claimed that Montana's statutory scheme denied them several rights under Article II of the Montana Constitution — among them, the rights to equal protection, due process, and dignity — the plaintiffs did not seek a declaration that particular statutes were unconstitutional. The District Court granted the state's motion to dismiss, concluding that the matter exceeded the bounds of a justiciable controversy and that to grant the plaintiffs the broad injunction and declaratory judgment they sought would not terminate the controversy giving rise to the proceeding. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal but remanded the matter to the District Court to allow the plaintiffs the opportunity to amend their complaint to identify the statutes they claim violate their constitutional rights. Donaldson v. St., 2012 MT 288, 367 Mont. 228, 292 P.3d 364.

Motion to Amend Answer Properly Denied — Counterclaims Subject to Arbitration Agreement: The District Court denied the respondents' motion for leave to file an amended answer under Rule 15(a), M.R.Civ.P., that would have added tort counterclaims to a limited liability company (LLC) dissolution proceeding. In denying the motion, the District Court reasoned that the LLC operating agreement required binding arbitration to settle disputes of this nature and that allowing the counterclaims would result in additional claims, protracted discovery, and additional delay while causing prejudice and detriment to the petitioners. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court and determined that the counterclaims would have been legally insufficient and futile based on the arbitration clause in the operating agreement. Gordon v. Kuzara, 2012 MT 206, 366 Mont. 243, 286 P.3d 895, distinguishing Gordon v. Kuzara, 2010 MT 275, 358 Mont. 432, 245 P.3d 37.

Rule 16. Pretrial Conferences; Scheduling; Management.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 16 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

Rule 16(b)(2) contains a substantive amendment drafted by the Committee. The amendment replaces the judge's duty to issue a scheduling order 120 days after filing a complaint with a party's right to request a scheduling order that must issue 90 days after the request. The purpose of the amendment is to allow each party to assess the need and timing for a scheduling order, and to avoid premature issuance of a scheduling order when the parties agree such an order is not yet necessary.

Rules 16(b)(3)(iv)[sic] and 16(c)(2)(D)-(F), (M)-(P) contain a substantive but non-binding amendment taken from the 2006 and 1993 Amendments to the Federal Rules, respectively. The 1993 Federal Committee Note explains: "The primary purposes of the changes in subdivision (c) are to call attention to the opportunities for structuring of trial under Rules 42, 50, and 52 and to eliminate questions that have occasionally been raised regarding the authority of the court to make appropriate orders designed either to facilitate settlement or to provide for an efficient and economical trial."

Rule 16(c)(1) contains a substantive amendment taken from the 1993 and 2007 Amendments to the Federal Rules. The 1993 Federal Committee Note explains in part: "[I]ndeed, a conference is most effective and productive when the parties participate in a spirit of cooperation and mindful of their responsibilities under Rule 1."

Rules 16(d) and 16(e) have been switched to reflect the usual order in which they arise.

Case Notes

Witness Not Disclosed in Initial Pretrial Order — Emergency Continuance — Exclusion Not Arbitrary: In discovery, the plaintiff listed a coworker as a potential witness, but the plaintiff did not list the witness on the final pretrial order. Shortly before trial, one of the plaintiff's other witnesses suffered a medical emergency, and the trial was postponed. On a second final pretrial order, the plaintiff added the coworker as a witness. The defendant objected, arguing that the witness had not been listed on the initial pretrial order. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the District Court did not act arbitrarily or exceed the bounds of reason by disallowing a witness not disclosed on the first pretrial order after an emergency trial continuance. Daley v. Burlington N. Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2018 MT 197, 392 Mont. 311, 425 P.3d 669.

Failure to Comply With Order to Mediate — Default Judgment as Appropriate Sanction: The defendant appealed the District Court's order granting default judgment in favor of the plaintiff as a sanction against the defendant for violating the District Court's scheduling order requiring mediation. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that sufficient evidence existed for the District Court to find that the defendant failed to participate in good faith in the court-ordered mediation and that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in imposing default judgment under Rule 16(f), M.R.Civ.P., for the defendant's failure to comply with the scheduling order. Stafford v. Fockaert, 2016 MT 28, 382 Mont. 178, 366 P.3d 673.

Factual Issues Identified in Pretrial Order: A District Court is not required to address in its final order every factual issue that was identified in the pretrial order. In re Estate of Quirin, 2015 MT 132, 379 Mont. 173, 348 P.3d 658.

Sanctions Against Lawyer and Client — Procedural Concerns Not Substantial: The plaintiff sued the defendants over their attempt to collect a dental bill. The District Court ultimately granted summary judgment against the plaintiff and sanctioned her and her counsel for discovery abuses, vexatious litigation, misrepresentations, and failure to attend a pretrial conference. On appeal of the sanctions, the plaintiff's counsel argued that the District Court did not follow sanction motion procedures outlined in Rule 11, M.R.Civ.P. While the Supreme Court reversed some of the sanctions applying to vexatious litigation, it affirmed other sanctions, holding that the District Court was justified in awarding some of the sanctions under Rule 61, M.R.Civ.P., as the procedural error did not affect any party's substantial rights. Serrania v. LPH, Inc., 2015 MT 113, 379 Mont. 17, 347 P.3d 1237.

Court's Refusal to Extend Trial Beyond Time in Pretrial Order — No Error: After the District Court determined that a quitclaim deed conveying property to the defendant was void and had no legal effect, it denied the defendant's request for reimbursement for mortgage and tax payments that were made on the property held under the voided deed. On appeal, the defendant claimed that the District Court's refusal to extend trial beyond the 2-day trial period set forth in the pretrial order was an abuse of discretion on the grounds that there was not enough time for the defendant to present evidence regarding the request for reimbursement. The Supreme Court determined that the defendant made strategic choices in calling eight witnesses to testify about another issue instead of the request for reimbursement. Consequently, there was no abuse of discretion in the District Court's management of the trial. Fink v. Williams, 2012 MT 304, 367 Mont. 431, 291 P.3d 1140.

Extending Discovery Deadline for Both Parties Based on Good Cause — No Error by Trial Court: The Supreme Court held that the District Court had not abused its discretion by finding that each party had good cause for not meeting discovery deadlines, and it was not error to allow the parties to reopen discovery. Brookins v. Mote, 2012 MT 283, 367 Mont. 193, 292 P.3d 347.

Amendment of Scheduling Order to Allow Expert Witnesses Appropriate: In a dispute over allegedly defective flooring, the District Court did not err when it allowed the scheduling order to be amended to include an expert witness since the plaintiff did not disclose the information that indicated the need for the expert witness until after the disclosure deadline passed. B Bar J Ranch, LLC v. Carlisle Wide Plank Floors, Inc., 2012 MT 246, 366 Mont. 506, 288 P.3d 228.

Rule 17. Plaintiff and Defendant; Capacity; Public Officers.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 17 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

Rule 17(d) incorporates the provisions of previous Rule 25(d)(2), which fit better with Rule 17.

Case Notes

Wrongful Death Action — County Where Plaintiff Resides for Purpose of Venue — Personal Representative's County of Residence: After a woman died in a car accident, her personal representative sued Ford Motor Company and other companies on the decedent's behalf. The defendants filed a motion for change of venue. The District Court denied the motion, and the defendants filed an interlocutory appeal. The Supreme Court found that the applicable venue statute was 25-2-122. It further found that although venue may be proper under more than one county under 25-2-115, pursuant to 25-2-117 no right to move for a change of venue would exist unless the county where the action was filed was proper for none of the defendants. Finally, the Supreme Court found that under Rule 17(1)(a), M.R.Civ.P., in an action for wrongful death the representative of the decedent's estate, rather than the decedent, is the plaintiff for purposes of 25-2-122. Therefore, venue was proper in the personal representative's county of residence. Lucero v. Ford Motor Co., 2019 MT 150, 396 Mont. 221, 444 P.3d 389.

Plaintiff's Business Not Party to Litigation — Assertion of Damages Improper: The plaintiff was injured in a vehicle collision with the defendant. The plaintiff sought personal injury damages and lost income damages on behalf of her business. The District Court concluded that the plaintiff could not seek damages on behalf of the business because it was not a named party. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that a corporation is a separate and distinct entity from its stockholders and that the plaintiff could not bring a claim of lost profits on behalf of the corporation. Cleveland v. Ward, 2016 MT 10, 382 Mont. 118, 364 P.3d 1250.

Appointment of GAL and Conservator — Inability of Parents to Choose Counsel for Child: The custodial parents of a minor child appealed the District Court's order denying their motion to disqualify counsel for their child in a personal injury matter, arguing that they had the right to choose counsel over the opposition of the guardian ad litem (GAL) and conservator, that 37-61-403 and 72-5-427 were unconstitutional, and that 37-61-403 conflicts with the Montana Rules of Professional Conduct. The Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that once the parents consented to the appointment of a GAL and conservator, they divested themselves of the right to choose who would represent their child's personal injury claims. Assuming that the parents were clients under 37-61-403, their failure to comply with the statute by not securing consent of the attorney of record or applying to the District Court to change the attorney of record did not render the statute unconstitutional. Because the parents voluntarily consented to the appointment of the GAL and conservator and, thus, divested themselves of control over the child's legal action, their unhappiness with the decisions of the GAL and conservator did not render 72-5-427 unconstitutional. Rule 1.16, Montana Rules of Professional Conduct, and 37-61-403 work in conjunction: Rule 1.16 provides that an attorney shall withdraw from representation if discharged by a client and 37-61-403 provides the method for how discharge can be accomplished. The final sentence in Rule 18(b) restates a limitation on joinder in tort cases by insurance carriers that has no counterpart in the Federal Rules.

Rule 19. Required Joinder of Parties.

Case Notes

Failure to Join Landowners as Necessary Parties Harmless Error — Substantial Rights Not Violated: In a dispute over the constitutionality of the county zoning protest statute, the intervening landowners who exercised their rights to file a zoning protest alleged the District Court abused its discretion by denying the landowners' motion to dismiss for failure to join them as necessary parties. Although the landowners were necessary parties, they were not entitled to dismissal of the complaint since they were allowed to intervene in the early stages of the litigation and could not demonstrate that their substantial rights were harmed. Williams v. Missoula County, 2013 MT 243, 371 Mont. 356, 308 P.3d 88, distinguishing Ethen Revocable Trust v. River Resource Outfitters, LLC, 2011 MT 143, 361 Mont. 57, 256 P.3d 913.

Rule 20. Permissive Joinder of Parties.

Rule 21. Misjoinder and Non-Joinder of Parties.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 21 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

Rule 22. Interpleader.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 22 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

Rule 22(b) restates a procedure for interpleading a substitute defendant by deposit of property at issue that has no counterpart in the Federal Rules.

Case Notes

Interpleader Action — Avoidance of Unfairness and Race to Judgment — Insurer Allowed to Interplead All Proceeds Despite Other Judgments: The District Court correctly determined that an interpleader action was intended to distribute all available commercial insurance proceeds and that the res, which was the object of the interpleader, was "all available insurance proceeds". The Supreme Court reasoned that Montana's rule interpleader is an equitable remedial device that exists in order to avoid the unfairness that may result to some claimants who have competing claims to the interpleader res but who lose the race to judgment. The conclusion reached by the District Court was consistent with its equitable role of determining the intent of the court and parties when the interpleader proceeding was initially filed. The existence of judgments against the insured and issuance of writs of execution against the policy proceeds did not preclude the insurer from interpleading all insurance proceeds for the purpose of apportioning funds equitably and fairly among the competing claimants. Assoc. Dermatology & Skin Cancer Clinic v. Fitte, 2016 MT 349, 386 Mont. 150, 388 P.3d 632.

Interpleader Action Prevails Over Competing Judgments — Deposit of Insurance Proceeds Not Required for Interpleader Jurisdiction — Proceeds Belong to Interpleader Court: The District Court did not err when it determined that the deposit of funds is not required to establish the interpleader court's jurisdiction under Rule 22, M.R.Civ.P. Consequently, all commercial insurance proceeds were subject to an interpleader action when a complaint for interpleader was filed, despite competing judgment liens and a writ that was served before deposit of the insurance funds but after the date the interpleader action was filed. The proceeds of the insurance policy limit belonged to the interpleader court once the federal court determined there was coverage and they were not subject to attachment and execution through other judgments. Assoc. Dermatology & Skin Cancer Clinic v. Fitte, 2016 MT 349, 386 Mont. 150, 388 P.3d 632.

Rule 23. Class Actions.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 23 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are substantive and are intended to follow the Federal Class Action Rule. The most significant changes are in Rules 24(f), (g), and (h) which are addressed below.

Rule 23(f)(1) follows Federal Rule 23(f) which governs the taking of an appeal from the order of the district court granting or denying class action certification. There was no previous Montana counterpart to this Rule. Rule 23(f)(2), regarding appeal from an order rejecting a proposed class settlement, does not have a counterpart in the Federal Rules, but is based on the recommendation of the American Law Institute, Committee on Aggregate Litigation, Principles of the Law of Aggregate Litigation, Discussion Draft 2, section 3.12.

Federal Rule 23(f)(1) allows an interlocutory appeal in 10 days. Despite the Rule 6 changes to follow 7-day increments with respect to time calculation in most Rules, the 10-day period of the Federal Rule was not changed because such change would have necessitated a companion statutory change. There is no statutory constraint in Montana. For that reason, Montana has followed the 7-day increment approach so that Rules 23(f)(1) and (2) have 14-day interlocutory appeal periods, not 10 as in the Federal Rule.

Rules 23(g) and (h) govern the important subjects of appointment of class counsel and payment of attorney fees and costs to class counsel. Previous Rule 23 did not speak to these two subjects, which is a glaring omission. The appointment of class counsel and the award of fees and costs to class counsel are obviously important subjects that must be addressed in Rule 23.

Case Notes

Reversed Certification of Class: The District Court certified several classes for a class action lawsuit, and the defendant appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed certification of two classes and reversed the certification of the third class because there was no ongoing conduct to enjoin regarding the third class, and prospective relief to the third class would not be indivisible. Knudsen v. Univ. of Mont., 2019 MT 175, 396 Mont. 443, 445 P.3d 834.

Class Certification Denied — Superiority Argument Not Supported by Evidence: The plaintiff filed an action asserting claims in her individual capacity, as well as a claim for a class action. The District Court denied her motion to certify the class on the basis that although the plaintiff met all four of the requirements of numerosity, commonality, typicality, and adequacy of representation, she failed to establish predominance and superiority as required under Rule 23(b)(3), M.R.Civ.P. Finding that the record before the District Court was devoid of any evidence to support a theory of superiority, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's denial of the motion to certify the class. Ascencio v. Orion Int'l Corp., 2018 MT 121, 391 Mont. 336, 417 P.3d 1094.

Order to Account for Class Action Funds Several Years After Last Status Report Proper: The District Court ordered the plaintiff, who was the designated class representative, to distribute funds related to a class action settlement. The plaintiff later sought to keep a portion of the undistributed funds; however, the District Court ordered the plaintiff to turn the funds over to the defendant, the city of Bozeman. The order to turn over the funds was not sent to the parties until nearly 12 years later when the city filed a notice of issue. The District Court then held a hearing ordering the plaintiff to show cause why the funds should not be immediately turned over to the city. The District Court also ordered the plaintiff to provide an accounting of the funds, which the plaintiff appealed to the Supreme Court, claiming that an accounting of an expired judgment is prohibited under 27-2-201. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed, holding that matters of administration, including the distribution and accounting of settlement funds, are left to the broad discretion of the District Court. SW. Mont. Bldg. Indus. Ass'n v. Bozeman, 2018 MT 62, 391 Mont. 55, 414 P.3d 761.

ERISA — Motion to Amend Answer — Abuse of Discretion for Granting Insurance Company Leave to Amend — Undue Prejudice to Class Not Considered — No Reasonable Justification Presented by Insurance Company: The District Court abused its discretion by granting the defendant insurance company leave to amend its answer to assert Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) preemption. The Supreme Court reasoned there were no extraordinary circumstances that would warrant granting the defendant's motion to amend. The plaintiff and the class cited to three specific reasons prejudice would occur: (1) the length of the delay, (2) the parties had conducted extensive discovery, and (3) the case had already been appealed to the Supreme Court for class certification based on state law claims. Conversely, the defendant did not offer any reasonable justification for the delay. Allowing the defendant to amend to include ERISA preemption would have effectively destroyed the class, forcing the plaintiff and the class to either seek recertification based on ERISA claims or proceed alone, 10 years after the plaintiff's injury and more than 7 years after she filed suit. Consequently, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff and the class she represented would be unduly prejudiced by allowing the defendant to amend and that the District Court conducted an inadequate inquiry of the extraordinary circumstances of the case. Rolan v. New W. Health Servs., 2017 MT 270, 389 Mont. 228, 405 P.3d 65. See also Peuse v. Malkuch, 275 Mont. 221, 911 P.2d 1153 (1996), and Bitterroot Int'l Sys., Ltd. v. W. Star Trucks, Inc., 2007 MT 48, 336 Mont. 145, 153 P.3d 627.

Abuse of Discretion to Certify Class — Numerosity, Commonality Factors Not Satisfied Under Rule 23(a) — Reversed and Remanded for Analysis of Rule 23(b): The plaintiffs made claims against the defendant, their insurance company, for breach of fiduciary duties, breach of contract, and violation of the Unfair Trade Practices Act related to the defendant's practice of sending medical claims to a third party. The plaintiffs sought and received class certification under Rule 23(a), M.R.Civ.P., and the defendant appealed. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court's class certification, holding that the District Court had abused its discretion in concluding that the factors of numerosity, typicality, and commonality had been satisfied. The Supreme Court remanded the matter for the District Court to consider the applicability of Rule 23(b), M.R.Civ.P. Byorth v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2016 MT 302, 385 Mont. 396, 384 P.3d 455.

Waiver of Right to Appeal Settlement Agreement — Standing to Object to Settlement — Class Action Certification — Approval of Settlement Agreement — Individual Settlements Allowed: The District Court certified a class of claimants against the defendant insurers for settlement purposes only and approved the settlement after a fairness hearing. Several class members (the "objectors") objected and appealed to the Supreme Court, which remanded to the District Court to allow for further discovery and a second hearing order. The District Court again affirmed the settlement. The objectors appealed again, and the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that an individual objector waived her right to appeal to reassert her objection when she did not appear during the fairness hearing and that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in class certification and approval of the settlement agreement. Furthermore, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in allowing individual settlements, ruling that Rule 23(e), M.R.Civ.P., does not apply to individual settlements. In re Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Mont., 2016 MT 121, 383 Mont. 404, 372 P.3d 457.

Class Certification — Numerosity, Commonality, Typicality Requirements — No Abuse of Discretion: The District Court certified a class whose members had been subject to agreements with a pool of health plans containing exclusion clauses in violation of 2-18-902. The health plan pool and the plan administrator appealed. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion when it certified the class action because although the appellants' search of medical records did not turn up further class members, the numerosity requirement under Rule 23, M.R.Civ.P., may focus on other factors in specific circumstances, and the plaintiff established that sufficient potential class members will be found who did not file claims. The appellants argued that the District Court's notification of absent class members to inform them that the illegal exclusion had been removed was improper because the plaintiff used it to satisfy the numerosity requirement. However, the requirement had already been satisfied, and the notification was used as an appropriate tool to manage the litigation process. Further, although the appellants argued that the plaintiff was an inappropriate representative of the class because of the plaintiff's bad faith claim and that the plaintiff's bad faith claim destroyed the commonality and typicality requirements, the District Court did not abuse its discretion because declaratory and injunctive relief was uniform and nothing in the bad faith claim implicated issues in the class action. Lastly, the District Court did not abuse its discretion by defining the class too broadly because it appropriately narrowed the class to individuals enrolled in plans administered by the appellants containing the unlawful exclusion. Roose v. Lincoln County Employee Group Health Plan, 2015 MT 324, 381 Mont. 409, 362 P.3d 40.

Class Certification for Wage and Hour Claim Denied — No Abuse of Discretion Where Impractibility Not Established: The plaintiffs, who were employees of subcontractors for the defendant, filed a wage and hour claim against the defendant claiming that they were underpaid for their work. The plaintiffs identified 28 employees who were underpaid and sought class certification under Rule 23, M.R.Civ.P. The District Court considered the four prerequisites for class certification: numerosity, commonality, typicality, and adequacy of representation. The plaintiffs claimed that the relatively small size of their claims made individual claims impracticable; however, the District Court disagreed and denied class action certification. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that the plaintiffs had failed to prove the impracticality of joining the 28 employees and that the District Court had therefore not abused its discretion in denying class certification. Morrow v. Monfric, Inc., 2015 MT 194, 380 Mont. 58, 354 P.3d 558.

Rental Agreements Alleged to Violate State Law — Class Certification Proper: The plaintiffs, who were tenants of the defendants' apartment complexes, filed suit against the defendants, alleging that their rental agreements violated the state's landlord-tenant act (Title 70, ch. 24) and security deposit act (Title 70, ch. 25). The plaintiffs sought class certification, which the District Court granted. The defendants appealed the certification, arguing that the plaintiffs did not meet the prerequisites to class certification of commonality, typicality, and adequate representation. The Supreme Court affirmed, finding that the plaintiffs' leases were similar enough to satisfy commonality, that their interests were similar enough to satisfy typicality, and that the plaintiffs would adequately represent the class. Worledge v. Riverstone Residential Group, LLC, 2015 MT 142, 379 Mont. 265, 350 P.3d 39.

District Court's Order Defining Class Proper but Case Reversed Regarding Question Certified for Class Treatment: The case arose out of the denial of a preauthorization request for a medical procedure on the basis that the procedure was experimental. The District Court's certification of the class was proper because the class members met the Rule 23(a), M.R.Civ.P., requirements of numerosity, commonality, and typicality for class certification and because the plaintiffs' counsel were qualified and competent and would adequately represent the class. The Supreme Court reversed under Rule 23(b), M.R.Civ.P., because the case failed to meet the predominance test, since adjudication of common issues for the class may not achieve judicial economy. The question certified by the District Court was whether the defendant insurance company breached its contract with the plaintiffs. Because this question required an analysis of each individual claim, the certified question was incapable of being resolved on a classwide basis and the case failed the predominance test. Sangwin v. St., 2013 MT 373, 373 Mont. 131, 315 P.3d 279.

Class Certification — Traditional Rules of Evidence Not Required: A District Court's inquiry into a motion for class certification is tentative, preliminary, and limited to a determination of only whether the litigation may be conducted on a class basis. The decision to certify a class is not a conclusive judgment on the merits of the case and is not accompanied by the traditional rules and procedure applicable to civil trials. Consequently, evidence considered for the purpose of class certification need not be in trial-admissible form. Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2013 MT 244, 371 Mont. 393, 310 P.3d 452.

Insurance Settlements — Class Certification for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief Proper — Class Certification for Punitive Damages Not Proper Without Showing of Actual Fraud or Malice — Individual Cases Required to Establish Amount of Individual Punitive Damages: Six days after an auto accident, the plaintiff signed a release and settled with the defendant insurer for $3,500. About 1 month later, the plaintiff asked the defendant to rescind the release because the plaintiff experienced additional pain, but the defendant refused. The plaintiff then retained counsel, and the defendant rescinded the release and settled the claim for about $200,000. After settlement, the plaintiff pursued a class action lawsuit in District Court seeking declaratory and injunctive relief and certification of a potential classwide punitive damages award. On appeal, the defendant insurer asserted that there were multiple factual differences between the plaintiff and the proposed class and that the District Court abused its discretion by certifying the class. The Supreme Court held that the proposed class satisfied the commonality, typicality, and adequacy requirements and that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in certifying the class for potential declaratory and injunctive relief. However, the Supreme Court reversed the certification of a potential classwide punitive damages award and instructed the District Court to determine if the defendant insurer was engaged in actual fraud or malice. Further, the Supreme Court determined that if there is a finding of actual fraud or malice, then later individual cases may determine the amount of individual punitive damages. Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2013 MT 244, 371 Mont. 393, 310 P.3d 452.

Class Action Alleging Insurance Subrogation Prior to Insured Being Made Whole — Definition of Class Including Those Not Timely Filing Claims Upheld: The plaintiffs claimed that a health insurer violated its members' statutory made-whole rights by exercising its subrogation rights without first reviewing whether the member had been made whole. The District Court certified the class and defined the class to include those who had not filed claims with the insurer if the insurer had avoided making payment to the member without first conducting a made-whole analysis. The insurer appealed and argued that the ruling ran counter to the ruling in Diaz v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Mont., 2011 MT 322, 363 Mont. 151, 267 P.3d 756, in which the class had been defined more narrowly. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed the District Court's definition of the class. Rolan v. New W. Health Serv., 2013 MT 220, 371 Mont. 228, 307 P.3d 291. However, see Diaz v. St., 2013 MT 219, 371 Mont. 214, 308 P.3d 38, upholding the definition of class that excluded those who did not timely file claims.

Class Action Alleging Insurance Subrogation Prior to Insured Being Made Whole — Definition of Class Excluding Those Not Timely Filing Claims Upheld: The plaintiffs claimed that the state health plan violated its members' statutory made-whole rights by exercising its subrogation rights without first reviewing whether the member had been made whole. The plaintiffs appealed the District Court's class certification order that limited the class to only those who had timely filed claims with the state health insurance plan. They argued that the definition excluded those who had not filed claims and that the District Court had abused its discretion by limiting the class. The Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that the definition of the class, which could be modified by the District Court as discovery progressed, did not frustrate the intended purpose of the class complaint, was equitable, and did not constitute an abuse of discretion. Diaz v. St., 2013 MT 219, 371 Mont. 214, 308 P.3d 38. However, see Rolan v. New W. Health Serv., 2013 MT 220, 371 Mont. 228, 307 P.3d 291, upholding the definition of class that included those who did not timely file claims.

Unnamed Class Member Not Adverse Party — No Substitution: In a class action lawsuit, an unnamed class member is not an adverse party for the purposes of substituting a District Court judge. Pallister v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Mont., 2013 MT 149, 370 Mont. 335, 302 P.3d 106.

Fairness of Class Action Settlement Prior to Certification — Heightened Scrutiny of Fairness — Abuse of Discretion Not to Allow Discovery by Objecting Plaintiffs: Over a 6-year period, an insurance company denied hundreds of claims based on an exclusion later disapproved by the Montana Commissioner of Insurance. Those whose claims were denied under the improper exclusion retained counsel and, prior to class certification, their counsel negotiated a proposed class settlement agreement with the insurance company. Four plaintiffs in the putative class objected to the proposed settlement and moved to intervene and to conduct discovery. The District Court denied the motions and approved the settlement, and the objecting plaintiffs appealed. In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court concluded that a class action settlement reached prior to class certification and without significant litigation or discovery must withstand a higher level of scrutiny regarding its fairness. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court had abused its discretion by not allowing the objecting plaintiffs to conduct discovery and remanded the case to the District Court to allow discovery, conduct another fairness hearing on the settlement, and issue a new order. Pallister v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Mont., 2012 MT 198, 366 Mont. 175, 285 P.3d 562. See also Pallister v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Mont., 2013 MT 149, 370 Mont. 335, 302 P.3d 106, and In re Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Mont., 2016 MT 121, 383 Mont. 404, 372 P.3d 457.

The language of Rule 24 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

Previous Rule 24, subsections (a), (b), and (c), are the same as the previous Federal rule counterparts. Previous Rule 24(d) requiring notice to the Montana Attorney General in cases involving the constitutionality of a Montana statute has been transferred to Rule 5.1 and restyled to conform to the Federal Rules, both in number and style.

Case Notes

Father Acting as Agent of Son — Not Allowed to Intervene in Suit Regarding Lease Agreement: A man who claimed to have signed a lease option agreement on behalf of his son was not allowed to intervene because he failed to demonstrate an actual interest in the subject matter of the action. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed with the District Court that the father had acted simply as the agent of the defendant and therefore was not allowed to intervene in the litigation. Enz v. Raelund, 2018 MT 134, 391 Mont. 406, 419 P.3d 674.

Insured Entitled to Contest Reasonableness of Confessed Judgment: In a construction case involving multiple parties, an arbitration action, a U.S. District Court case, and a confessed judgment in a Montana District Court Case, an insurer moved to intervene in the Montana court proceedings for the sole purpose of challenging the reasonableness of the confessed judgment. The District Court entered the final judgment, but it never specifically ruled on the insurer's motion to intervene or on related issues of reasonableness. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded, holding that the insurer was entitled to intervene to meaningfully contest the reasonableness of the confessed judgment. Abbey/Land, LLC v. Interstate Mechanical, Inc., 2015 MT 77, 378 Mont. 372, 345 P.3d 1032.

No Error in Granting Motion to Intervene: When the motion to intervene did not cause delay, and the intervenor had an interest in the subject property that could be impaired by the litigation and that was not represented by an existing party, granting the motion to intervene was not an abuse of the District Court's discretion. JAS, Inc. v. Eisele, 2014 MT 77, 374 Mont. 312, 321 P.3d 113.

Case Notes

Applicability to Water Court Proceedings: Substitution of objectors in a water rights proceeding is permissive and controlled by Rule 25(c), M.R.Civ.P. A ranch operator purchased land and water rights with knowledge that the predecessor-in-interest was an objector in certain ongoing Water Court cases. Upon purchasing the property, the ranch operator signed an acknowledgment that the predecessor-in-interest and the claimant in the Water Court cases had entered a settlement agreement regarding the water rights. The ranch also participated in cases involving the water rights and the claimant in the Water Court cases, and when the predecessor-in-interest filed a notice with the court disclaiming any interest in the purchased water rights, the notice was received by the ranch's attorney. The Water Court determined that these instances all constituted actual notice of circumstances that should have put the ranch operator on notice of its responsibility to move for a substitution of parties under 85-2-403. The Water Court correctly noted that it was under no obligation to notify the ranch operator that it should file a motion to substitute itself for the predecessor-in-interest's objections pursuant to Rule 25. Therefore the Water Court's denial of the ranch operator's motion to reopen the proceedings was proper and was affirmed by the Supreme Court. Little Big Warm Ranch, LLC v. Doll, 2018 MT 300, 393 Mont. 435, 431 P.3d 342.

V. Depositions and Discovery

Rule 26. General Provisions Governing Discovery.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 26 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

Rule 26 is adopted from Rule 26 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure with several important distinctions, particularly in the area of automatic preliminary pretrial disclosures and expert disclosures.

As noted, the Committee rejected the initial disclosure and pretrial disclosure requirements of Federal Rules 26(a)(1) and 26(a)(3). The Committee also rejected the detailed expert disclosure rules and report requirement of Federal Rule 26(a)(2), because those detailed expert disclosure rules — while appropriate in certain cases — are potentially too costly and difficult for the majority of civil cases handled by state district courts. To the extent detailed disclosure requirements beyond those of the existing Rule 26(b)(4) may be necessary, the district court has sufficient power to impose such requirements by virtue of its general powers over discovery as well as through the orders issued following preliminary pretrial conference or any discovery conference held pursuant to Rule 26(f).

Federal Rule 26(b)(1) contains a limitation on the scope of discovery rejected by the Committee. Existing and long-standing Montana practice under Rule 26(b)(1) is carried forward in the new Rule 26(b)(1). The remainder of Rule 26(b)(2) and (3) is taken verbatim from Federal Rules 26(b)(2) and (3). Montana's existing Rule 26(b)(2) regarding discovery of insurance information is carried forward without change and is now found at Rule 26(b)(6)[sic].

As noted, the Committee chose not to adopt the detailed expert disclosure requirements of Federal Rule 26(a)(2). Previous Rule 26(b)(4) is carried forward in its entirety without change except that Rule 26(b)(4)(A)(ii) contains a new provision making clear the right to depose an opposing expert. The Committee intends to remove any doubt regarding expert depositions as of right and to allow such depositions without the need for court involvement.

Rule 26(b)(6) is a verbatim adoption of Federal Rule 26(b)(5) and imposes a procedure for handling of information withheld under claimed privilege, requiring the creation of a privilege log and providing a procedure for handling inadvertent disclosure of privileged materials.

Federal Rule 26(c) regarding protective orders is adopted as Montana Rule 26(c).

Federal Rule 26(d) relating to sequence and timing of discovery is adopted, as is Federal Rule 26(e) with minor adjustments in language relating to expert disclosures necessary because of the Committee's rejection of the expert disclosure requirements of Federal Rule 26(a)(2).

Previous Montana Rule 26(f) regarding non-mandatory discovery conferences is carried forward. The rule is a useful case management tool that affords the district court substantial discretion to impose case-specific discovery requirements on a case-by-case basis, and is regarded by the Committee as the appropriate procedure to follow when seeking specific orders regarding discovery or expert disclosures.

Federal Rule 26(g) is adopted with one minor change, that being in Rule 26(g)(1)(B)(i), where the Committee has changed the word "nonfrivolous" to "good faith," believing that this change more accurately reflects the appropriate test applied to situations covered by Rule 26(g).

Case Notes

Conditional Offer to Extend Discovery Deadline — Conditions Not Met — No Extension: During the discovery process, defense counsel agreed to informally extend the discovery deadline if the plaintiff would agree to early mediation. Early mediation did not occur, and the defendant did not respond to discovery requests served after the formal discovery deadline expired. The plaintiff filed a motion to deem some of the requests for admissions admitted; however, the District Court concluded that the deadline to extend discovery had not been extended and ordered the plaintiff to pay the defense's attorney fees for responding to the plaintiff's motion regarding discovery. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Kalispell Aircraft Co., LLC v. Patterson, 2019 MT 142, 396 Mont. 182, 443 P.3d 1100.

Question Whether Scope of Easement Included Residential Use — Conflicting Evidence Presented — Summary Judgment Improper: The parties' predecessors-in-interest entered into a road easement limited to farming and ranching operations. The plaintiff, who was the grantor's successor, alleged that the defendant, the grantee's successor, had violated the easement by placing a mobile home on her land accessed by the easement. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendant, concluding that the language of the easement was clear and unambiguous as to its scope and that the scope included residential use. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, noting that the easement language did not explicitly contemplate residential purposes, and remanded the matter for a trial to determine whether the scope of the easement allowed residential purposes. Quarter Circle JP Ranch, LLC v. Jerde, 2018 MT 68, 391 Mont. 104, 414 P.3d 1277.

Constitutional Right to Know — Does Not Include Documents Protected by Attorney-Client or Attorney-Work-Product Privilege: A citizen filed a petition for release of documents with the District Court requesting "everything related to" a civil judgment paid on behalf of the city of Billings and its insurer. The city released all nonprivileged documents and provided privilege logs describing those documents withheld on the ground of attorney-client or attorney-work-product privilege. The District Court granted summary judgment to the city on the ground that the citizen had received all of the documents that he was entitled to examine. The citizen appealed, arguing that Montana's constitutional right to know foreclosed the city's privilege claims. The Supreme Court determined that, given this history of the 1972 Constitutional Convention proceedings and the Montana Constitution's own Transition Schedule, the framers' intent is manifest that the preexisting attorney-client and attorney-work-product privileges would carry forward inviolate as essential components of the preexisting legal system regardless of the broad, clear, and unambiguous language of Art. II, sec. 9, Mont. Const. The Supreme Court thus held that documents protected by the attorney-client or attorney-work-product privilege are not subject to disclosure under Art. II, sec. 9, Mont. Const., but the attorney-client and attorney-work-product privileges must be narrowly construed to effect their limited purposes. As applied, the District Court appropriately recognized that the citizen's position that the government cannot withhold privileged documents would be antithetical to the public interests the privileges serve and would render the attorney-client privilege and attorney-work-product privilege meaningless. Nelson v. Billings, 2018 MT 36, 390 Mont. 290, 412 P.3d 1058.

Failure to Inform of Prenatal Tests — Collateral Source Prohibition — Expert Disclosure: The plaintiff had a child that was born with cystic fibrosis. The plaintiff alleged that her health care providers did not sufficiently inform her that a test she received while pregnant would only test for Down syndrome and certain other abnormalities but not cystic fibrosis. At trial, the plaintiff introduced testimony relating to her insurance coverage and medical expenses to counter defense assertions that she would have declined medical services because of cost and to establish her mental anxiety. However, the plaintiff objected when the District Court permitted the jury to hear similar evidence when elicited by the defense, because it violated the collateral source prohibition in 27-1-308. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the District Court properly applied the rule of curative admissibility or opening the door doctrine because the plaintiff introduced collateral source information herself. Additionally, the Supreme Court found that the District Court properly allowed an expert witness to testify because his expert disclosure covered his testimony topics and comments made by the defense counsel were not properly objected to or were properly allowed. Evans v. Scanson, 2017 MT 157, 388 Mont. 69, 396 P.3d 1284.

Error in Admitting Direct Expert Opinion Without Prior Disclosure: At a hearing concerning a property's value, over objections, the defendants' appraiser testified concerning adjustments that should have been made in another appraisal. Although the appraiser's testimony properly rebutted the other expert's adjustment methods, when the appraiser testified about percentage adjustments that should have been made based on his professional knowledge, he was offering direct expert opinion that should have been disclosed prior to the hearing, and the District Court erred by admitting it. Whitefish Credit Union v. Prindiville, 2015 MT 328, 381 Mont. 443, 362 P.3d 53.

Proper Exclusion of Testimony of Expert That Was Not Disclosed in Expert Disclosure: No abuse of discretion occurred when the District Court excluded the testimony of the plaintiff's expert doctor stating that the doctor had reviewed all of the medical records when the expert disclosure did not reflect the review of additional records. Reese v. Stanton, 2015 MT 293, 381 Mont. 241, 358 P.3d 208. See also Steffensmier v. Huebner, 2018 MT 173, 392 Mont. 80, 422 P.3d 95.

Motion to Exclude Parties' Experts Improperly Granted — Reversal Warranted: The parties owned adjacent parcels of land and disputed the point of diversion of the plaintiffs' senior water right. Prior to trial, the defendants filed a motion in limine for the District Court to exclude the plaintiffs' experts, which the District Court granted based on its conclusion that the plaintiffs had failed to adequately disclose them. Subsequently, the District Court granted the defendants' motion for a directed verdict in their favor. The plaintiffs appealed to the Supreme Court, which reversed and remanded the case, holding that the plaintiffs' disclosures gave adequate details of their experts' findings and they had complied with Rule 26, M.R.Civ.P. Sharbono v. Cole, 2015 MT 257, 381 Mont. 13, 355 P.3d 782.

Request for Default Judgment as Discovery Sanction Properly Denied — New Trial for Appropriate Discovery Sanction: The plaintiff was injured when a part of a train fell on his head at work. Although cameras at the facility were recording at the time of the accident, the defendant, who was the plaintiff's employer, failed to preserve any recordings from the day of the accident. The plaintiff filed a suit against the defendant and, after learning the recording had not been preserved, requested the District Court to enter a default judgment against the defendant as a discovery sanction. After the jury found in favor of the defendant, the plaintiff filed a motion for a new trial, which the District Court denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the judgment and remanded the matter to the District Court for a new trial, concluding that although default was not proper, the District Court should fashion an appropriate sanction against the defendant for the new trial. Spotted Horse v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2015 MT 148, 379 Mont. 314, 350 P.3d 52.

Failure to Supplement Discovery Two Days Before Trial — Witness Precluded From Testifying Based on Undisclosed Material: The plaintiff financed a home through the defendant bank's predecessor. The plaintiff requested a 30-year residential loan and was told by the bank that she received this loan. However, the bank issued an 18-month commercial loan and did not inform the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued alleging fraud. On remand from the Supreme Court and 2 days before trial, the defendant received a journal from its witness employee. The defendant did not supplement its discovery by providing the journal. At trial, the witness referred to the journal. Outside the presence of the jury, the District Court ruled that the defendant should have supplemented its discovery and that the witness was precluded from testifying based on the journal. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that because the defendant failed to supplement its discovery, the District Court properly excluded testimony based on the journals. McCulley v. U.S. Bank of Montana, 2015 MT 100, 378 Mont. 462, 347 P.3d 247.

Medical Documents Provided in Discovery Not Authenticated: The plaintiff financed a home through the defendant bank's predecessor. The plaintiff requested a 30-year residential loan and was told by the bank that she received this loan. However, the bank issued an 18-month commercial loan and did not inform the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued alleging fraud. On remand from the Supreme Court, the bank sought to introduce the plaintiff's medical records in the form of progress notes provided in discovery. The District Court held that the defendant did not lay a proper foundation and excluded the evidence. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed, ruling that documents provided in discovery do not contain an admission of authenticity. McCulley v. U.S. Bank of Montana, 2015 MT 100, 378 Mont. 462, 347 P.3d 247.

Error in Granting Protective Order: Following a failed tax-deferred property exchange that subjected the plaintiffs to significant tax liability, the plaintiffs filed suit against the defendant accountant who structured the property exchange and his accounting firm. During discovery, the plaintiffs sought records including communications between the accountant and the firm and its attorneys and insurance adjusters, internal insurance company communications, and minutes from the firm's shareholder and director meetings at which the failed property exchange was discussed. The District Court granted the defendants' protective order, concluding that there was no relevant or discoverable evidence in the documents. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded the matter to the District Court for further analysis of the work product privilege to determine whether the records were created or obtained due to the prospect of litigation or in the ordinary course of business and the attorney-client privilege to determine whether the communications not involving an attorney were made for the ultimate purpose of seeking legal advice. Draggin' Y Cattle Co., Inc. v. Addink, 2013 MT 319, 372 Mont. 334, 312 P.3d 451.

Expert Testimony on Automobile Accident Reliable and Admissible — No Irregularities Warranting New Trial: An automobile accident to which there were no witnesses resulted in the death of both drivers. The plaintiff, a deceased driver's estate, filed a wrongful death and survivorship action against the defendant, the estate of the second deceased driver. At trial, each party's expert testified that the other driver caused the accident. The jury found in the defendant's favor, and the plaintiff's motion for a new trial was denied. The plaintiff objected that the defendant's expert did not provide a sufficient factual foundation for his opinion testimony and that the scientific methodology used in his accident reconstruction was not reliable. The plaintiff also alleged that the defendant's expert changed the basis of his testimony between his disclosures under Rule 26(b)(4), M.R.Civ.P., and trial, warranting a new trial under 25-11-102(1). On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the defendant's expert opinion testimony was properly admitted under Rule 702, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), because the defendant established on the record that the expert was qualified as an expert in automobile accident reconstruction, that the expert's computer models reconstructing accidents were widely used and extensively tested, and that the information and physical evidence used were reliable. The Supreme Court also held that there was no impermissible surprise under 25-11-102(3), in that the defendant's expert clearly articulated the basis for his expert opinions and the expert's disclosures did not contain incomplete or incorrect information requiring supplementation. Wheaton v. Bradford, 2013 MT 121, 370 Mont. 93, 300 P.3d 1162.

Rule 27. Depositions to Perpetuate Testimony.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 27 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. The time period in former Rule 27(a)(2) for service before a hearing date has been changed from 20 to 21 days to conform to the Federal Rule.

Rule 27 is adopted from Rule 27 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure with one minor change, to refer, in Rule 27(a)(1)(A), to cases in the district courts of Montana rather than the federal rule reference to cases in a United States court.

Rule 28. Persons Before Whom Depositions May Be Taken.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 28 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

Rule 28 consists of portions of previous Rule 28, the federal rule and the Uniform Interstate Depositions and Discovery Act, which the supreme court has chosen to adopt.

Rule 28(a) is previous Rule 28(a) modified to remove middle portions of that paragraph because they are covered by and clarified by adoption of the Uniform Interstate Depositions and Discovery Act, which appears in Rule 28(c).

Rule 28(b) is taken verbatim from Rule 28(b) of the Federal Rules with changes made to refer specifically to Montana law rather than federal law. It should be noted that reference to a letter rogatory is generally removed, using instead the more modern term "letter of request."

Rule 28(c) is to effectuate, in the rules of civil procedure, the adoption by the supreme court of the Uniform Interstate Depositions and Discovery Act. It changes, and simplifies, procedure for the taking of foreign depositions.

Previous Rule 28(c) regarding disqualification for interest of the person before whom a deposition is taken is carried forward verbatim but is re-designated as Rule 28(d).

Previous Rules 28(d) and (e) are deleted because the subjects contained therein are covered by Rule 28(c). New Rule 28(d) adopts a proposal by the Court Reporters Association designed to address a perceived problem in exacting improper concessions from the Reporters as a condition of hiring.

Rule 29. Stipulation Regarding Discovery Procedure.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 29 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

The Committee chose to retain previous Rule 29. Federal Rule 29 contained provisions limiting the ability of parties and their attorneys to make stipulations regarding discovery the Committee believes are inappropriate for Montana practice.

Rule 30. Depositions by Oral Examination.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 30 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

Rule 30 is adopted nearly verbatim from Rule 30 of the Federal Rules, with two specific differences. The first difference is that any references to the pre-discovery disclosure requirements of Federal Rule 26 are removed because the disclosure requirements of Federal Rule 26 have not been adopted. The second difference relates to previous Rule 30(a), which contained a provision requiring court approval of a deposition taken prior to expiration of 30 days after service of the summons and complaint upon any defendant. That limitation does not appear in the federal rule but is being specifically carried forward in Rule 30(a)(2)(a)(iii)[sic]. Federal Rule 30(a)(2)(A)(iii) regarding taking of depositions prior to expiration of time for pretrial disclosures set forth in Federal Rule 26(d) was not adopted by the Committee. Finally, Rule 30(a)(2)(A)(ii) prohibits a second deposition of a witness absent agreement of the parties or leave of court.

Federal Rule 30 also contains certain specific changes from present practice under the previous Rule 30. Rule 30(a)(2)(A) imposes a 10-deposition limit in cases, although that limit may be modified by agreement of the parties under Rule 29 or by court order.

Federal Rule 30(c) makes clear that Rule 615 of the Federal Rules of Evidence regarding exclusion of witnesses at trial does not apply at depositions. The Committee chose to continue allowing Rule 615 of the Montana Rules of Evidence to be invoked at depositions as at trial.

Rule 30(e) changes the prior procedure which required submission to the witness for review and signature unless waived. Rule 30(e), adopted from Federal Rule 30(e), requires review and signature only upon request of the deponent or a party.

Previous Rule 30(h) has been replaced by the general methods of recording provided for by Rule 30(b)(3).

Rule 31. Depositions by Written Questions.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 31 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

Rule 31 is adopted vebatim from Federal Rule 31.

Rule 32. Using Depositions in Court Proceedings.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 32 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. The 5-day time period in Rule 32(d)(3)(C) for serving responsive questions is changed from 5 days to 7 days to conform to the Federal Rule.

Rule 32 is adopted nearly verbatim from Federal Rule 32. Only minor changes were made to reflect reference to the Montana Rules of Evidence and of Civil Procedure, and to reflect the Committee's decision not to adopt the provisions of Federal Rule 30(a)(2)(A)(iii), thus necessitating rejection of Federal Rule 32(a)(5)(B).

Case Notes

Foundation Objection Waived at Trial if It Could Have Been Corrected During Deposition: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in overruling foundation and authenticity objections to the letter at issue when an objection was not made during the deposition. Siebken v. Voderberg, 2015 MT 296, 381 Mont. 256, 359 P.3d 1073.

Rule 33. Interrogatories to Parties.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 33 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

The language of Rule 33 is adopted principally from Rule 33 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure with the exceptions discussed below.

Previous Rule 33(a) regarding the number of interrogatories has been carried forward into this Rule, and allows 50 interrogatories rather than the 25 allowed under Federal Rule 33(a). Because the Federal Rules contain extensive prediscovery disclosure requirements, which have not been adopted by the Committee, the number of interrogatories allowed is increased, consistent with existing practice. Rule 33 provides that requests for additional interrogatories may be granted to the extent consistent with the limitations stated in Rule 26(b)(2).

Previous Rule 33(b) contained a provision extending the time for answering interrogatories served upon a defendant to 45 days following service of summons and complaint. That time period is carried forward in Rule 33(b)(2). Otherwise, Federal Rule 33(b) is adopted verbatim.

Rule 33(a)(2) carries forward the intent of the language appearing in previous Rule 33(b) making it clear that an interrogatory is not objectionable "merely because it asks for an opinion or contention that relates to fact or the application of law to fact[.]" The Committee agrees with the Committee Note to Rule 33 of the Federal Rules and its statement that "opinion and contention interrogatories are used routinely."

Rule 34. Producing Documents, Electronically-Stored Information, and Tangible Things, or Entering onto Land, for Inspection and Other Purposes.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 34 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

The text of Rule 34 is adopted from Rule 34 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Previous Rule 34 of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure allowed 45 days for response by a defendant to requests served under Rule 34 following service of summons and complaint on that defendant. That provision is carried forward in Rule 33(b)(2)(A)[sic]. In all other respects, the rule is identical to Rule 34 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, including adoption of provisions relating to requests for and production of electronically-stored information.

Rule 35. Physical and Mental Examination.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 35 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

The Committee has adopted Federal Rule 35 in its entirety with one addition in Rule 35(b)(4) adapted from previous Rule 35(b)(2), limiting the waiver of doctor-patient privilege in instances where treatment, consultation, prescription, or examination relates to a mental or physical condition "not related to the pending action."

Case Notes

Good Cause Required for Court-Ordered Psychological Examination — Condition Must Be at Issue: After being hit by a vehicle that left the scene, the plaintiff sought compensation from her insurer under her uninsured motorist coverage for past and future medical expenses and for physical and emotional pain, suffering, and anxiety associated with the physical injuries. The District Court issued an order for an independent psychological examination under Rule 35, M.R.Civ.P., for the purpose of determining whether the plaintiff's chronic pain was caused or exacerbated by preexisting mental health issues. Subsequently, the Supreme Court vacated the order, reasoning that the plaintiff made only a general claim for emotional pain, suffering, and anxiety without placing her mental condition in controversy within the meaning of Rule 35. Constitutionally based privacy concerns require that Rule 35 examinations be ordered only when the party to be examined has put the party's physical or mental condition at issue and when there is good cause for the examination. Lewis v. District Court, 2012 MT 200, 366 Mont. 217, 286 P.3d 577, citing In re Marriage of Binsfield, 269 Mont. 336, 888 P.2d 889 (1995), and Simms v. District Court, 2003 MT 89, 315 Mont. 135, 68 P.3d 678.

Rule 36. Requests for Admissions.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 36 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

Rule 36 of the Federal Rules is adopted in its entirety with one addition. Previous Rule 36(a) allowed 45 days for response to requests for admission after service of the summons and complaint on the defendant. That provision is carried forward in Rule 36(a)(3).

Case Notes

Motion to Deem Requests for Admissions Admitted — Willful or Reckless Representation — Moving Party Ordered to Pay Defendant's Fees to Defend: During the discovery process, defense counsel agreed to informally extend the discovery deadline if the plaintiff would agree to early mediation. Early mediation did not occur, and the defendant did not respond to discovery requests served after the formal discovery deadline expired. The plaintiff filed a motion to deem some of the requests for admissions admitted; however, the District Court concluded that the deadline to extend discovery had not been extended. The District Court also determined that the plaintiff had either willfully or recklessly misrepresented the facts about whether the parties had actually agreed to extend discovery and ordered the plaintiff to pay the defense's attorney fees for responding to the plaintiff's motion. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, agreeing that the plaintiff should pay a reasonable amount for the defendant's costs to defend against the plaintiff's motion. Kalispell Aircraft Co., LLC v. Patterson, 2019 MT 142, 396 Mont. 182, 443 P.3d 1100.

Defendant's Failure to Respond to Requests for Admissions — Admissions of Facts Provided Substantial Evidence to Support Jury Verdict: The defendant failed to timely answer multiple discovery requests from the plaintiff and failed to respond to the District Court's order granting the plaintiff's motion to compel the defendant to answer the discovery requests, which led to the District Court ordering the plaintiff's requests for admission to be deemed admitted. The jury subsequently returned a verdict against the defendant. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the admissions of fact provided substantial evidence to support the jury's verdict, and that any conflicting evidence presented by the defendant at trial could therefore be only conflicting at best, which was insufficient for the Supreme Court to overturn the jury's decision. Petaja v. Mont. Pub. Employees' Ass'n, 2016 MT 143, 383 Mont. 516, 373 P.3d 40, citing Upky v. Marshall Mtn., LLC, 2008 MT 90, 342 Mont. 273, 180 P.3d 651.

Reliance on Deemed Admission in Motion for Summary Judgment — No Prejudice: The District Court denied the plaintiff's motion to withdraw or amend his deemed admission on the basis that the defendants would be prejudiced because they had relied on the admission as the basis for their motion for summary judgment, which the District Court had granted. The Supreme Court reversed, concluding that any prejudice to the defendants in preparing their motion for summary judgment in reliance on the erroneous admission was insufficient to foreclose withdrawal or amendment of the admission. Bates v. Anderson, 2014 MT 7, 373 Mont. 252, 316 P.3d 857.

Rule 37. Failure to Make Discovery; Sanctions.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 37 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

Rule 37 is, in substantial part, an adoption of Federal Rule 37. Salient additions, deletions, or changes from Federal Rule 37 as well as provisions of particular interest, not in existence under previous Rule 37, are noted below.

As with Rules 26 and 30, Rule 37 is modified to delete references to the initial disclosure requirements of Rule 26 and motions related to failure to make such disclosures. This is necessary because the Committee has rejected the automatic disclosure requirements set out in Federal Rule 26(a).

Particular note should be taken of the Committee's decision to adopt the "confer and certify" requirements regarding motion practice under Rule 37(a)(1). Note also should be taken of the new provision under Rule 37(a)(5)(A) addressing the situation where a motion to compel is filed and, in response, the discovery sought is provided. In those circumstances, the court is required, after giving notice and opportunity to be heard, to order the party necessitating the motion to pay the movant's reasonable expenses in making the motion, including attorney fees. The initial motion to compel is, however, explicitly subject to the "confer and certify" requirements of Rule 37(a)(1).

Rule 37(c) of the Federal Rule is adopted except for changes necessary to remove reference to disclosures required by Federal Rule 26 not adopted by Rule 26. New language in Rule 37(c)(1) makes clear the power of the court to impose the sanctions specified in Rule 37(c)(1)(A), (B), or (C) where information properly requested under these rules is not supplied as required or where there is not a proper disclosure of expert opinions under Rule 26(b)(4).

Rule 37(d) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is adopted verbatim. Practitioners should note the "confer and certify" requirement of Rule 37(d)(1)(B) regarding motions for sanctions. This provision requires counsel to attempt to work out their own resolution of discovery issues prior to turning to the court for assistance. Rule 37(d) specifies, but does not limit, the range of sanctions available to the court by its reference in Rule 37(d)(3) to Rule 37(b)(2)(A)(i)-(vi).

Previous Rule 37(e) is carried forward unchanged, but its language is identical to Federal Rule 37(e).

Previous Rule 37(g) is carried forward and is now designated as Rule 37(f). Federal Rule 37(f) is not adopted because of its reference to the discovery plan of Rule 26(f), a requirement of Federal Rule 26 not adopted by the Committee.

Case Notes

Default Judgment Against University as Spoliation Sanction — Supervisory Control Granted — Order Reversed and Remanded: A former university student sued the school for negligent hiring and supervision of a professor who she alleged had raped her. Prior to the student filing her complaint, an attorney for the university sent written notice to certain university staff to not delete electronic documents related to the professor's tenure and its subsequent investigation of the professor. However, the university later deleted some potentially relevant electronic documents under the routine operations of its email server. The District Court later held the university liable for negligence as a discovery sanction. The university filed a petition for supervisory control, which was granted, and the Supreme Court determined that the District Court had abused its discretion in the severity of the sanction and reversed and remanded the case. Mont. St. Univ.-Bozeman v. 1st Judicial District Court, 2018 MT 220, 392 Mont. 458, 426 P.3d 541.

Department's Failure to Comply With Discovery Not Due Process Violation — No Alleged Undiscovered Evidence to Defeat Termination Petition: After a motion to compel discovery, the Department of Health and Human Services (DPHHS) represented to a father that there was no additional relevant or discoverable information relating to a termination action concerning his parental rights. Based on that representation, the father did not review files made available by DPHHS or depose the child protection specialist whose files were at issue. At trial, testimony was presented that undisclosed emails existed, and the father argued that because DPHHS violated its discovery obligations, he was denied due process because he could not properly prepare for the termination hearing. However, the District Court held that the father had received due process and declined to dismiss or continue the case. At trial, the father testified on his own behalf and cross-examined witnesses, including the witnesses whose communications had not been disclosed properly, and the court ultimately terminated the father's parental rights. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the father did not allege any information in the undiscovered communications that could have led to additional evidence that would defeat the petition for termination. The District Court acted within its discretion when it determined that the father's due process rights were not violated by the failure of DPHHS to comply with its discovery obligation. In re M.B., 2018 MT 205, 392 Mont. 368, 424 P.3d 606.

Untimely Motion to Compel — No Good Faith Conferral: A plaintiff requested discovery covering over 50 years from the defendant railroad. The defendant objected to the request, stating that the request was overly broad and unduly burdensome. Along with its objection, the defendant offered to conduct a search and produce information under more specific parameters. The plaintiff did not respond to the proposed search prior to the close of discovery. After discovery closed, the plaintiff certified that he was ready for trial. Eight months after the close of discovery and more than a year after receiving the defendant's objections, the plaintiff filed a motion to compel the discovery requests. By denying the plaintiff's motion to compel because of its untimeliness and finding that the defendant failed to comply with the good faith conferral requirement under Rule 37(a)(1), M.R.Civ.P., the District Court did not abuse its discretion by not granting the motion to compel because the plaintiff did not confer and compel in a timely fashion under the court's scheduling order. Daley v. Burlington N. Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2018 MT 197, 392 Mont. 311, 425 P.3d 669.

Discovery Abuse by Pro Se Litigants — Prejudice to Defendant — Case Properly Dismissed With Prejudice: The defendant admitted to causing a car accident that involved the plaintiffs. Nearly 3 years after the accident, the plaintiffs sued the defendant for lost wages and other damages related to injuries that they claimed resulted from the accident. The defendant served discovery requests on the plaintiffs related to their purported injuries; however, the plaintiffs never completely responded to them despite a court order to do so. Ultimately, the District Court dismissed the plaintiffs' lawsuit as a sanction for their abuse of the discovery process. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal, noting that even pro se litigants cannot flout the rules of discovery and court orders as the plaintiffs had. Cox v. Magers, 2018 MT 21, 390 Mont. 224, 411 P.3d 1271.

Failure to Timely Disclose Expert — Expert Testimony Excluded: Although the defendant argued that the late disclosure of a banking expert was substantially justified by the plaintiff bank's late production of certain documents, the plaintiff timely objected to the production of some of the documents without a response by the defendant and had timely produced the other documents previously. The defendant should have known that he would require a banking expert and timely disclosed one, and because the defendant did not argue the exclusion was harmless or move for an alternate sanction, the District Court did not err in concluding that the late disclosure was not substantially justified and in excluding the defendant's banking expert's testimony. HSBC Bank USA, N.A. v. Anderson, 2017 MT 257, 389 Mont. 106, 406 P.3d 416.

Attorney Fees on Motion to Compel Discovery — District Court Deduction of Time and Hourly Rate Proper: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in its award of attorney fees stemming from a motion to compel discovery when it deducted 320 minutes from the time awarded to the plaintiff and split the difference between the parties' requested hourly rates. Once the District Court issued its order denying the financial discovery, the plaintiff was no longer entitled under Rule 37(a)(5)(A), M.R.Civ.P., to reimbursement for the time her attorney spent seeking the financial information. Instead, the District Court's partial grant and partial denial of the motion invoked Rule 37(a)(5)(C), M.R.Civ.P., which allowed the District Court to apportion the costs of the motion as it saw fit. Additionally, the District Court had an adequate understanding of the character and importance of the litigation, the professional skill and experience called for, the attorneys' character, and the results secured by the services of the attorneys. This baseline understanding, combined with the hourly rates submitted by counsel for both parties, provided a sufficient basis for the District Court to determine a reasonable rate. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying 320 minutes of attorney fees or in determining a reasonable award of attorney fees. Suzor v. Int'l Paper Co., 2016 MT 344, 386 Mont. 54, 386 P.3d 584.

Failure to Attend Deposition on Three Occasions — Dismissal of Petition for Postconviction Relief Upheld: The defendant filed a petition for postconviction relief based on exculpatory evidence. Although the state noticed his deposition on three separate occasions, the defendant did not appear because he had an outstanding arrest warrant. Prior to the third deposition being noticed, the state filed a motion to compel his deposition. The District Court granted the motion and simultaneously notified the defendant that if he failed to appear at the deposition, his petition could be dismissed with prejudice. After the defendant failed to appear at the third deposition, the District Court dismissed the petition with prejudice. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal and emphasized that ignoring a court order to appear for a deposition cannot be tolerated. Hanson v. St., 2016 MT 152, 384 Mont. 17, 372 P.3d 1281.

Request for Default Judgment as Discovery Sanction Properly Denied — New Trial for Appropriate Discovery Sanction: The plaintiff was injured when a part of a train fell on his head at work. Although cameras at the facility were recording at the time of the accident, the defendant, who was the plaintiff's employer, failed to preserve any recordings from the day of the accident. The plaintiff filed a suit against the defendant and, after learning the recording had not been preserved, requested the District Court to enter a default judgment against the defendant as a discovery sanction. After the jury found in favor of the defendant, the plaintiff filed a motion for a new trial, which the District Court denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the judgment and remanded the matter to the District Court for a new trial, concluding that although default was not proper, the District Court should fashion an appropriate sanction against the defendant for the new trial. Spotted Horse v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2015 MT 148, 379 Mont. 314, 350 P.3d 52.

Sanctions Against Lawyer and Client — Procedural Concerns Not Substantial: The plaintiff sued the defendants over their attempt to collect a dental bill. The District Court ultimately granted summary judgment against the plaintiff and sanctioned her and her counsel for discovery abuses, vexatious litigation, misrepresentations, and failure to attend a pretrial conference. On appeal of the sanctions, the plaintiff's counsel argued that the District Court did not follow sanction motion procedures outlined in Rule 11, M.R.Civ.P. While the Supreme Court reversed some of the sanctions applying to vexatious litigation, it affirmed other sanctions, holding that the District Court was justified in awarding some of the sanctions under Rule 61, M.R.Civ.P., as the procedural error did not affect any party's substantial rights. Serrania v. LPH, Inc., 2015 MT 113, 379 Mont. 17, 347 P.3d 1237.

Failure to Supplement Discovery Two Days Before Trial — Witness Precluded From Testifying Based on Undisclosed Material: The plaintiff financed a home through the defendant bank's predecessor. The plaintiff requested a 30-year residential loan and was told by the bank that she received this loan. However, the bank issued an 18-month commercial loan and did not inform the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued alleging fraud. On remand from the Supreme Court and 2 days before trial, the defendant received a journal from its witness employee. The defendant did not supplement its discovery by providing the journal. At trial, the witness referred to the journal. Outside the presence of the jury, the District Court ruled that the defendant should have supplemented its discovery and that the witness was precluded from testifying based on the journal. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that because the defendant failed to supplement its discovery, the District Court properly excluded testimony based on the journals. McCulley v. U.S. Bank of Montana, 2015 MT 100, 378 Mont. 462, 347 P.3d 247.

Discovery Sanctions Not Warranted by Failure to Admit or Deny Statutory Violations: The plaintiff sued the defendant after the two were involved in a car crash. During discovery, the plaintiff asked the defendant to admit that she operated her motor vehicle in violation of several statutes. The defendant denied the request for admission but admitted she failed to yield the right-of-way. The plaintiff moved for sanctions, which the District Court denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the denial, holding that the single request for admission was not framed in the form of particular facts for the defendant to admit or deny and that the admission of statutory violations was distinct from legal conclusions sought by the discovery requests. Tempel v. Benson, 2015 MT 84, 378 Mont. 401, 346 P.3d 342.

No Sanction for Destruction of Evidence for E-Mails Deleted as Matter of Course: The plaintiff in a wrongful discharge action requested a default judgment in his favor as a sanction for the defendant's destruction of his e-mails after he was fired. The Supreme Court upheld the District Court's refusal to sanction the defendant on the basis that the evidence showed that the records were destroyed pursuant to pre-existing and routine practice and that the defendant had no knowledge of potential litigation at the time the records were destroyed. Cartwright v. Scheels All Sports, Inc., 2013 MT 158, 370 Mont. 369, 310 P.3d 1080.

Discovery Not Condoned Under Temporary Order of Protection Proceedings: After the petitioner obtained a temporary order of protection (TOP) against the respondent for stalking, the respondent proceeded to conduct extensive discovery. After the respondent was charged criminally for stalking, the petitioner moved to dismiss the TOP without prejudice, which the District Court granted. On appeal, the respondent argued that the petition should have been dismissed with prejudice as a discovery sanction against the petitioner for failing to appear at depositions. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that the breadth of discovery allowed in the case was antithetical to the purpose of a TOP, and concluded that unless extraordinary circumstances exist, courts should not compel a petitioner in a stalking matter to be subjected to discovery by a respondent. Because the need for a TOP may arise in the future, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing the TOP without prejudice. Lear v. Jamrogowicz, 2013 MT 147, 370 Mont. 320, 303 P.3d 790, followed in Boushie v. Windsor, 2014 MT 153, 375 Mont. 301, 328 P.3d 631.

VI. Trials

Rule 38. Right to a Jury Trial; Demand.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 38 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are both substantive and stylistic. The language of Federal Rule 38 was amended as necessary to replace federal references and statutes with the appropriate state references and statutes. The 10-day periods in Rules 38(b) and (c) have been changed to 14 days to correspond to the counterpart Federal Rule.

Rule 38(b) includes the Rule 5(d) compliance that was formerly incorporated in previous Rule 38(d). The change is stylistic only.

Rule 38(d) wholly adopts the simplified language of Federal Rule 38(d). It drops the sentence of previous Rule 38(d), which states that "A waiver of trial by jury is not revoked by an amendment of a pleading asserting only a claim or defense arising out of the conduct, transaction, or occurrence set forth or attempted to be set forth in the original pleading." The language of Rules 38 and 39 clearly states the mechanisms for demanding a jury trial. This change does not, therefore, imply that a waiver may be revoked in the absence of the present explicit prohibition.

Rule 38 does not adopt Federal Rule 38(e), pertaining to admiralty and maritime claims.

Rule 39. Trial by Jury or by the Court.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 39 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are both substantive and stylistic. The language of Federal Rule 39 was amended as necessary to replace federal references and statutes with the appropriate state references and statutes.

Rule 39(b) requires a motion before allowing the court to order jury trial upon an issue for which it might have been granted. The previous Rule 39(b) gives the court discretion to so order upon its own initiative.

Rule 40. Scheduling Cases for Trial.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 40 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are intended to be stylistic only. The language of Federal Rule 40 was amended as necessary to replace federal references and statutes with the appropriate state references and statutes.

Rule 41. Dismissal of Actions.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 41 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are primarily stylistic. The language of Federal Rule 41 was amended as necessary to replace federal references and statutes with the appropriate state references and statutes.

Rule 41(a)(1)(A) includes the updated references to Rules 23.1(c) and 23.2 of the 2007 revision of the Federal Rules.

Rule 41(a)(1)(B) includes the federal language relating to the dismissal as an adjudication on the merits.

Case Notes

Dismissal for Failure to Prosecute Not Abuse of Discretion — Four Factors Properly Weighed: After receiving a favorable summary judgment ruling that the defendant had breached a duty of disclosure, the plaintiff failed to take additional action to pursue damages at trial. After 30 months, the defendant filed a motion to dismiss the claim for failure to prosecute under Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P., which the District Court granted. On review, the Supreme Court found that the first factor under Becky v. Norwest Bank Dillon, N.A., 245 Mont. 1, 798 P.2d 1011 (1990) — the plaintiff's diligence in prosecuting claims — weighed against the plaintiff due to a 30-month delay with no excuse offered. The Supreme Court distinguished the delay from other cases with long delays because the case was not being actively prosecuted at the time of the motion for dismissal and the case was relatively simple. On the second factor (prejudice caused to the defense by the plaintiff's delay), the Supreme Court held that the District Court properly found that the unreasonable delay had raised a presumption of prejudice that shifted the burden to the plaintiff to show good cause or reasonable excuse for inaction. On the third factor (availability of alternate sanctions), the Supreme Court agreed with the District Court's finding that the availability of alternative sanctions did not weigh in either party's favor because, while public policy prefers trial on the merits, any continued litigation would prejudice the defendant. On the fourth factor (whether the plaintiff was warned that the case was in danger of dismissal), the Supreme Court found that the District Court's lack of warning weighed in the plaintiff's favor but also found that notice is not prerequisite to dismissal under Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P. Given that the first and second Becky factor weighed against the plaintiff, the third factor was neutral, and the fourth factor weighed in favor of the plaintiff, the Supreme Court found that it was not abuse of discretion to dismiss the case. ECI Credit, LLC v. Diamond S, Inc., 2018 MT 183, 392 Mont. 178, 422 P.3d 691.

Failure to Attend Deposition on Three Occasions — Dismissal of Petition for Postconviction Relief Upheld: The defendant filed a petition for postconviction relief based on exculpatory evidence. Although the state noticed his deposition on three separate occasions, the defendant did not appear because he had an outstanding arrest warrant. Prior to the third deposition being noticed, the state filed a motion to compel his deposition. The District Court granted the motion and simultaneously notified the defendant that if he failed to appear at the deposition, his petition could be dismissed with prejudice. After the defendant failed to appear at the third deposition, the District Court dismissed the petition with prejudice. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal and emphasized that ignoring a court order to appear for a deposition cannot be tolerated. Hanson v. St., 2016 MT 152, 384 Mont. 17, 372 P.3d 1281.

Dismissal for Failure to Prosecute Improper — Four Factors Improperly Weighed: The state contracted with the plaintiff, a contractor, on a highway paving project. The state and the plaintiff insured the project through the defendant. On the day after a subcontractor applied sand and oil to the road, a thunderstorm caused the oil to emulsify in the rainwater and therefore damage passing vehicles. The state sued the defendant, seeking indemnification for the costs not covered by the contractor. Eventually, the defendant filed a motion to dismiss the state's action based on its failure to prosecute, which the District Court granted based on its conclusion that the state had failed to prosecute its claim for over 2 years. The state appealed the dismissal to the Supreme Court, which considered four factors related to dismissal that are outlined in Becky v. Norwest Bank Dillon, N.A., 245 Mont. 1, 798 P.2d 1011 (1990). The Supreme Court concluded that although the delay of 17 months was poor practice, the four factors weighed against dismissing the state's claim. Accordingly, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded the matter to the District Court for further proceedings. A.M. Welles, Inc. v. Montana Materials, Inc., 2015 MT 38, 378 Mont. 173, 342 P.3d 987, distinguished in ECI Credit, LLC v. Diamond S, Inc., 2018 MT 183, 392 Mont. 178, 422 P.3d 691, in which the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's dismissal under Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P., without warning after a delay in prosecution of 30 months.

Dismissal With Prejudice Improper When Court Lacks Subject Matter Jurisdiction — New Claims Not Barred Under Res Judicata: The decedent's son petitioned the District Court to reopen probate alleging new claims for fraud and newly discovered tangible personal property. The District Court denied the petition on the grounds that the District Court in a prior case had dismissed a similar cause of action with prejudice and that decision was affirmed by the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court held that when the District Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction it must dismiss the action. Pursuant to Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P., an involuntary dismissal of a case acts as an adjudication on the merits, except for a dismissal resulting from a lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Citing Schuster v. N. Co., 127 Mont. 39, 257 P.2d 249 (1953), the Supreme Court noted that the words "with prejudice" were an express statement that the dismissal was based on the merits. Because the District Court in the underlying action lacked subject matter jurisdiction, it was powerless to adjudicate the merits of the decedent's son's claims and the dismissal with prejudice was improper and res judicata does not bar the claims in this case. In re Estate of Benjamin, 2014 MT 241, 376 Mont. 300, 339 P.3d 1232.

Opportunity for Briefing on Dismissal Allowed if Affirmative Defense Against Codefendant Alleged: Plaintiffs filed an action against Centennial Log Homes, the construction company of a log home, and against Keeko Log Homes, the designer and manufacturer of a log home package used in the construction. The plaintiffs later moved to dismiss their claims against Keeko under Rule 41(a)(1), M.R.Civ.P., and Keeko had not filed an answer or a motion for summary judgment; however, the motion stated that Centennial opposed dismissal. Although Centennial had not filed a cross-claim against Keeko, Centennial argued that its answer included an affirmative defense alleging Keeko's liability. Although the voluntary dismissal under Rule 41(a)(1), M.R.Civ.P., is automatic upon filing the notice of dismissal with the clerk of court, the District Court granted the motion in an order in apparent reliance on Rule 41(a)(2), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court held that Keeko should not have been dismissed under Rule 41(a)(2), M.R.Civ.P., until Centennial had the opportunity to brief its opposition to the dismissal. Johnston v. Centennial Log Homes & Furnishings, Inc., 2013 MT 179, 370 Mont. 529, 305 P.3d 781.

Discovery Not Condoned Under Temporary Order of Protection Proceedings: After the petitioner obtained a temporary order of protection (TOP) against the respondent for stalking, the respondent proceeded to conduct extensive discovery. After the respondent was charged criminally for stalking, the petitioner moved to dismiss the TOP without prejudice, which the District Court granted. On appeal, the respondent argued that the petition should have been dismissed with prejudice as a discovery sanction against the petitioner for failing to appear at depositions. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that the breadth of discovery allowed in the case was antithetical to the purpose of a TOP, and concluded that unless extraordinary circumstances exist, courts should not compel a petitioner in a stalking matter to be subjected to discovery by a respondent. Because the need for a TOP may arise in the future, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing the TOP without prejudice. Lear v. Jamrogowicz, 2013 MT 147, 370 Mont. 320, 303 P.3d 790, followed in Boushie v. Windsor, 2014 MT 153, 375 Mont. 301, 328 P.3d 631.

Rule 42. Consolidation; Separate Trials.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 42 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are primarily stylistic. The language of Federal Rule 42 was amended as necessary to replace federal references and statutes with the appropriate state references and statutes.

Rule 42(b) adopts the federal language, which adds "to expedite and economize" as justifications for ordering separate trials. It also adds language preserving the right to jury trial in reflection of Article II, Section 26 of the Montana Constitution and the Seventh Amendment to the United States Constitution. In light of the dual state and federal constitutional guarantees of jury trial, Rule 42(b) substituted "constitutional right to a jury trial" in place of "state right to a jury trial."

Case Notes

District Court's Failure to Rule on Severance Motion Not Abuse of Discretion: In an action involving several complex business transactions, the defendant bank filed a severance motion. The District Court failed to rule on the motion, and the motion was deemed denied under local District Court rules. On appeal, the defendant argued that failure to rule on its motion consisted of a per se abuse of discretion. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that a failure to rule on a motion does not constitute an abuse of discretion. Masters Group Int'l, Inc. v. Comerica Bank, 2015 MT 192, 380 Mont. 1, 352 P.3d 1101.

District Court Authorized to Transfer Venue — No Authority to Transfer to Specific Department of Another District: The Commissioner of Political Practices filed a civil enforcement action in Lewis and Clark County District Court against the plaintiff, who was a candidate for a Senate district that included all of Park County and most of Sweet Grass County. After the filing, the plaintiff initiated a declaratory judgment action in Park County District Court, raising issues similar to those raised in the enforcement action. The Commissioner answered the declaratory action and filed a motion to transfer the declaratory judgment action from Park County to Lewis and Clark County pursuant to Rule 42(a)(2), M.R.Civ.P. The Commissioner withdrew his motion to transfer, but the Park County District Court ordered, sua sponte, that the case be transferred to a specific department within Lewis and Clark County District Court. On appeal, the Supreme Court upheld the transfer, reasoning that 25-2-201 requires a venue change if the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by the change. However, the Supreme Court reversed the Park County District Court's transfer of the action to a specific department within Lewis and Clark County District Court, as issues of consolidation remained with the District Court Judges of Lewis and Clark County. Wagman v. Motl, 2015 MT 168, 379 Mont. 439, 352 P.3d 609.

Issue Not Raised by Party at Trial Not Considered on Appeal — Consolidation Not to Allow One Party to Appeal Argument Made Exclusively by Another Party: After the filing of two separate petitions for declaratory judgment regarding expansion of the bison management area around Yellowstone National Park, the District Court consolidated the petitions under Rule 42, M.R.Civ.P. In all of its pleadings and throughout trial, Park County argued nuisance, while other petitioners argued that the expansion violated statute. Only Park County appealed the District Court's decision, focusing solely on the alleged statutory violation. The Supreme Court declined to consider the appeal, given that the county had never argued the issue to the District Court and had never expressly adopted the argument of the other petitioners prior to filing its appeal. Park County Stockgrowers Ass'n, Inc. v. Dept. of Livestock, 2014 MT 64, 374 Mont. 199, 320 P.3d 467.

Rule 43. Taking Testimony.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 43 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are both substantive and stylistic. The language of Federal Rule 43 was amended as necessary to replace federal references and statutes with the appropriate state references and statutes. The amendments do not affect testimony in chambers.

Rule 43(a) adopts the federal language, with state specific revisions. There is no present Montana equivalent rule.

Rule 43(b) is previous Rule 43(d).

Rule 43(c) adopts the federal language, which does not include the preface to the equivalent previous Rule 43(e), which states, "Except as otherwise provided in Rule 56 . . . ."

Rule 43(d) is previous Rule 43(f).

Rule 44. Proving an Official Record.

Rule 47. Jurors.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 47 is the same as previous Rule 47 but the format has changed. Rule 47 is provided in an outline format in order to render a consistent style throughout the rules. These changes are intended to be stylistic only.

Rule 48. Juries — Verdict.

Committee Notes

Rule 48 is identical to previous Rule 48.

Rule 49. Special Verdicts and Interrogatories.

Committee Notes

Rule 50. Judgment as a Matter of Law in a Jury Trial; Related Motion for a New Trial; Conditional Ruling.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 50 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are intended to be stylistic only.

Rule 50(b) primarily adopts the relevant language of the Federal Rules, which allows the movant to file both a renewed motion for judgment as a matter of law and an alternative or joint request for a new trial. The language clarifies that a motion must be filed no later than 28 days after the entry of judgment or the jury was discharged, if the motion addresses a jury issue not decided by the verdict. Rule 50(b) includes an additional provision, however, that subjects a renewed motion for judgment as a matter of law or an alternative or joint request for a new trial to an automatic 60-day denial. The stylistic changes of this rule fully incorporate Montana's present 60-day time fuse designed to prevent delayed court action.

The 10-day period in Rule 52(b) for filing of a motion to amend or make additional findings is enlarged to 28 days in conformance with the Federal Rules change. The reason for this is explained in the following Federal Rules Committee Comment:

Former Rules 50, 52, and 59 adopted 10-day periods for their respective post-judgment motions. Rule 6(b) prohibits any expansion of those periods. Experience has proved that in many cases it is not possible to prepare a satisfactory post-judgment motion in 10 days, even under the former rule that excluded intermediate Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays. These time periods are particularly sensitive because Appellate Rule 4 integrates the time to appeal with a timely motion under these rules. Rather than introduce the prospect of uncertainty in appeal time by amending Rule 6(b) to permit additional time, the former 10-day periods are expanded to 28 days. Rule 6(b) continues to prohibit expansion of the 28-day period.

The Committee considered the question of whether the change from 10 to 28 days on these Rules would affect the "deemed denied" provisions in Montana's Rules. The Committee concluded there will be no effect — the 60-day "deemed denied" period would continue to run from the date the motion is filed, regardless of whether the motion is filed within 10 days or 28 days.

The Committee also considered the question of whether the extension from 10 days to 28 days would affect the right to appeal these orders or the finality of judgments for purposes of appeal. Rule 6(3), M. R. App. P., (Orders appealable in civil cases) provides, in subsection (b), that an appeal may be taken "from a 'deemed denied' motion that was made pursuant to M. R. Civ. P. 50(b), 52(b), 59, or 60(b)." Accordingly, merely extending the deadlines in these rules from 10 days to 28 days will not affect appeal rights.

Rule 50(e) recognizes the appellate court's ability to direct the entry of judgment. The Federal Committee noted that this change simply acknowledged and canonized the development of federal common law on this point.

Case Notes

Conflicting Expert Testimony Sufficient Evidence for Jury: A plaintiff alleged that her doctor failed to disclose information necessary for her to give informed consent. The jury heard conflicting expert testimony regarding obtaining informed consent and ruled for the doctor. The plaintiff made a renewed motion for judgment as a matter of law and moved for a new trial, which the District Court denied. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court, explaining that the conflicting expert testimony on the relevant issue constituted substantial evidence supporting the jury's verdict. Howard v. Replogle, 2019 MT 244, 397 Mont. 379, 450 P.3d 866.

Procedurally Inaccurate Bench Trial Motion — Harmless Error: In a bench trial, the District Court granted the defendants' motion for judgment as a matter of law. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that although the trial court entered a technically improper motion since a judgment as a matter of law is only available in jury trials, the error was harmless because the procedural misstep favored the nonmoving party by granting a more deferential assessment of the evidence by the trial court. McCann v. McCann, 2018 MT 207, 392 Mont. 385, 425 P.3d 682.

Plaintiff Failed to Establish Expert Witness Testimony Relating to Standard of Care — Judgment as Matter of Law Affirmed: In a medical malpractice case, the plaintiff failed to elicit evidence relating to the standard of care. Initially, the District Court entered judgment in the plaintiff's favor after the jury returned a verdict. However, the District Court reversed its order and granted the defendant's motion for a new trial and for relief from the judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that none of the plaintiff's experts provided sufficient testimony relating to the standard of care, that inference, implication, and jury purview is insufficient, and that manufacturer documents alone do not establish the standard of medical care. Horn v. St. Peter's Hosp., 2017 MT 298, 389 Mont. 449, 406 P.3d 932.

Conditional Buy-Sell Agreement — Alleged Intentional Interference With Agreement — Judgment as Matter of Law For Defendants Proper: The plaintiff entered into a buy-sell agreement to purchase land. The agreement placed certain conditions on the purchase. Ultimately, the deal fell through and one of the defendants purchased the land. The plaintiff also sued his real estate agent who had represented him but who later represented the purchaser of the land and the adjacent property owner. The District Court granted the defendants judgment as a matter of law on the plaintiff's claim for intentional interference with the buy-sell contract. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, agreeing that the plaintiff had not presented proof that any of the defendants had prevented him from completing the purchase. Wagner v. MSE Technology Applications, Inc., 2016 MT 215, 384 Mont. 436, 383 P.3d 727.

Request for Default Judgment as Discovery Sanction Properly Denied — New Trial for Appropriate Discovery Sanction: The plaintiff was injured when a part of a train fell on his head at work. Although cameras at the facility were recording at the time of the accident, the defendant, who was the plaintiff's employer, failed to preserve any recordings from the day of the accident. The plaintiff filed a suit against the defendant and, after learning the recording had not been preserved, requested the District Court to enter a default judgment against the defendant as a discovery sanction. After the jury found in favor of the defendant, the plaintiff filed a motion for a new trial, which the District Court denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the judgment and remanded the matter to the District Court for a new trial, concluding that although default was not proper, the District Court should fashion an appropriate sanction against the defendant for the new trial. Spotted Horse v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2015 MT 148, 379 Mont. 314, 350 P.3d 52.

Motion for Judgment as Matter of Law Properly Denied: The defendant mining company produced sufficient evidence to cast doubt as to whether mining-related subsidence actually caused the current damage to an apartment building, and reasonable persons could have found that other factors caused the damage. Barile v. Butte High School, 2013 MT 263, 372 Mont. 1, 309 P.3d 1009.

Rule 51 Instructions to the Jury; Objections; Preserving a Claim of Error.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 51 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are both substantive and stylistic.

Rule 51(a)(1) does not provide for the court to request jury instructions as in the previous rule, but allows the parties to submit proposed instructions as a matter of right. Rule 51(a)(2) further allows parties to request instructions on issues not reasonably anticipated prior to the close of evidence. Rule 51(b)(3) allows the court to instruct the jury at any time before jury discharge, in contrast to the more restrictive previous rule which requires that they are read to the jury prior to commencement of counsel's arguments. Rule 51(c)(2)(B) explicitly preserves the right to object if a party was not informed of an instruction or request. Rule 51 takes a more permissive stance toward jury instructions, while affording more protection against their improper application.

Rule 51(d) establishes clear guidelines for the assignment of error. The previous version of the rule is without a similar compliment.

Case Notes

Jury Verdict Not Contrary to Jury Instructions and Law: The plaintiff sued her employer for age discrimination and sued her union for breach of the duty of fair representation. The employer pleaded an affirmative defense that the discrimination claim was time barred. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the employer, though the verdict form did not specify whether the jury found in favor of the employer on the merits or because the plaintiff's claim was time barred, and returned a verdict against the union, finding the union liable for damages. On appeal, the union argued that the jury verdict was inconsistent and contrary to law because the employer was found not at fault and that the union therefore should have been found not at fault. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed, holding that the jury's verdict was not demonstrably inconsistent with the instructions given to the jury. The Supreme Court noted that the jury was instructed to compensate the plaintiff for damages caused by the union's violation, without regard to the incremental increase in the plaintiff's damages, above the employer's discrimination, caused by the union's refusal to process a meritorious grievance, and held that the jury instruction was given without objection, making it "the law of the case". Petaja v. Mont. Pub. Employees' Ass'n, 2016 MT 143, 383 Mont. 516, 373 P.3d 40, citing Seltzer v. Morton, 2007 MT 62, 336 Mont. 225, 154 P.3d 561.

Reasonably Foreseeable Misuse of Liquid Nail Product by Skin Contact — Erroneous Jury Instructions — Cumulative Error: Before a products liability case concerning an ingredient in a liquid nail product commenced, the District Court properly ruled for the plaintiff on a partial summary judgment motion, holding that the defendant could not argue affirmative defenses, including unreasonable misuse because the skin contact by the liquid nail product was reasonably foreseeable or assumption of the risk because the plaintiff did not subjectively know that the product would cause her injuries. However, the District Court then abused its discretion by allowing the product distributor to present expert testimony that its product was "safe as used" when skin contact was avoided, which erroneously introduced the concept of misuse by skin contact. The District Court compounded the problem by subsequently denying the plaintiff's request to cross-examine the expert witnesses who offered the evidence that the product was "safe as used", instructed the jury as to the meaning of "safe as used" without authority to support the court's definition, and refused to instruct the jury that skin contact is common in the nail industry. Due to cumulative error, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case. Kenser v. Premium Nail Concepts, Inc., 2014 MT 280, 376 Mont. 482, 338 P.3d 37.

No Abuse of Discretion When Jury Instruction Refused: Plaintiffs' failure to present evidence regarding whether surgery should have been performed by a specialist board-certified vascular surgeon rather than by the defendant general surgeon was an appropriate basis for refusal of their proposed jury instruction. Anderson v. Harper, 2013 MT 369, 373 Mont. 127, 314 P.3d 908.

Rule 52. Findings and Conclusions by the Court; Judgment on Partial Findings.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 52 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are intended to be stylistic only.

Previous Rule 52(a) states that findings are unnecessary on decisions of motions "except as provided in subdivision (c) of this rule." Rule 52(a)(3), in adopting the present federal language, reads that findings are unnecessary "unless these rules provide otherwise." The Federal Committee noted that they made this change to the 2007 update to incorporate provisions in other rules, including Rule 54(d)(2)(C), which requires Rule 52 findings.

Rule 52(b) subjects motions, by reference to the requirements in Rule 59, to a 60-day automatic denial, incorporating the same provisions of previous Rule 52(d). The stylistic changes of this rule fully incorporate Montana's previous 60-day time fuse designed to prevent delayed action by the court.

The 10-day period in Rule 52(b) for filing of a motion to amend or make additional findings is enlarged to 28 days in conformance with the Federal Rules change. The reason for this is explained in the following Federal Rules Committee Comment:

Former Rules 50, 52, and 59 adopted 10-day periods for their respective post-judgment motions. Rule 6(b) prohibits any expansion of those periods. Experience has proved that in many cases it is not possible to prepare a satisfactory post-judgment motion in 10 days, even under the former rule that excluded intermediate Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays. These time periods are particularly sensitive because Appellate Rule 4 integrates the time to appeal with a timely motion under these rules. Rather than introduce the prospect of uncertainty in appeal time by amending Rule 6(b) to permit additional time, the former 10-day periods are expanded to 28 days. Rule 6(b) continues to prohibit expansion of the 28-day period.

The Committee considered the question of whether the change from 10 to 28 days on these Rules would affect the "deemed denied" provisions in Montana's Rules. The Committee concluded there will be no effect — the 60-day "deemed denied" period would continue to run from the date the motion is filed, regardless of whether the motion is filed within 10 days or 28 days.

The Committee also considered the question of whether the extension from 10 days to 28 days would affect the right to appeal these orders or the finality of judgments for purposes of appeal. Rule 6(3), M. R. App. P., (Orders appealable in civil cases) provides, in subsection (b), that an appeal may be taken "[f]rom a 'deemed denied' motion that was made pursuant to M. R. Civ. P. 50(b), 52(b), 59, or 60(b)." Accordingly, merely extending the deadlines in these rules from 10 days to 28 days will not affect appeal rights.

Case Notes

Partnership Governed by Partnership Agreement — Jurisdiction: The plaintiff appealed the judgment of the District Court that invalidated her efforts to force out her twin brother from the family's limited liability partnership created to steward the family ranch and property in eastern Montana. The brother counterclaimed on the issue of attorney fees, alleging that the District Court did not have authority to grant the award. Noting that under 35-10-106, the partnership agreement controlled the rights and duties of the partners, the Supreme Court reversed in part, concluding that the District Court erred by holding that the brother's interest was not subject to the buy-out provision of the partnership agreement and, therefore, judicial dissolution was not necessary. The Supreme Court held that, under Rule 6, M.R.Civ.P., the District Court did not have jurisdiction to award attorney fees because the award was made more than 60 days after the motion for fees was filed. Thus, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court's order awarding attorney fees and remanded for further proceedings. The court affirmed the remainder of the District Court's judgment. Ballou v. Walker, 2017 MT 197, 388 Mont. 283, 400 P.3d 234.

Rule 53. Masters.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 53 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules.

Case Notes

Special Master's Apportionment of Settlement Proceeds Proper — Substantial Evidence to Support Finding Despite Conflicting Testimony: The parties were neighboring landowners whose property had been damaged in a fire. A special master was appointed to distribute the insurance settlement proceeds. The special master ultimately found that the defendants had lost 60 acres of forested land in the fire and awarded them 66% of the settlement proceeds. After the District Court adopted the findings, the plaintiffs, who were awarded 3% of the proceeds, appealed. Although there was disputed testimony about the number of forested acres lost by the defendants in the fire, the Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that the defendants had provided substantial evidence to support their claim and that the court was not left with a firm conviction that the special master had made a mistake. Funk v. Wilcox, 2019 MT 20, 394 Mont. 124, 445 P.3d 194.

Water Master's Flow Rate Findings Supported by Substantial Evidence — No Clear Error in Adopting Findings: The Water Court did not err when it limited the flow rate of a water right to 300 miner's inches instead of 225 miner's inches. Any competing water user's claim to the 75 inches of the right was addressed and resolved by the Water Master, who determined that no other party made claim to the portion of the right on a statement of claim. Furthermore, the claimant claimed the full 300 inches on its statement of claim, which the Water Court correctly stated is entitled to prima facie proof. The Water Court plainly analyzed the Master's factual findings to determine whether substantial evidence supported the findings, and found no clear error. In re Eldorado Coop Canal Co., 2016 MT 94, 383 Mont. 205, 369 P.3d 1034.

Abuse of Discretion to Not Rule on Party's Posttrial Motions Objecting to Standing Master's Report: A standing master issued a report containing findings of facts and conclusions of law and a proposed division of the parties' marital estate. The wife filed an objection to the report with the District Court in the form of a motion for reconsideration and a motion to amend. The District Court did not rule on her motions, concluding that the motions should be ruled on at the standing master's discretion. The standing master did not rule on the motions either, and the wife appealed the District Court's order approving the standing master's report. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the matter to the District Court, holding that the District Court should have either ruled on the wife's motions or expressly asked the standing master to rule on them. In re Marriage of Patton, 2015 MT 7, 378 Mont. 22, 340 P.3d 1242.

Clear Error Standard of Review — Marital Separation and Parenting Plan — Standing Master: A husband and wife separated with one child. A standing master issued findings of fact, conclusions of law, and a final decree establishing a final parenting plan, which was adopted by the District Court. The husband appealed, arguing that the standard of review for a District Court reviewing a standing master should be de novo and not clear error. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure and statutory law specified that a clear error standard applied. In re Parenting of G.J.A., 2014 MT 215, 376 Mont. 212, 331 P.3d 835. See also In re Marriage of Davis, 2016 MT 52, 382 Mont. 378, 367 P.3d 400, holding that two standards of review are relevant in cases involving a standing master and the District Court; specifically, the Supreme Court reviews a District Court's decision de novo to determine whether it applied the correct standard of review to a standing master's findings of fact and conclusions of law, and a District Court reviews a standing master's finding of fact for clear error and its conclusions of law to determine if they are correct.

Clarification of Standard of Review — Water Master and Water Court: The Water Court reviews the Water Master's findings of fact for clear error and the Master's conclusions of law for correctness. The Supreme Court reviews the Water Court's order de novo to determine whether its conclusions of law are correct and whether it correctly applied the clear error standard of review to the Water Master's findings of fact. Heavirland v. St., 2013 MT 313, 372 Mont. 300, 311 P.3d 813.

VII. Judgment

Rule 54. Judgments; Costs.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 54 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are both substantive and stylistic. The language of Federal Rule 54 was amended as necessary to replace federal references and statutes with the appropriate state references and statutes.

Rule 54(a) adopts a discretionary posture with regard to including recitals of pleadings, a master's report, or record of prior proceedings in a judgment, substituting "should not" for the "shall not" of the previous Rule 54(a). Rule 54(c) likewise replaces "shall" with "should grant the relief to which each party is entitled."

Rule 54(b) incorporates the relevant federal language into 54(b)(1), but adds 54(b)(2) to harmonize with Montana Rule of Appellate Procedure 6(6).

Rule 54(d)(1) was revised to substitute "federal" with "Montana," "United States" with "State of Montana," and to add "political subdivisions" to the list of state entities with limited liability for costs. The clerk's authorization to tax costs after 14 days' notice, subject to the court's review upon motion from Federal Rule 54 was incorporated into the rule. The 14-day period for giving notice to the clerk to tax costs and the 7-day period for giving notice of a motion to have the court review the clerk's action on taxing costs are based on the Federal Rule.

Rule 54(d)(2) incorporates the federal provisions for attorney fees into the Montana Rules, edited to replace federal references with their state counterparts.

Rule 54(d)(2)(C) adopts the relevant language of the Federal Rules except that it omits reference to "Rule 78," which was without a state complement.

Rule 54(d)(2)(C) may require an update or revision of Montana Rule 23(h).

Rule 54(d)(2)(D) adopts the federal language except that it does not include referral of a motion for attorney fees to a magistrate judge.

Case Notes

Boundary Dispute — Fence Not Conclusive of Border — Issues of Genuine Fact — Summary Judgment Improper: In a boundary dispute involving three adjacent properties, the District Court granted partial summary judgment for one party, directed that a decree of quiet title be entered, and certified the order as final under Rule 54, M.R.Civ.P. The dispute involved an incorrect survey, two subsequent surveys, questions of boundary placement, and a fence found by the District Court to be a survey monument. On appeal, the Supreme Court recognized that the District Court relied on material facts that were genuinely disputed, that the fence was not established as the boundary, that the affidavit relied on did not include personal knowledge, and that summary judgment was improper. Sacrison v. Evjene, 2017 MT 170, 388 Mont. 144, 398 P.3d 273.

Preliminary Injunction Granted on Theory of Prescriptive Easement — Appeal on Public Easement Premature: The plaintiffs sought declaratory judgment to have legal access along a road that crossed the defendants' property. The plaintiffs sought a preliminary injunction on the theory that there was an express public easement on that portion of the road. The District Court granted the plaintiffs a preliminary injunction enjoining the defendants from barring the plaintiffs' access to the road under the theory of prescriptive easement. The plaintiffs appealed to the Supreme Court, which affirmed the ruling and noted that the plaintiffs' appeal regarding a public easement was premature because the District Court's order had not been certified and therefore was not final. Flora v. Clearman, 2016 MT 290, 385 Mont. 341, 384 P.3d 448.

Insurance Dispute — Fees, Interest, and Costs Awarded: The plaintiff was injured while working on his vehicle. He had a medical insurance policy and a separate motor vehicle policy with a medical payment provision. The medical insurer paid most of the claim. The plaintiff then sought payment of the entirety of the claim from the motor vehicle insurer, who denied the claim. The plaintiff alleged breach of contract and unfair trade practices. The Supreme Court found that the policy language did not limit the plaintiff from receiving a duplicate payment of medical expenses and that the plaintiff was entitled to attorney fees under the insurance exception to the American rule, prejudgment and postjudgment interest, and costs. Winter v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2014 MT 168, 375 Mont. 351, 328 P.3d 665. See also Estate of Gleason v. Cent. United Life Ins. Co., 2015 MT 140, 379 Mont. 219, 350 P.3d 349.

Rule 55. Default; Default Judgment.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 55 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are both substantive and stylistic. The language of Federal Rule 55 was amended as necessary to replace federal references and statutes with the appropriate state references and statutes.

Rule 55(a) reflects the 2007 changes to the Federal Rules. The Federal Committee noted that:

Former Rule 55(a) directed the clerk to enter a default when a party failed to plead or otherwise defend "as provided by these rules." The implication from the reference to defending "as provided by these rules" seemed to be that the clerk should enter a default even if a party did something showing an intent to defend, but that act was not specifically described by the rules. Courts in fact have rejected that implication. Acts that show an intent to defend have frequently prevented a default even though not connected to any particular rule. "[A]s provided by these rules" is deleted to reflect Rule 55(a)'s actual meaning.

Rule 55(b)(1) drops the explicit personal service requirement and prohibition on service by publication found in the Montana Rule. Rule 55(b)(2) drops "committee" and "guardian ad litem" from the list of infant or incompetent representatives in adherence to the federal language. Rule 55(c) does not include a substantial portion of the previous rule, and instead adheres to the federal language. The previous 3-day period of Rule 55(b)(2) is changed to 7 days to conform to the Federal Rule.

Previous Rule 55(d) does not have a federal counterpart, as it was deleted with the 2007 revision. The Federal Committee stated that the list was incomplete and unnecessary because Rule 55(a) applies Rule 55 to any party against whom a judgment for affirmative relief is requested, and because the second provision was a redundant reminder that Rule 54(c) limits the relief available by default judgment.

Rule 55(d) was incorporated, with state-specific revisions, to limit the availability of default judgment against the state. "[P]olitical subdivisions" were added to the list of protected state entities.

Case Notes

Failure to Comply With Order to Mediate — Default Judgment as Appropriate Sanction: The defendant appealed the District Court's order granting default judgment in favor of the plaintiff as a sanction against the defendant for violating the District Court's scheduling order requiring mediation. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that sufficient evidence existed for the District Court to find that the defendant failed to participate in good faith in the court-ordered mediation and that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in imposing default judgment under Rule 16(f), M.R.Civ.P., for the defendant's failure to comply with the scheduling order. Stafford v. Fockaert, 2016 MT 28, 382 Mont. 178, 366 P.3d 673.

Denial of Motion to Set Aside Default Judgment — Admission of Will to Probate — Slight Abuse of Discretion: Following the decedent's death, one of his three sons, Howard, petitioned for formal probate of the decedent's will. Another son, David, filed a detailed letter in response to the petition, in which he challenged the decedent's soundness of mind at the time the will was executed; however, David failed to object to the petition within the deadline set by the District Court, and the District Court entered default against David and his brother John. The District Court subsequently denied David's motion to set aside the default judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that a default judgment may be set aside for good cause. Whether good cause exists is an equitable determination that requires the consideration of three factors: (1) whether the default was willful; (2) whether the plaintiff would be prejudiced if the default were set aside; and (3) whether the defendant presented a meritorious defense to the plaintiff's claim. Applying these factors, the Supreme Court reversed, finding that, in light of the letter David submitted, it was difficult to conclude that the default was willful or that David failed to raise a meritorious defense. Therefore, the District Court slightly abused its discretion in denying David's motion to set aside the default judgment. In re Estate of Mills, 2015 MT 245, 380 Mont. 426, 354 P.3d 1271.

Request for Default Judgment as Discovery Sanction Properly Denied — New Trial for Appropriate Discovery Sanction: The plaintiff was injured when a part of a train fell on his head at work. Although cameras at the facility were recording at the time of the accident, the defendant, who was the plaintiff's employer, failed to preserve any recordings from the day of the accident.

The plaintiff filed a suit against the defendant and, after learning the recording had not been preserved, requested the District Court to enter a default judgment against the defendant as a discovery sanction. After the jury found in favor of the defendant, the plaintiff filed a motion for a new trial, which the District Court denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the judgment and remanded the matter to the District Court for a new trial, concluding that although default was not proper, the District Court should fashion an appropriate sanction against the defendant for the new trial. Spotted Horse v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2015 MT 148, 379 Mont. 314, 350 P.3d 52.

Default Judgment — Defendant's Willful Failure to Answer Complaint — Meritorious Defense Outweighed: The plaintiff was injured at the defendant's premises while delivering lumber. Following the injury, the defendant filed for bankruptcy and the plaintiff filed a claim to seek relief in Montana District Court. The parties negotiated a stipulation that allowed the plaintiffs to serve the defendants through first-class mail, which was approved by the Bankruptcy Court. After multiple attempts to serve and contact the defendant, the plaintiff obtained a default judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the defendant's failure to answer was willful, that the plaintiffs would be prejudiced by setting aside the default judgment, and that these factors outweighed the defendant's potential meritorious defense. Ginn v. Smurfit Stone Container Enterprises, Inc., 2015 MT 81, 378 Mont. 378, 344 P.3d 972.

Rule 56. Summary Judgment.

Committee Notes

Montana Rule 56 follows the Federal Rule 56 changes, with minor revisions. The federal rationale for the December 1, 2009 amendment to Rule 56 is as follows and expresses that rationale:

The timing provisions for summary judgment are outmoded. They are consolidated and substantially revised in new subdivision (c)(1). The new rule allows a party to move for summary judgment at any time, even as early as the commencement of the action. If the motion seems premature both subdivision (c)(1) and Rule 6(b) allow the court to extend the time to respond. The rule does set a presumptive deadline at 30 days after the close of all discovery.

The presumptive timing rules are default provisions that may be altered by an order in the case or by local rule. Scheduling orders are likely to supersede the rule provisions in most cases, deferring summary-judgment motions until a stated time or establishing different deadlines. Scheduling orders tailored to the needs of the specific case, perhaps adjusted as it progresses, are likely to work better than default rules. A scheduling order may be adjusted to adopt the parties' agreement on timing, or may require that discovery and motions occur in stages — including separation of expert-witness discovery from other discovery.

Local rules may prove useful when local docket conditions or practices are incompatible with the general Rule 56 timing provisions.

If a motion for summary judgment is filed before a responsive pleadings is due from a party affected by the motion, the time for responding to the motion is 21 days after the responsive pleading is due.

Four minor changes from the Federal language have been adopted in Montana. First, Rule 56(c)(1) omits the following language: "a different time is set by local rule or ." The rationale for this omission is that different Rules in the various judicial districts do not make sense regarding the summary judgment procedure. Also, language in Rule 56(c)(1)(A) allowing a party to move for summary judgment at any time "until 30 days after the close of all discovery" is modified. The 30-day closure period is deleted because it is inconsistent with much of Montana's summary judgment practice. Third, unless the court orders otherwise, Rule 56(c)(1)(B) requires any opposing affidavits to be filed according to the briefing schedule, instead of allowing an opposing party to surprise the moving party any time "prior to the day of the hearing." Fourth, Rule 56(c)(2) expresses the parties' general entitlement to hearing on summary judgment. See SVKV, LLC v. Harding, 2006 MT 297; Richards v. City of Missoula, 2009 MT 453.

Rule 56(a) and (b) adopts the federal language, substituting "relief" for "claim, counterclaim, or cross-claim or to obtain a declaratory judgment" where it is found in the present subsections of Montana Rule 56. The Federal Committee noted that it adopted "relief" because:

The list was incomplete. Rule 56 applies to third-party claimants, intervenors, claimants in interpleader, and others. . . . Rule 56(a) and (b) carry forward the present meaning by referring to a party claiming relief and a party against whom relief is sought.

Rule 56 adopts the discretionary federal language in place of the mandatory state phrasing in four places in the rule. Rule 56(c) states that a judgment "should be rendered if the pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact." This would replace the previous Rule 56(c), which states that a judgment "shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits" show no genuine issue.

Rule 56(d) states that a court "should" determine what material facts are not at issue and "should" then issue an order stating that determination. The previous Rule 56(d) makes those court functions mandatory with its use of "shall." Rule 56(e)(2) states that summary judgment "should" be entered against a party who fails to set out specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial. The previous Rule 56(e)(2) uses the mandatory "shall."

The Federal Committee explained their decision to change from "shall" to "should," stating:

It is established that although there is no discretion to enter summary judgment when there is a genuine issue as to any material fact, there is discretion to deny summary judgment when it appears that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact. Kennedy v. Silas Mason Co., 334 U.S. 249, 256-257 (1948). Many lower court decisions are gathered in 10A Wright, Miller & Kane, Federal Practice & Procedure: Civil 3d, § 2728. "Should" in amended Rule 56(c) recognizes that courts will seldom exercise the discretion to deny summary judgment when there is no genuine issue as to any material fact. Similarly sparing exercise of this discretion is appropriate under Rule 56(e)(2). Rule 56(d)(1), on the other hand, reflects the more open-ended discretion to decide whether it is practicable to determine what material facts are not genuinely as issue.

Case Notes

Application of Prudent Man Standard to Nonrival Claims — District Court Erred as Matter of Law: The plaintiff had valid patented mining claims as well as an underground mine entry and tunnel to access the claims. The defendants had unpatented mining claims and claimed that the plaintiff's use of the mine entry constituted trespass. The plaintiff ultimately filed a petition for declaratory judgment seeking to invalidate the defendants' claims. In determining that valuable mineral deposits were present on the defendants' claims, and that therefore the claims were valid, the District Court applied the prudent man standard according to Boscarino v. Gibson, 207 Mont. 112, 672 P.2d 1119 (1983), and granted the defendants summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that the District Court had erred as a matter of law by applying an incorrect and lower discovery standard. The Supreme Court remanded the matter to the District Court to vacate its order and to grant summary judgment in favor of the plaintiff. Mines Management, Inc. v. Fus, 2019 MT 276, 398 Mont. 15, 453 P.3d 371.

Applicability of U.C.C. — Question of Law: The debtors entered an installment contract to buy a mobile home from the sellers. They became delinquent on monthly payments, and eventually the seller invoked the acceleration clause and demanded the outstanding balance due plus notice fees. The debtors returned the mobile home to the seller, who sold it to a new buyer 2 months later without notifying the debtors. The debtors sued, alleging violation of multiple provisions under Article 9A of Montana's adopted version of the Uniform Commercial Code (U.C.C.), and filed a motion for summary judgment as to the U.C.C. violations. The District Court denied the motion, holding that there were material facts in dispute as to the application of the U.C.C. to the matter. On review, the Supreme Court found that the District Court had erred by denying the debtors' motion for summary judgment as it pertained to the continued application of the U.C.C. claims because there were no genuine issues of material fact. Christman v. Clause, 2019 MT 132, 396 Mont. 142, 443 P.3d 472.

Disability Discrimination — Employee Hampered Good Faith Effort of Employer to Engage in Interactive Process: The plaintiff was a former shift supervisor at the Montana Developmental Center (MDC) who occasionally had to use force to restrain clients at work. After one such incident, he required shoulder surgery, which prohibited him from restraining clients. The plaintiff and MDC then entered into an interactive process to find an alternative position for the plaintiff; however, the plaintiff never provided information MDC staff requested to help him locate an alternative position for which he was qualified. Ultimately, MDC terminated the plaintiff from employment. After exhausting administrative remedies, the plaintiff sued MDC alleging the defendant discriminated against him. The District Court granted the defendant summary judgment, and the plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that while the defendant had made a good faith effort to engage in the interactive process, the plaintiff had not. Alexander v. Mont. Developmental Center, 2018 MT 271, 393 Mont. 272, 430 P.3d 90.

Clear Dispute of Facts — Motion for Summary Judgment on Negligence Claim Properly Denied: The District Court properly denied the plaintiff's motion for summary judgment on negligence per se because there was a clear dispute of fact of whether the plaintiff was within the unmarked crosswalk at the time of the collision. Maier v. Wilson, 2017 MT 316, 390 Mont. 43, 409 P.3d 878.

Trespass to Land Established — Lack of Evidence on Summary Judgment Motion to Support Preliminary or Final Injunctive Relief: The District Court's interlocutory denial of preliminary or final mandatory injunctive relief was neither irreconcilable with its summary judgment declaring a trespass to land nor a manifest abuse of discretion. In support of a motion for summary judgment, the plaintiffs submitted only a one-page map prepared by a surveyor showing the boundary line encroachments, a copy of the defendants' letter accepting responsibility and apologizing for the encroachments, and the affidavit of one of the plaintiffs regarding the nature, discovery, and continued existence of the encroachments. Though this evidence was sufficient for the District Court to adjudicate the existence of continuing or recurring trespasses as a matter of law, the limited evidentiary record was insufficient to show a complete absence of any genuine issue of fact material as to whether the balance of the equities warranted the extraordinary remedy of a mandatory injunction compelling removal of the encroachments. This deficiency was particularly manifest based on the defendants' willingness to remove the encroachments upon determination or negotiation of a reasonable deadline for removal. Davis v. Westphal, 2017 MT 276, 389 Mont. 251, 405 P.3d 73.

County Financial Mismanagement — Insufficient Taxpayer Standing: The plaintiff taxpayers argued that the failure of the defendant, Glacier County, to cure its alleged financial mismanagement would foreseeably result in property tax increases, but Glacier County had adequate financial resources to meet its liabilities and it had planned corrective actions in response to audit deficiencies. Even if Glacier County had inadequately budgeted for certain funds, the plaintiffs' alleged foreseeable economic injury was insufficient to establish the constitutional "case or controversy" requirement for standing to sue the county. Mitchell v. Glacier County, 2017 MT 258, 389 Mont. 122, 406 P.3d 427.

Sufficient Evidence Required to Show Issue of Material Fact — Contracts: The plaintiff entered into a contract with the defendant to provide the defendant with crushed aggregate material from his gravel pit. The defendant no longer needed the aggregate material and refused to pay the final invoices. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly granted summary judgment to the plaintiff because the defendant failed to present sufficient evidence to establish that an issue of material fact existed regarding the amount of material extracted by the defendant. In addition, the Supreme Court awarded reasonable attorney fees, trial costs, and appeal costs to the plaintiff under 28-2-2105 and remanded the case to determine the fees and costs. Moore v. Goran, LLC, 2017 MT 208, 388 Mont. 340, 400 P.3d 729.

Boundary Dispute — Fence Not Conclusive of Border — Issues of Genuine Fact — Summary Judgment Improper: In a boundary dispute involving three adjacent properties, the District Court granted partial summary judgment for one party, directed that a decree of quiet title be entered, and certified the order as final under Rule 54, M.R.Civ.P. The dispute involved an incorrect survey, two subsequent surveys, questions of boundary placement, and a fence found by the District Court to be a survey monument. On appeal, the Supreme Court recognized that the District Court relied on material facts that were genuinely disputed, that the fence was not established as the boundary, that the affidavit relied on did not include personal knowledge, and that summary judgment was improper. Sacrison v. Evjene, 2017 MT 170, 388 Mont. 144, 398 P.3d 273.

Affidavit to Summary Judgment — Personal Knowledge — Hearsay Exception Applicable: In a foreclosure action, the plaintiff bank moved for summary judgment, and the motion was supported by an affidavit and its attached documents. The defendant objected to the affidavit and the attachments, arguing that they were hearsay. However, the District Court properly relied on the affidavit because the individual making the affidavit testified that as an authorized signer he had personal knowledge and firsthand experience regarding the bank's business records and home loan procedures, and he testified to the authenticity of the attached documents kept in the regular course of business. Although not all of the documents attached to the affidavit were certified, the affidavit certified the remaining documents and they were properly authenticated as business records. Capital One, NA v. Guthrie, 2017 MT 75, 387 Mont. 147, 392 P.3d 158.

Summary Judgment Improper — Genuine Issue of Material Fact Regarding Agency Relationship — Human Rights Commission Upheld: The Human Rights Commission did not err by determining that the hearing examiner improperly granted summary judgment to a prospective employer in an age discrimination claim. While the Supreme Court did not take a position on the merits of the claim, it agreed with the Commission that for purposes of summary judgment, the claimant met his burden to demonstrate issues of material fact about his contention that the prospective employer was exerting control over an electrical lineman apprenticeship training committee such that the committee was acting as the prospective employer's agent. Missoula Elec. Co-op v. Jon Cruson, Inc., 2016 MT 267, 385 Mont. 200, 383 P.3d 210.

Use of Cutting Torch for Scrap Metal Not Inherently Dangerous — No Joint Venture: The plaintiff sued the defendants, his neighbor and a scrap metal business, for damage to his property caused by a fire. The neighbor had agreed to let the scrap metal business remove scrap metal from the neighbor's property and the proceeds from the sale of the scrap metal would be split between the defendants. However, an employee of the scrap metal business caused a fire when he was cutting scrap metal with a cutting torch and the fire spread to the plaintiff's neighboring property. The plaintiff argued that his neighbor was vicariously liable for the damage because the neighbor was in a joint venture with the scrap metal business and because the use of a cutting torch is an inherently dangerous activity. The District Court disagreed and granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that evidence of profit sharing is not determinative for establishing a joint venture and that the use of a cutting torch is not inherently dangerous because simple, easy-to-follow precautions can be taken to avoid danger. Pearson v. McPhillips, 2016 MT 257, 385 Mont. 171, 381 P.3d 579.

Determination of Reasonable Efforts Made by Creditor Prior to Action Against Guarantor: The plaintiff, a real estate agent, sued the defendant for unpaid commissions. The District Court granted the plaintiff summary judgment. On appeal, the defendant argued that it was improper for the District Court to rule on the issue of whether the plaintiff had reasonably exhausted all remedies against other debtors before attempting to collect from him, the guarantor, in a motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court agreed and reversed and remanded the matter for further proceedings. Foss v. Melton, 2016 MT 232, 385 Mont. 5, 386 P.3d 553.

Professional Negligence — Expert Testimony Not Required to Establish Standard of Care — Statutory Standard Applicable: The plaintiff sued his real estate agent after land for which he had entered into a buy-sell agreement with a landowner was sold to a different purchaser, who had also been represented by the same real estate agent. The plaintiff sued the defendant for professional negligence; however, the District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendant after the plaintiff disclosed he did not intend to call an expert witness on a real estate agent's duties. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that expert testimony on a real estate agent's duties may not have been necessary given that 37-51-313 sets forth those duties. The court concluded that the plaintiff had presented sufficient evidence for the claims to be presented to a jury and remanded the matter for further proceedings. Wagner v. MSE Technology Applications, Inc., 2016 MT 215, 384 Mont. 436, 383 P.3d 727.

Subsequent Deposition Testimony Defeated Prior Inconsistent Affidavit — Joke Not Defamatory — Summary Judgment Proper: The District Court did not err in granting summary judgment against the plaintiff in a defamation case in which a witness attested to the defamation in an affidavit but then changed his testimony in a deposition in which he admitted that he signed the affidavit without thoroughly reviewing it while also stating that he thought the alleged defamatory statement was a joke. A joke is not defamatory and, therefore, is not actionable. Ray v. Connell, 2016 MT 95, 383 Mont. 221, 371 P.3d 391.

Qualification of Vehicle as Temporary Substitute — Use of Vehicle Determinative: The plaintiff, who worked as a cook for an outfitting company, was injured at camp when her personal truck, which was attached to the trailer in which she was sleeping, was stolen. In the days preceding the accident, the truck had been used to transport clients and their luggage to camp because the company's vehicle, a Suburban, that usually hauled clients and luggage was being repaired. The plaintiff claimed that she was entitled to uninsured motorist coverage under her employer's policy on the Suburban because her truck was being used as a "temporary substitute vehicle". The insurer refused coverage, countering that her truck could not be considered a "temporary substitute vehicle" because the plaintiff would have still been driving her truck even if the Suburban had been available. After the District Court granted the insurer summary judgment, the plaintiff appealed. In a matter of first impression, the Supreme Court clarified that the proper test for what constitutes a temporary substitute vehicle is the use to which it is put. Given that the undisputed facts showed that the plaintiff had used her truck to do the work the Suburban would have done had it not been in the shop for repairs, she was entitled to coverage. Accordingly, the Supreme Court reversed the order granting summary judgment and directed the District Court to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiff. Stonehocker v. Gulf. Ins. Co., 2016 MT 78, 383 Mont. 140, 368 P.3d 1187.

Legal Delivery of Deed as Disputed Issue of Material Fact — Summary Judgment Improper: In a case concerning the disputed validity of a quitclaim deed, in which the parties agreed the facts were undisputed but disagreed on whether the deed was legally delivered, the District Court granted summary judgment to the defendant, concluding that the deed was legally delivered. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded, concluding that substantial evidence in the record supported the conclusion that delivery had occurred but also that substantial evidence in the record also supported the opposite conclusion that delivery had not occurred. Because the issue of delivery was material to the resolution of the case and because substantial evidence supported either conclusion, the existence of the issue precluded the District Court from granting summary judgment for either party. Sparks v. Emmert, 2016 MT 43, 382 Mont. 249, 369 P.3d 994.

Denial of Summary Judgment Hearing — No Abuse of Discretion: The District Court did not abuse its discretion by denying a movant's request to hold a summary judgment hearing because there was no indication that the movant's evidence would establish a genuine issue of material fact. RN & DB, LLC v. Stewart, 2015 MT 327, 381 Mont. 429, 362 P.3d 61.

Adoption of Parties' Proposed Order Not Erroneous Per Se: The plaintiff sued Lincoln County and several of its commissioners regarding the resignation and appointment process for commissioners. The District Court issued a summary judgment order prepared by the defendants' counsel in favor of the defendants. On appeal, the plaintiff argued that the judge had erred in issuing an order that was prepared entirely by the defendants' counsel. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that although District Courts are encouraged to not adopt a proposed order verbatim, to do so is not erroneous per se. Swapinski v. Lincoln County, 2015 MT 275, 381 Mont. 138, 357 P.3d 329.

No Error in Upholding State Employee Discharge on Summary Judgment — Good Cause for Termination Based on Undisputed Facts: The District Court did not err by granting summary judgment to a state agency and by ruling as a matter of law that a state employee was terminated for good cause. Although certain facts were in dispute, there was no dispute that the employee repeatedly failed to report to work after a dispute with her immediate supervisor, refused to attend two meetings to discuss her concerns, and failed to obtain an excused absence. The undisputed facts established that the employee failed to satisfactorily perform job duties, causing disruption of the state agency's operation, and therefore constituted reasonable job-related grounds for dismissal. Davis v. St., 2015 MT 264, 381 Mont. 59, 357 P.3d 320.

Injured Neither Named Insured nor Occupant of Covered Vehicle at Time of Accident — No Coverage Under Commercial Policy: The defendants' daughter was injured when she was riding a bicycle out of state. The defendants owned a business that had a commercial policy for its fleet of company vehicles; however, the daughter was neither an employee of the business nor occupying a company vehicle at the time of the accident. The defendants sought benefits from the commercial policy on their daughter's behalf. The plaintiff insurance company sought declaratory judgment that the policy did not cover the daughter for her injuries. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the plaintiff and the defendants appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed, agreeing that because the daughter was not a named insured or occupying a car covered by the policy at the time of the accident, the plaintiff was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Am. St. Ins. Co. v. Flathead Janitorial & Rug Services Inc., 2015 MT 239, 380 Mont. 308, 355 P.3d 735.

Summary Judgment Inappropriate — Forfeiture Property — Evidence of Sham Owner: Contradictory evidence was presented concerning the ownership of a seized vehicle and whether it was used for drug activity. Because the evidence demonstrated that there were genuine issues of material fact as to whether the registered owner was an innocent owner or a sham owner and whether the vehicle had been used in drug transactions, the District Court properly determined that summary judgment was not warranted. Muir v. Bilderback, 2015 MT 180, 379 Mont. 459, 353 P.3d 473.

Mining Waste Dispute — Summary Judgment Improper — Plaintiff Not Provided Opportunity to Provide Facts: The plaintiff asserted trespass and conversion causes of action in District Court against the defendant for removing mining waste from a placer claim that overlapped the common border of mining claims that were owned by both parties. After considering cross-motions for summary judgment, the District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendant, reasoning that the plaintiff's load claim was not supported by a load discovery, the waste materials were placer deposits and as such the plaintiff had no interest in the waste materials, and the plaintiff's lode claim was not a sufficient interest to maintain a trespass action. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case to District Court. The court held that the plaintiff had no opportunity to prove that it had discovered sufficient materials. Additionally, there were further questions of fact that needed to be resolved before the District Court could determine as a matter of law that the plaintiff's load claim did not give it a sufficient interest to maintain a trespass action. Tags Realty, LLC v. Runkle, 2015 MT 166, 379 Mont. 416, 352 P.3d 616. See also Mines Management, Inc. v. Fus, 2019 MT 276, 398 Mont. 15, 453 P.3d 371.

Unpaid Bill for Court-Ordered Services Not "Debt" — Fair Debt Collection Practices Act Inapplicable: As a part of dissolution proceedings, a court ordered the parties, including the plaintiff, to hire a guardian ad litem to perform a parenting evaluation. Ultimately, the guardian ad litem hired a collection agency to attempt to collect the debt from the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued both the collection agency and the guardian ad litem under the Fair Debt Collections Practices Act, and the District Court granted the defendants summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, agreeing that the debt at issue was not consensual and the act therefore did not apply. Amour v. Collection Professionals, Inc., 2015 MT 150, 379 Mont. 344, 350 P.3d 71.

Alleged "Aiding" Under Montana Human Rights Act — No Obligation for Police to Remedy Discrimination: After a hotel refused to register the plaintiff because he had a service dog with him, the plaintiff called 9-1-1 to report that the hotel was violating his rights. The police officers told him that he would have to leave, and ultimately the plaintiff filed a discrimination claim against the police department for "aiding and abetting" the hotel in discrimination. The District Court granted the defendant summary judgment based on its conclusion that Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, does not require law enforcement personnel to remedy unlawful discrimination. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Hansen v. Bozeman Police Dept., 2015 MT 143, 379 Mont. 284, 350 P.3d 372.

Summary Judgment Inappropriate — Failure by District Court to Resolve All Claims: The District Court awarded summary judgment in favor of defendant without addressing the plaintiff's remaining arguments. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred by entering summary judgment without resolving all of the plaintiff's claims, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Gazelka v. St. Peter's Hosp., 2015 MT 127, 379 Mont. 142, 347 P.3d 1287.

Insurer Required to Establish Actual Damages — Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage: Plaintiff insurance company sued the defendants for making derogatory comments regarding its leadership and financial condition and alleging violations of the Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA) and interference with prospective economic advantage. The District Court granted summary judgment for the defendants, holding that the UTPA does not create a private right of action by one insurer against another and that the plaintiff had failed to establish damages. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that a business entity must establish actual and quantifiable economic damages and that the plaintiff failed to do so with claims of general and reputational damages. Victory Ins. Co. v. Mont. St. Fund, 2015 MT 82, 378 Mont. 388, 344 P.3d 977.

Deterioration Leading to Fire Not "Occurrence" Under Policy: The defendant installed a faulty water heater that caused a fire in a restaurant, and the restaurant sought indemnification from the defendant. At the time of the installation, the defendant was covered by a commercial general liability policy; however, the policy had expired by the time the fire occurred, 3 years later. The defendant's insurance carrier, the plaintiff, denied coverage and filed a petition for declaratory relief. The plaintiff argued that the damage to property had occurred after the policy had lapsed. The defendant argued that the deterioration of the heater that ultimately caused the fire was "property damage" under the policy and occurred at the time the policy was in effect. The District Court granted summary judgment to the plaintiff, holding that deterioration of the water heater was not "property damage" under the policy. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, agreeing that because no property damage had occurred during the policy, no "occurrence" triggering coverage had occurred. Truck Ins. Exchange v. O'Mailia, 2015 MT 42, 378 Mont. 231, 343 P.3d 1183.

Indemnification Proper Under Terms of Subcontract: The state contracted with the plaintiff on a highway paving project. The state and the plaintiff insured the project, and the contractor subcontracted parts of the job to the defendant. On the day after the defendant applied sand and oil to the road, a thunderstorm caused the oil to emulsify in the rainwater and therefore damage passing vehicles. The vehicle owners brought claims against the state, which the state paid. The plaintiff reimbursed the state for what the state paid to the vehicle owners and then sued the defendant, seeking indemnification pursuant to the subcontract. The District Court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment. On appeal, however, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that under the express terms of the subcontract, indemnification was proper because, but for the defendant's action in applying the oil, the damage would not have occurred. The Supreme Court therefore remanded the matter for the District Court to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiff. A.M. Welles, Inc. v. Montana Materials, Inc., 2015 MT 38, 378 Mont. 173, 342 P.3d 987.

Nine-Foot Wall Adjacent to Neighbors' Property — Claims of Nuisance and Violation of Covenants — Summary Judgment in Favor of Defendants Improper: The defendants built a 9-foot-tall wall along a portion of their golf course, adjacent to the plaintiffs' homes. The plaintiffs sued the defendants for nuisance and for building the wall in violation of restrictive covenants. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants, finding that there was no issue of material fact that the wall served a reasonable purpose and had a beneficial, nonspite use, given that it prevented trash and trespassers from entering the golf course. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that the District Court had erred by not considering the testimony in the light most favorable to the plaintiffs, and remanded the matter for further proceedings. Bennett v. Hill, 2015 MT 30, 378 Mont. 141, 342 P.3d 691.

Summary Judgment Proper — Request for Remote Video Hearing Moot Until Response Brief Filed — Stay of Proceeding Pending Further Discovery Not Necessary Absent Showing by Plaintiff: A pro se plaintiff sued his attorney based on a variety of civil allegations that pertained to representation in a homicide trial. The defendant attorney filed a motion for summary judgment, and instead of filing a response and any opposing affidavits, the plaintiff filed motions "to stay briefing and for a remote video summary judgment hearing" and to stay proceedings pending completion of discovery. The District Court denied the motion for a remote video hearing, reasoning that the request was moot until a response brief is filed. Additionally, the District Court denied the motion to stay judgment pending completion of discovery. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the rulings on the plaintiff's motions, reasoning that the plaintiff had sufficient time to submit a response brief after denial of the motion for a remote video hearing. Additionally, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to stay pending discovery because the plaintiff failed to establish any discoverable material that would have precluded summary judgment. Miller v. Goetz, 2014 MT 150, 375 Mont. 281, 327 P.3d 483.

Employee and Officer of Defendant Shielded from Individual Liability — Denial of Summary Judgment Proper: When there was no evidence of a personal pecuniary motive or of decisions that were against the best interests of the corporation, the privilege of limited liability applied and an employee and corporate officer were shielded from individual liability. Harrell v. Farmers Educ. & Co-op Union, 2013 MT 367, 373 Mont. 92, 314 P.3d 920.

Grant of Summary Judgment Improperly Based on Unsworn Documentation: The plaintiff was injured in a car accident and filed a lawsuit against the other driver's insurer to require it to pay him lost wages. In support of his motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff attached letters from his doctor but did not submit any affidavits. After the District Court granted the plaintiff summary judgment, the insurer appealed. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case. It agreed with the insurer that the District Court had erred in granting summary judgment by relying on unsworn letters that were not supported by a sworn statement. Alfson v. Allstate Property & Cas. Ins. Co., 2013 MT 326, 372 Mont. 363, 313 P.3d 107.

Request for New Beneficiary Not Appropriate Use of Reformation — Summary Judgment Properly Granted to Stepson: Reformation does not permit the court to create an entirely new contract. In this case, the petitioner asked the court to name her as an entirely new beneficiary, which would be a substantial addition resulting in a new contract. This request went beyond what is permitted by way of reformation. Section 28-3-304 governs the interpretation of contracts, not their reformation, and was properly applied here; however, the standard for disregarding a writing contained in 28-3-304 was not met because the evidence showed the decedent intended to list his estate as his contingent beneficiary, so the District Court properly granted summary judgment to the decedent's stepson. In re Estate of Irvine, 2013 MT 271, 372 Mont. 49, 309 P.3d 986.

Summary Judgment Proper When Reasonably Diligent Search Undertaken: The District Court was not in error in granting summary judgment in favor of the title companies when an employee found no public records on file during her search that established the road as a county road and she did not breach a duty to the landowner because her search was a reasonably diligent search of public records. Harpole v. Powell County Title Co., 2013 MT 257, 371 Mont. 543, 309 P.3d 34.

Bar Fight — Negligence Claim Against Bar Based on Knowledge of Potential for Fight — Summary Judgment Reversed: After being involved in a bar fight, the plaintiff filed a negligence claim against the bar. The District Court granted summary judgment to the bar because it concluded there was no evidence to establish that the bar was aware of any potential conflict between the two patrons. The plaintiff appealed. Based on its de novo review of the record, the Supreme Court concluded that there was evidence to suggest the bar may have been aware of the potential for a fight between the two men on the night of the fight and therefore reversed and remanded the case to the District Court. Harrington v. The Crystal Bar, Inc., 2013 MT 209, 371 Mont. 165, 306 P.3d 342.

Legal Malpractice Claim Denied — Summary Judgment in Favor of Defendant Attorney Proper: In an appeal of a legal malpractice case, the Supreme Court held that a pro se litigant cannot appear on behalf of another person or entity, and thus the plaintiff lacked standing to seek relief on behalf of her husband, who she alleged had been misrepresented in a criminal proceeding. The same analysis precluded consideration of the civil malpractice claims since the attorney's handling of the civil claims belonged to the plaintiff's bankruptcy estate. Lucas v. Stevenson, 2013 MT 15, 368 Mont. 269, 294 P.3d 377.

Summary Judgment Inappropriate When Genuine Issues of Material Fact Exist Regarding Claim Accrual Date: A federal bank law enforcement officer alleged in a negligence action that he sustained injures from the defendant during an altercation at work, but a dispute arose over when the claim accrued. In reversing the District Court's award of summary judgment to the defendant, the Supreme Court held that summary judgment is inappropriate when there is conflicting evidence over when the statute of limitations began to run. Siebken v. Voderberg, 2012 MT 291, 367 Mont. 344, 291 P.3d 572, following Nelson v. Nelson, 2002 MT 151, 310 Mont. 329, 50 P.3d 139.

Judicial Dissolution of LLC Proper During Summary Judgment — Uncontested Facts Sufficient: The District Court relied on four factors in 35-8-901 and ordered judicial dissolution of a limited liability company (LLC) through a summary judgment proceeding. On appeal the respondents challenged the petitioners' motives for seeking dissolution and argued that the petitioners failed to pay their initial contribution to the LLC. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court and determined that the issues that were raised by the respondents were immaterial issues to raise an issue of fact. In summary judgment, material facts are identified by looking at the substantive law governing the claim, and there were enough uncontested material facts for the District Court to find grounds for dissolution pursuant to 35-8-901. Gordon v. Kuzara, 2012 MT 206, 366 Mont. 243, 286 P.3d 895.

Rule 57. Declaratory Judgments.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 57 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are intended to be stylistic only.

Rule 58. Entering Judgment.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 58 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are both substantive and stylistic. The language of Federal Rule 58 was amended as necessary to replace federal references and statutes with the appropriate state references and statutes.

Rule 58(a) incorporates the federal separate document requirement and exceptions into the Montana Rules. There is no similar requirement under the previous Montana Rule 58.

Rule 58(b)(2)(A) adds "or a general verdict with answers to written questions; or" to the language of the rule. It is directly adopted from the same Federal Rule.

Rule 58(d) incorporates the Request for Entry provision into the Montana Rules. There is no similar requirement under the previous Rule 58.

Rule 58(e) reflects the changes made to Rule 54(d) regarding motions for attorney fees and costs. It effectively adds motions made according to Rule 54(d)(2) (for attorney fees or costs) as well as motions for sanctions to the list of motions under M. R. App. P. 4(5)(a)(iv), extending the time to appeal.

Case Notes

Summary Judgment — Encroachment and Tree-Felling Constitute Civil Trespass — No Other Relief at Law Available Prior to Final Judgment: The parties were owners of adjoining tracts of rural property. Without verification or inquiry, the defendants mistakenly assumed that a line of pink survey flags running across the ground from a corner survey marker delineated the boundary line. As a result, the defendants cut down several trees on the plaintiffs' property and built a shop building and installed an accompanying septic system drain field near their property line mistakenly encroaching on the plaintiff's property. The District Court granted the plaintiffs' summary judgment declaring that the defendants' encroachments and tree-felling constituted civil trespasses. However, the District Court denied the plaintiffs' requests for immediate ejection and removal of all encroaching improvements, site restoration, and a permanent injunction enjoining any further intrusion on the plaintiffs' property or noncompliance with county zoning setback requirements. On appeal of the summary judgment motion, the Supreme Court analyzed civil trespass, common law trespass and ejectment, declaratory judgment of trespass and ejectment, and supplemental preliminary and permanent equitable relief. As applied, the plaintiffs obtained summary judgment declaring that the defendants' tree-felling and encroaching building and drain field constituted civil trespasses. As far as it goes, that declaratory judgment was the substantive equivalent of a judgment of ejectment declaring the plaintiffs' right to exclusive possession of their property to the exclusion of the subject encroachments. Thus, the plaintiffs successfully obtained an interlocutory judgment, prevailing on their alternatively pleaded declaratory judgment and common law ejection claims. Except for undetermined damages not at issue on appeal, and in contrast to any supplemental injunctive relief otherwise appropriate in equity, no other relief at law was available to the plaintiffs on their common law ejectment claim prior to final judgment. As such, the District Court did not err in declining to grant relief at law other than a declaration of trespass on the plaintiffs' common law ejectment claim. Davis v. Westphal, 2017 MT 276, 389 Mont. 251, 405 P.3d 73.

Rule 59. New Trial; Altering or Amending a Judgment.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 59 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are both substantive and stylistic. The language of Federal Rule 59 was amended as necessary to replace federal references and statutes with the appropriate state references and statutes.

The 10-day time periods under Rule 59(b), (d), and (e) were all changed to 28 days to conform to the Federal Rule changes. See explanation in the Committee Notes to Rules 50 and 52. Also, Rule 59(c) was changed to conform to the Federal Rules. The opposing party now has 14 days rather than 10 days, after being served, to file opposing affidavits. The language allowing an extension for up to 20 days either by the court for good cause or by the parties' stipulation has been deleted in conformance with the federal deletions.

In keeping with the State Committee's intention to retain Montana's 60-day time fuse for court action upon certain matters, the pertinent language was added to Rule 59(f).

The previous Rule 59(d), with the exception of the 60-day timing requirement, was not incorporated into Rule 59. A decision on the motion would instead be entered according to the relevant provisions of Rule 58.

Case Notes

Inappropriate Comments by Defense Counsel — No Abuse of Discretion in Denying Motion for New Trial: During cross-examination of the plaintiff's expert witness, defense counsel made snide, sarcastic comments that implied the expert was a "hired gun". After the jury awarded a defense verdict, the plaintiff filed a motion to vacate the verdict and requested a new trial, arguing that the comments had undermined the fairness of the trial. The District Court recognized the comments as inappropriate but concluded that they did not warrant a new trial and denied the motion. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the District Court was in the best position to determine whether the comments had undermined the trial and the court had not manifestly abused its discretion in denying the motion. Steffensmier v. Huebner, 2018 MT 173, 392 Mont. 80, 422 P.3d 95.

Plaintiff Failed to Establish Expert Witness Testimony Relating to Standard of Care — Judgment as Matter of Law Affirmed: In a medical malpractice case, the plaintiff failed to elicit evidence relating to the standard of care. Initially, the District Court entered judgment in the plaintiff's favor after the jury returned a verdict. However, the District Court reversed its order and granted the defendant's motion for a new trial and for relief from the judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that none of the plaintiff's experts provided sufficient testimony relating to the standard of care, that inference, implication, and jury purview is insufficient, and that manufacturer documents alone do not establish the standard of medical care. Horn v. St. Peter's Hosp., 2017 MT 298, 389 Mont. 449, 406 P.3d 932.

Burden of Proof Not Met to Show Union Breach — Denial of Postjudgment Relief Proper: The plaintiff was a nonprobationary police officer whose employment was terminated after the plaintiff advocated for the Whitefish Police Protective Association (WPPA) to affiliate with the defendant, the Montana Public Employees' Association (MPEA). At termination, the defendant was the exclusive bargaining agent for the WPPA under the collective bargaining agreement and Title 39, ch. 31. WPPA's in-house counsel was exclusively responsible for handling the officer's grievance on behalf of the defendant; however, in-house counsel took no action on the officer's behalf, prompting the officer to retain separate counsel. The plaintiff filed a complaint in District Court asserting a wrongful discharge claim against the city and a duty of fair representation (DFR) claim and common law fraud claims against the defendant. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly concluded that the plaintiff did not meet the burden of proof showing the union breached its duty, causing damages claimed. The Supreme Court agreed with the District Court's conclusion that insufficient evidence of causation precluded the plaintiff's recovery of lost wages and compensatory damages on the plaintiff's DFR claim. Folsom v. Mont. Pub. Employees Ass'n, 2017 MT 204, 388 Mont. 307, 400 P.3d 706.

Union Not Substantially at Fault for Attorney's Neglect of Misconduct: The plaintiff was a nonprobationary police officer whose employment was terminated after the plaintiff advocated for the Whitefish Police Protective Association (WPPA) to affiliate with the defendant, the Montana Public Employees' Association (MPEA). At termination, the defendant was the exclusive bargaining agent for the WPPA under the collective bargaining agreement and Title 39, ch. 31. WPPA's in-house counsel was exclusively responsible for handling the officer's grievance on behalf of the defendant; however, in-house counsel took no action on the officer's behalf, prompting the officer to retain separate counsel. The plaintiff filed a complaint in District Court asserting a wrongful discharge claim against the city and a duty of fair representation (DFR) claim and common law fraud claims against the defendant. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the defendant was not at fault for the attorney's neglect or misconduct and further concluded that the District Court abused its discretion in refusing to grant the defendant's motion for relief from its summary judgment and resulting attorney fees and punitive damage award. Folsom v. Mont. Pub. Employees Ass'n, 2017 MT 204, 388 Mont. 307, 400 P.3d 706.

Partnership Governed by Partnership Agreement — Jurisdiction: The plaintiff appealed the judgment of the District Court that invalidated her efforts to force out her twin brother from the family's limited liability partnership created to steward the family ranch and property in eastern Montana. The brother counterclaimed on the issue of attorney fees, alleging that the District Court did not have authority to grant the award. Noting that under 35-10-106, the partnership agreement controlled the rights and duties of the partners, the Supreme Court reversed in part, concluding that the District Court erred by holding that the brother's interest was not subject to the buy-out provision of the partnership agreement and, therefore, judicial dissolution was not necessary. The Supreme Court held that, under Rule 6, M.R.Civ.P., the District Court did not have jurisdiction to award attorney fees because the award was made more than 60 days after the motion for fees was filed. Thus, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court's order awarding attorney fees and remanded for further proceedings. The court affirmed the remainder of the District Court's judgment. Ballou v. Walker, 2017 MT 197, 388 Mont. 283, 400 P.3d 234.

Death of Inmate While in Custody — Human Rights Commission — Administrative Appeal and Review: An 18-year-old died from delirium tremens after being arrested by Blaine County authorities and while in the custody of the Hill County Detention Center. His estate brought a case before the Human Rights Bureau, alleging that the two counties had discriminated on the basis of race and disability. The hearing officer concluded that the counties had not discriminated against the estate. On appeal, the Human Rights Commission found clear error in the hearing officer's findings and reversed. On appeal of the Commission's findings, the District Court reversed, vacated the Commission's decision, and reinstated the hearing officer's order. The estate moved to alter or amend. The District Court, acting through a second judge following the retirement of the first judge, concluded that the first judge had fashioned an improper remedy. Both parties appealed to the Supreme Court, which held that the Commission had abused its discretion by modifying the findings of the hearing examiner without first determining that the findings were not supported by substantial evidence, the Commission abused its discretion by applying the wrong standard of review, the first judge correctly concluded that the Commission had improperly modified the hearing officer's findings, the replacement judge had incorrectly concluded that the original judge had erred as a matter of law, and the Montana Human Rights Act was not a proper legal remedy for the estate. Blaine County & Hill County v. Estate of Longsoldier, Jr., 2017 MT 80, 387 Mont. 202, 394 P.3d 159.

Self-Directed Personal Assistant Services Model — Employer of Personal Assistant Involved in Fatal Overdose Immune from Liability — No Respondeat Superior: The plaintiff, the personal representative of his mother's estate, filed suit against the employer of the personal assistant who had cared for his mother at the time she suffered a fatal overdose of medication. The defendant claimed that it was statutorily immune from liability because it was not directing the woman's personal care services. The District Court agreed that the defendant was immune from liability because the woman had been enrolled in a self-directed personal assistance services program and the law placed liability on the consumer. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, agreeing that the District Court had correctly interpreted the law. It also agreed with the plaintiff that public policy should allow him to be able to sue the defendant for its role in his mother's death; however, that would require a change to the law and would be best addressed in a legislative forum. Swanson v. Consumer Direct, 2017 MT 57, 387 Mont. 37, 391 P.3d 79.

Amendment of Judgment Proper Based on Impermissible Double Recovery Yet Jury's Determination of Breach Supported by Substantial Evidence — Accord and Satisfaction Not Argued and Not Supported by Facts: The plaintiff filed a motion for a new trial or amendment of judgment, arguing that there was insufficient evidence to justify the jury's damages award of $25,000 for the plaintiff's breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The trial court found that this argument had merit because the award would be an impermissible double recovery for the defendant and, accordingly, granted the plaintiff's request that the award be vacated. However, the plaintiff never asserted that there was not substantial evidence supporting the jury's determination that the plaintiff breached the second agreement, nor did the plaintiff argue waiver or accord and satisfaction as defenses. Thus, though the parties disputed its terms, there was sufficient evidence for the jury to find that all the elements of a contract existed, that the plaintiff breached a second agreement, and that the defendant was damaged. Moreover, the Supreme Court determined that the evidence was substantive enough for the jury to have found in favor of the defendant and to have rejected the waiver and accord and satisfaction arguments the plaintiff presented on appeal. Ryffel Family Partnership v. Alpine Country Constr., Inc., 2016 MT 350, 386 Mont. 165, 386 P.3d 971.

Legally Inconsistent Jury Finding Properly Corrected by District Court: The District Court did not abuse its discretion by amending a verdict and denying the plaintiff's request for a new trial based on an inconsistent or illegal jury verdict. In its Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., motion, the plaintiff correctly argued that the jury's simultaneous finding that the plaintiff had breached two contracts with the defendant, while also being unjustly enriched by the defendant's labor, was legally inconsistent. However, the District Court was able to reconcile the jury's findings with established law by reassigning the jury's finding of damages from unjust enrichment to breach of contract while still maintaining the integrity of the jury's verdict. The verdict was therefore reconcilable with the evidence presented at trial and was properly corrected without compromising its integrity. Ryffel Family Partnership v. Alpine Country Constr., Inc., 2016 MT 350, 386 Mont. 165, 386 P.3d 971.

Posttrial Motion for Judgment as Matter of Law — Same Arguments in Pretrial Briefing: The defendant had worked as an insurance agent for the plaintiffs, a number of insurance companies, for more than 20 years when the plaintiffs terminated their agency appointment agreement with him. Subsequently, the plaintiffs filed an action against the defendant, and he counterclaimed that the agreement had been terminated without cause. Prior to trial, the plaintiffs filed unsuccessful motions to bar evidence of the defendant's gross commissions because they claimed he was entitled to only 3 months' damages under the agreement. After the trial, the plaintiffs filed a motion for judgment as a matter of law that the defendant had failed to meet his burden in proving his loss of net profits. The District Court denied the motion, ruling that the posttrial motion made the same arguments that the plaintiffs had already made, and that the court had already ruled on, in pretrial motions. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the denial of the motion for judgment as a matter of law, concluding that the evidence, when viewed in the light most favorable to the defendant, supported the jury award. Farmers Ins. Exch. v. Goldan, 2016 MT 196, 384 Mont. 301, 378 P.3d 1163.

Photographs of Wrong Car Accident Provided to Plaintiff by Defendant's Insurer — Mistake Discovered During Trial — Motion for New Trial Improperly Denied: The plaintiff sued the defendant for injuries she sustained in a car accident involving the parties. In discovery, the defendant's insurer produced pictures of the defendant's vehicle, and at trial, the plaintiff testified that the pictures represented the damages from her car accident. Not until after the plaintiff testified did she learn that the pictures were of damage sustained by the defendant's vehicle in a different accident. After the jury rendered the plaintiff a small financial verdict, the plaintiff filed a motion for a new trial based on the surprise of the pictures' contents, which the District Court denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed and directed the District Court to order a new trial, finding that the defense counsel had undermined the fairness of the trial by impugning the plaintiff's credibility regarding the content of the pictures. O'Connor v. George, 2015 MT 274, 381 Mont. 127, 357 P.3d 323.

Abuse of Discretion — Tax Consequences of Quick Ranch Sale or Equalization Payment Not Considered — Issue Preserved Through Posttrial Motion: The District Court abused its discretion by failing to consider the tax consequences of an order that required the husband to choose between selling a ranch or making an equalization payment to the wife within 120 days. Further, the husband did not waive his right to raise the tax consequences argument on appeal, given that the issue was raised in his posttrial motion after the 120-day deadline was imposed sua sponte by the District Court in its final decree. Given the District Court's short timeline for the equalization payment, the sale of the ranch was the only reasonable option to make the payment, which created a concrete and immediate tax event. Motion to Amend Judgment Improperly Denied — Judgment Against Estate Reduced to Policy Limits of Decedent: The plaintiff filed a lawsuit against the decedent's estate for injuries sustained from a vehicle driven by the estate's decedent. The complaint was filed 15 months after the estate had filed a notice to creditors pursuant to 72-3-801. After a jury awarded the plaintiff $400,000, the estate filed a motion to reduce the amount of damages to $100,000, which was the limit of the decedent's insurance policy. The District Court denied the motion. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed in part, finding that the plaintiff could not recover more than $100,000 from the estate itself but could instead try to collect the remainder from the decedent's insurance company under the Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act. The Supreme Court vacated the judgment and remanded the matter to the District Court to issue an order barring the plaintiff from recovering more than $100,000 from the estate. Locke v. Estate of Davis, 2015 MT 141, 379 Mont. 256, 350 P.3d 33.

Plaintiff's Acceptance of Damages Award — Waiver of Right to Appeal Additional Damages: The plaintiff sued the defendant after the two were involved in a car crash. After a trial on damages the plaintiff was awarded $268,435, which the defendant paid in full. The plaintiff accepted the funds but signed an acknowledgment of payment that reserved claims for a new trial. The plaintiff subsequently moved for a new trial on the issue of emotional damages and future medical expenses, which the District Court denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff's acceptance of the judgment damages award waived her right to appeal the award of additional damages. Tempel v. Benson, 2015 MT 84, 378 Mont. 401, 346 P.3d 342.

Abuse of Discretion to Not Rule on Party's Posttrial Motions Objecting to Standing Master's Report: A standing master issued a report containing findings of facts and conclusions of law and a proposed division of the parties' marital estate. The wife filed an objection to the report with the District Court in the form of a motion for reconsideration and a motion to amend. The District Court did not rule on her motions, concluding that the motions should be ruled on at the standing master's discretion. The standing master did not rule on the motions either, and the wife appealed the District Court's order approving the standing master's report. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the matter to the District Court, holding that the District Court should have either ruled on the wife's motions or expressly asked the standing master to rule on them. In re Marriage of Patton, 2015 MT 7, 378 Mont. 22, 340 P.3d 1242.

Failure to Object to Amended Judgment — Issue Raised for First Time on Appeal Not Considered: The former husband argued that the District Court did not have the authority to attach business assets of the parties in its amended judgment. However, the husband did not file a motion to amend the judgment pursuant to Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., and the Supreme Court therefore would not consider the argument because it was being raised for the first time on appeal. In re Marriage of Guill, 2014 MT 316, 377 Mont. 216, 339 P.3d 81.

Rule 59 Inapplicable to Criminal Proceeding: Because the rules of civil procedure are applicable only to civil actions and proceedings, this rule is inapplicable to a criminal proceeding. St. v. Winter, 2014 MT 235, 376 Mont. 284, 333 P.3d 222.

Motion for Judgment as Matter of Law Properly Denied: The defendant mining company produced sufficient evidence to cast doubt as to whether mining-related subsidence actually caused the current damage to an apartment building, and reasonable persons could have found that other factors caused the damage. Barile v. Butte High School, 2013 MT 263, 372 Mont. 1, 309 P.3d 1009.

Rule 60. Relief from Judgment or Order.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 60 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are intended to be stylistic only. The language of Federal Rule 60 was amended as necessary to replace federal references and statutes with the appropriate state references and statutes.

Rule 60(c)(1) adopts the relevant federal language, but adds the language of present Montana Rule 60(c)(1).

Case Notes

Motion to Set Aside Improperly Denied — Unique Circumstances: The District Court in a dissolution of marriage proceeding ordered the parties' marital estate to be equally divided between the husband and wife. The husband was awarded the parties' ownership in a business. The wife accepted the valuation award, and the husband proceeded to sell the business less than 1 month later for over 10 times the amount it had been valued at during the dissolution proceeding. The wife moved for relief from the original judgment based on Rule (60)(b), M.R.Civ.P., and the District Court denied the motion by operation of law by failing to issue a ruling within 60 days. The Supreme Court found that the unique circumstances, including excessive time between trial and issuance of the decree and the extreme disparity between the District Court's valuation of the business and its sale price, warranted remand. In re Marriage of Remitz, 2018 MT 298, 393 Mont. 423, 431 P.3d 338.

Burden of Proof Not Met to Show Union Breach — Denial of Postjudgment Relief Proper: The plaintiff was a nonprobationary police officer whose employment was terminated after the plaintiff advocated for the Whitefish Police Protective Association (WPPA) to affiliate with the defendant, the Montana Public Employees' Association (MPEA). At termination, the defendant was the exclusive bargaining agent for the WPPA under the collective bargaining agreement and Title 39, ch. 31. WPPA's in-house counsel was exclusively responsible for handling the officer's grievance on behalf of the defendant; however, in-house counsel took no action on the officer's behalf, prompting the officer to retain separate counsel. The plaintiff filed a complaint in District Court asserting a wrongful discharge claim against the city and a duty of fair representation (DFR) claim and common law fraud claims against the defendant. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly concluded that the plaintiff did not meet the burden of proof showing the union breached its duty, causing damages claimed. The Supreme Court agreed with the District Court's conclusion that insufficient evidence of causation precluded the plaintiff's recovery of lost wages and compensatory damages on the plaintiff's DFR claim. Folsom v. Mont. Pub. Employees Ass'n, 2017 MT 204, 388 Mont. 307, 400 P.3d 706.

Union Not Substantially at Fault for Attorney's Neglect of Misconduct: The plaintiff was a nonprobationary police officer whose employment was terminated after the plaintiff advocated for the Whitefish Police Protective Association (WPPA) to affiliate with the defendant, the Montana Public Employees' Association (MPEA). At termination, the defendant was the exclusive bargaining agent for the WPPA under the collective bargaining agreement and Title 39, ch. 31. WPPA's in-house counsel was exclusively responsible for handling the officer's grievance on behalf of the defendant; however, in-house counsel took no action on the officer's behalf, prompting the officer to retain separate counsel. The plaintiff filed a complaint in District Court asserting a wrongful discharge claim against the city and a duty of fair representation (DFR) claim and common law fraud claims against the defendant. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the defendant was not at fault for the attorney's neglect or misconduct and further concluded that the District Court abused its discretion in refusing to grant the defendant's motion for relief from its summary judgment and resulting attorney fees and punitive damage award. Folsom v. Mont. Pub. Employees Ass'n, 2017 MT 204, 388 Mont. 307, 400 P.3d 706.

Motion to Set Aside Default Properly Denied — No Excusable Negligence: The District Court did not slightly abuse its discretion when it denied the defendants' motion for relief, reconsideration of the judgment and judicial decree, or any other postjudgment motion to set aside default. The appellant failed to establish that his former counsel's action constituted excusable negligence that would set aside the default. The Supreme Court remanded the issue of damage calculations to the District Court. DeTienne v. Sandrock, 2017 MT 181, 388 Mont. 179, 400 P.3d 682.

Motion to Amend Findings to Reflect Parties' Joint Property Settlement Agreement — Abuse of Discretion to Deny Motion: As part of the dissolution of their marriage, the parties entered into a property settlement agreement, which was attached to their court pleadings. Two years later, the parties learned that the District Court had failed to attach the property settlement agreement, which had given each an equal interest in the marital home. Instead, the court had awarded the home to the husband. The wife filed a motion to amend the District Court findings to award each of them an equal interest in the home, which the District Court denied. The wife then appealed to the Supreme Court, which reversed the District Court, ruling that it had erred by dividing the parties' property inconsistent with the parties' property settlement agreement and had abused its discretion in not allowing the wife to amend the findings to reflect their agreement. In re Marriage of Wagenman, 2016 MT 176, 384 Mont. 149, 376 P.3d 121.

Implicit Denial of Relief From Judgment Regarding Parenting Plan — No Abuse of Discretion: A father filed a motion for relief from the issuance of a final parenting plan, arguing that new evidence made it appear the mother had misled the court about her relocation address and its habitability. However, the mother had also responded with records and photographic proof of her residence, and the District Court did not abuse its discretion by implicitly denying the father's motion for relief. In re Parenting of S.E.L., 2015 MT 228, 380 Mont. 256, 354 P.3d 1237.

Motion to Amend Judgment Improperly Denied — Judgment Against Estate Reduced to Policy Limits of Decedent: The plaintiff filed a lawsuit against the decedent's estate for injuries sustained from a vehicle driven by the estate's decedent. The complaint was filed 15 months after the estate had filed a notice to creditors pursuant to 72-3-801. After a jury awarded the plaintiff $400,000, the estate filed a motion to reduce the amount of damages to $100,000, which was the limit of the decedent's insurance policy. The District Court denied the motion. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed in part, finding that the plaintiff could not recover more than $100,000 from the estate itself but could instead try to collect the remainder from the decedent's insurance company under the Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act. The Supreme Court vacated the judgment and remanded the matter to the District Court to issue an order barring the plaintiff from recovering more than $100,000 from the estate. Locke v. Estate of Davis, 2015 MT 141, 379 Mont. 256, 350 P.3d 33.

Rules of Civil Procedure Inapplicable to Revocation Proceedings — Expiration of Time to Perfect Appeal of Sentence: The state filed a petition to revoke the defendant's probation. The District Court revoked his probation, and the defendant filed a motion for relief from a judgment pursuant to Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. The District Court denied the motion on the basis that the Rules of Civil Procedure do not apply to revocation proceedings. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that the defendant was limited to challenging the revocation through a direct appeal, the time for which had expired. St. v. Osborn, 2015 MT 48, 378 Mont. 244, 343 P.3d 1188.

Request for Modification of Property Agreement Properly Denied — No Duty for District Court to Determine Value of Assets When Parties Agree to Distribution: The parties divorced after 32 years of marriage. The parties stipulated to a property settlement agreement providing that the wife received the equity in the marital home, approximately $80,000, and the husband received his retirement income, $4,000 per month; that the agreement "may not be modified by any court"; and that the parties waived the exchange of final financial disclosures. Both parties were represented by counsel at the time the agreement was made. Nearly a year after the District Court approved the agreement, the wife filed a petition to modify the agreement, claiming that the District Court had failed to determine the value of the assets covered by the agreement. The District Court denied the petition, and the wife appealed to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that the wife had entered into the agreement with full knowledge of the relevant facts, that she had endorsed the agreement to the District Court, and that the District Court did not have an independent duty to determine the value of the assets under these circumstances. In re Marriage of Tanascu, 2014 MT 293, 377 Mont. 1, 338 P.3d 47.

Father's Motion to Set Aside Name Change Not Independent Action: After a divorce and custody proceeding, the mother sought to have her children's surname changed to that of the stepfather, which was granted. The biological father sought to have the judgment set aside under Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P. The District Court held that the action was not a separate and distinct action from the name-change, custody, and divorce cases and consolidated the case under Rule 42, M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that Rule 60 does not grant a complainant the right to relitigate a judgment in a separate and distinct action. Tucker v. Tucker, 2014 MT 115, 375 Mont. 24, 326 P.3d 413.

Order Amended Two Years Later Affecting Substantive Rights — District Court Reversed: In a 2011 order, the District Court imposed sanctions against the defendant under Rule 11, M.R.Civ.P. After granting the defendant's Writ of Certiorari, the Supreme Court stated that the Rule 11 sanctions were subject to the standard appeal process. Nearly 2 years after the order was issued, the District Court amended the order to impose jail time if the defendant did not pay the Rule 11 sanctions, and the defendant appealed. The Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion in amending the order because the amendment was not to correct a clerical mistake but instead affected the defendant's substantive rights. The Supreme Court reinstated the original order. Davenport v. Odlin, 2014 MT 109, 374 Mont. 503, 327 P.3d 478.

No Abuse of Discretion in Setting Aside Default Judgment: The District Court did not rule on a motion to set aside default judgment within the 60-day time limit contemplated by Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., and granted the motion after the 60 days had expired. As the delay was caused by appellant, there was no manifest abuse of discretion. JAS, Inc. v. Eisele, 2014 MT 77, 374 Mont. 312, 321 P.3d 113.

Award to Wife of More Than Amount Requested Without Prior Notice to Husband — Slight Abuse of Discretion: A husband and wife appeared pro se at the final dissolution hearing and the District Court, with no prior notice to the husband that the court might award the wife more than she requested, ordered the husband to pay her an additional $30,000. The husband obtained counsel and requested the judge set aside the final judgment. The court failed to rule on the motion and it was deemed denied. The Supreme Court reversed, stating that a District Court has the discretion to award more than petitioned for but the District Court should have given notice to the husband that more could be awarded so that the husband could have prepared a response to the issue of an increased award. The Supreme Court held that the final judgment should have been set aside pursuant to Rule 60(b)(1), M. R. Civ. P., due to surprise on the part of the husband. In re Marriage of Steyh, 2013 MT 175, 370 Mont. 494, 305 P.3d 50.

Failure of Party or Court to Act Before Deadline Not Jurisdictional Defect: After the defendant moved to set aside a default judgment against it, the District Court failed to rule within 60 days, resulting in the motion being "deemed denied" under Rule 60(c), M.R.Civ.P. Nevertheless, 8 days after the 60-day deadline expired, the District Court granted the defendant's motion to set aside the default judgment. The plaintiff appealed, asserting that the District Court lacked jurisdiction to act on the motion after the deadline expired. The Supreme Court overruled several previous cases and clarified that if a party or a court fails to act before a rigid deadline, the passing of the deadline does not deprive the court of subject-matter jurisdiction. However, categorical time limits are mandatory and must be strictly enforced; therefore, the District Court had erred in ignoring the deadline. Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Proper Test for Motion to Set Aside Default Judgment Under Rule 60(b)(6) — Essex Test: The defendant's insurer paid part of a car accident claim to the injured party, but negotiations broke down, and the plaintiff commenced an action in which the District Court entered a default judgment against the defendant. On appeal, the Supreme Court declined to apply the test outlined in Maulding v. Hardman, 257 Mont. 18, 847 P.2d 292 (1993), for motions to set aside a default judgment. The Supreme Court overruled previous erroneous applications of a good cause standard (applicable to motions to set aside a default) to motions to set aside default judgments in Maulding and other cases and held that the proper test for relief under Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P., was outlined in Essex Ins. Co. v. Moose's Saloon, Inc., 2007 MT 202, 338 Mont. 423, 166 P.3d 451. Because the defendant did not meet the burden under this test, the District Court did not slightly abuse its discretion in deeming denied the motion to set aside the default judgment. Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729. See also Estate of Kinnaman v. Mtn. W. Bank, 2016 MT 25, 382 Mont. 153, 365 P.3d 486, in which the Supreme Court held that a motion under Rule 60(b)(6) must be something more than a request that the District Court change its mind and concluded that the fact that a movant was unsuccessful before the District Court is not an extraordinary circumstance warranting relief.

Default Judgment Not Void When One Party Served, Other Party Not — Judgment Against Served Defendant Proper — Refusal to Set Aside Upheld: The defendant was personally served with a foreclosure suit against him and his wife. His wife was never served. After he failed to appear, the bank petitioned for and received a default judgment against them both, although it was later dismissed against the wife. The defendant sought to set aside the default judgment, arguing that if it was void as to his wife, then it was void as to him as well. The District Court refused to set aside the default judgment and the defendant appealed. The Supreme Court similarly rejected the argument that in a case involving more than one defendant, a default judgment rendered void against one defendant renders the entire default judgment void to a defendant who is properly served. Whitefish Credit Union v. Sherman, 2012 MT 267, 367 Mont. 103, 289 P.3d 174.

No Excusable Neglect When Party Assumed His Attorney Had Notice of Filing of Foreclosure Action: The defendant was personally served with a foreclosure suit against him and his wife.

His wife was never served. After he failed to appear, the bank petitioned for and received a default judgment against the defendant. The defendant then sought to set aside the default judgment based on his mistaken assumption that his attorney had received notice of the lawsuit's filing. The District Court refused to set aside the default judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the defendant's neglect was not excusable because he was a sophisticated businessman who had legal counsel at the time he was served and accordingly affirmed the District Court's refusal to set aside the judgment. Whitefish Credit Union v. Sherman, 2012 MT 267, 367 Mont. 103, 289 P.3d 174.

No Posttrial Relief Based on Surprise or Mistake of Fact — Surprise Issue Not Preserved for Appeal — District Court Considered Best Available Information at Time of Trial: The uninsured employers' fund (UEF) breached a contract and the District Court awarded consequential damages to the prevailing party. Subsequently, UEF moved for posttrial relief on two grounds. First, UEF claimed the District Court should have set aside the judgment due to surprise because consequential damages were not sought in the complaint. Second, UEF claimed the District Court should have set aside the judgment based on a mistake of fact because the party that was awarded damages continued to keep a franchise despite a finding by the District Court that the franchise would be terminated. On appeal, the Supreme Court determined that UEF did not preserve the surprise defense based on a failure to object at trial and that the District Court did not make a mistake of fact since it relied on the best available information regarding the franchise at the time of trial. Elk Mtn. Motor Sports, Inc. v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 2012 MT 261, 367 Mont. 36, 289 P.3d 165.

Rule 61. Harmless Error.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 61 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are intended to be stylistic only.

Case Notes

Motion to Compel E-Mails Properly Denied — Employee Subject to Termination, Regardless of Retaliation: The District Court did not err in upholding the Human Rights Bureau's denial of the petitioner nurse's motion to compel the employer clinic to produce certain e-mails in support of her retaliation claim. The Supreme Court determined that the nurse was properly terminated by the clinic for lying during an internal investigation. Consequently, the e-mails did not affect the outcome of the case, even if the hearing officer erred in determining they were all privileged. To the extent any error could be found, it would be harmless error. Bollinger v. Billings Clinic, 2019 MT 42, 394 Mont. 338, 434 P.3d 885.

District Court's Failure to Comply With Notice — No Violation of Due Process — Plaintiffs Had Actual Notice: The plaintiffs argued that the District Court did not provide them with proper notice of a retired judge's assumption of jurisdiction, in violation of both 3-1-804 and their constitutional right to due process, and that the retired judge therefore should have granted their motion for substitution. On appeal, the Supreme Court determined that the District Court failed to comply with either 3-1-804 or the Chief Justice's order by not serving on the plaintiffs' counsel notice of the retired judge's assumption of jurisdiction when the order was issued. However, the Supreme Court reasoned that this procedural irregularity did not prejudice the plaintiffs because they had actual notice of the retired judge's involvement in the case. The plaintiffs could not reasonably have concluded, based on these facts, that anyone other than the retired judge presided over their case. The court record at all relevant times clearly identified the retired judge as the presiding judge, and no other judge participated in any hearing or entered any rulings. The purpose of the notice rule in 3-1-804 is to ensure that parties are informed when a new judge assumes jurisdiction. As applied, the District Court's failure to comply with 3-1-804 did not prejudice the plaintiffs, because the plaintiffs had actual notice when the retired judge assumed jurisdiction in the case. Absent prejudice, the Supreme Court would not disturb the District Court's denial of the plaintiffs' motion for substitution. Labair v. Carey, 2017 MT 286, 389 Mont. 366, 405 P.3d 1284.

Judge's Orders Vacated After Judicial Disqualification — No Error: The District Court did not err in relying on Rule 2.12 of the Code of Judicial Conduct to vacate a judge's orders issued after the judge should have disqualified himself. Draggin' Y Cattle Co., Inc. v. Junkermier, 2017 MT 125, 387 Mont. 430, 395 P.3d 497.

Contractual Dispute — Harmless Error: The District Court erroneously concluded that a special assessment described in a subdivision association's bylaws as "applicable to that year only" had to be used as well as assessed within the year, but the error was harmless because it did not affect the outcome of the case. Beebe v. Bd. of Directors of the Bridger Creek Subdivision Community Ass'n, 2015 MT 183, 379 Mont. 484, 352 P.3d 1094.

Sanctions Against Lawyer and Client — Procedural Concerns Not Substantial: The plaintiff sued the defendants over their attempt to collect a dental bill. The District Court ultimately granted summary judgment against the plaintiff and sanctioned her and her counsel for discovery abuses, vexatious litigation, misrepresentations, and failure to attend a pretrial conference. On appeal of the sanctions, the plaintiff's counsel argued that the District Court did not follow sanction motion procedures outlined in Rule 11, M.R.Civ.P. While the Supreme Court reversed some of the sanctions applying to vexatious litigation, it affirmed other sanctions, holding that the District Court was justified in awarding some of the sanctions under Rule 61, M.R.Civ.P., as the procedural error did not affect any party's substantial rights. Serrania v. LPH, Inc., 2015 MT 113, 379 Mont. 17, 347 P.3d 1237.

Rule 62. Stay of Proceedings to Enforce a Judgment.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 62 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules.

Additionally, Rule 62(a), providing for a 14-day automatic stay period, except in cases of injunction and receivership, has been reinstated, following the Federal Rule. It is unclear to the Committee why Rule 62(a) was previously abrogated.

Subsection (f)(2) preserves language from previous Rule 62(e) ("In all cases, the parties may by written stipulation waive the filing of security."). Subsection (f)(1) is new and substantive. Because the definition of supersedeas bond has never been entirely clear and, in some cases, works harsh consequences, the decision was made to allow for the provision of other forms of security such as cash (as provided in section 25-1-401), an appropriate irrevocable letter of credit, a certificate of deposit, or other security in the court's discretion.

Stay of execution and bond practice is also governed by Rules 22 and 23 of the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure.

Rule 62.1. Indicative Rule on a Motion for Relief that is Barred by a Pending Appeal.

Committee Notes

Montana adopts new Rule 62.1, following Federal Rule 62.1, allowing "indicative" rulings where a district court has lost jurisdiction because a matter is pending before the supreme court, but it may be beneficial to obtain a district court ruling. The rationale for adopting this new rule is the same as the federal rationale. The federal rationale for Federal Rule 62.1 from the Federal Committee Notes is as follows:

This new rule adopts for any motion that the district court cannot grant because of a pending appeal the practice that most courts follow when a party makes a Rule 60(b) motion to vacate a judgment that is pending on appeal. After an appeal has been docketed and while it remains pending, the district court cannot grant a Rule 60(b) motion without a remand. But it can entertain the motion and deny it, defer consideration, or state that it would grant the motion if the court of appeals remands for that purpose or state that the motion raises a substantial issue. Experienced lawyers often refer to the suggestion for remand as an "indicative ruling." (Appellate Rule 4(a)(4) lists six motions that, if filed within the relevant time limit, suspend the effect of a notice of appeal filed before or after the motion is filed until the last such motion is disposed of. The district court has authority to grant the motion without resorting to the indicative ruling procedure.)

This clear procedure is helpful whenever relief is sought from an order that the court cannot reconsider because the order is the subject of a pending appeal. Rule 62.1 does not attempt to define the circumstances in which an appeal limits or defeats the district court's authority to act in the face of a pending appeal. The rules that govern the relationship between trial courts and appellate courts may be complex, depending in part on the nature of the order and the source of appeal jurisdiction. Rule 62.1 applies only when those rules deprive the district court of authority to grant relief without appellate permission. If the district court concludes that it has authority to grant relief without appellate permission, it can act without falling back on the indicative ruling procedure.

To ensure proper coordination of proceedings in the district court and in the appellate court, the movant must notify the circuit clerk under Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 12.1 if the district court states that it would grant the motion or that the motion raises a substantial issue. Remand is in the court of appeals' discretion under Appellate Rule 12.1.

Often it will be wise for the district court to determine whether it in fact would grant the motion if the court of appeals remands for that purpose. But a motion may present complex issues that require extensive litigation and that may either be mooted or be presented in a different context by decision of the issues raised on appeal. In such circumstances the district court may prefer to state that the motion raises a substantial issue, and to state the reasons why it prefers to decide only if the court of appeals agrees that it would be useful to decide the motion before decision of the pending appeal. The district court is not bound to grant the motion after stating that the motion raises a substantial issue; further proceedings on remand may show that the motion ought not be granted.

Rule 63. Judge's Inability to Proceed.

Committee Notes

For reasons which are unclear, Montana did not have a counterpart to Federal Rule 63. It appears that Montana statutes, particularly sections 3-5-111 and -112, do not directly deal with a situation in which a judge is unable to act because of disability, death or disqualification which arises mid-trial or mid-hearing. Accordingly, it was decided to follow the Federal Rule. Prior to the 1991 amendment to Federal Rule 63, the rule authorized a successor judge to continue with the proceedings only when the original judge's disability arose after a verdict was returned or findings of fact and conclusions of law were filed. Thus, most circuit courts of appeal held that if the judge's disability occurred at an earlier point in the proceedings, a new trial was necessary. See 12 Moore's Federal Practice, 3d, § 63 App. 101[1]. The amended rule allows a successor judge to assume duty and continue the proceedings at any time after a trial or hearing is commenced, if the judge is able to certify familiarity with the record and make a determination that the case may be completed without prejudice to the parties.

The rule provides for assignment of the replacement judge by the chief justice because replacements envisioned by this rule will usually be in emergencies and the regular rotation rules of the particular district may interfere with speedy replacement.

VIII. Provisional and Final Remedies and Special Proceedings

Rule 64. Seizing a Person or Property.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 64 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules.

Rule 65. Injunctions.

Committee Notes

The Committee opted to continue Montana's practice of governing injunction practice by statute. There is substantial case law in Montana regarding injunction procedure. The statutes and case law provide adequate guidance.

The Committee opted not to adopt the equivalent of Federal Rule 65.1 which deals with security and proceedings against sureties. Although Federal Rule 65.1 follows Rule 65, which deals with injunctions, Rule 65.1 regarding security and proceedings against sureties is broader than injunction bonds. Professor Moore describes some of the situations in which a surety may be required or permitted by the Federal Rules to enter into a bond or stipulation or other undertaking, including: (1) state proceedings to enforce a judgment, including a stay on appeal; (2) incidental to attachment, garnishment, and other provisional remedies where state law requires security; (3) as a condition to granting a TRO or preliminary injunction; and (4) security for costs under Rule 83. Moore's Federal Practice, 3d, § 65.1.02. Rule 65.1 provides a summary procedure for the enforcement of a surety's liability under these circumstances. "The importance of this provision is that it obviates the need to bring an independent action to enforce a liability of a surety and alternatively allows for a summary procedure on motion." Id. Nothing in Rule 65.1, however, precludes a judgment creditor from bringing a wholly separate and independent action to enforce a surety's liability. Id., § 65.1.03.

With respect to proceedings against a surety relating to a supersedeas bond for stay pending appeal, Rule 24(c)[sic], M. R. App. P., covers this, allowing a surety's liability to be enforced on motion in the district court and irrevocably appointing the district court's clerk as the surety's agent on whom any papers may be served.

Rule 66. Receivers.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 66 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are intended to be stylistic only.

Rule 67. Deposit into Court.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 67 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes have also been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are intended to be stylistic only. Note, however, that Federal Rule 67(b) requires that "[t]he money must be deposited in an interest-bearing account or invested in a court-approved, interest-bearing instrument." Montana did not adopt that language because it is potentially inconsistent with the statutory language in Title 25, Chapter 8.

Rule 68. Offer of Judgment.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 68 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are intended to be stylistic only.

Rule 69. Execution.

Committee Notes

The Committee recommends that the present Montana rule be re-adopted with no changes. The Federal Rule is complicated by Federal statutory idiosyncrasies and the fact that Federal procedure incorporates "the procedure of the state where the court is located."

Rule 70. Enforcing a Judgment for a Specific Act.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 70 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are intended to be stylistic only.

Case Notes

Summary Judgment — Encroachment and Tree-Felling Constitute Civil Trespass — No Other Relief at Law Available Prior to Final Judgment: The parties were owners of adjoining tracts of rural property. Without verification or inquiry, the defendants mistakenly assumed that a line of pink survey flags running across the ground from a corner survey marker delineated the boundary line. As a result, the defendants cut down several trees on the plaintiffs' property and built a shop building and installed an accompanying septic system drain field near their property line mistakenly encroaching on the plaintiff's property. The District Court granted the plaintiffs' summary judgment declaring that the defendants' encroachments and tree-felling constituted civil trespasses. However, the District Court denied the plaintiffs' requests for immediate ejection and removal of all encroaching improvements, site restoration, and a permanent injunction enjoining any further intrusion on the plaintiffs' property or noncompliance with county zoning setback requirements. On appeal of the summary judgment motion, the Supreme Court analyzed civil trespass, common law trespass and ejectment, declaratory judgment of trespass and ejectment, and supplemental preliminary and permanent equitable relief. As applied, the plaintiffs obtained summary judgment declaring that the defendants' tree-felling and encroaching building and drain field constituted civil trespasses. As far as it goes, that declaratory judgment was the substantive equivalent of a judgment of ejectment declaring the plaintiffs' right to exclusive possession of their property to the exclusion of the subject encroachments. Thus, the plaintiffs successfully obtained an interlocutory judgment, prevailing on their alternatively pleaded declaratory judgment and common law ejection claims. Except for undetermined damages not at issue on appeal, and in contrast to any supplemental injunctive relief otherwise appropriate in equity, no other relief at law was available to the plaintiffs on their common law ejectment claim prior to final judgment. As such, the District Court did not err in declining to grant relief at law other than a declaration of trespass on the plaintiffs' common law ejectment claim. Davis v. Westphal, 2017 MT 276, 389 Mont. 251, 405 P.3d 73.

Rule 71. Enforcing Relief For or Against a Nonparty.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 71 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are intended to be stylistic only.

Condemnation law is addressed by statute in Montana, so the Committee opted to adopt no counterpart to Federal Rule 71.1.

IX. Appeals

Rule 72. Appeal from A District Court to the Supreme Court.

Committee Notes

The Federal Rules' title "IX" is for "Special Proceedings" and includes Rules 71 through 76, dealing with condemnation and with magistrate judges. Montana's title IX, on the other hand, is labeled "Appeals." Recommendation is to retain Montana's title "IX. Appeals" in connection with Rule 72.

The Committee decided not to change Rule 72.

X. District Courts and Clerks: Conducting Business; Issuing Orders

Part Committee Notes

Rules Not Adopted: Federal Rules 73 through 76 address magistrate judges. There are no counterpart Montana Rules 73 through 76.

Rule 77. Conducting Business; Clerk's Authority; Notice of an Order or Judgment.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 77 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rule to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are largely stylistic. Federal wording modifications of Rules 77(a) and (b) were followed. Also, Federal Rule 77(c)(2), Orders, is adopted as Rule 77(c). Federal Rule 77(c)(1), dealing with Hours, is not adopted because the Civil Rules do not need to micro-manage the operations of the offices of the clerks of court. Montana retains its previous practice under Rule 77(d) of requiring the prevailing party (or any other party) to serve the notice of entry of judgment, rather than have that done by the clerk of the court.

Montana previously had no Rule 78. The Committee opted not to adopt counterpart Federal Rule 78. The Committee recommends that Montana not adopt a counterpart Rule 78. This matter is adequately addressed in the district court rules and in the local court rules.

The Committee decided that Montana not adopt a counterpart to Federal Rule 79. This matter is adequately addressed in sections 3-5-501 through -509.

Rule 80. Stenographic Transcript as Evidence.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 80 has been amended as part of the revisions to make the language consistent with the Federal Rules which were recently restyled to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are intended to be stylistic only.

XI. General Provisions

Rule 81. Applicability in General.

Committee Notes

Subsections (b) and (c) are retained in present form but relettered (a) and (b). Subsection (a) "Special statutory proceedings" is deleted because it is no longer useful.

Case Notes

Property Owners Barred From Amending Petition — Rules of Civil Procedure Inapplicable: The plaintiff property owners filed a petition for review of an annexation ordinance before the 30-day statutory deadline. However, the plaintiffs initially filed the petition without a majority of real property owners, instead naming John Does 1-200. The plaintiffs eventually amended the petition by including more property owners pursuant to the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. The District Court dismissed the petition, holding that the plaintiffs failed to meet the 30-day deadline and rejecting the amendment of the petition. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the Rules of Civil Procedure do not supersede the provisions of statutes relating to appeals to or review by the District Courts. When the rules are inconsistent with statutory provisions, the statutory provisions govern. Sharp v. Eureka, 2014 MT 216, 376 Mont. 221, 331 P.3d 840.

Rule 82. Jurisdiction and Venue Unaffected.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 82 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are intended to be stylistic only.

Rule 83. Rules by District Courts.

Committee Notes

The Committee decided not to change Rule 83.

Case Notes

Local Court Rules Typically Binding on District Courts — Deviation by District Court Cured by Mother's Failure to Object: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying a mother's request to refer a matter to family court services in lieu of further involvement of the court-appointed guardian ad litem in violation of a then-governing local court rule. To the extent not in conflict with the Montana Constitution, statutes, or rules of the Supreme Court, District Courts have power and discretion to adopt local rules of administration, practice, and procedure. Duly adopted local rules are generally binding on the adopting court. However, contrary to the mother's characterization, the District Court did not simply disregard its own local rule. The custody dispute arose after imposition of the parties' final parenting plan and prior to expiration of the stipulated period of court-ordered monitoring by the guardian ad litem. The mother failed to object to monitoring by the guardian ad litem during the transition phase. Under these unique circumstances, the mother waived her option of compelling referral to family court services pursuant to the since-superseded local court rule. In re Marriage of Bessette, 2019 MT 35, 394 Mont. 262, 434 P.3d 894.

Rule 84. Forms.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 84 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. These changes are intended to be stylistic only.

Rule 85. Title.

Committee Notes

The Committee decided not to change Rule 85.

Rule 86. Effective Date — Statutes Superseded.

Committee Notes

The language of Rule 86 has been amended as part of the general restyling of the Civil Rules to make them more easily understood. The changes also have been made to make style and terminology consistent throughout these rules and to conform to the recent changes in the Federal Rules. Significant detail in previous Rule 86 concerning procedures for adoption of rule amendments, submission to the public and to the bar are deleted. Previous Rule 86(b) referenced "Statutes superseded" and contained Tables B and C listing correlating rules with superseded statutes. Tables B and C, which reference the old Revised Codes Annotated[sic], 1947, are no longer of utility and are deleted.

RULES OF APPELLATE PROCEDURE

Chapter Compiler's Comments

2011 Amendments to Rules: The amendments to the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure, effective October 1, 2011, adopted by Supreme Court Order No. AF 07-0016 consisted of all rules codified in Title 25, chapter 21, MCA. The order read, in part, "The substantive changes, to M.R.App.P. 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 22, are described briefly below; they were suggested by a variety of sources and reflect a variety of purposes. The forms appended to the Rules have not been changed." The brief descriptions of the changes are printed in the Compiler's Comments of the appropriate rule.

Former Rules Superseded and Replaced — Histories of Former Rules: The Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure in effect prior to October 1, 2007, were superseded by Montana Supreme Court Order No. AF 07-0016, issued July 3, 2007, and effective October 1, 2007. The order adopted new rules to replace the former rules. The code commissioner has codified the new rules in Title 25, chapter 21, of the Montana Code Annotated in order to maintain the logical arrangement of having the Rules of Appellate Procedure follow the Rules of Civil Procedure in the code. History of Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure: The former Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure (M.R.App.P., now superseded) were the result of a study and recommendations by the Montana Supreme Court's Advisory Committee on Rules created pursuant to Ch. 16, L. 1963, to advise the court on matters pertaining to the form and adoption of rules of procedure. The original M.R.App.Civ.P. were approved by the Montana Supreme Court on December 10, 1965, effective January 1, 1966, and superseded 25 sections of the 1947 Revised Codes of Montana, numerous Rules of the Supreme Court of Montana, and several of the earlier adopted Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. The Advisory Committee continues to advise the Supreme Court on proposed amendments to the M.R.Civ.P. and the M.R.App.P. under the authority of 3-2-702, MCA. (The rules referenced in this comment were superseded by Montana Supreme Court Order No. AF 07-0016, effective October 1, 2007, and amended in Supreme Court Order AF 07-0016, effective October 1, 2011.)

Effect of Publishing Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure: Section 2, Ch. 1, L. 1979, provided: "(1) The legislature recognizes the supreme court's authority pursuant to Article VII, section 2, of the Montana constitution to make rules governing procedure and practice before the courts.

(2) The legislature also recognizes that the practice of printing such rules with the Montana statutes is of benefit to code users and facilitates implementation of Article VII, section 2(3), of the Montana constitution concerning disapproval by the legislature.

(3) Therefore, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, printed as chapter 20, Title 25, MCA; the Montana Rules of Appellate Civil Procedure [now Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure], printed as chapter 21, Title 25, MCA; and the Montana Rules of Evidence, printed as chapter 10, Title 26, MCA, appear only for the purpose of facilitating use of the code. Neither this act nor publication of the rules may be construed as an attempt to readopt or promulgate the rules."

Rules of Court Contained in Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure — Certification of Controlling Questions of Law by United States Courts: Rule I, entitled "Civil Matters", of the Rules of the Montana Supreme Court provides as follows: "All rules with respect to the operation of this Court, procedure and practice therein, are contained in the Montana Rules of Appellate Civil Procedure [now Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure], except that whenever in an action pending in a United States court it shall appear that there is a controlling question of Montana law as to which there is a substantial ground for difference of opinion, a party to such action may institute suit in the Montana Supreme Court for a declaratory judgment or decree, and, if the judge of the United States court wherein the action is pending shall certify that the question upon which adjudication is sought is controlling in the federal litigation and the adjudication by the Montana Supreme Court will materially advance ultimate termination of the federal litigation, a declaratory judgment or decree may be rendered. Rendition of a declaratory judgment or decree is discretionary with the Montana Supreme Court, and it may refuse to render such a judgment or decree if it appears that there is another ground for determination of the case pending in the United States court, or if the question for adjudication is not clearly defined, or if the question is not adequately briefed or argued.

This amended Rule shall be in full force and effect from and after the first day of March, 1967." (The Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure referred to in this comment were superseded by Montana Supreme Court Order No. AF 07-0016, effective October 1, 2007.)

CASES DECIDED UNDER CURRENT RULES

Department Decision to Move Office — Right to Know — Mootness Due to Lack of Stay: The plaintiffs challenged the Department of Justice's decision to move the Title and Registration Bureau office from Deer Lodge to Helena, alleging violations of the public's rights to know and participate. The District Court entered judgment in favor of the Department, and the plaintiffs timely appealed but failed to stay the District Court's judgment. The Department finished relocating its staff and operations to Helena before the submission of the appeal. Because the office space was no longer under the Department's control, the staff had been relocated, and the reorganization was complete, the change in circumstances precluded a meaningful remedy, rendering the plaintiffs' claims moot. Deer Lodge v. Fox, 2017 MT 129, 387 Mont. 478, 395 P.3d 506.

Judgment Discharged Prior to Bankruptcy — Case Not Moot: A debtor's attempt to recover items seized from his home to satisfy a judgment in a separate action issued prior to his bankruptcy was not rendered moot by the bankruptcy. Hall v. Hall, 2015 MT 226, 380 Mont. 224, 354 P.3d 1224.

Lawyer's Appeal of Sanctions Held Justiciable Despite Client's Intervening Bankruptcy: The plaintiff sued the defendants over their attempt to collect a dental bill. The District Court ultimately granted summary judgment against the plaintiff and sanctioned her and her counsel for discovery abuses, vexatious litigation, and failure to attend a pretrial conference. The plaintiff then underwent bankruptcy and the dental bill and District Court's sanctions against the plaintiff were discharged. The plaintiff's lawyer appealed the sanctions award and the defendants argued that the issue was moot because of the bankruptcy proceeding. The Supreme Court ruled in favor of the plaintiff's lawyer, finding that despite the intervening bankruptcy, the attorney had an interest in the appeal. Serrania v. LPH, Inc., 2015 MT 113, 379 Mont. 17, 347 P.3d 1237.

Appeal by Subset of Original Defendants — Claims on Appeal Not Moot: After the plaintiff corporation sought a declaratory judgment concerning payment for and value of certain shares, the defendant shareholders, a group of family members, filed a counterclaim of oppression alleging that the plaintiff company had wrongfully diluted their voting power by granting voting rights to a new class of stock. After the District Court ruled in favor of the plaintiff, only four of the seven original family members filed an appeal. The plaintiff claimed that the four remaining family members' claims were moot because not all of the original defendants appealed together. The Supreme Court disagreed and held the appeal was not moot. It noted that while the results of the appeal would not be binding on the three members who did not appeal, the issues appealed still existed with respect to the appealing parties. Wyo-Ben, Inc. v. Bixby, 2014 MT 334, 377 Mont. 318, 339 P.3d 1255.

District Court's Order Dismissing Complaint Appealable Order: Because the plaintiff is barred by the expiration of the statute of limitations from refiling his complaint, the District Court's order acts as a final judgment and is appealable. Seamster v. Musselshell County Sheriff's Office, 2014 MT 84, 374 Mont. 358, 321 P.3d 829.

Insurance Proceeds Distributed Pursuant to Jury Verdict — Remand and Retrial Possible — Appeal Not Moot: The defendants, Stuivenga and Evans, were injured in a single-car accident. Each defendant said the other was driving at the time of the accident. The owner's insurer filed an interpleader action to determine to whom it should pay insurance proceeds. Ultimately, a jury concluded that Evans was the driver. After denying Evans' motion for a new trial, the District Court ordered that the insurance company release the entire amount of available insurance, $25,000, to Stuivenga. Evans appealed, and the Supreme Court considered whether the appeal was moot since the $25,000 had been remitted to Stuivenga. Following a thorough review of Montana case law on mootness, the Supreme Court determined that when the underlying judgment has been satisfied, the question is whether the Supreme Court can grant effective relief, which depends on the unique facts and procedural posture of the case. Here, the appeal was not moot because the Supreme Court could remand the case and Evans could prevail at the retrial, in which case Evans could have a restitution claim against Stuivenga. Progressive Direct Ins. Co. v. Stuivenga, 2012 MT 75, 364 Mont. 390, 276 P.3d 867.

Failure to Raise Purely Legal Question to District Court — Argument Not Considered on Appeal: A family sued Lewis and Clark County for negligence after learning the county had not reported to the health department that their home was a former meth lab as required by 75-10-1306. At the end of a 3-day trial, a jury awarded the family over a half million dollars. The county appealed, arguing that it did not have a duty to report under 75-10-1306. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the county had neither filed any pretrial motions on the question of duty nor sought a motion for judgment as a matter of law. Because the county had failed to raise to the trial court the purely legal question of whether a duty existed under the statute, the Supreme Court would not consider the issue on appeal, and affirmed. Slack v. The Landmark Co., 2011 MT 292, 362 Mont. 514, 267 P.3d 6.

Challenge to Protest Provision Mooted by County Inaction: Individuals residing within the boundary of a proposed zoning district sought an injunction against Gallatin County, claiming the protest provision of 76-2-205 was unconstitutional. While the parties awaited the injunction hearing, the 30-day postprotest deadline passed without the county taking action. An intervening party moved for summary judgment, which the District Court granted on the basis of mootness because the county had not acted within the statutory deadlines. The Supreme Court affirmed and declined to consider the constitutional challenge under the "capable of repetition" exception. The challenge never ripened because the zoning district did not fail due to the protest provision, but failed because of county inaction. Gateway Opencut Min. Action Group v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 2011 MT 198, 361 Mont. 398, 260 P.3d 133.

Law of Case Doctrine Inapplicable — Order Did Not Provide Affirmative Decision on a Stay or an Injunction: An order by the Supreme Court directing the District Court to resolve any remaining claims and to issue a final judgment did not render a decision on the issue of a stay or an injunction pending appeal and presented no law of the case roadblock on appeal. Plains Grains L.P. v. Bd. of County Commr's, 2010 MT 155, 357 Mont. 61, 238 P.3d 332.

CASES DECIDED PRIOR TO EFFECT OF NEW RULES

Supreme Court Jurisdiction and Standard of Review of Decisions of Commission on Practice: The Supreme Court possesses original and exclusive jurisdiction and responsibility in all matters involving the disciplining of lawyers in Montana. Thus, the court reviews de novo the findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommendations of the court's Commission on Practice and weighs the evidence upon which the Commission's findings rest. In re Engel, 2007 MT 172, 338 M 179, 169 P3d 345 (2007). See also In re Potts, 2007 MT 81, 336 M 517, 158 P3d 418 (2007).

Standing of Board of Adjustment to Appeal District Court Review of Board Decision: After plaintiffs built an addition on their house, they applied for a zoning variance because the addition violated the subdivision setback requirement. The variance was denied by the defendant board of adjustment, and plaintiffs appealed to District Court for a writ of certiorari. The court granted the variance, and the board appealed. Plaintiffs contended that the board lacked standing because the board was a quasi-judicial body, not an aggrieved party, and because under 7-1-201, an administrative board may not sue or be sued independently of the local government unless authorized by state law. The Supreme Court disagreed. The writ of certiorari was directed to the board, and plaintiffs' petition named the board as the opposing party, so the board was a party to the litigation and had standing to appeal. Arkell v. Middle Cottonwood Bd. of Zoning Adjustment, 2007 MT 160, 338 M 77, 162 P3d 856 (2007).

De Novo Standard of Review of Ruling on Motion for New Trial Based on Insufficiency of Evidence, Not Abuse of Discretion: Reconciling incompatible standards previously applied to review of a motion for a new trial based on the insufficiency of evidence, the Supreme Court held that there either is or is not sufficient evidence to support the verdict and that this determination by a District Court is not a matter of discretion. Thus, the Supreme Court's standard of review will henceforth be de novo, and any previous cases that stated the standard of review as abuse of discretion were overruled to that extent. The Supreme Court, like the District Court, will determine whether there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict. Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007), overruling Brothers v. Virginia City, 171 M 352, 558 P2d 464 (1976), Walter v. Evans Prod. Co., 207 M 26, 672 P2d 613 (1983), Tope v. Appeal Filed Within Four Days of Final Judgment Timely: Plaintiff prevailed on a wrongful discharge claim and also claimed that defendant abused discovery. A few days following judgment, plaintiff filed for attorney fees and for sanctions against defendant for discovery abuses. The District Court held that sanctions would be addressed after trial. Defendant filed various posttrial motions, which were subsequently considered denied because the District Court failed to rule on them within 60 days. Two days later, the court approved plaintiff's requested fees and costs in securing judgment, but did not address fees and costs that plaintiff requested as sanctions, and 35 days later, plaintiff requested a ruling on discovery sanctions. Five days later, the court held a hearing on sanctions and awarded plaintiff fees and costs as discovery sanctions. Defendant appealed. Plaintiff asserted that the appeal should be dismissed as untimely because it was filed more than 30 days after defendant's posttrial motions were denied. However, even though the court held during trial that defendant would be liable for sanctions, there was no final judgment on sanctions until the court actually awarded plaintiff fees and costs as discovery sanctions, and defendant's filing of the appeal within 4 days of final judgment on that issue was timely. Harding v. Garcia, 2007 MT 120, 337 M 274, 159 P3d 1083 (2007).

Defendant's Failure to Discover Alleged Error in Sentencing Process Until Time for Appeal Expired — Postconviction Proceeding Not Barred: Phillips sought postconviction relief on grounds that his tribal court juvenile record had been illegally requested by the state and incorporated into the presentence investigation report and sentencing proceedings in violation of due process. The state asserted that the matter could have been raised on direct appeal and was thus inappropriate for postconviction relief. However, by the time that Phillips discovered the alleged error, the time for appeal of his conviction had passed, so the Supreme Court held that the claim was not procedurally barred from postconviction consideration. St. v. Phillips, 2007 MT 117, 337 M 248, 159 P3d 1078 (2007).

Party's Theory May Not Change on Appeal: Dasen argued on appeal that several prostitution counts were not properly charged as felonies. However, Dasen failed to raise the theory in District Court. A party's theory may not change on appeal because it is fundamentally unfair to fault a District Court for failing to rule correctly on an issue that it did not have an opportunity to consider. The Supreme Court declined to consider Dasen's new theory for the first time on appeal. St. v. Dasen, 2007 MT 87, 337 M 74, 155 P3d 1282 (2007).

Standard of Review of Ruling on Request for Substitute Counsel — Abuse of Discretion: Absent an abuse of discretion, the Supreme Court will not overrule a District Court's ruling on a request for substitution of counsel, which is within the sound discretion of the District Court. An abuse of discretion occurs only if the District Court acted arbitrarily without employment of conscientious judgment or exceeded the bounds or reason resulting in a substantial injustice. St. v. Hendershot, 2007 MT 49, 336 M 164, 153 P3d 619 (2007), following St. v. Gallagher, 2001 MT 39, 304 M 215, 19 P3d 817A (2001).

Failure to Raise Legal Theory Regarding Juror Misconduct at Trial: After being convicted of two counts of incest, Rennaker raised for the first time on appeal a new legal theory regarding juror misconduct. The Supreme Court, citing St. v. Courville, 2002 MT 330, 313 M 218, 61 P3d 749 (2002), held that even though Rennaker had raised the issue of juror misconduct in the trial court and submitted several affidavits from other jurors regarding that misconduct, his raising of the new theory, that the misconduct affected the jurors' impartiality or contaminated the jury pool, for the first time on appeal would not be considered by the court. St. v. Rennaker, 2007 MT 10, 335 M 274, 150 P3d 960 (2007).

Probability of Mootness — Writ of Supervisory Control Appropriate When Issue Likely to Arise Again — Appeal Inadequate Remedy: Defendant Courville was charged in Justice's Court with speeding, DUI, and possession of an open container. Courville requested a waiver of a jury trial, and the state objected. The Justice's Court granted the waiver, finding that the statute violated Art. II, sec. 24, Mont. Const. The state filed an application for a writ of supervisory control and a motion for stay of proceedings pending the Supreme Court's review of the application. Courville argued that the case was likely to be dismissed under 46-13-401(2), which requires dismissal of misdemeanor prosecutions if not brought to trial within a certain time period, thus making the issue of waiver of a jury trial moot. The Supreme Court found that there was a justiciable controversy because the issue would very likely arise in future proceedings. The court further concluded that the case was appropriate for the exercise of supervisory control, an extraordinary remedy exercised when a court is proceeding under a mistake of law that, if uncorrected, would cause significant injustice and the remedy of appeal is inadequate. The appeal process in this matter would have provided an inadequate remedy for the state because, upon appeal, the state would have already lost its right to consent or object to waiver of a jury trial. The Supreme Court vacated the waiver of a jury trial, holding that Art. II, sec. 26, Mont. Const., provides a right of a jury trial to the state and that both parties in a criminal trial must consent to waiver. State ex rel. Long v. Justice's Court, 2007 MT 3, 335 M 219, 156 P3d 5 (2007).

Standard of Review of Jury Instructions in Criminal Cases: The Supreme Court reviews jury instructions in criminal cases to determine whether the instructions as a whole fully and fairly instructed the jury on the applicable law. A District Court has broad discretion in formulating jury instructions, and the standard of review is whether the District Court abused that discretion. St. v. Hausauer, 2006 MT 336, 335 M 137, 149 P3d 895 (2006).

Inability to Apply "Capable of Repetition Yet Evading Review" Exception to Mootness Doctrine Based on Failure to Preserve Appeal: The Billings Gazette requested documents related to the conduct of certain Billings school teachers. The teachers' union and the teachers declined to produce the documents based on the teachers' privacy. The District Court decided that as public employees, the teachers had no reasonable expectation of privacy in the information and ordered the school district to release the documents. The school district complied, but the teachers' union and the teachers appealed the order. The Supreme Court found that because the documents in question had already been released and the teachers could not be restored to their original position, the issue was moot. Nevertheless, the teachers' union and the teachers requested that the Supreme Court address the merits of the issue under the exception to the mootness doctrine for constitutional questions that are capable of recurring but which could evade effective review. Because the inquiry of whether the expectation of privacy clearly exceeds the merits of public disclosure must be undertaken in the context of the facts of each case, it could not be said that there was a reasonable expectation that the same action comprising the same factual scenario would arise again, so the Supreme Court declined to apply the exception. In addition, the teachers failed to use applicable civil procedures to preserve their ability to appeal, so the Supreme Court declined to address the merits of the privacy issue. In re Petition of Billings High School District No. 2 v. Billings Gazette, 2006 MT 329, 335 M 94, 149 P3d 565 (2006), following Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799 (1996).

Standard of Appellate Review of District Court: Acting within its appellate capacity, a District Court is not in a position to make findings of fact or discretionary trial court rulings, but rather is confined to review of the record and questions of law. The court reviews any factual findings under the clearly erroneous standard, any discretionary rulings for abuse of discretion, and both legal conclusions and mixed questions of law and fact under the de novo standard. A District Court's review of an appeal from a lower court of record is no broader than the Supreme Court's review of a lower court judgment. In the case at bar, the judgment rendered by a Justice's Court was an appealable judgment as contemplated by 3-10-115, and the District Court thus had jurisdiction over the appeal. Likewise, the District Court's judgment constituted a final determination of the issues presented on appeal, and the Supreme Court therefore had jurisdiction pursuant to former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Stanley v. Lemire, 2006 MT 304, 334 M 489, 148 P3d 643 (2006).

Sentence Pending — Appeal Premature: Defendant was convicted in Municipal Court of partner or family member assault and sentenced to 1 year with all but 30 days suspended. The sentence also included restitution, conditioned upon the state requesting it or the expiration of a 60-day period. Before either condition occurred, defendant appealed, and the record was transferred to the District Court. Defendant argued in District Court that the restitution order should be stricken, but the judgment and sentence were affirmed. However, the restitution portion was remanded to the Municipal Court. Defendant appealed to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court held that because neither sentencing condition had occurred when defendant appealed to the District Court, defendant's sentence was not yet final, so the appeal to the District Court was premature and the District Court had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Moreover, defendant could not cure the jurisdictional defect by ignoring the restitution issue on appeal to the Supreme Court. Because the restitution issue was still pending, defendant's judgment was not final, and the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction to consider the appeal. The Supreme Court noted that defendant's notice of appeal should be considered timely and that defendant's right to appeal should not be prejudiced because of the District Court's error in taking premature jurisdiction over the case and deciding it in piecemeal fashion. St. v. Bonamarte, 2006 MT 291, 334 M 376, 147 P3d 220 (2006).

Nonjusticiable Ballot Measure Controversy Dismissed: Proponents for a 2006 ballot measure petitioned the Supreme Court to reverse the District Court's invalidation of the legal sufficiency of the ballot measure to allow the measure to be placed on the ballot. However, the Supreme Court previously held in Montanans for Justice: Vote No on CI-98 v. St., 2006 MT 277, 334 M 237, 146 P3d 759 (2006), that the ballot measure was invalid and that no votes for the measure would be counted. Lacking jurisdiction over nonjusticiable matters, the Supreme Court may raise questions of justiciability sua sponte, but moot questions and advisory opinions are among matters that exceed the court's jurisdiction. A question becomes moot when effective relief can no longer be granted, and a justiciable controversy is one upon which the judgment of the court may effectively operate. In this case, even if the Supreme Court determined that the District Court erred when it overruled the Attorney General's determination of legal sufficiency, votes for the initiative could not be counted because the Secretary of State's certification of the ballot measure was invalidated in Montanans for Justice. Additionally, the decision in Montanans for Justice ensured that any judgment in the present case would have no effect on the rights of the parties, so this appeal was reduced to a request for an advisory opinion that exceeded the court's jurisdiction. Thus, this nonjusticiable appeal was dismissed. Not in Montana: Citizens Against CI-97 v. St., 2006 MT 278, 334 M 265, 147 P3d 174 (2006).

"Voluntary Cessation of Challenged Conduct" Versus "Capable of Repetition, Yet Evading Review" Exceptions to Mootness Clarified: The Havre Daily News (Daily News) sued the city of Havre and members of the police department to obtain copies of unredacted copies of incidence reports and officers' narrative concerning the investigation against individuals, including an officer's child, for underage drinking. The Daily News also requested the court to order Havre to develop and implement a general policy to govern future dissemination of initial offense reports. Because Havre provided the Daily News with unredacted copies of the reports, the District Court granted summary judgment in favor of Havre. On appeal, the Daily News argued that the receipt of the reports did not render the case moot, contending that the case falls into the exception to mootness for wrongs that are "capable of repetition, yet evading review". The Supreme Court ruled that under the "voluntary cessation" exception, a case may be mooted by the defendant's voluntary conduct only when it is absolutely clear that the allegedly wrongful behavior could not reasonably be expected to recur. In this case, Havre provided the Daily News with complete copies of the reports. The Daily News alleged no past instances of the police department unconstitutionally depriving it of access to documents, nor did it point to any inevitable future violations of the right to know in anything other than conjectural, conclusory fashion. The dispute was rendered moot by Havre's provision of complete copies of the reports. The court also clarified that its application of the exception for wrongs "capable of repetition, yet evading review" to conduct of indefinite duration in Heisler v. Hines Motor Co., 282 M 270, 937 P2d 45 (1997), and Mont.-Dak. Util. Co. v. Billings, 2003 MT 332, 318 M 407, 80 P3d 1247 (2003), was imprecise because the court should have applied "voluntary cessation of the challenged practice" exception for mootness. Havre Daily News, LLC v. Havre, 2006 MT 215, 333 M 331, 142 P3d 864 (2006).

Remand or Order to Lift Stay Unnecessary Upon Affirmation by Appellate Court — Supreme Court Jurisdiction of Municipal Court Appeal Affirmed but Remanded by District Court: A Municipal Court sentenced Costa for misdemeanor traffic offenses, then stayed imposition of sentence pending Costa's appeal to District Court. The District Court affirmed judgment and remanded to the Municipal Court for imposition of sentence. The question then arose as to whether the Supreme Court had jurisdiction to address the District Court's decision. The Supreme Court noted that the definition of remand is to send something back for further action; however, the Legislature did not intend to require an appellate court to formally remand in cases involving affirmed criminal judgments. In addition, it is unnecessary for an appellate court to direct that a stay pending appeal be lifted once a defendant has exhausted the right to appeal and the underlying judgment and sentence have been affirmed. Therefore, the District Court's remand was premature, unnecessary, and of no immediate consequence and had no effect on the Municipal Court's final judgment and sentence. The Municipal Court stayed Costa's sentence pending appeal, which presumably encompassed an appeal to the Supreme Court, so because the District Court's remand was unnecessary, the Supreme Court had jurisdiction over Costa's appeal. Billings v. Costa, 2006 MT 181, 333 M 84, 140 P3d 1070 (2006).

No Right to Appeal Judgment Absent Adverse Determination of Specific Pretrial Motion: Defendant filed a pretrial motion to dismiss a felony deviate sexual conduct offense on equal protection grounds, but prior to a ruling on the motion, defendant entered a plea agreement, pleaded guilty, and reserved the right to appeal the constitutional issue. The District Court accepted the plea, but did not accept the terms of the plea agreement, and following conviction, defendant appealed the equal protection issue. Although a defendant who knowingly and voluntarily pleads guilty generally waives the right to appeal any nonjurisdictional defects and defenses that occurred prior to the plea, under 46-12-204(3), a defendant may enter a guilty plea and reserve the right to appeal an adverse determination of any specified pretrial motion. However, the District Court did not rule against the pretrial motion to dismiss, so defendant's reservation of the right to appeal did not meet the statutory condition. Defendant's conditional guilty plea was invalid because the state was not authorized to consent to it and the District Court was not authorized to approve it, so the Supreme Court vacated the guilty plea and sentence and reversed for further proceedings. St. v. Rytky, 2006 MT 134, 332 M 364, 137 P3d 530 (2006).

Failure to Appear at Parental Rights Termination Hearing and to Object to Termination — Waiver of Right to Appeal: A father appealed the termination of his parental rights on grounds that the District Court relied on evidence in the extensive record rather than live testimony at the termination hearing. However, to properly preserve an issue for appeal, a party must notify the trial court at the time that the objectionable conduct is at issue, and untimely objections may not be heard on appeal. The father failed to appear at the termination hearing and thus waived the right to testify, nor did the father's attorney object to termination, having had no contact with the father prior to the hearing. By failing to appear or to object in person or by counsel, the father waived the right to appeal the manner in which the hearing was conducted, including the District Court's decision to rely on the record rather than take live testimony. Termination was affirmed. In re A.T., 2006 MT 35, 331 M 155, 130 P3d 1249 (2006), following In re Parenting of K.P., 2005 MT 297, 329 M 337, 124 P3d 1091 (2005), and distinguishing In re M.O., 2003 MT 4, 314 M 13, 62 P3d 265 (2003).

Motion for Directed Verdict Following State's Case in Chief — Preservation of Issue for Appeal: Following the state's case in chief in McGarvey's deliberate homicide trial, McGarvey moved for a directed verdict based on insufficiency of the evidence because the two witnesses who testified regarding McGarvey's extrajudicial confession were patently unreliable, so corroboration should have been required to uphold their testimony. On appeal, the state contended that McGarvey failed to preserve the issue for appeal because he never raised the claim that the witnesses ought to be held unworthy of credit as a matter of law. The Supreme Court disagreed. By moving for a directed verdict on insufficiency of the evidence after the state concluded its case in chief, McGarvey preserved the issue for appeal. St. v. McGarvey, 2005 MT 308, 329 M 439, 124 P3d 1131 (2005).

CASES DECIDED UNDER SUPERSEDED RULES

GENERAL

Stipulation for Dismissal With Request for Instructions to Trial Court Denied: Counsel for the parties in an appeal filed a stipulation for dismissal, asking the Supreme Court to remand the case to the District Court with instructions to dismiss the case with prejudice. This rule allows for voluntary dismissal of an appeal upon stipulation, but no rule contemplates remand upon the parties' stipulation with instructions for the trial court to dismiss or to approve the stipulation. The Supreme Court may remand for consideration of approval of a settlement agreement, but because the present stipulation conditioned Supreme Court dismissal upon a remand to the trial court, the stipulation for dismissal was denied without prejudice. Hall v. Kircher, 2006 MT 186, 333 M 99, 140 P3d 497 (2006).

District Court Decision Regarding Constitutionality of One Issue Precluding Consideration of Other Constitutional Questions — Certification to Supreme Court Proper: Baumgardner raised numerous issues concerning the constitutionality of 2001 amendments to the Public Employees' Retirement System. The District Court decided that the amendments were an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power but did not consider other issues related to the amendments. The Public Employees' Retirement Board moved to certify the judgment as final, and the motion was granted. On appeal, Baumgardner contended that certification was improper because the District Court did not resolve all of the pending issues. The Supreme Court disagreed. Once the amendments were declared unconstitutional on the delegation question, there was no need for the District Court to consider other challenges to the constitutionality of the amendments, so certification was appropriate, and the case was properly submitted to the Supreme Court. Baumgardner v. Pub. Employees' Retirement Bd., 2005 MT 199, 328 M 179, 119 P3d 77 (2005).

Appeal Moot for Inability of Supreme Court to Grant Relief: Plaintiffs owned a ranch, but being in default and facing foreclosure, they made a deal with defendant Bell whereby Bell would borrow money to pay off plaintiffs' debt and plaintiffs would receive an ownership interest in Bell's company formed to manage the ranch. However, the mortgage was never transferred into the company, and plaintiffs sued Bell for fraud and breach of contract. A jury granted plaintiffs $500,000 in damages for Bell's breach of contract, and Bell appealed. Bell ultimately declared bankruptcy and sold the ranch to pay off the loan and to pay off the money judgment owed to plaintiffs, whereby plaintiffs' mortgage on the ranch was released. Plaintiffs moved that Bell's appeal be dismissed for mootness, and the Supreme Court agreed. The $500,000 judgment could not simply be reversed with plaintiffs retaining ownership because the ranch had been sold, and Bell would be considerably richer than he was at the beginning of the deal, having invested little of his own money, and plaintiffs would have nothing. Therefore, applying Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799 (1996), the Supreme Court held that Bell's claim was moot based on the court's inability to grant effective relief. Graveyard Creek Ranch, Inc. v. Bell, 2005 MT 172, 327 M 491, 116 P3d 779 (2005).

Appeal of Appointment of Personal Representative Not Timely: The District Court appointed a son as personal representative of his mother's estate and ordered that letters of administration be issued to him, and his sister appealed the appointment. Pursuant to In re Estate of Peterson, 264 M 104, 874 P2d 1230 (1994), the Supreme Court reviewed the appointment to determine whether the District Court correctly interpreted the law. Under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), an order granting letters of administration is appealable, but former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), provided that an aggrieved party had 30 days from the date of entry of an order to file a notice of appeal. By the time that the sister appealed, her brother had been personal representative of the estate for 14 months, so the appeal was not timely. In re Estate of McMurchie, 2004 MT 98, 321 M 21, 89 P3d 18 (2004).

Power of Trial Court on Remand — No Provision Regarding Effect of Failure to Deny in Rules of Appellate Procedure: In 1993, Brown filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, arguing that prison officials had miscalculated his parole eligibility date. The Supreme Court denied that petition. In 1996, Brown filed a 42 U.S.C. 1983 complaint in District Court seeking to address alleged deprivations of his rights by prison officials under federal law, but the complaint was dismissed for failure to state a claim. The District Court concluded that the issues raised in the complaint were the same as those raised in the 1993 writ and were thus barred by collateral estoppel. Brown appealed, and in an unpublished opinion (Brown v. St., No. 96-651), the Supreme Court remanded, concluding that the District Court had mischaracterized the issues in the 1993 writ and that three of the claims were not barred by collateral estoppel. On remand, after an unexplained delay of 4 years, the District Court dismissed Brown's remaining claims, holding that they were not cognizable under federal law. Brown appealed again, arguing that the District Court erred by granting judgment to the state without first holding a hearing and asserting that under former Rule 8(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the state's failure to respond to the issue in its brief constituted an admission that Brown was correct on the issue. However, Brown misapplied former Rule 8(d) to these proceedings. The former Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure did not contain a similar provision regarding the effect of failure to deny. Further, the remand order did not require the District Court to hold a hearing. On remand, the trial court is free to make any order or decision in further progress of the case that is not inconsistent with the appellate court's decision. The District Court was affirmed. Brown v. St., 2002 MT 58, 309 M 106, 46 P3d 42 (2002).

Appropriateness of Intervention in Action Challenging Enforcement of Ballot Initiative: Two sporting groups sought to intervene in an action challenging the enforcement of a ballot initiative that prohibited the shooting of alternative livestock for a fee. The District Court denied the motion, and the groups appealed. After accepting supervisory control, the Supreme Court noted that an application for intervention as a matter of right must satisfy each of the following factors: (1) timeliness; (2) interest in the subject matter of the litigation; (3) a showing that protection of the interest may be impaired by disposition of the action; and (4) a showing that the interest is not adequately represented by an existing party. In the present case, timeliness was not disputed. Regarding the second factor, the Supreme Court cited Idaho Farm Bureau Fed'n v. Babbitt, 58 F3d 1392 (9th Cir. 1995), for the proposition that a public interest group is entitled as a matter of right to intervene in an action challenging the legality of a measure that the group has supported. The District Court did not address the third factor because it determined that the groups had no legally protectable interest in the litigation. However, the Supreme Court found that an adverse decision in the suit would impair the groups' interest in the management and protection of Montana's game animals, so the third factor was met. Finally, the District Court determined that the groups failed to demonstrate that the Attorney General, on behalf of the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks, would not zealously defend the groups' position in the suit. The Supreme Court concluded that the groups that actively drafted and supported the initiative may be in the best position to defend their interpretation of the resulting legislation and may not have been adequately represented by the Department. Thus, all four factors were met, and the Supreme Court ordered the District Court to permit the groups to intervene in the case. Sportsmen for I-143 v. District Court, 2002 MT 18, 308 M 189, 40 P3d 400 (2002).

Conflict of Interest of Personal Representative Cured by Court Supervision of Estate: Prior to Zempel's death, he executed his will, naming his daughter, Palmer, as his sole devisee and his neighbor, Newman, as personal representative of the estate. Zempel then entered into an agreement to sell his ranch to Newman, who, acting pursuant to the power of attorney, executed a contract for deed and lease that transferred the ranch property to Newman. Following Zempel's death, the District Court appointed Palmer as special administrator based on an ex parte application. Shortly thereafter, Newman filed a petition for formal probate and appointment of personal representative, in conjunction with a motion to set aside the ex parte order. The District Court terminated the ex parte order, appointed Newman as personal representative, and ordered that any real estate transaction be approved by the court after notice and hearing. Palmer appealed Newman's appointment as personal representative, citing the conflict of interest that arose from the documents purportedly transferring estate assets to Newman. A conflict of interest is sufficient for removal of a personal representative for cause, but does not mandate removal. As established in In re Estate of Goick, 275 M 13, 909 P2d 1165 (1996), a transaction involving a conflict of interest between a personal representative and an estate can be cured by a court-ordered supervision of the transaction. The District Court did not act arbitrarily in this case because it required its approval for the final transaction between the personal representative and the estate, protecting any objection or challenge by Palmer through supervision of the disputed transaction, which cured the conflict of interest. The court did not err when it appointed Newman as personal representative, and the appointment was affirmed. In re Estate of Zempel, 2000 MT 283, 302 M 183, 14 P3d 441, 57 St. Rep. 1182 (2000).

Interlocutory Order Granting Temporary Investigative Authority and Protective Services Not Appealable: An order for temporary investigative authority and protective services issued under 41-3-403 is not a "final judgement", a specified interlocutory order, or "an allowance for a widow or a child" and is not appealable under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). In re B.P. & A.P., 2000 MT 39, 298 M 287, 995 P2d 982, 57 St. Rep. 179 (2000).

Failure to File Bill of Costs Held Waiver of Recovery of Costs — Issue Addressed First Time on Appeal: Cenex, Inc., brought a declaratory judgment action against the Yellowstone County Board of Commissioners. Cenex, for the first time on appeal, raised an objection to the District Court's order that it pay the Board $852.75 in costs. The Supreme Court noted that while it generally does not address issues raised for the first time on appeal, the failure of the Board to file a bill of costs pursuant to 25-10-201 deprived Cenex of its opportunity to object to the taxation of costs before the District Court. The Supreme Court therefore determined that Cenex cannot be considered to have waived its right to appeal the taxation of costs and held that the Board's failure to file the bill of costs constituted a waiver of its right to recover costs from Cenex. Cenex, Inc. v. Yellowstone County Bd. of Comm'rs, 283 M 330, 941 P2d 964, 54 St. Rep. 695 (1997).

Denial of Bond Pending Appeal — Method of Supreme Court Review — Jurisdiction: After conviction for negligent homicide and on related charges, Ingraham moved the District Court to continue bond pending appeal. The District Court denied the motion, finding that Ingraham was a danger to the community and therefore did not meet the requirements of 46-9-107. Ingraham then moved the Supreme Court, pursuant to former Rule 22, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), to continue bond pending appeal or, in the alternative, to accept appeal of the District Court's order denying bond, pursuant to 46-20-104 and former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). The Attorney General moved to dismiss, contending that there was no provision in law for appeal from a District Court order denying bond pending appeal and that Ingraham should have brought an original habeas corpus proceeding. The Supreme Court agreed with the Attorney General and dismissed Ingraham's motion or appeal, holding that Ingraham should have brought a petition for a writ of habeas corpus pursuant to 46-22-103. Ingraham then filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, which was filed with Justice Trieweiler pursuant to 3-2-212. Justice Trieweiler granted the petition to the extent necessary for the District Court to hold an evidentiary hearing as provided by statute, under the theory that the District Court was the more appropriate court for the hearing than was the Supreme Court. The Attorney General opposed the order by applying to the full Supreme Court for a writ of supervisory control, arguing, contrary to the state's previous position, that 46-22-103 does not really apply to persons convicted in a criminal case and that the more appropriate procedure was an original proceeding "in the nature of habeas corpus" before the full Supreme Court. The application for a writ of supervisory control was denied, was treated by the Supreme Court as a late-filed response to Ingraham's petition for a writ of habeas corpus, and was referred to Justice Trieweiler. Justice Trieweiler determined that it was inappropriate for him alone to determine the form of review of the District Court's denial of bond. Justice Trieweiler also determined that: (1) Ingraham had no constitutional right to bond pending appeal; (2) Ingraham did have a right to the proper exercise of the District Court's discretion in the application of 46-9-107; and (3) that right was a substantial right for the purposes of 46-20-104. For these reasons, Justice Trieweiler vacated his previous order granting Ingraham's petition for a writ of habeas corpus and referred the matter to the full Supreme Court for review of the District Court's order denying bond pending appeal. St. v. Ingraham, 284 M 77, 945 P2d 16, 54 St. Rep. 614 (1997).

Section 1983 Action — Denial of Summary Judgment on Qualified Immunity Held Not Appealable — Lack of Supreme Court Jurisdiction — Sanctions Awarded: After a riot at the Montana State Prison (MSP) in which several prison inmates were killed or injured, inmates brought a negligence and section 1983 action against MSP officials. The MSP officials moved for summary judgment on the issue of qualified immunity from the section 1983 action. The District Court denied the motion, and the MSP officials appealed the denial. The Supreme Court held that the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction over the appeal from the District Court's denial of the summary judgment motion because the District Court order is not a final judgment within the meaning of subsection (b)(1) of former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and that the appeal was likewise not authorized by subsection (b)(2) or (b)(3) of former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court noted that this result was not changed by the state's allegation that the record was "ripe for appeal" and was "easily reviewable". The Supreme Court also held that the case law of the federal courts interpreting 28 U.S.C. 1291, especially Mitchell v. Forsyth, 472 US 511 (1985), and Johnson v. Jones, 515 US 304, 132 L Ed 2d 238, 115 S Ct 2151 (1995), was not relevant because the Montana Supreme Court derives its authority over appeals from the state constitution and the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure and not from 28 U.S.C. 1291. Because the appellants had not made any arguments in favor of their appeal, the Supreme Court determined that it was frivolous and, pursuant to former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), awarded the respondents their attorney fees on appeal. In re Litigation Relating to Riot, 283 M 277, 939 P2d 1013, 54 St. Rep. 598 (1997).

Order Allowing Intervention Appealable With Final Judgment: DeVoe brought an action against the state, alleging that it had abandoned property to which DeVoe was the successor in interest. The District Court granted a motion by the city of Missoula that the city be allowed to intervene. After final judgment in favor of Missoula, DeVoe appealed the District Court's order allowing Missoula to intervene. The Supreme Court held that an order granting intervention is not separately appealable under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), because the order is not individually listed in former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), as an appealable order, but held that the order is appealable after entry of final judgment. The Supreme Court noted that it had previously ruled to the same effect in Cont. Ins. Co. v. Bottomly, 233 M 277, 760 P2d 73 (1988), Estate of Schwenke v. Becktold, 252 M 127, 827 P2d 808 (1992), and In re Custody of R.R.K., 260 M 191, 859 P2d 998 (1993). DeVoe v. St., 281 M 356, 935 P2d 256, 54 St. Rep. 207 (1997).

Failure to Transfer Venue for Convenience and Justice Not Subject to Interlocutory Appeal: The Department of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Department of Environmental Quality) brought an action in Lewis and Clark County against Pegasus Gold Corporation (Pegasus) and Zortman Mining, Inc. (ZMI), for numerous violations of the Montana water quality laws at the Zortman and Landusky mines located in Phillips County. Defendant ZMI moved for change of venue under both 25-2-201(1) and (3). The District Court refused to transfer venue under subsection (1) without discussing the merits of ZMI's claim under subsection (3), and ZMI appealed. The Supreme Court refused to consider the merits of ZMI's claim under 25-2-201(3), holding that the language of subsection (b)(2) of former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), is intended to allow interlocutory appeals only of a District Court's refusal to change venue under 25-2-201(1). State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Pegasus Gold Corp., 270 M 32, 889 P2d 1197, 52 St. Rep. 64 (1995).

Grant of Motion for Extension of Time for Appeal as Appealable Order: The District Court granted Dvoraks's motion for an extension of time in which to file a notice of appeal. Northwest appealed from the District Court's order. Dvoraks claimed that the order was not appealable because it was not specifically set forth in former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Citing Sadowsky v. Glendive, 259 M 419, 856 P2d 556 (1993), the Supreme Court held that an order extending the time to file a notice of appeal was a "special order made after final judgment" within the language of former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). NW. Truck & Trailer Sales, Inc. v. Dvorak, 265 M 327, 877 P2d 31, 51 St. Rep. 564 (1994).

Relitigation of Previously Resolved Issue Barred on Appeal: Under the doctrine of law of the case, a prior Montana Supreme Court decision resolving a particular issue between the same parties in the same case is binding and cannot be relitigated in a subsequent appeal. St. v. Smith, 261 M 419, 863 P2d 1000, 50 St. Rep. 1388 (1993). See also St. v. Van Dyken, 242 M 415, 791 P2d 1350 (1990).

Motion to Stay and Motion for Protective Order Not Subject to Interlocutory Appeal: During a dissolution proceeding, Lori filed a notice of appeal from a District Court order denying Lori's motion to stay proceedings and her motion for a protective order. The Supreme Court held that denial of a motion to stay and denial of a motion for a protective order are interlocutory in nature and are not appealable orders within the scope of former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). For that reason, the Supreme Court held that Lori may not appeal denial of her motions until the District Court enters final judgment in her case. In re Marriage of Smith, 260 M 406, 860 P2d 159, 50 St. Rep. 1151 (1993).

Untimely Appeal From Denial of Motion for Change of Venue — Waiver: In the course of a dissolution proceeding, Lori appealed from the District Court's denial of her motion for a change of venue. The Supreme Court held that while a denial of a motion for a change of venue is an appealable order within the scope of former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), the request for a change of venue must be timely made. Under former Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), a motion for a change of venue must be made within 20 days after the response to the pleading is filed. In this case, the dissolution proceeding was begun in 1985 and the husband's motion for custody was filed on June 5, 1991. However, the motion for a change of venue was not filed until March 18, 1993. In addition to the untimely motion, Lori made numerous appearances in the District Court of the Eighth Judicial District without challenging venue in that district. The Supreme Court therefore dismissed the appeal. In re Marriage of Smith, 260 M 406, 860 P2d 159, 50 St. Rep. 1151 (1993).

Elements of Prima Facie Case for Foreclosure Admitted in Pleadings — Controversion on Appeal Estopped: When a party admitted in the pleadings all elements necessary to establish a prima facie case for foreclosure sufficient to warrant summary judgment, the party was bound by the pleadings and estopped on appeal to controvert the admissions. Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. Hill, 266 M 258, 879 P2d 1158, 50 St. Rep. 726 (1993).

Foreclosure Action — Appeal Not Moot Because of Owners' Failure to Post Bond or Stay Appeal: In a foreclosure action, the bank prevailed in District Court. The owners did not voluntarily relinquish the property. The bank foreclosed. The owners' failure to post a supersedeas bond or otherwise stay the proceedings in District Court did not render their appeal moot. Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604, 50 St. Rep. 509 (1993), overruled, with regard to voluntary versus involuntary payment or performance as affecting waiver of right to appeal without having bearing on mootness, in Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996).

Right to Appeal — Receipt of Damages: In a breach of contract suit relating to sale of real property, when plaintiffs had deposited funds with the District Court rather than make payments under the contract to defendants, acceptance of money from the court to cover survey expenses did not preclude plaintiffs from pursuing an appeal. Maloney v. Heer, 257 M 500, 850 P2d 957, 50 St. Rep. 382 (1993).

Grants of Intervention Not Appealable: The plaintiff appealed the lower court's decision to let a third party intervene in the plaintiff's suit against the defendant. The Supreme Court held that granting intervention was interlocutory and not subject to appeal. Whitefish Credit Union Ass'n, Inc. v. Glacier Wilderness Ranch, Inc., 242 M 471, 791 P2d 1363, 47 St. Rep. 892 (1990).

Issues Related to Stipulated Facts or Law Not to Be Raised on Appeal: After the lower court had entered its judgment, the parties agreed that a certain portion of the judgment was valid and stipulated it was not subject to appeal. The Supreme Court refused to hear argument concerning the stipulated portion of the judgment, holding that after such a stipulation, a party could not raise issues relating to that subject matter on appeal. Westland Enterprises, Inc. v. Boyne USA, Inc., 237 M 186, 772 P2d 309, 46 St. Rep. 724 (1989).

Dismissal of Complaint With Prejudice Improper When Criminal Appeal Pending: On motion, the District Court dismissed with prejudice a pro se complaint while complainant's criminal conviction was on appeal before the Supreme Court. Noting that the claims could be barred under a theory of collateral estoppel, the Supreme Court amended the judgment to a dismissal without prejudice because a dismissal with prejudice while the conviction was on appeal would be premature and improper. Rudolph v. Dussault, 234 M 449, 763 P2d 1139, 45 St. Rep. 2039 (1988).

Motion to Intervene Not Denominated in Rule — Nonappealable: Appellants sought review of the District Court denial of a motion to intervene. Former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), did not provide for appeals from either the granting or denial of motions to intervene, and as a matter not specifically denominated in the rule, it was not a proper subject for appeal. Cont. Ins. Co. v. Bottomly, 233 M 277, 760 P2d 73, 45 St. Rep. 1486 (1988), distinguished in Estate of Schwenke v. Becktold, 252 M 127, 827 P2d 808, 49 St. Rep. 180 (1992).

Order for Protection of Youth — Rules Suspended — Procedure on Appeal: A petition for temporary investigative authority and protective services was filed by the prosecutor under 41-3-402 (renumbered 41-3-427). Temporary custody of K.H. was later awarded to county welfare department under 41-3-403 (renumbered 41-3-423). The District Court found probable cause for state intervention and ordered temporary investigative authority, custody in the mother, and restrictions on the father's visitation. The parents appealed the order, an appealable order within former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), but not an adequate remedy because of the time involved. Relief should properly be pursued through a Writ of Certiorari, Habeas Corpus, or Supervisory Control. The Supreme Court treated the matter as a Writ of Certiorari and denied it on the grounds that the District Court proceedings were in substantial compliance with law and that the petitioners were not prejudiced thereby. In re K.H., 216 M 267, 701 P2d 720, 42 St. Rep. 796 (1985). However, see In re B.P. & A.P., 2000 MT 39, 298 M 287, 995 P2d 982, 57 St. Rep. 179 (2000), in which it was held that because an interlocutory order granting temporary investigative authority and protective services is not appealable under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded).

Appeal Not Moot Because Judgment Satisfied — Court Can Grant Effective Relief: Payment of a money judgment by the judgment debtor does not, by itself, render the cause moot for purposes of appeal. A defeated party's compliance with the judgment renders his appeal moot only where the compliance makes the granting of effective relief by the appellate court impossible. This basic rule on mootness was stated earlier in Mont. Nat'l Bank of Roundup v. St. Dept. of Revenue, 167 M 429, 539 P2d 722 (1975), followed in In re Marriage of Nevin, 284 M 468, 945 P2d 58, 54 St. Rep. 981 (1997), and overruled, with regard to voluntary versus involuntary payment or performance as affecting waiver of right to appeal without having bearing on mootness, in Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996). In the present action to recover damages for breach of a construction contract, there is no reason the Supreme Court cannot grant effective relief. Martin Dev. Co. v. Keeney Constr. Co., 216 M 212, 703 P2d 143, 42 St. Rep. 752 (1985), followed and clarified, with regard to voluntary versus involuntary payment or performance as affecting waiver of right to appeal without having bearing on mootness, in Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996), and followed in In re Marriage of Dahm, 2006 MT 230, 333 M 453, 143 P3d 432 (2006). On a later appeal, the parties were bound by the facts and law established in this prior case. Relitigation of issues was barred by collateral estoppel, and claims of legal malpractice were barred by the statute of limitations. Peschel v. Jones, 232 M 516, 760 P2d 51, 45 St. Rep. 1244 (1988). See also Sjoberg v. Kravik, 233 M 33, 759 P2d 966, 45 St. Rep. 1270 (1988), and Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 1078 (1999).

Late Appeal — New Grounds for Argument Below — Failure to Argue on Appeal: The merits of appellants' arguments in support of removal of personal representative of an estate could not be considered on appeal from denial of final order denying motion to remove when: (1) since the order was final and appealable, it had to be appealed within 30 days of notice of its entry; (2) appeal was filed 34 days after notice of entry of the order; and (3) though appellants had, within the 30 days prior to their notice of appeal, filed a second petition for removal that raised a new ground for removal, appellants did not argue that failure to raise the ground earlier was excusable because of inadvertence, excusable neglect, or newly discovered evidence, and the lower court found appellants had earlier been in possession of all the facts. The order was conclusive as to all matters that could have been raised under the issues raised in the original petition for removal. In re Pegg's Estate, 209 M 71, 680 P2d 316, 41 St. Rep. 558 (1984), distinguished in Wadsworth v. St., 275 M 287, 911 P2d 1165, 53 St. Rep. 146 (1996), and followed in In re Marriage of Lockhead, 2013 MT 368, 373 Mont. 120, 314 P.3d 915.

Issues Subject to Review on Appeal: Sorlie argued that the school district could not appeal a salary decision made by the Superintendent of Public Instruction because it did not directly petition the District Court for review. The Supreme Court disagreed. Issues brought before the agency proceeding automatically become subject to judicial review. The salary issue was raised at the agency level and reviewed by the District Court. The school district, as an aggrieved party, can appeal from the decision of the District Court. Sorlie's petition for judicial review raised the salary question, and the school district was aggrieved by the District Court decision on that question. Consequently the school district can appeal on that basis. Sorlie v. School District, 205 M 22, 667 P2d 400, 40 St. Rep. 1070 (1983).

No Finding of Juror Prejudice Due to Pretrial Publicity: The District Court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a change of venue and a motion for an individually sequestered voir dire when the allegations given for the requested change of venue failed to establish any possibility of jury prejudice due to pretrial publicity. The two jurors who heard anything about the case in the newspaper or radio were eliminated by peremptory challenge. Further, an alternate juror who read the articles but was not prejudiced did not sit as a juror in the deliberations. St. v. Hansen, 194 M 197, 633 P2d 1202, 38 St. Rep. 1541 (1981).

Supreme Court Ruling When No Trial Court Ruling: When a case is appealed to the Supreme Court that involves an issue not raised in the trial court, but which is based almost exclusively on depositions, the Supreme Court is in just as good a position as the trial court to assess the deposition testimony and to issue a ruling therefrom. Reid v. Park County, 192 M 231, 627 P2d 1210, 38 St. Rep. 631 (1981).

Involuntary Commitment — Mootness — Issues Not Raised in District Court: Where, after a brief interview with a mental health counselor-therapist, the appellant was involuntarily committed to a state mental hospital for a period of 3 months and then challenged the commitment in the District Court, the appellant's appeal would not be dismissed even though the appellant had been released prior to submission of the appeal. The important constitutional issues raised by the appellant were not rendered moot by his release because other persons would be involuntarily committed for 3 months of evaluation and testing. This time period renders a timely appeal impossible under the current rules of appellate procedure. Nor would the appeal be dismissed because of the appellant's failure to raise the constitutional issues in the District Court since the Supreme Court reserves to itself the power to examine constitutional issues that involve broad public concerns to avoid future litigation on a point of law. In re N.B., 190 M 319, 620 P2d 1228, 37 St. Rep. 2031 (1980). See also Cottrill v. Cottrill Sodding Serv., 229 M 40, 744 P2d 895, 44 St. Rep. 1762 (1987), and In re Klos, 284 M 197, 943 P2d 1277, 54 St. Rep. 843 (1997).

Multiple Claims and Parties — Certification Required for Appeal Because of Impleader of Third Party: Where the plaintiff corporation brought an action against the defendant insurance company to collect an account and the defendant impleaded a third-party defendant, a final judgment against the defendant insurance company was interlocutory in nature and could not be appealed absent an express determination by the court that there was no just reason for delay. Former Rule 14, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), expressly provides that an entry of judgment upon either the original claim or the third-party claim must comply with former Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Because the court did not make the express determination required, the appeal is premature. Pioneer Concrete & Fuel, Inc. v. Apex Constr., Inc., 190 M 229, 620 P2d 854, 37 St. Rep. 2023 (1980).

Rights of Legal Heir Adequately Represented by Special Administrator — Intervention Denied: After a special administrator was appointed to continue prosecution of an action begun before the testatrix's death, the heir to the estate sought to intervene in the case but was denied. Although holding that ruling nonappealable, the Supreme Court did grant the heir's Writ of Supervisory Control. Nonetheless, it found the heir was not a proper intervenor in the suit because her interest was represented adequately by the special administrator, noting that the heir had no right to pursue the action herself unless the personal representative failed to act on the claim, which was not the case here. Further, an administrator could sue in his own name without joining with him the party for whose benefit the action is brought. State ex rel. Palmer v. District Court, 190 M 185, 619 P2d 1201, 37 St. Rep. 1876 (1980).

Electronic Surveillance Based on Illegal Police Activity as Grounds for Appeal — Insufficient Evidence: Where the defendant was arrested as the result of an electronically recorded conversation with another offender who had previously consented to carrying a transmitting device for police officers, the allegations of the defendant that the recruitment of the other offender by police officers and the subsequent taping of the defendant's conversation were the result of previous illegal wire taps placed on the telephone of the other offender could not serve as grounds for reversal of the defendant's conviction since there was no direct evidence in the record to support the defendant's conjecture. Any issue built upon conjecture is weightless for purposes of appeal. St. v. Coleman, 189 M 492, 616 P2d 1090, 37 St. Rep. 1661 (1980).

Denial of Venue Change Appealable: An interlocutory order is normally not appealable unless there is a special provision making it so. By the terms of former Rule 1(b), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), an order denying a change of venue is specifically appealable. It allows the party denied the change to take an immediate appeal so as not to jeopardize his right to appeal on that issue. State ex rel. Kesterson v. District Court, 189 M 20, 614 P2d 1050 (1980).

Obstruction of Access to Property — Interlocutory Decrees — Not Appealable: The Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) appealed from an interlocutory decision of the District Court that plaintiffs were entitled to compensation for the loss of reasonable access to their property. The appeal was dismissed because interlocutory orders are not appealable. Bostwick v. Dept. of Highways, 188 M 313, 613 P2d 997 (1980).

Supreme Court — Acquisition of Appellate Jurisdiction: The time limits for filing an appeal are mandatory and jurisdictional. An appellant has a duty to perfect an appeal in the manner and within the time limits provided by law. Absent such compliance, the Montana Supreme Court does not acquire jurisdiction to entertain and determine an appeal. Price v. Zunchich, 188 M 230, 612 P2d 1296 (1980).

No Appeal on Issue of Joint Venture Not First Raised in District Court: Appellants cannot assert for a matter of review on appeal that their relationship with respondents was that of joint venturers because this issue was not first presented to the District Court and as such cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Mont. Williams Double Diamond v. Royal Village, Inc., 186 M 359, 607 P2d 1120 (1980).

Second Appeal — "Law of the Case" Rule Applied: When the Supreme Court states a principle or rule of law necessary to the decision of a case, such pronouncement becomes the "law of the case" and must be adhered to throughout its subsequent progress, both in the trial court and upon subsequent appeal. Here, a previous case involving the same parties established the "law of the case" for this appeal. The former husband was estopped, in the previous case, from challenging monthly payments to the former wife, having successfully availed himself of the benefits of the property settlement provisions of the marriage dissolution decree (the monthly payments having been held to be a part of the property settlement). Therefore, the denial of the former husband's second petition to terminate the payments is affirmed on the "law of the case" of his first petition. Englund v. Englund, 184 M 488, 603 P2d 1048 (1979).

Order Requiring Payment by Personal Representative as Appealable Order: The District Court order requiring payment by the personal representative of decedent's estate to decedent's creditors is an appealable order under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). In re Estate of Murphy, 183 M 127, 598 P2d 612 (1979).

Right to Appeal — Fruits of Judgment: The instant appeal falls squarely within the exception to the general rule that the right to accept the fruits of a judgment and at the same time to prosecute an appeal from it are not concurrent. If the only possible outcome of a successful appeal by the plaintiff is an increase in the damage award, then there is nothing inconsistent about accepting the fruits of the original judgment and appealing from it. Ferguson v. Town Pump, Inc., 177 M 122, 580 P2d 915 (1978), followed in Maloney v. Heer, 257 M 500, 850 P2d 957, 50 St. Rep. 382 (1993).

Federal Courts — Reviewability of Montana Decisions: The U.S. District Court has no power to review the judgments of Montana courts. A litigant has no constitutional right to a correct result. Osburnsen v. Heller, 34 St. Rep. 193 (D.C. Mont. 1977) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Waiver of Appeal Right to Be Clear: In a child custody proceeding wherein the parties stipulated that they would be bound by the order of the District Court in order to resolve a jurisdictional conflict, the stipulation did not preclude them from taking an appeal. Groves v. Groves, 173 M 291, 567 P2d 459 (1977).

Order to Vacate Order Changing Venue: Defendant's appeal of the order denying his motion to vacate an order changing venue should be dismissed since an order to vacate is not appealable under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and if treated as an appeal from the order for change of venue, it was not timely made. Myskewitz v. Berg, 173 M 46, 566 P2d 64 (1977).

Propriety of Review — Certification of State Question: When there was no clear precedent regarding the construction of the applicability of Statutes of Limitation, it was proper for the Supreme Court to give the U.S. District Court for Montana an opinion on the applicability of certain Statutes of Limitation upon the certification of questions by the U.S. District Court. Penrod v. Hoskinson, 170 M 277, 552 P2d 325 (1976).

Filing of Supersedeas Bond on Appeal Not to Suspend Decree's Provision Regarding Child Support: Supreme Court will not sanction nonpayment of support money decreed in District Court on appeal where need for such funds is shown but will require that such support payments be kept current until final determination of the appeal. Woolverton v. Woolverton, 169 M 490, 549 P2d 458 (1976).

Zoning Issue — Standing as Aggrieved Party: Appellant, who first raised issue of the zoning classification of property involved in condemnation proceeding, lacked standing as "a party aggrieved" to complain of the State's subsequent emphasis on the zoning of the property as misleading jury into reaching erroneous verdict. St. Highway Comm'n v. Vaughan, 155 M 277, 470 P2d 967 (1970).

Writ of Review When Appeal Available: Notwithstanding the fact that appeal was available as a remedy, the Supreme Court determined that a Writ of Review is available when children were made illegitimate and support was cut off by action which exceeded court's jurisdiction. Butler v. Brownlee, 152 M 453, 451 P2d 836 (1969).

Denial of Change of Venue: Specification of error arising from trial court's order denying motion for change of venue was not properly before Supreme Court because timely appeal was not made from order as required by rules. Sealey v. Majerus, 149 M 268, 425 P2d 70 (1967).

Denial of Motion Improper — Appeal Not Allowed: Where District Court exceeded its jurisdiction in denying motion to quash summons and dismiss action where the summons had not been served and returned within the 3 years required by Rule 41(e) (replaced with former Rule 4E), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the order was not appealable under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). State ex rel. Belwin, Inc. v. Davison, 148 M 345, 420 P2d 842 (1966).

Dismissal of Action Not Appealable: An order granting a motion to dismiss was not appealable under section 93-8003, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by former Rule 1, M.R.App.P., now superseded). Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 143 M 432, 391 P2d 1 (1964); Payne v. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. Co., 142 M 406, 385 P2d 100 (1963), both distinguished in Prentice Lumber Co., Inc. v. Hukill, 161 M 8, 504 P2d 277 (1972).

SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Partial Summary Judgment Not Appealable: All of the plaintiff's issues were not determined by the court's grant of partial summary judgment. Therefore, the appeal was premature and was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. Kirchner v. W. Mont. Mental Health Center, 272 M 110, 899 P2d 1102, 52 St. Rep. 753 (1995), followed in In re Litigation Relating to Riot, 283 M 277, 939 P2d 1013, 54 St. Rep. 598 (1997).

Appeal of Judgment Involving Declaratory Judgment and Injunction: Defendant argued that an appeal that concerned declaratory judgment was premature because plaintiff did not seek former Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), certification of the court's order. However, because plaintiff's motion for partial summary judgment involved both the declaratory judgment and an injunction issue and because plaintiff validly exercised the right to appeal the court's denial of the request for an injunction, the appeal was not considered premature and the entire case was subject to review by the Supreme Court. Hennen v. Omega Enterprises, Inc., 264 M 505, 872 P2d 797, 51 St. Rep. 369 (1994).

Question of Statutory Applicability Preserved for Appeal: Defendant argued that by failing to include a violation of statute claim in a pretrial order, plaintiffs abandoned the claim on appeal. However, the issue was properly preserved through jury instructions when plaintiffs presented an instruction that stated the statutory language verbatim. Further, the statute was the subject of a motion for summary judgment. Notwithstanding certification, an order denying summary judgment is interlocutory; thus, the applicability of the statute was not waived insofar as it was presented in the motion for summary judgment. Whitehawk v. Clark, 238 M 14, 776 P2d 484, 46 St. Rep. 1053 (1989).

Denial of Summary Judgment Not Appealable Notwithstanding Certification: The defendant appealed the District Court's denial of a motion for summary judgment after the District Court certified its order under former Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court held that the order was not appealable notwithstanding the District Court's certification because under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), an order denying a motion for summary judgment is an interlocutory order, which fact cannot be changed by certification under former Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Jackson v. Burlington N., Inc., 201 M 123, 652 P2d 223, 39 St. Rep. 1998 (1982).

Interlocutory Summary Judgment — No Appeal Allowed: Where an order of summary judgment is interlocutory, the case is not ripe for appellate review and any appeal thereon must be dismissed without prejudice. Knight & Co. v. Ft. Belknap Indian Agency Housing Authority, 188 M 218, 612 P2d 1290 (1980).

Summary Judgment Against Less Than All Defendants — Appeal Not Allowed: A summary judgment in favor of one of two defendants was not a final order under the provisions of former Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and in the absence of compliance with the certification requirements of that rule, the summary judgment was not appealable. Roy v. Neibauer, 188 M 81, 610 P2d 1185 (1980).

Summary Judgment on Issue of Liability Alone Not Appealable: A summary judgment for plaintiff on the question of liability, reserving judgment as to the amount of damages is interlocutory in character under former Rule 56(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and hence is not appealable. Weston v. Kuntz, 187 M 453, 610 P2d 172 (1980).

Order Vacating Summary Judgment Not Appealable: Former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), did not specifically mention an order vacating summary judgment as an appealable order. Therefore, the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal of such an order but without prejudice to the filing of an application for a Writ of Supervisory Control. Winter v. Rhodes, 180 M 217, 589 P2d 1021 (1979), following Stensvad v. Mont. Nat'l Bank, 168 M 167, 541 P2d 768 (1975).

Court held that District Court order vacating a previously entered summary judgment and setting the cause for trial was not an appealable order as an order vacating a summary judgment, and setting the cause for trial is interlocutory in nature and does not meet the requirement of a final judgment from which an appeal can be taken because the rights of the parties have not been adjudicated and will not be until trial. Stensvad v. Mont. Nat'l Bank, 168 M 167, 541 P2d 768 (1975).

Appealability and Appropriateness of Partial Summary Judgment: Although a partial summary judgment granting specific performance of an option contract was designated as interlocutory, it was a final and appealable transfer of property. Furthermore, the summary judgment was improperly granted when based upon a determination in a hearing on motion to dismiss that there were no issues of material fact, depriving defendant the opportunity to effectively resist the summary judgment motion. Graveley v. MacLeod, 175 M 338, 573 P2d 1166 (1978).

Appeal of Order Denying Summary Judgment: An order denying summary judgment is not an appealable order. Such an order is reviewable upon appeal from a final judgment. To permit review by an extraordinary writ would accomplish indirectly that which cannot be done directly. State ex rel. Kosena v. District Court, 172 M 21, 560 P2d 522 (1977).

Second Appeal Denied: Appellant who requested dismissal of his appeal from ruling denying motion to set aside summary judgment cannot later make a second appeal attacking the validity of the summary judgment. United Bank of Pueblo v. Iverson, 164 M 473, 525 P2d 21 (1974).

Partial Summary Judgment — Writ of Supervisory Control Available: Although orders of District Court striking two defenses from relator's answer and granting plaintiff summary judgment on issue of liability were not directly appealable under this section, Writ of Supervisory Control was available as remedy. State ex rel. Great Falls Nat'l Bank v. District Court, 154 M 336, 463 P2d 326 (1969).

Order Denying Summary Judgment — Appealable After Final Judgment: Although order denying summary judgment is nonappealable at time it is made because of its interlocutory character, it is nonetheless reviewable under appellate rule providing that all nonappealable intermediate orders or decisions properly excepted or objected to which involve merits or necessarily affect judgment are reviewable on subsequent appeal from final judgment. Brown v. Midland Nat'l Bank, 150 M 422, 435 P2d 878 (1967), followed in Kirchner v. W. Mont. Regional Community Mental Health Center, Inc., River House Program, 261 M 227, 861 P2d 927, 50 St. Rep. 1299 (1993). Brown and Kirchner were followed in In re Litigation Relating to Riot, 283 M 277, 939 P2d 1013, 54 St. Rep. 598 (1997).

INJUNCTIONS

Injunction Appealable Before Final Ruling on Motion for Attorney Fees: An order granting an injunction is appealable under subsection (b)(2) of former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), even though the District Court has not made a final ruling on the plaintiff's motion for attorney fees. Christenot v. St., 272 M 396, 901 P2d 545, 52 St. Rep. 749 (1995).

Interpretation of Preliminary Injunction — Not Appealable: The District Court's application of an existing preliminary injunction, prohibiting use of a deceptively similar name, to appellant's newly acquired name was not an injunction in itself but merely an interpretation of a preliminary injunction and therefore an interlocutory order, not appealable. Am. Furniture, Inc. v. Am. Furniture Warehouse Co., 219 M 11, 709 P2d 1013, 42 St. Rep. 1804 (1985).

Continued Temporary Restraining Order Appealable: An order continuing a temporary restraining order appeared appealable because it had the effect of a permanent injunction. Boyer v. Karagacin, 178 M 26, 582 P2d 1173 (1978).

Temporary Injunction — Denial of Motion to Quash Appealable: Order denying County Commissioner's motion to quash temporary injunction against use of real property valuations made by private appraisal group and relied on by reclassification officer appointed by Commissioners to determine 1965 tax assessment rolls was appealable under section 93-8003, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by former Rule 1, M.R.App.P., now superseded). State ex rel. Keast v. Krieg, 145 M 521, 402 P2d 405 (1965), overruled on other grounds in Larson v. Dept. of Revenue, 166 M 449, 534 P2d 854 (1975).

DEFAULT JUDGMENT

Order Vacating or Refusing to Vacate Default Judgment Appealable as Special Order After Final Judgment: Empire Fire and Marine Insurance Company (Empire) moved to set aside a default judgment against the company. After the motion was granted, Roberts, the plaintiff, appealed the order setting aside the judgment and Empire contested the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to hear the appeal. The Supreme Court clarified the issue whether such an order is appealable, holding that an order vacating or refusing to vacate a judgment is appealable under subsection (b)(2) of former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), as an appeal of a special order after final judgment. Roberts v. Empire Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 276 M 225, 915 P2d 872, 53 St. Rep. 359 (1996), followed in Wright Oil & Tire Co. v. Goodrich, 284 M 6, 942 P2d 128, 54 St. Rep. 811 (1997).

Failure to Prosecute Appeal — Default Judgment Affirmed: The District Court entered a default judgment, and Reese appealed but failed to prosecute his appeal by ordering the necessary transcripts. Upon motion by plaintiff and without objection by Reese, the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal with prejudice. The dismissal affirmed the order of the District Court and became the law of the case. The District Court did not err in refusing to set aside the default judgment. State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Reese, 260 M 24, 858 P2d 357, 50 St. Rep. 925 (1993).

Attorney Withdrawal With No Notice to Client — Default Set Aside: The lower court granted defendants' attorney's motion to withdraw and ordered him to notify defendants. Defendants claimed on appeal that they received no notice. The record showed no evidence of notice by the attorney and no evidence of the notice that 37-61-405 required plaintiff to give. A default was issued against defendants at a time when they had no attorney and were not represented at the hearing. Defendants properly raised on appeal the lack of the lower court's power to proceed to default. The case was remanded with directions to set the default aside and grant a rehearing. Mont. Bank of Roundup, N.A. v. Benson, 220 M 410, 717 P2d 6, 43 St. Rep. 485 (1986).

Default Judgment on Issue of Liability Not Appealable: The District Court, as a discovery sanction, granted a default judgment for plaintiffs on the issue of liability but reserved determination of the amount of damages, and defendants appealed. The Supreme Court held that an order which grants a default judgment on the issue of liability, reserving determination of the amount of damages for a later hearing, is not a final, appealable order under former Rule 1, M.R.App.Civ.P. (now M.R.App.P., now superseded). The appeal was dismissed. Stevens v. Abbott, 220 M 61, 712 P2d 1347, 43 St. Rep. 173 (1986).

Order Reopening Default Not Final Judgment — Appeal Dismissed for Lack of Jurisdiction: District Court ruled in wife's favor by default when husband's attorney failed to appear at hearing on wife's motion to modify decree of dissolution of marriage. Later after another hearing, District Court found excusable neglect on part of husband's attorney and reopened default. Wife appealed. Supreme Court held that since District Court had not entered a final judgment after either hearing, the appeal was premature and must be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. Rex v. Rex, 199 M 328, 649 P2d 460, 39 St. Rep. 1432 (1982), followed in Kirchner v. W. Mont. Regional Community Mental Health Center, Inc., River House Program, 261 M 227, 861 P2d 927, 50 St. Rep. 1299 (1993).

Order Denying Motion for Relief From Default Judgment Properly Appealed — Special Appearance Abolished: When the defendant honey processing company twice moved to vacate and dismiss a default judgment obtained against it by the plaintiff honey producing company, the Supreme Court had jurisdiction over an appeal from the District Court's denial of the second motion to vacate and dismiss. The defendant's first motion was untimely filed, and the fact that it was brought to challenge the personal jurisdiction of the court and characterized as a "special appearance" is of no effect, as special appearances have been abolished and the same requirements for timely appeal applies to all appearances. The second motion was properly appealable as it is considered denied, which denial is a final order, if the court has not ruled on the motion within 15 days after submission. Foster Apiaries, Inc. v. Hubbard Apiaries, Inc., 193 M 156, 630 P2d 1213, 38 St. Rep. 1025 (1981).

Order Vacating Default Judgment Nonappealable — Supervisory Control Inappropriate: Where, after obtaining a default judgment in a breach of contract action against the defendant, the plaintiff sought a review, both by appeal and Writ of Supervisory Control, of the court's order setting aside the default judgment, the Supreme Court held that the order was interlocutory and nonappealable. The Supreme Court also held that a Writ of Supervisory Control was inappropriate to review the court's order, for to issue the Writ would be to allow the appellant to do indirectly what could not be done directly. Kinion v. Design Sys., 190 M 226, 620 P2d 852, 37 St. Rep. 2036 (1980).

Appeal by Defaulting Party: In the absence of an order of the District Court setting aside the default of the appealing defendants, they had no standing to file a notice of appeal from an adverse judgment against the plaintiff county. Carbon County v. Schwend, 182 M 89, 594 P2d 1121 (1979).

Order Setting Aside Default — Appealability: The Supreme Court adopted for Montana the rule followed in the majority of jurisdictions that an order granting a motion to vacate a default judgment is nonappealable but held that when a default judgment is vacated on jurisdictional grounds that are not correctable, the order of the District Court vacating the default judgment amounts to a final judgment from which an appeal can be taken. Shields v. Pirkle Refrigerated Freightlines, Inc., 181 M 37, 591 P2d 1120 (1979), overruled in part in Roberts v. Empire Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 276 M 225, 915 P2d 872, 53 St. Rep. 359 (1996).

Appeals — Order as to Entry of Default Not Final Order: An order setting aside or refusing to set aside an entry of default where judgment has not been entered is not a final order and is therefore not appealable. McClurg v. Flathead County Comm'rs, 179 M 518, 587 P2d 415 (1978); Blevins v. Kramer, 179 M 193, 587 P2d 28 (1978).

WRIT OF SUPERVISORY CONTROL

Supervisory Control Accepted When District Court Proceeding Under Mistake of Law Regarding Time Period for Substitution of Judge: The exercise of supervisory control was appropriate when the District Court was proceeding under a mistake of law regarding the period of time within which a motion must be filed for substitution of a judge pursuant to 3-1-804. State ex rel. Dusek v. District Court, 2003 MT 303, 318 M 166, 79 P3d 292 (2003).

Supervisory Control Denied to Address Discovery Issues: Petitioner sought a writ of supervisory control to address a District Court order directing petitioner to submit to discovery through an independent medical examination in an automobile accident negligence case. The Supreme Court declined to exercise supervisory control. Typically, orders pertaining to discovery are interlocutory in nature and are not generally reviewable in an original proceeding. Original jurisdiction will be exercised when an order places a party at a significant disadvantage in litigating a case. Supervisory control should issue when a District Court proceeds under a mistake of law, causing a gross injustice for which an appeal is not an adequate remedy, but supervisory control is an extraordinary remedy exercised only in extraordinary circumstances. Absent a showing that procedural protections were inadequate to control discovery in an independent medical examination, supervisory control was inappropriate. Hegwood v. District Court, 2003 MT 200, 317 M 30, 75 P3d 308 (2003).

Supervisory Control Appropriate to Address Res Judicata Claim: Following a dispute over the sale of irrigation equipment, H-D Irrigating and Lane sued Kimble Properties and Kimble for false representation of the irrigation equipment and damages. Kimble Properties and Kimble counterclaimed for the balance due on the equipment, alleging that H-D Irrigating was a sham and the alter ego of Lane. The alter ego claim was never pursued. The Supreme Court eventually decided the case in H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95 (2000), and remanded for judgment in favor of Kimble. In an effort to collect, Kimble sought to compel Lane to testify regarding the assets of H-D Irrigating, but rather than appear, Lane filed bankruptcy and received a stay on further proceedings. Kimble then filed an action to collect from Lane personally, again raising the alter ego issue. Lane asserted that the issue had been already decided in the prior litigation and sought supervisory control on res judicata grounds. The Supreme Court held that the case was appropriate for supervisory control because if the res judicata claim was correct, Lane was entitled to summary judgment, but if denial of the summary judgment motion was in error, Lane would be required to defend against the same claim a second time and incur the attendant delay and expense, resulting in a gross injustice. The case was remanded for further proceedings on the alter ego claim. Lane v. District Court, 2003 MT 130, 316 M 55, 68 P3d 819 (2003), following Plumb v. District Court, 279 M 363, 927 P2d 1011 (1996).

Dual Insurance Claims — Supervisory Control Proper to Facilitate Convenience and Judicial Economy: Following a vehicle accident, a couple sought recovery for injuries and loss of consortium and also alleged that the damages exceeded the limits of defendants' coverage, entitling them to recover from their own policy. The District Court bifurcated the claims, and the couple sought relief from the order on grounds that they would be prejudiced by having to prosecute two separate trials. The Supreme Court concurred with the couple and, in the interests of the convenience of the parties and judicial economy, agreed to exercise supervisory control. State ex rel. Gadbaw v. District Court, 2003 MT 127, 316 M 25, 75 P3d 1238 (2003), following Malta Pub. School District A & 14 v. District Court, 283 M 46, 938 P2d 1238 (1997).

Denial of Motion to Intervene — Supreme Court Use of Supervisory Control for Immediate Review of Interlocutory Order: Two sporting groups sought to intervene in an action challenging the enforcement of a ballot initiative that prohibited the shooting of alternative livestock for a fee. The District Court denied the motion, so the groups sought a writ of supervisory control, claiming that a direct appeal after a final judgment would be a wholly inadequate remedy. The Supreme Court noted that although an order denying a motion to intervene is not separately appealable under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), the proper appeal from such an interlocutory order lies after entry of final judgment. However, supervisory control may be used to immediately review an interlocutory order when: (1) there is no remedy by appeal or other remedial procedure and extraordinary circumstances are present; (2) an appeal from a final judgment would impose undue hardship on an applicant and be wholly inadequate as a remedy; and (3) necessary to prevent extended and needless litigation. This case presented the purely legal issue of whether the primary proponents of a ballot issue have a legally protectable interest sufficient to allow intervention in a case challenging the resulting statute. The Supreme Court considered this case to be extraordinary and of statewide importance, noting that appeal following a final judgment would come too late and would not allow the groups to participate in the defense of the initiative that they actively supported, and that if the groups successfully appealed the denial of their motion to intervene after final judgment, extended and needless litigation would result. Thus, the Supreme Court accepted supervisory control because appeal from a final judgment would be a wholly inadequate remedy. Sportsmen for I-143 v. District Court, 2002 MT 18, 308 M 189, 40 P3d 400 (2002).

Order Vacating Default Judgment Nonappealable — Supervisory Control Inappropriate: Where, after obtaining a default judgment in a breach of contract action against the defendant, the plaintiff sought a review, both by appeal and Writ of Supervisory Control, of the court's order setting aside the default judgment, the Supreme Court held that the order was interlocutory and nonappealable. The Supreme Court also held that a Writ of Supervisory Control was inappropriate to review the court's order, for to issue the Writ would be to allow the appellant to do indirectly what could not be done directly. Kinion v. Design Sys., 190 M 226, 620 P2d 852, 37 St. Rep. 2036 (1980), overruled in part in Roberts v. Empire Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 276 M 225, 915 P2d 872, 53 St. Rep. 359 (1996).

Immediate Appeal From Partial Judgment: This is a proper case for a Writ of Supervisory Control because relator wife has no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law by appeal. Neither 40-4-108 nor former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), provide for immediate appeal from a partial judgment. Instead, the right of immediate appeal from a judgment on part but not all of the claims for relief in a single action is governed by former Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). State ex rel. Marlenee v. District Court, 181 M 59, 592 P2d 153 (1979).

Class Action — Writ of Supervisory Control Unjustified: Writ of Supervisory Control granting relief from District Court order permitting maintenance of class action was not justified since the order was subject to alteration or amendment as the matter progresses and since the question can be considered on appeal from final judgment. State ex rel. Anaconda Aluminum Co. v. District Court, 158 M 228, 490 P2d 351 (1971).

Appeal Inadequate — Writ of Supervisory Control Available: Although denial of Writ of Assistance, placing purchaser at Sheriff's sale under mortgage foreclosure into possession of lands involved, by District Court was appealable under rule either as "an order directing . . . surrender of property" or as "any special order made after final judgment", Writ of Supervisory Control to compel the District Court to issue Writ of Assistance was available as remedy since remedy by appeal was neither speedy nor adequate. State ex rel. Foss v. District Court, 152 M 73, 446 P2d 707 (1968).

Sustaining of Demurrer — Right to Supervisory Writ: Notwithstanding that former statute providing for appeals gave party against whom demurrer (abolished by M.R.Civ.P.) was sustained plain and speedy remedy by appeal, court would not dismiss application for Supervisory Writ where judgment sustaining demurrer also stayed proceedings and expressly accorded losing party right to apply for Supervisory Writ. State ex rel. Cave Constr. Co. v. District Court, 150 M 18, 430 P2d 624 (1967).

Motion to Dismiss Improperly Denied — Writ of Supervisory Control Proper: Writ of Supervisory Control was proper where lessor's motion to dismiss sublessees' action for breach of lease agreement, to which sublessees were not parties, was denied by the District Court, the order denying the motion to dismiss not being appealable under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). State ex rel. Buttrey Foods, Inc. v. District Court, 148 M 350, 420 P2d 845 (1966).

Writ of Supervisory Control Denied: When appeal is available from a summary judgment, the Supreme Court will not issue a Writ of Supervisory Control without extremely extenuating circumstances. Circumstances here were insufficient. State ex rel. Kober v. District Court, 147 M 116, 410 P2d 945 (1966).

FINAL JUDGMENT

No Res Judicata Absent Final Judgment in Related Case: Brown was one of 64 prisoners who filed a complaint in 2002 alleging that the Department of Corrections improperly transferred prisoners to prisons where treatment, training, and rehabilitation opportunities were not available. While that case was pending, Brown filed suit in 2004 against the Department, alleging that his liberty interest in parole was violated because the Department transferred him to locations where he was unable to obtain the sex offender treatment required for parole eligibility. The District Court concluded that the 2004 case was barred by res judicata because Brown was a plaintiff in the 2002 case, which presented identical claims. Brown appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed and remanded. Under Audit Serv., Inc. v. Anderson, 211 M 323, 684 P2d 491 (1984), the primary requirement necessary to sustain a plea of res judicata is that there be a judgment on the merits. Because the 2002 case was still pending, dismissal of the 2004 case on res judicata grounds was error. Brown v. Dept. of Corrections, 2005 MT 58, 326 M 231, 108 P3d 498 (2005).

Relitigating Issues Raised in Bankruptcy Proceeding Barred by Res Judicata: In defendants' bankruptcy proceeding, they contended that notes issued by plaintiff contained a usurious interest rate and were prompted by fraud. The Bankruptcy Court determined that the notes were valid, enforceable, and unaffected by usury or fraud. During plaintiff's subsequent collection proceeding in District Court, defendants sought to amend their answer to allege usury, but the District Court held that the Bankruptcy Court's judgment barred defendants' claim under res judicata and granted summary judgment for plaintiff. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The Bankruptcy Court's judgment was accorded finality as to the issues raised or that could fairly have been raised in the adversary proceeding. Defendants were not precluded from litigating any of their defenses to the notes in the bankruptcy proceeding and thus were barred from relitigating the usury issue in District Court. Absent a genuine issue of material fact relating to defendants' default on the notes, summary judgment for plaintiff was proper. Olympic Coast Inv., Inc. v. Wright, 2005 MT 4, 325 M 307, 105 P3d 743 (2005), following Fox v. 7L Bar Ranch Co., 198 M 201, 645 P2d 929 (1982), and distinguishing Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604 (1993).

Retroactive Applicability of Decision Prohibiting Antistacking of Insurance Provisions to Pending Cases: In Hardy v. Progressive Specialty Ins. Co., 2003 MT 85, 315 M 107, 67 P3d 892 (2003), the Supreme Court decided that antistacking provisions in an underinsured motorist policy were unconstitutional. Plaintiffs brought a class action in federal court claiming that Hardy entitled them to additional payments from past insurance claims that were not previously allowed because their policies did not allow for stacking. The federal court certified the question to the Supreme Court as to whether Hardy applied prospectively only or retroactively to qualified claims arising before the Hardy decision. The Supreme Court agreed with the decision in Harper v. Va. Dept. of Taxation, 509 US 86 (1993), that limiting a rule of law to its prospective application creates an arbitrary distinction between litigants based merely on the timing of their claims and that in the interests of fairness and finality, the line should be drawn between claims that are final and claims that are not. The Supreme Court then decided that the retroactivity test in Chevron Oil Co. v. Huson, 404 US 97 (1971), still applies to Montana civil decisions if all three Chevron factors are met: (1) the decision to be applied nonretroactively must establish a new principle of law, either by overruling clear past precedent on which litigants may have relied or by deciding an issue of first impression whose resolution was not clearly foreshadowed; (2) the court must weigh the merits and demerits in each case by looking at the prior history of the rule in question, its purpose and effect, and whether retroactive application will further or retard its operation; and (3) the inequity imposed by retroactive application has been weighed. However, the retroactive effect of a decision does not apply to cases that became final or that were settled prior to a decision's issuance. Thus, Hardy applies retroactively in qualifying circumstances on open claims arising before its issuance and is limited to cases pending on direct appeal or not yet final. Dempsey v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2004 MT 391, 325 M 207, 104 P3d 483 (2004).

No Supreme Court Jurisdiction to Hear Appeal Absent Final Judgment: Reeder was convicted of DUI in Municipal Court. Reeder appealed to District Court, raising 22 issues. The District Court found that Reeder's due process rights were not violated, but held that the Municipal Court erroneously admitted the results of an Intoxilyzer test without proper foundation and remanded for a new trial. Reeder appealed the District Court's decision and raised other issues not addressed by the District Court. The Supreme Court held that because Reeder did not currently stand convicted of a criminal offense and because no final judgment of conviction had been entered, the Supreme Court lacked jurisdiction to hear the case, so the appeal was dismissed. St. v. Reeder, 2004 MT 244, 323 M 15, 97 P3d 1104 (2004).

Challenge to Equity of Sentence Properly With Sentence Review Division, Not Supreme Court: A challenge to the equity of a sentence, as opposed to the legality of a sentence, properly lies with the Sentence Review Division, not the Supreme Court, which does not review a sentence on appeal for mere inequity or disparity. In this case, defendant cloaked an equity challenge in the vestiges of a constitutional argument in seeking Supreme Court review, but the court declined to address it, leaving the matter to the Sentence Review Division. St. v. Legg, 2004 MT 26, 319 M 362, 84 P3d 648 (2004), following St. v. DeSalvo, 273 M 343, 903 P2d 202 (1995), and followed in St. v. Baker, 2008 MT 396, 347 M 159, 197 P3d 1001 (2008). See also St. v. Old Bull, 2017 MT 247, 389 Mont. 56, 403 P.3d 670.

Multiple Claims — No Appeal Available Absent Final Judgment — Remand: Plaintiff brought several employment claims against the state. The District Court certified judgment for the state on one claim, and plaintiff moved for partial summary judgment on another, but the motion was denied. However, there was no final judgment certified on that claim, so no appeal on that issue was available. Because the motion for partial summary judgment was not final and appealable, the Supreme Court remanded for further proceedings on that claim. Losleben v. Oppedahl, 2004 MT 5, 319 M 269, 83 P3d 1271 (2004).

Temporary Custody Order Not Considered Final for Purposes of Appeal — Writ of Supervisory Control Appropriate Mechanism to Challenge Temporary Custody: The District Court ordered temporary legal custody for a child, and the child's mother appealed. The Supreme Court held that orders of temporary legal custody do not embrace a final determination of the rights of the parties contemplated in former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), that would subject the temporary order to direct appeal. Rather, temporary custody orders are considered interlocutory orders from which the Supreme Court will grant relief in extraordinary circumstances. This ensures the expeditious review of legal errors while still protecting children from the instability of protracted, piecemeal litigation. However, qualifying temporary custody orders as interlocutory does not leave a parent who is aggrieved by an erroneous order without a remedy. The parent may invoke the extraordinary remedy of a writ of supervisory control, which is the appropriate mechanism to challenge an order of temporary custody. In re D.A., 2003 MT 109, 315 M 340, 68 P3d 735 (2003). See also G.B. v. M.M.B., 670 A2d 714 (Pa. Sup. Ct. 1996).

No Final Judgment When Multiple Parties Involved but Summary Judgment Granted to Only One Party — Express Direction for Entry of Judgment Required: Purchasers of real property sued the seller and the seller's agent over an alleged access problem. The District Court granted summary judgment to the seller, but denied summary judgment for the seller's agent because material facts remained in dispute regarding the agent's disclosure of information pertaining to the access problem. Plaintiffs then appealed the summary judgment that was granted to the seller. The Supreme Court held that the order granting summary judgment to the seller was not a final judgment and thus was not appealable because in an action involving multiple parties, a final judgment as to one or more but not all of the parties may be entered only upon an express determination by the District Court that there is no just reason for delay and upon an express direction for entry of judgment. In this case, there was no indication or certification by the District Court that the matter should be certified as final, and absent a final judgment, no appeal was available. The appeal was dismissed without prejudice and remanded for further proceedings. Trombley v. Mann, 2001 MT 154, 306 M 80, 30 P3d 355 (2001). See also Shull v. First Interstate Bank of Great Falls, 262 M 355, 864 P2d 1268 (1993).

Partial Payment of Interest on Promissory Note Not Precluding Appeal: Plaintiff owed defendant $200,000 plus interest on a promissory note. The same day that plaintiff filed a claim for misrepresentation and failure to disclose, plaintiff also deposited the first promissory note payment with the Clerk of the District Court. Following judgment for plaintiff, the District Court ordered release of the funds, which defendant accepted. Plaintiff argued that by accepting the funds and the fruits of the judgment, defendant was prohibited from prosecuting an appeal to reverse the judgment. Defendant responded that because the judgment could not possibly affect the benefit that was accepted, the right to appeal was not waived. The long-recognized general rule is that the right to accept the fruits of a judgment and at the same time prosecute an appeal from it are not concurrent, but rather wholly inconsistent, rights and that the election of one excludes the enjoyment of the other (see Peck v. Bersanti, 101 M 6, 52 P2d 168 (1935)). The exception is that when reversal of the judgment cannot possibly affect the appellant's right to the benefit accepted under a judgment, then appeal may be taken and sustained despite the fact that the benefit was sought and secured (see Niles v. Carbon County, 174 M 20, 568 P2d 524 (1977)). The acceptance of payments that were not contested or that were irrevocably conceded as due by the opposing party does not preclude appeal. Here, when defendant accepted the funds, it simply accepted what plaintiff already conceded was due and no more than it conceded would be due in the event that the appeal was successful. Therefore, defendant did not waive the right to appeal. H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000).

Order Granting Temporary Guardianship Held Final Order and Special Proceeding for Purposes of Appeal — Noncompliance With Former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (Now Superseded), Excused — Expiration of Temporary Guardianship Held Not to Render Issue Moot: After a District Court twice appointed the same temporary guardians for Kathleen Klos pursuant to 72-5-317, once in writing and once by making an oral order with no documentation except a minute entry entered by the Clerk of Court, Klos filed a motion to set aside the second order of guardianship. The guardians argued that an order appointing a temporary guardian is not subject to appeal and that Klos had not complied with former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), because she did not file a transcript of a hearing appointing the guardians. The Supreme Court held that in as much as subsection (b)(3) of former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), does not differentiate between a permanent order and a temporary order, a temporary order qualified as an appealable order. The Supreme Court also held that the temporary order is a "special proceeding", as defined by 27-1-102(2), for the purposes of subsection (b)(1) of former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and therefore appealable for that reason as well. Concerning the argument on noncompliance with former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), the Supreme Court noted that no transcript could be provided because none was ever made and held that Klos had substantially complied by notifying the Clerk of the Supreme Court of the lack of a transcript and by providing the District Court Clerk's minute entry. Citing Butte-Silver Bow Local Gov't v. Olsen, 228 M 77, 743 P2d 564 (1987), the Supreme Court also noted that just because the order had expired by operation of law did not mean that the issue of appealability was moot because the guardians had twice been appointed by a temporary order that expired by operation of law and could be appointed in the same manner again. Thus, if the order was not appealable, it would be "capable of repetition, yet evade review". In re Klos, 284 M 197, 943 P2d 1277, 54 St. Rep. 843 (1997), followed in Fischer v. Fischer, 2007 MT 101, 337 M 122, 157 P3d 682 (2007).

Order Granting Motion for Relief From Judgment Held Appealable: The District Court granted Wright Oil's motion under former Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), for relief from judgment, and Goodrich appealed. Wright Oil argued that the Supreme Court did not have jurisdiction over Goodrich's appeal. Citing Roberts v. Empire Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 276 M 225, 915 P2d 872 (1996), the Supreme Court held that an order granting a motion for relief from judgment is a special order made after final judgment and is appealable pursuant to former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Wright Oil & Tire Co. v. Goodrich, 284 M 6, 942 P2d 128, 54 St. Rep. 811 (1997).

Direct Appeal of Venue Question — Certification of Judgment Not Required: Following summary dismissal of all Missoula defendants, the trial court granted the motion of defendant Kalispell doctor for a change of venue to Flathead County, certifying the summary judgment order as final pursuant to former Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). When the venue question was appealed to the Supreme Court, the doctor asserted that the Supreme Court did not have jurisdiction to determine whether venue was properly transferred because the former Rule 54(b) order did not mention the order changing venue. However, under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), direct appeal of an order changing or refusing to change venue is allowed, and as such, former Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), certification is not required. Emery v. Federated Foods, Inc., 262 M 83, 863 P2d 426, 50 St. Rep. 1454 (1993).

Order Denying Partition of Property Not Appealable: In a dispute over jointly owned recreational property, the District Court denied a motion to enforce an oral settlement for partition of the property and provided the parties an extension of time during which to resolve the controversy. On appeal, the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal, holding that the District Court order was not a final or interlocutory judgment or an order to determine the rights of the parties. Manley v. Grimes, 257 M 404, 849 P2d 215, 50 St. Rep. 330 (1993).

Qualified Domestic Relations Order Appealable: The District Court ordered husband to submit within 20 days a qualified domestic relations order (QDRO) that conformed with the parties' separation agreement, but instead husband filed an appeal with the Supreme Court. Although on its face the order appeared interlocutory, the order constituted a special order made after final judgment. Failure to file a notice of appeal within 30 days would have closed husband's right to appeal. If the effect of an order is to destroy an appellant's right to appeal, then that order, though interlocutory, should be appealable. In re Marriage of Woodford, 254 M 501, 839 P2d 574, 49 St. Rep. 887 (1992).

Issue of Fees and Costs Not in Form of Final Order — Duty of Parties to Move for Dismissal: The District Court awarded certain fees and costs to plaintiffs pursuant to 37-61-421. However, the issue was not in the form of a final order, and thus the appeal was premature. There must be a final judgment from which an appeal may be taken before the Supreme Court is vested with jurisdiction. It is the duty of the attorneys involved in an appeal to bring the issue to the attention of the court. Tigart v. Thompson, 237 M 468, 774 P2d 401, 46 St. Rep. 974 (1989).

Default Judgment on Issue of Liability Not Appealable: The District Court, as a discovery sanction, granted a default judgment for plaintiffs on the issue of liability but reserved determination of the amount of damages, and defendants appealed. The Supreme Court held that an order which grants a default judgment on the issue of liability, reserving determination of the amount of damages for a later hearing, is not a final, appealable order under former Rule 1, M.R.App.Civ.P. (now M.R.App.P., now superseded). The appeal was dismissed. Stevens v. Abbott, 220 M 61, 712 P2d 1347, 43 St. Rep. 173 (1986).

Order to Pay Attorney Fees Upon Proof of Amount — Not a Final Judgment: An order of the District Court, not certified under former Rule 54, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), entering summary judgment for one party, ruling that party entitled to attorney fees, and ordering a later hearing for the purpose of determining the amount of the attorney fees, was not a final order for the purpose of filing an appeal. Boles v. Ler, 213 M 266, 692 P2d 1, 41 St. Rep. 2106 (1984).

In a proceeding for modification of a divorce decree, the court ordered the respondent to pay the petitioner's attorney fees "in a reasonable amount to be determined upon proof thereof". Because this order was obviously not final, an appeal was premature. Baer v. Baer, 199 M 21, 647 P2d 835, 39 St. Rep. 1178 (1982).

Denial of Demand for Jury Trial — Interlocutory Order Not Appealable: Defendants, sued to recover money due on promissory notes, did not demand a jury trial in their original answer, but after several delays and withdrawal of counsel, defendants acting pro se filed an amended answer with a request for jury trial. Upon objection by plaintiffs and examination of the pleadings, the District Court denied the demand for jury trial. The Supreme Court dismissed the defendants' appeal of the denial as premature, holding that the denial of a request for a jury trial, whether the request was timely or belated, was not a final judgment appealable under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Such an interlocutory order may be appealable only if specifically provided for in a rule or statute. Heidema v. First Bank, 211 M 178, 682 P2d 1374, 41 St. Rep. 1291 (1984).

Order Denying Joinder of Parties Not Appealable Absent Certification: In an action against the defendant real estate company for fraud and negligence in the sale of property to the plaintiffs, the District Court denied the plaintiffs' motion for joinder of the owners of the company as a party defendant, and on appeal the defendant challenged the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, alleging that the notice of appeal should have been filed within 30 days after the order denying the motion for joinder. The Supreme Court held that absent certification under former Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), an order denying joinder of parties is not a final judgment. Thus, denial of the motion was not ripe for appeal until completion of the trial. White v. Lobdell, 208 M 295, 678 P2d 637, 41 St. Rep. 346 (1984).

Order Not Appealable When Judgment Never Docketed in Record: The District Court made an express order that the Clerk of Court enter final judgment in a case certified for appeal under former Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), but a final judgment was never docketed in the record. Under these circumstances the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to decide an appeal. Jackson v. Burlington N., Inc., 201 M 123, 652 P2d 223, 39 St. Rep. 1998 (1982).

Order Reopening Default Not Final Judgment — Appeal Dismissed for Lack of Jurisdiction: District Court ruled in wife's favor by default when husband's attorney failed to appear at hearing on wife's motion to modify decree of dissolution of marriage. Later after another hearing, District Court found excusable neglect on part of husband's attorney and reopened default. Wife appealed. Supreme Court held that since District Court had not entered a final judgment after either hearing, the appeal was premature and must be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. Rex v. Rex, 199 M 328, 649 P2d 460, 39 St. Rep. 1432 (1982), followed in Kirchner v. W. Mont. Regional Community Mental Health Center, Inc., River House Program, 261 M 227, 861 P2d 927, 50 St. Rep. 1299 (1993).

Conditional Notice of Appeal: Appellant filed a conditional notice of appeal conditioned upon the Supreme Court finding that the judgment being appealed was a final judgment. Because the notice was conditioned upon an action to be taken at an undetermined time in the future, it was totally ineffective. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Finality of Judgment — Award of Attorney Fees: A general contractor was awarded damages under a materials and labor bond. Attorney fees, an element of damages provided for in the bond, were to be determined at a later hearing. Because the attorney fees were based on the bond, the subject matter of the action, the judgment was not final and could not be appealed until actual determination of attorney fees. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Supreme Court Ruling When No Trial Court Ruling: When a case is appealed to the Supreme Court that involves an issue not raised in the trial court but which is based almost exclusively on depositions, the Supreme Court is in just as good a position as the trial court to assess the deposition testimony and to issue a ruling therefrom. Reid v. Park County, 192 M 231, 627 P2d 1210, 38 St. Rep. 631 (1981).

Final Child Custody Order Reviewable: A District Court's order determining which place of custody is in a child's best interest, assigning custody to the mother, and setting a support obligation of the father is a final determination of the child's custody and is reviewable by the Supreme Court of Montana. Korol v. Korol, 188 M 351, 613 P2d 1016 (1980).

Obstruction of Access to Property — Interlocutory Decrees — Not Appealable: The Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) appealed from an interlocutory decision of the District Court that plaintiffs were entitled to compensation for the loss of reasonable access to their property. The appeal was dismissed because interlocutory orders are not appealable. Bostwick v. Dept. of Highways, 188 M 313, 613 P2d 997 (1980).

Interlocutory Summary Judgment — No Appeal Allowed: Where an order of summary judgment is interlocutory, the case is not ripe for appellate review and any appeal thereon must be dismissed without prejudice. Knight & Co. v. Ft. Belknap Indian Agency Housing Authority, 188 M 218, 612 P2d 1290 (1980).

Summary Judgment Against Less Than All Defendants — Appeal Not Allowed: A summary judgment in favor of one of two defendants was not a final order under the provisions of Rule former 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and in the absence of compliance with the certification requirements of that rule, the summary judgment was not appealable. Roy v. Neibauer, 188 M 81, 610 P2d 1185 (1980).

Summary Judgment on Issue of Liability Alone Not Appealable: A summary judgment for plaintiff on the question of liability, reserving judgment as to the amount of damages, is interlocutory in character under former Rule 56(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and hence is not appealable. Weston v. Kuntz, 187 M 453, 610 P2d 172 (1980).

Paternity Determination as Final Judgment: A jury verdict determining paternity is an appealable final judgment and in effect an action separate from a support determination. Borchers v. McCarter, 181 M 169, 592 P2d 941 (1979).

Appealable Order When Relief Denied: An order dismissing a count in a cause of action for breach of contract on the basis that the count failed to state a claim was appealable because it resulted in a party's being out of court and denied relief just as completely as if judgment had been entered against it. Tobacco River Lumber Co., Inc. v. Yoppe, 176 M 267, 577 P2d 855 (1978).

Order Denying Motion to Strike: An order denying a motion to strike is not an appealable order, it being interlocutory in nature. It is reviewable on appeal from a final judgment. Fitzgerald v. Aetna Ins. Co., 176 M 186, 577 P2d 370 (1978).

Order Granting Motion to Strike: Appeal from order granting a motion to strike certain portions of the complaint was dismissed as not being an appealable order. Phillips v. M.E.A., 173 M 43, 566 P2d 62 (1977).

Order Equivalent to Final Judgment: An order dismissing a complaint and denying leave to amend was equivalent to final judgment although judgment had not been entered. Deach v. Destination Enterprises, Inc., 165 M 152, 526 P2d 1382 (1974); Prentice Lumber Co., Inc. v. Hukill, 161 M 8, 504 P2d 277 (1972), distinguishing Payne v. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. Co., 142 M 406, 385 P2d 100 (1963); Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 143 M 432, 391 P2d 1 (1964).

STANDING TO APPEAL

Out-of-Time Appeal in Criminal Matters — Exclusive Jurisdiction With Supreme Court: Under 46-20-101, the only method for review in criminal cases is by notice of appeal. Time limits for filing an appeal are mandatory and jurisdictional. If a defendant takes no action to perfect an appeal within 90 days of judgment, the District Court loses its jurisdiction and the appeal is out-of-time. However, an out-of-time appeal is a remedy that may be available to a criminal defendant who, through no fault of the defendant, misses a deadline for filing an appeal. Although former Rule 21(b), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), precludes an out-of-time appeal in a civil case, the Supreme Court is not precluded from addressing a motion for an out-of-time appeal in a criminal case. Further, a District Court lacks jurisdiction to grant an out-of-time appeal. The Supreme Court has exclusive jurisdiction to grant a motion for an out-of-time appeal, and the motion is considered an original proceeding subject to the provisions of former Rule 17, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Upon a showing that the failure to timely notice a criminal appeal was excusable under the circumstances, the Supreme Court may conclude that an out-of-time appeal is the appropriate remedy pursuant to former Rule 21(b), M.R.App.P. (now superseded). In that event, the matter will be remanded to the District Court with instructions to vacate and reenter judgment to afford the defendant a second opportunity to act within the statutory timeframes for filing notice of appeal. St. v. Tweed, 2002 MT 286, 312 M 482, 59 P3d 1105 (2002).

Failure to Appeal Violative of Right to Counsel — "Anders" Procedure Applicable to Protect Defendant's Right to Effective Assistance of Counsel on Appeal: Rogers' counsel repeatedly refused Rogers' request to file a notice of appeal, asserting that there were no appealable issues. However, under Roe v. Flores-Ortega, 528 US 470 (2000), the failure to preserve defendant's right to appeal when requested is error, and when defendant would have appealed but for counsel's deficient performance, that error is prejudicial. In order to protect defendant's right to effective assistance of counsel on appeal, the Supreme Court has adopted the procedure in Anders v. Calif., 386 US 738 (1967), for when an attorney believes an appeal lacks meritorious issues. If counsel finds after conscientious examination that a case is wholly frivolous, counsel should so advise the court and request permission to withdraw. A defendant's right to appellate counsel must be safeguarded, and allowing appellate counsel to be the final judge of the merits of an appeal does not adequately safeguard this right. Thus, counsel's failure to appeal violated Rogers' right to counsel, constituting reversible error. St. v. Rogers, 2001 MT 165, 306 M 130, 32 P3d 724 (2001), following Smith v. Robbins, 528 US 259 (2000).

Proper Cross-Appeal of Adverse District Court Decision Regarding City Court Denial of Motion for Continuance: The established doctrine governing appeals to all appellate courts is that a party must cross-appeal if the party seeks to change any part of the judgment below. Further, the Montana Supreme Court follows the rule that it has jurisdiction only over those issues addressed in the appeal or in a properly filed cross-appeal, not jurisdiction over the entire case. Conversely, it is also the general rule that a cross-appeal is not necessary to enable a prevailing party to defend its judgment on any ground properly raised below, whether or not that ground was relied upon, rejected, or even considered by the court below. The proper way for a respondent to raise an issue before the Supreme Court, if the issue would support the decision below and is an issue that the court below did not address because it found another issue to be dispositive, is to assert the issue in the brief to the Supreme Court and fully discuss it. If a respondent does not assert and fully discuss the issue, the Supreme Court may in its discretion: (1) review the issue itself; (2) decide that the respondent has waived the right to review of the issue; or (3) remand to the court below for a decision on the issue. Here, issues raised by respondent that the District Court declined to address, having found another issue dispositive, undoubtedly supported the District Court's decision reversing the City Court's judgment. Thus, because the respondent sufficiently asserted the issues and both parties fully briefed each one, the Supreme Court concluded that the respondent had properly cross-appealed and that it was proper to review the respondent's issues on appeal. Missoula v. Robertson, 2000 MT 52, 298 M 419, 998 P2d 144, 57 St. Rep. 250 (2000), following In Interest of Jamie L., 493 NW 2d 56 (Wis. 1992). See also Wash. v. Yakima Indian Nation, 439 US 463, 58 L Ed 2d 740, 99 S Ct 740 (1979).

Involuntary Satisfaction of Judgment — Request for Stay of Execution Not Required: Following entry and satisfaction of judgment in District Court, the parties were aware of a contemplated appeal, but no stay of execution was requested or supersedeas bond posted. After plaintiff acquired title to the disputed property pursuant to the judgment, defendant filed a notice of appeal and lis pendens, effectively preserving the status quo pending appeal. Plaintiff moved to dismiss, contending that by voluntarily satisfying the judgment, defendants waived their right to appeal. Applying Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996), the Supreme Court held that the parties' course of conduct illustrated the involuntary, rather than voluntary nature of the satisfaction of judgment. Because satisfaction was involuntary, the right to appeal was not waived. Further, under former Rule 7, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), a party may request a stay of execution, but the request is not mandatory, even though a party choosing not to seek a stay runs the risk of having the appeal become moot. Plaintiff's motion to dismiss was denied. Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 1078 (1999).

Appealability of District Court Order Granting Judgment as Matter of Law — Rules Suspension: Plaintiffs contended that an order granting judgment as a matter of law is not an appealable order because it is not among the enumerated orders listed in former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Following Ryan v. Bozeman, 279 M 507, 928 P2d 228 (1996), the Supreme Court, expressing concerns regarding judicial economy and the near certainty of future appeals following a new trial on damages, exercised its authority under former Rule 3, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), to suspend the requirements of the rules of appellate procedure in the interest of expediting a decision and considered the appeal of the order granting judgment as a matter of law in the limited class of cases like this, when the order granting judgment as a matter of law is taken in conjunction with an order granting a new trial. Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1998 MT 47, 288 M 1, 955 P2d 160, 55 St. Rep. 198 (1998).

No Appeal, Based on Constitutionality of Offense Charged, From Judgment of Not Guilty by Reason of Mental Disease or Defect: Kaplan was charged with seven counts of stalking under 45-5-220, arising from her repeated contact with her former martial arts instructor. Kaplan moved to dismiss the charges on grounds that 45-5-220 is unconstitutional. Following a briefing, the motion was denied. By stipulation, Kaplan was subsequently found not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect. Because Kaplan was not convicted, there was no judgment of conviction from which to appeal. Therefore, the denial of her motion to dismiss, absent a judgment of conviction, was not itself an appealable order. The proper method of challenging a finding of mental disease or defect is found in 46-14-301 through 46-14-303. Appealing the constitutionality of the statute under which the person was charged is not an option. St. v. Kaplan, 275 M 108, 910 P2d 240, 53 St. Rep. 60 (1996), followed in St. v. Violette, 2009 MT 19, 349 M 81, 201 P3d 804 (2009).

Mootness as Separate From Question of Waiver of Appeal Rights — Voluntary Versus Involuntary Performance: The question of whether compliance with a judgment was voluntary or not has bearing on whether a party has waived the right to appeal, but it has no bearing on the question of mootness, which arises when an appellate court cannot grant effective relief. The issue of mootness is separate and distinct from the question of waiver of appeal rights. Complying with the judgment does not necessarily render the appeal moot. However, if compliance is voluntary, the party may be said to have waived any objection to the judgment. In deciding whether a case is moot, it must be determined whether effective relief is available. The fact that a party has not voluntarily waived the right to appeal does not necessarily mean that effective relief can still be provided on appeal, nor may a party claim an exception to the mootness doctrine when the case became moot through that party's own failure to seek a stay of judgment. Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996), following and clarifying State ex rel. Hagerty v. Rafn, 130 M 554, 304 P2d 918 (1956), and Martin Dev. Co. v. Keeney Co., 216 M 212, 703 P2d 143 (1985), overruling any contrary holding in Mont. Nat'l Bank of Roundup v. Dept. of Revenue, 167 M 429, 539 P2d 722 (1975), First Nat'l Bank in Eureka v. Giles, 225 M 467, 733 P2d 357 (1986), Moore v. Hardy, 230 M 158, 748 P2d 477 (1988), LeClair v. Reiter, 233 M 332, 760 P2d 740 (1988), and Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604 (1993), and followed in Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 1078 (1999). See also Gates v. Deukmejian, 987 F2d 1392 (9th Cir. 1993).

Denial of Motion to Set Aside Default as Final Judgment — Appeal Timely Filed: An order made after final judgment setting aside or refusing to vacate a default judgment is a special order that may be considered by the Supreme Court on appeal. During a hearing on a motion to set aside default, the District Court denied the motion, thus making a final determination of the parties' rights. An appeal perfected and filed within 30 days of dismissal of the motion was timely. In re Marriage of Martin, 265 M 95, 874 P2d 1219, 51 St. Rep. 443 (1994).

Right to Retain Lien — Substantive Property Right: Talcott Construction brought an action to foreclose on its construction lien on certain condominiums. Mountain Bank filed an irrevocable letter of credit with the District Court on behalf of the defendant, P&D Land Enterprises, and the court entered an order dissolving Talcott's lien. The defendant argued that Talcott could not appeal the dissolving of the lien because former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), referred only to writs of attachment. The Supreme Court held that an appeal was proper because the former rule referred to "attachments" and the construction lien was an attachment and a property right, the release of which was the deprivation of a substantive right. James Talcott Constr., Inc. v. P&D Land Enterprises, 261 M 260, 862 P2d 395, 50 St. Rep. 1313 (1993).

Appeal of Grant of New Trial Made After Second Trial — Moot by Failure to Object or Timely Appeal: Following a trial on the distribution of marital property, wife requested and the District Court ordered a new trial. Husband waited until after the second trial to object to the order, contending that the court abused its discretion in granting a new trial because: (1) wife was incorrectly allowed to argue matters additional to those raised in the motion for a new trial; (2) the court did not rule on his motion to reconsider the order granting a new trial; and (3) the court did not state with particularity the reasons for granting a new trial. The Supreme Court held that husband's grounds for appeal must fail because he failed to object or bring an appeal in a timely fashion. The question of the propriety of the trial court's order is one that should have been considered earlier and was rendered moot by the fact that the second trial had already occurred. Husband's attempt to raise the issue for the first time on appeal was barred by the doctrine of laches. In re Marriage of Danelson, 253 M 310, 833 P2d 215, 49 St. Rep. 597 (1992).

Failure to Appeal Not Fatal — Court Discretion to Reverse Judgment in Light of Statutory Changes: Koch chose not to appeal an adverse District Court decision regarding governmental immunity based on the case law developed on that issue by the Supreme Court. More than 1 year later, following substantive legislative revision of statutory immunity law, Koch sought relief under former Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Generally, failure to appeal for almost any reason is fatal to a motion to reopen judgment under that rule because if allowed, it would in essence make a motion under that rule a substitute for appeal, which is an improper use of the motion. Even so, failure to appeal may not be fatal. Relief under former Rule 60(b) is not inflexibly withheld in a case in which an appeal has been abandoned or not taken because of a clearly applicable adverse rule of law and in which there is a later clear and authoritative change in governing law. Therefore, in the present case, the existence of extraordinary circumstances created because of the substantive revision of statutory law was sufficient to warrant reversal of a final judgment under the "other reasons" rationale of former Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Having met the standards for relief under the rule, failure to appeal did not bar that relief. Koch v. Billings School District No. 2, 253 M 261, 833 P2d 181, 49 St. Rep. 517 (1992), following Polites v. U.S., 364 US 426, 5 L Ed 2d 173, 81 S Ct 202 (1960), and U.S. v. Wyle, 889 F2d 242 (9th Cir. 1989).

Party Not Injuriously Affected by Judgment: The defendant appealed the lower court's order allowing the Bureau of Land Management to maintain the road located on the defendant's property. The Supreme Court refused to rule on whether or not the lower court had the authority to enter the maintenance order but held that the defendant was not seriously prejudiced by the order and therefore was without standing to appeal. Granite County v. Komberec, 245 M 252, 800 P2d 166, 47 St. Rep. 2061 (1990).

Failure to Request Evidentiary Hearing or Raise Timely Objection — Issue of Attorney Fees Not Preserved for Appeal: The Supreme Court was precluded from reviewing the correctness of the computation of an award of attorney fees in a workers' compensation case because the defendant failed to either timely object or request an evidentiary hearing contesting the proposed order granting the fees. Defendant contended that there was no bar on appeal because: (1) the lower court abused its discretion; and (2) the plain error doctrine applied. However, the abuse of discretion standard is applied only when the usual requirements of preserving the issue at trial are met. Furthermore, the plain error exception will not be applied when failure or refusal to raise an issue in trial court is conscious and intentional on the part of trial counsel. Martinez v. Mont. Power Co., 239 M 281, 779 P2d 917, 46 St. Rep. 1684 (1989).

Court Order for Production of Witness — Failure to Preserve Issue for Appeal: Defendant claimed the jury might have been prejudiced by a District Judge's demeanor in ordering defense counsel to produce a witness for examination by the plaintiff. However, because defendant failed to move for mistrial or object at the time of the judge's action, there was no preservation of any issue of judicial misconduct for appeal. Phil-Co Feeds, Inc. v. First Nat'l Bank in Havre, 238 M 414, 777 P2d 1306, 46 St. Rep. 1380 (1989).

Constitutionality of Claim and Delivery Procedures: When presented with a claim that 27-17-203(2) is unconstitutional because it allows a court-ordered seizure of property without requiring notice of or opportunity for an immediate postseizure hearing, the Supreme Court held that Montana's claim and delivery procedure provides constitutional safeguards required by the state and federal constitutions. The procedure balances and protects the interests of both parties in the following ways: (1) a prehearing seizure may be obtained only if plaintiff swears to facts and posts a bond appropriate to protect defendant; (2) a delivery order must be obtained through a judge or Justice of the Peace rather than a court or administrative officer; (3) defendant may file a bond to immediately regain possession of the property; (4) defendant may immediately apply for a motion to quash the order; (5) defendant may promptly seek Supreme Court review under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded); and (6) defendant may challenge the validity of the order at the final judicial determination of liability following seizure. First Bank W. Mont. Missoula v. Gregoroff, 236 M 345, 770 P2d 512, 46 St. Rep. 412 (1989). See also Mitchell v. W.T. Grant Co., 416 US 600, 40 L Ed 2d 406, 94 S Ct 1895 (1974).

Contention of Laches and Estoppel Appealable: The city built a pumphouse that was allegedly on land of another property owner. On appeal from a judgment verdict in an inverse condemnation case, the city was found to have actively contested the boundary at trial and asserted its contention of laches and estoppel. The city could appeal these issues even though it did not present any witnesses at the first bifurcated trial, which concerned only the boundary line issue. Stidham v. Whitefish, 229 M 170, 746 P2d 591, 44 St. Rep. 1869 (1987).

Question of Mootness of Issue on Appeal — "Capable of Repetition, Yet Evading Review" Exception: In a dispute over whether a District Judge had the inherent power to establish by budget order the salaries for court staff, the judge maintained that the issue on appeal was moot because the local government "adopted its budget and included the budget order therein, and that once the budget was adopted, it could not be changed". The Supreme Court noted that in the absence of a decision, the judge could make a budget order in years following. Therefore, a "capable of repetition, yet evading review" exception to the mootness rule, as explained in Lee v. Schmidt - Wenzel, 766 F2d 1387 (9th Cir. 1985), was more tenable. Butte-Silver Bow Local Gov't v. Olsen, 228 M 77, 743 P2d 564, 44 St. Rep. 1356 (1987), followed in Missoula City-County Air Pollution Control Bd. v. Bd. of Envtl. Review, 282 M 255, 937 P2d 463, 54 St. Rep. 338 (1997), and In re Klos, 284 M 197, 943 P2d 1277, 54 St. Rep. 843 (1997). See also Heisler v. Hines Motor Co., 282 M 270, 937 P2d 45, 54 St. Rep. 345 (1997).

Party Not Aggrieved Not Entitled to Appeal: A party not aggrieved by a judgment may not appeal from it. Branstetter v. Beaumont Supper Club, Inc., 224 M 20, 727 P2d 933, 43 St. Rep. 1981 (1986), citing Carbon County v. Schwend, 182 M 89, 594 P2d 1121 (1979).

Involuntary Satisfaction of Judgment — Appeal Not Rendered Moot: If a judgment is satisfied by an involuntary payment or performance, the appeal from the judgment is not thereby rendered moot. First Nat'l Bank in Eureka v. Giles, 225 M 467, 733 P2d 357, 43 St. Rep. 1326 (1986), overruling Gallatin Trust & Sav. Bank v. Henke, 154 M 170, 461 P2d 448 (1969), and In re Black's Estate, 32 M 51, 79 P 554 (1905), and followed in LeClair v. Reiter, 233 M 332, 760 P2d 740, 45 St. Rep. 1531 (1988), Giles and LeClair were overruled, with regard to voluntary versus involuntary payment or performance as affecting waiver of right to appeal without having bearing on mootness, in Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996). Turner was followed in Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 1078 (1999).

Aggrieved Nonparties: Nonparties aggrieved by a lower court order may appeal from it. Lundgren v. Hoglund, 219 M 295, 711 P2d 809, 42 St. Rep. 2031 (1985).

Trustee's Right to Appeal Court Order When Trustee Not a Party: Trustee-bank could appeal from court order directing trustee to pay all income due beneficiary to beneficiary's judgment creditors, even though the trustee was not a party to the action between the beneficiary and creditors. The trustee had a fiduciary duty to preserve and protect the trust assets. Lundgren v. Hoglund, 219 M 295, 711 P2d 809, 42 St. Rep. 2031 (1985).

Standing of Attorney General to Appeal P.S.C. Order — P.S.C. Appeal Untimely: The Montana Power Company (M.P.C.) applied to the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) for a rate increase of over $96.3 million. The P.S.C. granted only $4.1 million and denied in toto M.P.C.'s request to recover costs associated with Colstrip Unit 3. The M.P.C. appealed to District Court for review under 2-4-701. The judge reversed the P.S.C. order. The Attorney General filed notice of appeal. More than 60 days after the judge's order was entered, the P.S.C. also filed notice of appeal. The M.P.C. filed a motion to dismiss the appeal of the Attorney General for lack of standing and the appeal of the P.S.C. as untimely. The Supreme Court granted the motion, holding that the Attorney General had no standing to represent the state on appeal since it was not an aggrieved party or a party to the proceedings before the District Court and because, in his official capacity, the Attorney General may not appeal a decision that is within the discretion of the P.S.C. as a party to the action. The appeal of the P.S.C. was untimely, although within 7 days of the notice of appeal filed by the Attorney General. The latter appeal being invalid, the P.S.C. appeal would have to fall within the 60-day rule. Mont. Power Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 218 M 471, 709 P2d 995, 42 St. Rep. 1750 (1985).

Third-Party Defendant Entitled to Appeal: A real estate broker brought an action against the seller who impleaded the buyer as a third-party defendant. Judgment was entered against the seller in favor of the broker and for the seller against the buyer. Under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), the buyer is entitled to appeal the judgment. Nardi v. Smalley, 197 M 321, 643 P2d 228, 39 St. Rep. 606 (1982).

Appeal by Defaulting Party: In the absence of an order of the District Court setting aside the default of the appealing defendants, they had no standing to file a notice of appeal from an adverse judgment against the plaintiff county. Carbon County v. Schwend, 182 M 89, 594 P2d 1121 (1979).

Standard for Standing to Bring Appeal — Public Versus Private Interest: To enable a party to appeal from a judgment or order he must have an interest in the subject matter of the litigation which was injuriously affected by the judgment or order. A judgment by the District Court concerning the public interest in a right-of-way does not affect a party's private interest in the right-of-way. Carbon County v. Schwend, 182 M 89, 594 P2d 1121 (1979).

Aggrieved Parties: Because defendants were accorded full review in proceeding by plaintiff to dismiss defendants' motion to stay judgment pending appeal and to assess costs, defendants were no longer "aggrieved parties" entitled to further appeal rights. Morris v. Monk, 158 M 163, 489 P2d 1029 (1971).

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

GENERAL

Appeal of Damage Award — Scope of Review: In an action to recover a money judgment for personal injuries sustained in an automobile accident where the evidence was conflicting and the damages unliquidated, neither the trial court nor Supreme Court is authorized to enter an absolute judgment for any other sum than that assessed by the jury unless the parties litigant file their consent thereto, and the plaintiff cannot fix and limit the scope of the Supreme Court's review by appealing only from that part of the verdict and judgment assessing damages. Seibel v. Byers, 136 M 39, 344 P2d 129 (1959).

Order to Interplead Appealable: A judgment in an interpleader action dismissing plaintiff from the action and awarding it costs, enjoining defendants from prosecuting any action against the plaintiff involving a fund deposited, and ordering defendants to interplead in the action instituted by the plaintiff was appealable. Cent. Mont. Stockyards v. Fraser, 133 M 168, 320 P2d 981 (1957).

Alimony and Attorneys' Fees Award Appealable: An award of temporary alimony and attorneys' fees to a wife is a final judgment within the meaning of subdivision 1 of this section. Walker v. Walker, 129 M 295, 285 P2d 590 (1955).

Denial of Writ of Habeas Corpus Appealable: An order denying a Writ of Habeas Corpus is appealable. State ex rel. Veach v. Veach, 122 M 47, 195 P2d 697 (1948).

Order to Vacate Attachment Appealable: Fact that motion was to vacate or release attachment rather than to dissolve the attachment would not prevent the order denying the motion from being appealable. Stallinger v. Goss, 121 M 437, 193 P2d 810 (1948).

Order to Satisfy Judgment Appealable: An order, after final judgment, ordering plaintiff to satisfy judgment upon tender of specified amount by defendant was an appealable order. Galbreath v. Armstrong, 121 M 387, 193 P2d 630 (1948).

Taxation of Costs Not a "Special Order": An order taxing costs is in theory an intermediate order and the costs when taxed become a part of the judgment theretofore entered. Hence, it is not a special order made after final judgment within the meaning of subdivision 2 from which an appeal may be taken, but is reviewable only on appeal from the judgment, the time for appeal running from the date of judgment. An order taxing appeal costs becomes a part of the judgment of the Supreme Court, and not a part of the judgment upon retrial where one is had, over which the trial court has no jurisdiction but to enforce or to determine disputed items. State ex rel. Vaughn v. District Court, 111 M 552, 111 P2d 810 (1941).

Judgment Upon Remand Appealable: Where the Supreme Court remands a cause with direction to modify the judgment appealed from, the judgment as modified to stand affirmed, and the decree entered pursuant to remittitur in all substantial respects complies with the court's opinion, the modified judgment is in effect the judgment of the Supreme Court and from it an appeal does not lie and where taken, if groundless, and for delay court may order dismissal. Lloyd v. Great Falls, 107 M 588, 87 P2d 187 (1939).

Presumption of Correctness of Lower Court: On appeal the Supreme Court indulges the presumption that the judgment of the District Court appealed from is correct and will uphold it unless clearly shown to be erroneous, the burden of showing which rests upon the appellant. Dalbey v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y of the U.S., 105 M 587, 74 P2d 432 (1937).

Appeal From Part of Divisible Judgment: Where the judgment is divisible, an appeal may be taken from a part thereof. Wills v. Morris, 100 M 504, 50 P2d 858 (1935), overruling Lohman v. Poor, 68 M 579, 220 P 1094 (1923).

Void Order — Not to Determine Appealability: The appealability of an order does not rest upon what may be its operative effect, and therefore the question whether it is void cannot govern its appealability. State ex rel. Monteath v. District Court, 97 M 530, 37 P2d 567 (1934).

Denial of Mandate Not Appealable: An order of the District Court denying an application for an alternative Writ of Mandate is not one of the orders enumerated in subdivisions 2 and 3 of this section, from which an appeal may be taken, and hence an appeal therefrom does not lie. State ex rel. Bole v. Lay, 89 M 541, 300 P 238 (1931).

Conditional Interlocutory Order Not "Special Order": An appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer does not lie; nor may such an order made in a proceeding arising out of an action in which a judgment had been entered be treated as a special order made after final judgment, where such judgment was a conditional interlocutory determination, and not a final one. Heater v. Boston & Mont. Corp., 84 M 500, 277 P 11 (1929), distinguished in In re Day's Estate, 119 M 547, 177 P2d 862 (1947).

Alimony Award Appealable: An order requiring the payment of alimony pendente lite is one from which an appeal lies. State ex rel. McGrath v. District Court, 82 M 463, 267 P 803 (1928).

Insolvency Proceedings — Order Appealable: Under this section, a creditor of an insolvent bank seeking to have his claim against the bank established as a preferred one has an appeal from an adverse order of the court; where he fails to appeal within the time allowed, the order becomes final. State ex rel. Rankin v. Banking Corp. of Mont., 81 M 489, 264 P 106 (1928).

Habeas Corpus Proceedings Appealable: A proceeding in habeas corpus, the object of which is to determine the right to the custody of a minor, is a special proceeding of a civil nature to enforce private rights; the disposition made of it by the court is a judgment from which an appeal may be taken under this section. In re Thompson, 77 M 466, 251 P 163 (1926), distinguished in Ex parte Reinhardt, 88 M 282, 292 P 582 (1930).

Amendment of Affidavit — Order Not Appealable: An order permitting amendment of an affidavit for Writ of Attachment is not appealable. Hetrick v. Renwald, 73 M 426, 236 P 1089 (1925).

Denial of Leave to Amend Answer Not Special Order: An order denying defendant's motion for leave to amend his answer after judgment had been rendered and motion for new trial denied was not a special order made after final judgment within the meaning of this section, and was therefore not appealable. Apple v. Seaver, 70 M 65, 223 P 830 (1924).

"Special Order" Defined: The special order, made after final judgment, from which an appeal lies, must be an order affecting the rights of some party to the action, growing out of the judgment previously entered. It must be an order affecting rights incorporated in the judgment. Apple v. Seaver, 70 M 65, 223 P 830 (1924); Weed v. Weed, 55 M 599, 179 P 827 (1919); Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry. v. White, 36 M 437, 93 P 350 (1908).

Denial of Intervention Not Appealable: An appeal from an order denying a motion for leave to file a complaint in intervention does not lie, this section not authorizing it. Equity Co-op Ass'n v. Equity Co-op Mill. Co., 63 M 26, 206 P 349 (1922).

Grant or Denial of Prohibition Appealable: Under this section, an appeal lies from the final, or formal, judgment granting (or denying) a peremptory Writ of Prohibition, but does not lie from an order entered in the minutes of the District Court directing the peremptory Writ to issue. State ex rel Lalonde v. Lemkie, 62 M 51, 202 P 1109 (1921).

Statutory Basis for Appeal: An appeal is authorized by statute only, and unless the judgment or order which it is sought to have reviewed in this mode falls fairly within the enumeration of appealable orders or judgments made by the statute, the appeal does not lie. Weed v. Weed, 55 M 599, 179 P 827 (1919); Taintor v. St. John, 50 M 358, 146 P 939 (1915); State ex rel. Jackson v. Kennie, 24 M 45, 60 P 589 (1900); In re Tuohy's Estate, 23 M 305, 58 P 722 (1899).

Confiscation Proceedings Appealable: Under this section, either the State or the claimant could appeal from the judgment rendered in a proceeding under the Enforcement Act of 1917 (Ch. 143, L. 1917), relative to searches, seizures, and forfeitures of intoxicating liquors. State ex rel. Prato v. District Court, 55 M 560, 179 P 497 (1919).

Bail Bond Proceedings — Summary Judgment Not Appealable: No appeal lies from a summary judgment against sureties in proceedings for the forfeiture of a bail bond, though the judgment is final; it is not "a judgment entered in an action or special proceeding commenced in a district court, or brought into a district court from another court". State ex rel. Van v. District Court, 54 M 577, 172 P 540 (1918).

Striking of Pleadings Not Appealable: An appeal does not lie from an order striking from the files a pleading or other document constituting a part of the record of a cause. State ex rel. Smotherman v. District Court, 50 M 119, 145 P 724 (1914).

Mandate — Order Overruling Motion to Quash Not Appealable: An order overruling a motion to quash an alternative Writ of Mandate is not an appealable one. State ex rel. Frost v. Barnett, 49 M 252, 141 P 287 (1914).

Order Authorizing Payment Not One Directing Delivery: An order authorizing the payment of a fund deposited in court in condemnation proceedings to the person entitled thereto is not one directing the delivery, transfer, or surrender of property within the meaning of this section, and is therefore not appealable. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry. v. White, 36 M 437, 93 P 350 (1908).

Writ of Prohibition — Order to Quash Not Appealable: Neither an order sustaining a demurrer (demurrer abolished by M.R.Civ.P.) nor an order sustaining a motion to quash an alternative Writ of Prohibition is appealable. State ex rel. Allen v. Hawkins, 33 M 177, 82 P 952 (1905).

Entry Noting Stipulation Not Appealable: An entry noting the filing of an agreement to dismiss is not a dismissal from which an appeal can be taken. A pretended judgment of dismissal, which was not in fact a dismissal, is not appealable. Kinman v. Scheuer, 30 M 73, 75 P 690 (1904).

Substitution of Parties Not Appealable: An order substituting a claimant of property, on application of defendant in a claim and delivery action, in lieu of defendant, is not a final determination from which an appeal is allowable. State ex rel. Weinstein Co. v. District Court, 28 M 445, 72 P 867 (1903).

Judgment Required to Be Shown: Where the record does not show that any judgment has been entered in the case in the court below, an appeal from the judgment will be dismissed. Lisker v. O'Rourke, 28 M 129, 72 P 416 (1903).

Order Directing Judgment Not Appealable: A minute entry directing judgment to be entered for defendant is not a judgment. Lisker v. O'Rourke, 28 M 129, 72 P2 416 (1903).

Interlocutory Judgments — Extent of Relief: The statutes do not limit the right of appeal from final judgment or the power of the Supreme Court on such appeals but merely provide for independent appeals from interlocutory judgments and the extent of relief to be granted thereon. Finlen v. Heinze, 27 M 107, 69 P 829, 70 P 517 (1902).

Denial of New Trial Motion Appealable: When made after entry of final judgment, an order striking out the statement on motion for a new trial is an order from which an appeal may be taken. State ex rel. Finlen v. District Court, 26 M 372, 68 P 465 (1902); Beach v. Spokane Ranch & Water Co., 25 M 367, 65 P 106 (1901).

Statute Not Applicable to Criminal Cases: This section provides only for appeals in civil cases, and has no application to any matter contained in the Penal Code. State ex rel. Jackson v. Kennie, 24 M 45, 60 P 589 (1900).

Removal of Trustee Appealable: A judgment declaring a trust and removing the trustee is a final order from which an appeal will lie, notwithstanding that it directs the trustee to file an inventory and an account of all property received by him as trustee. Bryant v. Davis, 22 M 534, 57 P 143 (1899).

Denial of Modification of Irregular Order Appealable: An appeal can be taken from an order refusing a motion to modify a former order, even though the original order is appealable, when the original order was irregularly issued, or was made without notice. Beach v. Spokane Ranch & Water Co., 21 M 7, 52 P 560 (1898). See also Butte Consol. Min. Co. v. Frank, 24 M 506, 62 P 922 (1900).

Refusal to Allow Amendment of Pleadings Not Appealable: An appeal does not lie from an order refusing to allow an amendment to the complaint, or striking the complaint from the files. Owen v. McCormick, 5 M 255, 5 P 280 (1884). See also Murphy v. King, 6 M 30, 9 P 585 (1886).

ACCOUNTING PROCEEDINGS

Order for Accounting Not Appealable: An order for an accounting is not an appealable order under this section. Corcoran v. Fousek, 125 M 223, 233 P2d 1040 (1951).

Action for Partnership Accounting as Final Order: In an action for a partnership accounting in which defendants claimed that plaintiff had purchased certain lands with partnership funds, the judgment, which determined all the material issues involved, and which left nothing undetermined except the title to a homestead patented to plaintiff also claimed as partnership property, was final in the sense used in this section, authorizing an appeal from a "final judgment". Wilson v. Wilson, 64 M 533, 210 P 896 (1922).

Order of Sale as Special Order Made After Final Judgment: Where a decree determining partnership accounts is rendered after the dissolution of the firm, and the receiver therefor is thereafter ordered to sell the partnership property, an appeal from an order confirming such sale does not raise any question concerning the order of sale, since such order is a special order, made after final judgment, from which an appeal is authorized. Murphy v. Patterson, 24 M 591, 63 P 380 (1901).

AMENDMENT OF JUDGMENT

Order Modifying Judgment Not Reviewable by Supervisory Control: Since an appeal may be taken from a special order made after judgment which modifies a judgment theretofore entered and adversely affects the rights of a party to the litigation, an application for a Writ of Supervisory Control will be denied. State ex rel. Ferris v. District Court, 126 M 623, 255 P2d 687 (1953).

Judgment After Remittitur Not Reviewable by Appeal: A judgment entered in the District Court after remittitur is the Supreme Court's judgment, and where it is contended that such judgment is not in compliance with the remittitur, the remedy is by special proceeding in the Supreme Court and not by motion in the trial court, nor by appeal from either the new judgment or from the trial court's order denying the modification thereof. In re Anderson's Estate, 113 M 125, 122 P2d 832 (1942).

Appealable Order Not Reviewable by Certiorari: An order amending a judgment entered 4 months prior thereto was a special order made after final judgment and as such appealable under subdivision 2 of this section; therefore its correctness may not be reviewed on certiorari. State ex rel. Monteath v. District Court, 97 M 530, 37 P2d 567 (1934).

Order Amending Judgment Appealable: An order amending a judgment already entered is a special order after final judgment, and therefore appealable. State ex rel. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. District Court, 32 M 20, 79 P 410 (1905).

DISMISSAL OF ACTION

Failure to State Claim for Relief: Court properly dismissed with prejudice a complaint filed on the Daly Ditch decision because it appeared to be an interlocutory appeal and thus failed to state a claim on which relief may be granted. Swift v. St., 226 M 439, 736 P2d 117, 44 St. Rep. 786 (1987).

Motion to Dismiss for Lack of Jurisdiction Appealable: A District Court order granting a motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction is appealable. State ex rel. Austin v. Austin, 221 M 488, 719 P2d 429, 43 St. Rep. 998 (1986).

Judgment of Dismissal Appealable: An appeal to the Supreme Court may be taken from a judgment dismissing an action which is based on an order sustaining a demurrer (demurrer abolished by M.R.Civ.P.) to the complaint. Cahill-Mooney Constr. Co. v. Ayres, 140 M 464, 373 P2d 703 (1962); Monarch Lumber Co. v. Haggard, 139 M 105, 360 P2d 794 (1961).

Order of Dismissal Appealable — Effect: An order dismissing an action is a final judgment from which an appeal can be perfected if the order has the effect of finally determining the rights of the parties. Kelly v. Harris, 158 F. Supp. 243 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

New Actions in District Court Improper Remedy for Dismissal: In the absence of fraud, perjury, or other collusive action, after the Supreme Court's dismissal of an appeal from the District Court's judgment denying a petition for a Writ of Mandate, such judgment could not again be challenged by another action in the District Court. Gray v. Bohart, 131 M 522, 312 P2d 529 (1957), followed in S. Gallatin Land Corp. v. Yetter, 245 M 320, 801 P2d 575, 47 St. Rep. 2139 (1990).

Modification of Dismissal Order as Plaintiff's Remedy: If plaintiffs are aggrieved by dismissal, their remedy is to promptly apply to Supreme Court to have order of dismissal modified and not to take another appeal from the same judgment. Libin v. Huffine, 124 M 361, 224 P2d 144 (1950).

Subsequent Appeal Not Proper Remedy for Dismissal: Where appeal was dismissed a subsequent appeal taken from the same judgment within the time allowed for taking appeals must likewise be dismissed. Libin v. Huffine, 124 M 361, 224 P2d 144 (1950).

Dismissal for Lack of Jurisdiction Not Appealable: The order of the District Court refusing to take jurisdiction of the application for Writ of Review was neither a judgment from which an appeal could have been taken nor an appealable order, even if it had contained a positive direction that the proceeding be dismissed. The general rule is that a judgment of dismissal for want of jurisdiction is not one from which an appeal lies; hence relator's right to relief by mandate was not barred by any right of appeal. State ex rel. Musselshell County v. District Court, 89 M 531, 300 P 235 (1931).

Minute Entry Sustaining Dismissal Not a Judgment: A minute entry of an order sustaining a demurrer (demurrer abolished by M.R.Civ.P.) to the plaintiff's complaint, and directing the dismissal of his action, is not an order from which an appeal can be taken; the order is not a judgment. Pentz v. Corscadden, 49 M 581, 144 P 157 (1914), distinguished in Kelly v. Harris, 158 F. Supp. 243 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Order Dismissing Action Not Final Judgment: An order dismissing an action for failure of defendant to demand and have entered a judgment in its favor, within 6 months after rendition of verdict, is not a final judgment nor an order from which an appeal may be taken. Hovey v. N. Pac. Ry., 39 M 40, 101 P 146 (1909).

Dismissal for Failure of Service — Effect: An appeal by plaintiff in an action against a county may be dismissed for failure to serve the Attorney General with a copy of the transcript and appellant's brief, and such dismissal, unless done without prejudice, will be in effect an affirmance of the judgment. McIntosh Hardware Co. v. Flathead County, 32 M 254, 80 P 239 (1905).

DIVORCE PROCEEDINGS

Stay of Custody Decree: An appeal from an order modifying a decree as to custody of children can be stayed only by an application for a stay made and granted under subdivision 2 of this section. Application of Nelson, 132 M 252, 316 P2d 1058 (1957).

Appeals From Divorce Generally: Appeals lie from final judgments in divorce action as in other actions. Judson v. Anderson, 118 M 106, 165 P2d 198 (1945), followed in In re Marriage of Butler, 243 M 521, 795 P2d 467, 47 St. Rep. 1376 (1990).

Suspension of Alimony Appealable: Under the rule that certiorari does not lie where appeal is available, an order so modifying a decree of divorce as to suspend payment of alimony and awarding the custody of a minor child to the father upon remarriage of the mother was a special order made after final judgment and appealable, and therefore the Writ of Review was not available to review the correctness of the order. State ex rel. Gates v. District Court, 69 M 322, 221 P 543 (1923).

Order Overruling Motion on Affidavit Not Appealable: An appeal does not lie from an order overruling a motion to strike an affidavit filed in support of a motion for the modification of a decree granting a divorce, such order not being one of the orders made appealable by this section, nor a special order made after final judgment from which an appeal may be taken. Weed v. Weed, 55 M 599, 179 P 827 (1919), distinguished in State ex rel. Monteath v. District Court, 97 M 530, 37 P2d 567 (1934).

Order Quashing Execution Not Special Order: An order quashing an execution issued by a Clerk of the District Court on an abstract of a Justice's judgment, filed with and docketed by him under 25-31-912 (now repealed) and striking such abstract from the files, is not a special order after final judgment made appealable by this section. Pierson v. Daly, 49 M 478, 143 P 957 (1914).

Order Supplemental to Execution as Special Order: An order made in proceedings supplemental to execution is a special order made after final judgment, and is therefore appealable. Hayes v. District Court, 11 M 225, 28 P 259 (1891); Barber v. Briscoe, 9 M 341, 23 P 726 (1890).

Order Refusing to Stay Execution as "Special Order": An order refusing to stay an execution upon a judgment is a "special order made after final judgment" and appealable. Clarke v. Gonu, 2 M 538 (1877).

FINDINGS AND VERDICT

Findings and Conclusions Not Orders or Judgment: Findings of fact and conclusions of law are not a judgment nor are they an order, as known to our practice; they are the court's statement on which he will base his order or judgment. Sheridan County Elec. Co-op v. Anhalt, 127 M 71, 257 P2d 889 (1953).

Orders Not Appealable Generally: Appeals do not lie under this section, from orders rejecting findings of the jury, from conclusions of law, or from the action of the court in adopting certain findings of the jury and making findings of its own, the questions thus sought to be raised being reviewable on appeal from the judgment. Bode v. Rollwitz, 60 M 481, 199 P 688 (1921).

Order Correcting Verdict Not Appealable: An order of the District Court correcting the verdict in a civil action is not one from which an appeal may be taken. Frank v. Symons, 35 M 56, 88 P 561 (1907).

Denial of Motion to Reject Findings Not Appealable: An order overruling a motion to reject findings made by the jury is not appealable. Johns v. Barnes, 31 M 426, 78 P 703 (1904).

Denial of General Verdict Not Appealable: An appeal from an order denying a motion to adopt a general verdict and special findings and to set aside the special verdict in a suit in equity must be dismissed where the record shows no judgment of dismissal or other final judgment. Kinman v. Scheuer, 30 M 73, 75 P 690 (1904).

INJUNCTIONS AND RESTRAINING ORDERS

Order Refusing to Dissolve Temporary Restraining Order Not Appealable: A temporary restraining order is not an injunction within the meaning of this section, and an order refusing to dissolve such temporary restraining order is not appealable. Guardian Life Ins. Co. v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 134 M 526, 335 P2d 310 (1959).

Interpleader Action — Injunction Appealable: A judgment and order granting an injunction in an interpleader action was appealable. Cent. Mont. Stockyards v. Fraser, 133 M 168, 320 P2d 981 (1957).

Order to Show Cause and Injunction Appealable: Where temporary injunction to abate nuisance under 45-8-112 was quashed the same day issued upon presentation of affidavit of defendant under 27-19-401 and in its stead was issued an order to show cause why an injunction should not issue and enjoining defendant from operating "contrary to the laws of the State of Montana", such order was appealable. State ex rel. Olsen v. 30 Club, 124 M 91, 219 P2d 307 (1950).

Restraining Order as Constituting Right to Injunction — Appeal Allowed: In action by public utility against Public Service Commission to enjoin it from putting into effect new rates fixed by it, upon petition for restraining order until final determination, order was granted, its action amounted to adjudication of plaintiff's right to an injunction pendente lite, from which an appeal lies under this section. State ex rel. Pub. Serv. Comm'n v. District Court, 103 M 563, 63 P2d 1032 (1936).

Dissolution of Temporary Restraining Order Not Reviewable Upon Appeal of Judgment: An order denying a motion to dissolve a temporary injunction is an appealable order, and if not appealed from, the correctness of the order may not, under section 93-8022, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by former Rule 2, M.R.App.P., now superseded), be reviewed on appeal from the judgment in the action in which the order was made. Little Horn St. Bank v. Gross, 89 M 472, 300 P 277 (1931).

Dissolution of Restraining Order Appealable: Where a motion to dissolve a temporary restraining order was heard at once and the matter of propriety of its issuance presented to the court as fully as it could have been on hearing of an order to show cause issued, and the court in denying the motion, instead of preserving the status quo, authorized one party to the action to harvest and sell crops (the subject in controversy) while restraining his opponent from interfering with him, its order was an adjudication of the right of the former to an injunction pendente lite, from which an appeal lay under this section. Labbitt v. Bunston, 80 M 293, 260 P 727 (1927), explained in Guardian Life Ins. Co. of Am. v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 134 M 526, 335 P2d 310 (1959).

Denial of Injunction Appealable: An appeal lies from an order denying an injunction. Bown v. Somers, 55 M 434, 178 P 287 (1919), followed in Colstrip Faculty Ass'n, MEA/NEA v. Trustees, School District No. 19, 251 M 309, 824 P2d 1008, 49 St. Rep. 43 (1992).

Denial or Grant of Orders Not Appealable: There is no appeal from an order granting or refusing a restraining order pending the hearing of an order to show cause why an injunction should not issue. Wetzstein v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 25 M 135, 63 P 1043 (1901), distinguished in Jordan v. Andrus, 26 M 37, 66 P 502 (1901); Maloney v. King, 25 M 256, 64 P 668 (1901).

JUSTICE COURT APPEALS TO DISTRICT COURT

Order Dismissing Appeal From Justice Appealable: An order dismissing an appeal from Justice Court is a final judgment and as such is appealable. If the "order" has the effect of finally determining the rights of the parties, it is a "judgment", the title to the instrument being not conclusive; it is to be judged by its contents and substance. Ross v. Greenwald, 112 M 324, 115 P2d 290 (1941), following State ex rel. Meyer v. District Court, 102 M 222, 57 P2d 778 (1936), and overruling Palmer v. Spaulding, 34 M 1, 85 P 369 (1906).

Denial of Motion to Dismiss Appeal From Justice Not Appealable: An order of the District Court, overruling a motion to dismiss an appeal to that court from a judgment of a Justice of the Peace, is not a final judgment or a special order made after final judgment, so as to be appealable under this section. Raymond v. Raymond, 32 M 170, 79 P 1056 (1905).

"Final Judgment" Not by Justice: The "final judgment" referred to in this section is a judgment rendered by the District Court, and not that rendered by a Justice of the Peace from which an appeal is prosecuted. Raymond. v. Raymond, 32 M 170, 79 P 1056 (1905).

Order for Bond on Appeal Not Appealable: This section and the following section (section 93-8005, R.C.M. 1947, superseded by former Rules 4 and 5, M.R.App.P., now superseded), being exclusive, an appeal will not lie from an order of a District Court requiring that appellee on an appeal from Justice's Court give the bond required of a plaintiff, not a resident of the state, since such an order is not designated therein. State ex rel. Allen v. Napton, 24 M 450, 62 P 686 (1900). See also Threlkeld v. O'Neal, 26 M 209, 66 P 940 (1901); State ex rel. Prescott v. District Court, 27 M 179, 70 P 516 (1902).

PROBATE PROCEEDINGS — GENERALLY

Appellate Review — Substantial Evidence to Support District Court's Findings of Fact: On appeal, the plaintiff asserted that conflicting evidence presented at trial undermined the District Court's findings. The Supreme Court disagreed and held that neither the factfinder's determination of witness credibility nor the weight assigned by the factfinder to the testimony of each witness would be disturbed on appeal. Substantial evidence supported the District Court's findings and the Supreme Court upheld the findings. Shephard v. Widhalm, 2012 MT 276, 367 Mont. 166, 290 P.3d 712.

Appointment or Removal of Personal Representative and Renunciation of Right to Appointment — Standards of Review: Whether a party has a statutory priority for appointment as a personal representative in Montana as a result of appointment as a personal representative in another state, as well as a coincident right to obtain removal of a special administrator, is a legal question that the Supreme Court will review to determine whether the District Court correctly interpreted the law (see In re Estate of Peterson, 264 M 104, 874 P2d 1230 (1994)). A question of whether a person has renounced the right to appointment as a personal representative involves the interpretation and application of the statute governing renunciation and will be reviewed for correctness (see In re Inquiry Into A.W., D.G., & M.G., Jr., 1999 MT 42, 293 M 358, 975 P2d 1250 (1999)). Whether a District Court has erred in refusing to appoint a person as a personal administrator, because that person has a conflict with another that prevents that person from being appointed a personal administrator, will be reviewed to determine whether there has been an abuse of the District Court's discretion (see In re Estate of Obstarczyk, 141 M 346, 377 P2d 531 (1963)). In re Estate of Kuralt, 2001 MT 153, 306 M 73, 30 P3d 345 (2001).

Standing of Decedent's Relatives to Appeal Settlement and Distribution Agreements: Decedent's mother, brother, and sister sought to appeal a contested settlement agreement and a distribution agreement ordered by the District Court, but decedent's surviving spouse, Barbara, contended that there was no standing for an appeal. The Supreme Court held that: (1) Barbara was not precluded from raising the issue of standing for the first time on appeal, even though she failed to object in District Court, because objections to standing cannot be waived; (2) decedent's mother, as a creditor of the estate, had standing to appeal the appointment of Barbara as personal representative, but a brother and sister, who were neither creditors nor heirs of the estate, lacked standing; (3) because decedent's mother, brother, and sister were not successors to the estate, they had no legal interest or personal stake in the distribution of the estate and thus lacked standing to claim that the distribution agreement was improper; and (4) decedent's mother, brother, and sister were parties to the contested settlement agreement and were directly affected by the validity of the agreement and thus had standing to appeal that issue. In re Estate of Goick, 275 M 13, 909 P2d 1165, 53 St. Rep. 12 (1996), following Holmstrom Land Co. v. Newlan Creek Water District, 185 M 409, 605 P2d 1060 (1979), Grossman v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 209 M 427, 682 P2d 1319 (1984), and Olson v. Dept. of Revenue, 223 M 464, 726 P2d 1162 (1986). Goick was followed, as to prerequisites for standing, in In re Paternity of Vainio, 284 M 229, 943 P2d 1282, 54 St. Rep. 858 (1997).

Order Sustaining Dismissal to Petition for Revocation of Probate Appealable: An order sustaining a demurrer (demurrer abolished by M.R.Civ.P.) to petition for revocation of the probate of a subsequent will is an appealable order under this section as amended by Ch. 41, L. 1941. In re Maricich's Estate, 140 M 319, 371 P2d 354 (1962).

Letters Issued Pending Appeal: The District Court proceeded without jurisdiction when its Clerk issued letters testamentary to a person appointed executor when an appeal was taken from the order appointing such person executor and such appeal was taken before the executor qualified. Neither his letters nor his acts done thereunder are saved by this section inasmuch as he never qualified. In re Hansen's Estate, 129 M 261, 284 P2d 1007 (1955).

Qualification Pending Appeal: Where a person was appointed administrator, but before he qualified an appeal was taken from the order appointing him, such person could not then qualify and enter into administration of the estate, for at the time of attempting to qualify, the District Court had lost jurisdiction of the matter because of the appeal. In re Hansen's Estate, 129 M 261, 284 P2d 1007 (1955).

Petition for Revocation of Testimentary Letters — Supervisory Control Applicable: An order dismissing a petition for revocation of letters testamentary is not one refusing to revoke such letters and is not appealable. Hence, the Writ of Supervisory Control may properly be resorted to to annul such order. State ex rel. Biering v. District Court, 115 M 174, 140 P2d 583 (1943).

Acts Taken Under Voidable Appointment Valid: Where the court appointed decedent's "nominee" in an instrument not qualifying as a will, as against the petition of the public administrator, decedent having died intestate, such appointment was not void but voidable only, and whatever proper steps in the administration were taken and done under the appointment before reversal must be taken as lawfully performed and valid. In re Rohkramer's Estate, 113 M 545, 131 P2d 967 (1942), distinguished in In re Hansen's Estate, 129 M 261, 284 P2d 1007 (1955).

Settlement of Executor's Accounts — No Appeal From Order: Neither an order denying a motion to reopen and amend an amended order of the District Court sitting in probate settling accounts of an executor, nor one to set such order aside is among court orders made appealable by subdivision 3; hence the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction of appeals taken therefrom. In re Sullivan's Estate, 112 M 496, 118 P2d 137 (1941).

Erroneous Order Sustaining Dismissal Not Appealable: An erroneous order sustaining a demurrer (demurrer abolished by M.R.Civ.P.) to a petition for the probate of a will and dismissing the petition is neither a judgment nor an order made appealable by this section, and therefore an attempted appeal therefrom will be dismissed on motion. There is no provision in the statute for a demurrer to the petition for probate. In re Augestad's Estate, 107 M 619, 88 P2d 32 (1939).

No Appeal From Order Vacating Decree of Settlement: The provision for an appeal from an order made after judgment does not apply to probate proceedings, and as a corollary it would seem that no appeal lies from an order vacating decree of settlement, just as no appeal lies from an order refusing to vacate a decree of settlement of final account and distribution of an estate. State ex rel. Regis v. District Court, 102 M 74, 55 P2d 1295 (1936).

Order Setting Administration and Legal Fees Appealable: Action of the District Court, sitting in probate, in approving an agreement between an administratrix and attorneys who had acted for the executrix whom she succeeded in the administration of the estate as well as for herself, under which she had promised to pay them a fee of $5,000 for their services, and in fixing her fee as administratrix, was reviewable on appeal under this section, and not on application for Writ of Supervisory Control. State ex rel. Brophy v. District Court, 97 M 83, 33 P2d 266 (1934).

Order Dismissing Petition for Revocation of Probate Not Appealable: Under this section, subdivision 3, only such orders in probate proceedings as therein enumerated are appealable. Hence, an order dismissing a petition for the revocation of the probate of a will—in effect an order refusing to revoke its probate—not being included in the enumeration, is not appealable. In re Ferguson's Estate, 73 M 596, 237 P 1105 (1925).

Inheritance Tax — Appeal of Order Barred: An order of the District Court fixing the amount of an inheritance tax due from an estate and directing its payment is appealable. Hence, failure to appeal barred the State from calling in question the correctness of the order on appeal from the decree allowing the final account of the executor, after payment of the tax. In re Sattes' Estate, 59 M 220, 195 P 1033 (1921).

"Final Judgment" Defined: The term "final judgment", as used in subdivision 2 of this section, refers only to those judgments known at common law as final judgments, and has no application to the statutory determinations and orders termed "orders or judgments" in probate proceedings. In re Roberts' Estate, 48 M 40, 135 P 909 (1913); In re Klein's Estate, 35 M 185, 88 P 798 (1907); In re Dougherty's Estate, 34 M 336, 86 P 38 (1906); In re Kelly's Estate, 31 M 356, 78 P 579, 79 P 244 (1905); In re Tuohy's Estate, 23 M 305, 58 P 722 (1899).

"Final Judgments" Not to Include Orders: The expression "final judgment", as used in subdivision 1 of this section, refers only to those judgments known at common law as final judgments, as defined in section 93-4701, R.C.M. 1947 (repealed). It does not include statutory determinations termed "orders" or "judgments" in probate proceedings. In re Roberts' Estate, 48 M 40, 135 P 909 (1913).

Order to Disclose Assets Not Appealable: An order to disclose assets of a decedent's estate is not a "final judgment", within the meaning of subdivision 1 of this section, from which an appeal lies. In re Roberts' Estate, 48 M 40, 135 P 909 (1913).

Order Determining Inheritance Tax Appealable: The action of the court in fixing the amount of an inheritance tax, and in directing its payment, may be reviewed on appeal, either from the order itself or from the decree directing the delivery. State ex rel. Floyd v. District Court, 41 M 357, 109 P 438 (1910).

Order Granting Widow's Allowance Appealable: An order granting an allowance to a widow out of the estate of her intestate is appealable, and, where an appeal therefrom is not taken within the time allowed, it becomes final and conclusive, and may not thereafter be attacked collaterally. In re Dougherty's Estate, 34 M 336, 86 P 38 (1906).

Order Confirming Account Not Appealable: An order confirming a guardian's account, being appealable under this section, and no appeal having been taken therefrom, questions respecting its settlement cannot be considered on a subsequent appeal from an order of sale of the ward's real estate. In re Scheuer's Estate, 31 M 606, 79 P 244 (1905).

Order Disallowing Claims Against Estate: An order disallowing a claim against an estate is not appealable. In re Barker's Estate, 26 M 279, 67 P 941 (1902).

Appeals From Judgments or Orders in Probate Generally: Appeals from judgments or orders in probate proceedings are allowed only under the provisions of subdivision 3 of this section, except in the single case of an order granting or refusing a new trial, which may be taken under subdivision 2. Tuohy's Estate, 23 M 305, 58 P 722 (1899).

PROBATE PROCEEDINGS — DISTRIBUTION OF ESTATE

Untimely Affidavit Void: Where a decree of distribution was entered on an estate and no appeal was taken from such decree, an affidavit thereafter filed and recorded, stating that the affiant was an heir and devisee of the will and claiming an interest in the real estate distributed, was void on its face and constituted no cloud on the title to the land. Hart v. Barron, 122 M 350, 204 P2d 797 (1949).

Order Amounting to Partial Distribution Appealable: Where, under will, widow of decedent was granted life estate in all his property, and upon her death the remaindermen, in an intermediary proceeding against executor of her separate estate, petitioned to strike from inventory of widow's separate estate an amount equal to one-half the cost of a bookkeeper for both estates and the cost of repairing property belonging to her separate estate, the "order and judgment" made therein amounted to partial distribution of the property, appealable as a final judgment. In re Yergy's Estate, 106 M 505, 79 P2d 555 (1938).

Order Refusing to Vacate Settlement Not Appealable: Under subdivision 3 of this section, orders refusing to vacate a decree of distribution and settlement of final account, and refusing to vacate an order settling an administrator's account and discharging him, are not appealable. State ex rel. Regis v. District Court, 102 M 74, 55 P2d 1295 (1936); In re Kelly's Estate, 31 M 356, 78 P 579, 79 P 244 (1905).

Erroneous Order — Supervisory Control Applicable: An erroneous order overruling a motion to vacate a decree of distribution of an estate not being an appealable one, and relatrix not having any other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, supervisory control lies to annul the order. State ex rel. Rubin v. District Court, 62 M 60, 203 P 860 (1921).

Portion of Order or Judgment of Distribution Appealable: An appeal may be taken from a part of an order or judgment decreeing certain persons to be entitled to share in the distribution of an estate under a will. In re Klein's Estate, 35 M 185, 88 P 798 (1907).

Order Granting Motion to Strike Not Appealable: An order granting a motion to strike out objection to the final account of an executrix and to a petition for distribution of the estate is not appealable. State ex rel. Cotter v. District Court, 34 M 303, 87 P 614 (1906).

Denial of New Trial Appealable: An appeal lies from an order denying a motion for a new trial in proceedings for the distribution of an estate under section 91-3706, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed). In re Davis' Estate, 27 M 235, 70 P 721 (1902).

Order for Partial Distribution Appealable: An appeal lies from an order for the partial distribution of an estate. State ex rel. Leyson v. District Court, 26 M 378, 68 P 411 (1902).

PROBATE PROCEEDINGS — REAL ESTATE CONVEYANCE

Order Directing Conveyance Appealable: An order entered by court sitting in probate directing conveyance of realty by administrator upon payment of specified sum was a final order and was also appealable as an "order directing conveyance of real property" though, upon a showing that payment had been made, the administrator was later directed to execute a deed. In re Day's Estate, 119 M 547, 177 P2d 862 (1947).

Refusal to Confirm Sale Appealable: Under subdivision 3 of this section, authorizing an appeal from a judgment or order made by the District Court sitting in probate "against . . . directing . . . the sale or conveyance of real property", an appeal lies from an order refusing to confirm an administrator's sale of such property. In re McLure's Estate, 76 M 476, 248 P 362 (1926).

"Conveyance" Not to Include Lease: An appeal will not lie from an order directing the execution of a lease of realty under subdivision 3 of this section, as the word "conveyance", as used in the statute, does not include a lease. In re Tuohy's Estate, 23 M 305, 58 P 722 (1899).

Order to Execute Lease Not Final Judgment: An order of the District Court directing an executor to execute a lease of certain realty belonging to his testator's estate is not a "final judgment in a special proceeding" from which an appeal will lie. In re Tuohy's Estate, 23 M 305, 58 P 722 (1899).

RECEIVERSHIP PROCEEDINGS

Ex Parte Appointment Appealable: An ex parte order appointing a receiver is appealable. Rock Island Plow Co. v. Cut Bank Implement Co., 101 M 117, 53 P2d 116 (1935); Rumney v. Donovan, 28 M 69, 72 P 305 (1903).

Portion of Appointment Appealable: Where, on motion to vacate an order appointing a receiver made some 7 years prior thereto, the court, in addition to vacating the order, directed the clerk of court to pay to defendants the funds collected by the receiver, the latter part of the order, appealed from as a whole, was appealable under this section. Burgess v. Lasby, 94 M 534, 24 P2d 147 (1933).

Order Annulling Appointment Not Appealable: An order annulling an order appointing a receiver is not appealable, but may be reviewed on appeal from the final judgment. Taintor v. St. John, 50 M 358, 146 P 939 (1915).

Application for Receiver Not a "Special Proceeding": An application for the appointment of a receiver to work a mining claim pending a suit to settle a controversy as to the title is not a "special proceeding" within the meaning of this section. State ex rel. Heinze v. District Court, 28 M 227, 72 P 613 (1903), distinguished in State ex rel. Weinstein Co. v. District Court, 28 M 445, 72 P 867 (1903).

Appointment of Receiver — Refusal to Vacate Appealable: This statute should be understood as creating the right to appeal from an order refusing to vacate the order of appointment of a receiver where the motion to vacate is based, not upon the conditions existing when the order was made, but upon facts occurring subsequently to the making of the original order. Forrester v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 24 M 148, 60 P 1088, 61 P 309 (1900).

SETTING ASIDE JUDGMENT

Use of Appeal, Certiorari, and Supervisory Control: Where no judgment has been entered in a civil action at the time the court without authority strikes the entry of default from the files, certiorari lies to correct the error. Where the court makes such an order within jurisdiction, and no judgment has been entered, supervisory control lies. Where such order is made after judgment, certiorari does not lie even though the court exceeded its jurisdiction, since then an appeal lies from the order as from a special order made after final judgment. State ex rel. Hahn v. District Court, 83 M 400, 272 P 525 (1928).

Refusal to Vacate Default Not Appealable: An order, made before final judgment, refusing to set aside a default, is not appealable. Bullard v. Zimmerman, 82 M 434, 268 P 512 (1928); Bowen v. Webb, 34 M 61, 85 P 739 (1906).

Refusal to Vacate Judgment Appealable: An order, made after judgment, denying a motion to set aside a default and judgment, is appealable under this section. Hence, where no appeal was taken, the alleged error in refusing the motion was not reviewable on appeal from the judgment. Batchoff v. Butte Pac. Copper Co., 60 M 179, 198 P 132 (1921).

Order to Set Aside Findings and Judgment Appealable: Since denial of an order to set aside the findings and judgment in an action in ejectment was a special order made after final judgment, it was appealable, and failure to appeal therefrom bars review on appeal from the judgment. Stack v. Coyle, 59 M 444, 197 P 747 (1921).

Refusal to Set Aside Judgment Appealable: An order refusing to set aside a judgment is a special one made after final judgment; and, as such, is appealable under this section. It cannot be reviewed on appeal from a new trial order, as the two proceedings are separate and distinct from each other. Canning v. Fried, 48 M 560, 139 P 448 (1914).

APPEAL FROM ORDER DENYING NEW TRIAL

Order in Criminal Cause Not Appealable:

Chapter 225, L. 1921, which added the provision abolishing the appeal from an order denying a new trial, does not offend against the provision of Art. V, sec. 23, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. V, sec. 11, 1972 Mont. Const.), that an act containing a subject not embraced in the title shall be void as to that subject. Kline v. Murray, 79 M 530, 257 P 465 (1927).

An order denying a new trial in a criminal cause is not reviewable on appeal from the judgment. St. v. English, 71 M 343, 229 P 727 (1924).

Appeal From Order Denying New Trial Abolished: By this section, the appeal from an order denying a new trial is abolished. Dever v. Girson, 75 M 412, 243 P 812 (1926); Schmuck v. Beck, 72 M 606, 234 P 477 (1925); Lappin v. Martin, 71 M 233, 228 P 763 (1924); Frost v. Long & Co., 71 M 141, 228 P 75 (1924); Tripp v. Silver Dyke Min. Co., 70 M 120, 224 P 272 (1924).

Case Notes

CASES DECIDED UNDER SUPERSEDED RULES

No Jurisdiction to Hear Criminal Appeal Filed More Than Sixty Days After Judgment — Deadline Not Extended by Former Mailing Extension Rule: Dill filed notice of an appeal of a judgment in a criminal action 63 days after judgment was entered. Former Rule 5(b), M.R.App.P.

(now superseded), required filing of an appeal within 60 days after entry of judgment. Dill contended that the deadline should be extended because former Rule 21(e), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), allowed an additional 3 days when service of a paper is made by mail. The District Court order was mailed to Dill, so Dill argued that the deadline was actually 63 days. The Supreme Court noted that under Mont. Fair Housing, Inc. v. Barnes, 2003 MT 16, 314 M 73, 68 P3d 653 (2003), former Rule 21(e) applied only to situations involving response-type pleadings, but when a deadline is required by court rule to be filed within a specified time, former Rule 21(e) did not apply. Dill's criminal appeal was filed more than 60 days after judgment was entered, the Supreme Court lacked jurisdiction to hear it, so the appeal was dismissed. Billings v. Dill, 2005 MT 134, 327 M 262, 113 P3d 302 (2005).

Allowance of Additional Time After Service by Mail Applicable Only to Response-Type Pleadings — Inapplicable When Filing Deadline Specified: The Supreme Court entered an opinion in this case on December 31, 2002. On January 16, 2003, remittitur was entered, and the next day, defendants filed a petition for rehearing. After being advised that the petition was beyond the 10 days allowed under former Rule 34, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), defendants claimed that subsection (e) of former Rule 21, M.R.App.P. (now superseded) provided an additional 3 days for timely filing. The Supreme Court took the opportunity to clarify the application of subsection (e) of former Rule 21, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), holding that the rule applies only to response-type pleadings when parties are required or permitted to file a document or brief after having been served with a document or brief. When a filing deadline is specified by the Supreme Court or when a document is required to be filed with the court within a specified time, the rule does not apply and the party does not get the benefit of an extra 3 days for mailing. Former Rule 34, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), allowed petitions for rehearing to be filed within 10 days after a Supreme Court decision is rendered. Because this time period is specified by court rule, and because the petition for rehearing was not a response-type pleading, defendants' petition was not timely. However, defendants did not have the benefit of this interpretation when their petition was filed, so in the interest of fairness, the court applied this holding prospectively only and decided to entertain defendants' petition in this instance. Mont. Fair Housing, Inc. v. Barnes, 2003 MT 16, 314 M 73, 68 P3d 653 (2003).

Failure of Counsel to Preserve Defendant's Request for Appeal Prejudicial Per Se — Out-of-Time Appeal Appropriate Remedy: Despite a request to do so, Tweed's counsel failed to file a timely appeal of Tweed's sexual abuse conviction. Counsel did not intentionally abandon the appeal; rather, the failure was unintentional and resulted from a filing oversight and miscommunication. Nevertheless, the error was prejudicial per se and constituted ineffective assistance of counsel in violation of Tweed's constitutional rights. The failure to timely appeal was excusable, and because postconviction proceedings were considered an inadequate remedy, the Supreme Court decided that an out-of-time appeal was the appropriate remedy and, being in possession of a sufficient record, proceeded to consider the merits of the appeal. St. v. Tweed, 2002 MT 286, 312 M 482, 59 P3d 1105 (2002), following St. v. Rogers, 2001 MT 165, 306 M 130, 32 P3d 724 (2001).

Out-of-Time Appeal in Criminal Matters — Exclusive Jurisdiction With Supreme Court: Under 46-20-101, the only method for review in criminal cases is by notice of appeal. Time limits for filing an appeal are mandatory and jurisdictional. If a defendant takes no action to perfect an appeal within 90 days of judgment, the District Court loses its jurisdiction and the appeal is out-of-time. However, an out-of-time appeal is a remedy that may be available to a criminal defendant who, through no fault of the defendant, misses a deadline for filing an appeal. Although subsection (b) of former Rule 21, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), precluded an out-of-time appeal in a civil case, the Supreme Court is not precluded from addressing a motion for an out-of-time appeal in a criminal case. Further, a District Court lacks jurisdiction to grant an out-of-time appeal. The Supreme Court has exclusive jurisdiction to grant a motion for an out-of-time appeal, and the motion is considered an original proceeding subject to the provisions of former Rule 17, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Upon a showing that the failure to timely notice a criminal appeal was excusable under the circumstances, the Supreme Court may conclude that an out-of-time appeal is the appropriate remedy pursuant to subsection (b) of former Rule 21, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). In that event, the matter will be remanded to the District Court with instructions to vacate and reenter judgment to afford the defendant a second opportunity to act within the statutory timeframes for filing notice of appeal. St. v. Tweed, 2002 MT 286, 312 M 482, 59 P3d 1105 (2002).

Computation of Time for Appeal Following Mailing of Final Notice of Entry of Judgment: The final notice of entry of judgment was mailed on November 5. Former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), required an appeal to be taken within 30 days after the service of the notice of entry of judgment. A notice of appeal was filed on December 7. Although more than 30 days had passed, allowing 3 days for the mailing of the notice of entry of judgment, the notice of appeal was filed within the 30-day requirement. Rudio v. Yellowstone Merchandising Corp., 200 M 537, 652 P2d 1163, 39 St. Rep. 1923 (1982).

Late Entry of Order Granting Extension: The time for filing the notice of appeal from District Court may, upon a showing of excusable neglect, be extended for up to 30 days. However, that period is added to the initial 30 days, plus 3 days for mailing. Even though the Clerk of the Court neglected to send notice of entry of judgment to defendant's cocounsel in Missouri, which may have caused confusion constituting excusable neglect, the order granting an extension of time was not even entered until after the 63-day period, was beyond the limits of former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and was therefore erroneous. NW. Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Agra-Steel Corp., 193 M 437, 632 P2d 330, 38 St. Rep. 1257 (1981).

Appeal Allowed Despite Failure to Comply With Procedural Rules: A seller was granted summary judgment against a buyer. Several months later, the court amended its order nunc pro tunc and certified the case for appeal under former Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Despite failure to comply with the former Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure (now superseded), the Supreme Court chose to hear the appeal under former Rules 3, 10, and 21, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), Marcus Daly Mem. Hosp. v. Borkoski, 191 M 366, 624 P2d 997, 38 St. Rep. 322 (1981).

Computation of Time Limit for Appeal — Workers' Compensation Case — Civil Procedure Rules Applied: A person who appeals from a final decision of the Workers' Compensation Court should in all fundamental fairness be given the benefit of that provision of former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), which stated that ". . . except that in cases where service of notice of entry of judgment is required by former Rule 77(d) of the M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the time shall be 30 days from the service of notice of entry of judgment". When service of notice of the final decision is made as mandated by 2-4-623 and that service is made by mail, the provisions of former Rule 21(c), M.R.App.P. (now superseded) are automatically put into play, adding 3 days to the prescribed 30-day time limit for filing the notice of appeal set by former Rule 4(a), M.R.App.P. (now superseded). However, when the final day of the period falls on a Sunday, former Rule 21(a), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), came into play, extending the time limit to the next day. Dumont v. Aetna Fire Underwriters, 183 M 190, 598 P2d 1099 (1979).

Failure to File Timely Notice of Appeal: The Supreme Court has no authority to permit an appeal to be taken after the expiration of the time fixed by former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). If an extension of time is sought, the proper forum to make such a request is the District Court. An appellant must request any extension no later than 60 days from service of notice of entry of judgment. Zell v. Zell, 172 M 496, 565 P2d 311 (1977).

Rule 4. How and when to take an appeal or cross-appeal.

Compiler's Comments

2011 Amendment: Supreme Court Order No. AF 07-0016 provided: "Rule 4(5)(a)(iii) is amended to clarify the time allowed for filing a cross-appeal, and Rule 4(5)(a)(iv) is amended to include a time within which a ruling on a M. R. Civ. P. 60(b) motion may be appealed."

2009 Amendment: In (2)(a) and (2)(b) near beginning inserted "in accordance with rule 10(1) of these rules"; in (2)(a) near middle of first sentence before "the filing fee" inserted "payment of"; inserted designation of (2)(d) and in (2)(d) inserted last sentence concerning filing by facsimile; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

CASES DECIDED UNDER CURRENT RULES

Exception to Cross-Appeal Requirement: An appellant asserted that the appellee waived his threshold contract enforceability issue by failing to raise it on cross appeal. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that the appellee was the prevailing party in the District Court and had raised the issue there, conforming to an exception to the rule that a party aggrieved by an issue separate and distinct from those raised on appeal must cross appeal. Bucy v. Edward Jones & Co., 2019 MT 173, 396 Mont. 408, 445 P.3d 812.

Federal Arbitration Act — Sophisticated Businessman — Appeal Timing of District Court's Order: The plaintiff was terminated by the defendant financial institution. The plaintiff sued his former employer and its CEO, alleging wrongful discharge under the Montana Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act. The District Court granted the defendants' motion to compel arbitration pursuant to the parties' employment agreement, and the arbitrator subsequently granted summary judgment to the defendants. The plaintiff appealed after the District Court denied his application to vacate, correct, or modify the arbitrator's award. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the District Court's order compelling arbitration and staying further proceedings was not final and appealable, that the parties had a valid agreement to arbitrate, that the provision in the employment contract was not unconscionable because the plaintiff was an experienced businessman, that the Federal Arbitration Act did not prevent the plaintiff from filing his application in state court, that which rules were applicable to the arbitration was outside the scope of its review, and that the District Court did not abuse its discretion when ruling on discovery issues. Tedesco v. Home Sav. Bancorp, Inc., 2017 MT 304, 389 Mont. 468, 407 P.3d 289.

Summary Judgment — Encroachment and Tree-Felling Constitute Civil Trespass — No Other Relief at Law Available Prior to Final Judgment: The parties were owners of adjoining tracts of rural property. Without verification or inquiry, the defendants mistakenly assumed that a line of pink survey flags running across the ground from a corner survey marker delineated the boundary line. As a result, the defendants cut down several trees on the plaintiffs' property and built a shop building and installed an accompanying septic system drain field near their property line mistakenly encroaching on the plaintiff's property. The District Court granted the plaintiffs' summary judgment declaring that the defendants' encroachments and tree-felling constituted civil trespasses. However, the District Court denied the plaintiffs' requests for immediate ejection and removal of all encroaching improvements, site restoration, and a permanent injunction enjoining any further intrusion on the plaintiffs' property or noncompliance with county zoning setback requirements. On appeal of the summary judgment motion, the Supreme Court analyzed civil trespass, common law trespass and ejectment, declaratory judgment of trespass and ejectment, and supplemental preliminary and permanent equitable relief. As applied, the plaintiffs obtained summary judgment declaring that the defendants' tree-felling and encroaching building and drain field constituted civil trespasses. As far as it goes, that declaratory judgment was the substantive equivalent of a judgment of ejectment declaring the plaintiffs' right to exclusive possession of their property to the exclusion of the subject encroachments. Thus, the plaintiffs successfully obtained an interlocutory judgment, prevailing on their alternatively pleaded declaratory judgment and common law ejection claims. Except for undetermined damages not at issue on appeal, and in contrast to any supplemental injunctive relief otherwise appropriate in equity, no other relief at law was available to the plaintiffs on their common law ejectment claim prior to final judgment. As such, the District Court did not err in declining to grant relief at law other than a declaration of trespass on the plaintiffs' common law ejectment claim. Davis v. Westphal, 2017 MT 276, 389 Mont. 251, 405 P.3d 73.

Joinder of Party in Supreme Court After Dismissal of Party in District Court — Fees and Costs Not Warranted: A prime contractor that was dismissed as a defendant in District Court sought fees and costs for being subsequently included as an appellee in the Supreme Court proceeding. The prime contractor argued that since the other appellee did not object to the District Court dismissal, it cannot now seek to join the prime contractor as a party again. The Supreme Court denied the request for fees and costs, reasoning that it already considered the joinder issue in a previous motion for dismissal. McDonald v. Ponderosa Enterprises, Inc., 2015 MT 160, 379 Mont. 379, 352 P.3d 14.

Rules of Civil Procedure Inapplicable to Revocation Proceedings — Expiration of Time to Perfect Appeal of Sentence: The state filed a petition to revoke the defendant's probation. The District Court revoked his probation, and the defendant filed a motion for relief from a judgment pursuant to Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). The District Court denied the motion on the basis that the Rules of Civil Procedure do not apply to revocation proceedings. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that the defendant was limited to challenging the revocation through a direct appeal, the time for which had expired. St. v. Osborn, 2015 MT 48, 378 Mont. 244, 343 P.3d 1188.

No Loss of Jurisdiction When Fees Not Ruled Upon — Judgment Not Final Until Inclusion of Postjudgment Order on Fees: Upon entry of final judgment against the defendants, the court expressly reserved jurisdiction to rule on the plaintiff's motion for attorney fees. The plaintiff filed its motion for fees as a motion to alter or amend judgment, which the defendants claim was denied by operation of former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court held, citing Harding v. Garcia, 2007 MT 120, 337 Mont. 274, 159 P.3d 1083, that the judgment wasn't final until the District Court addressed the issue of attorney fees and costs in the order, noting that Rule 4(1)(a) of the Rules of Appellate Procedure had been amended to address this issue. Bitterroot River Protective Ass'n v. Bitterroot Conserv. District, 2011 MT 51, 359 Mont. 393, 251 P.3d 131.

District Court Not Deprived of Jurisdiction Under Rule 4(5)(a)(ii): When plaintiffs filed their notice of appeal before entry of judgment but received a stay of the notice from the District Court and an order that the notice would be treated as if filed the same day as the order, their notice of appeal did not deprive the District Court of jurisdiction because Rule 4(5)(a)(ii), M.R.App.P., provides that a notice filed the same day as the order has no effect depriving the court of jurisdiction. Hilten v. Bragg, 2010 MT 273, 358 Mont. 407, 248 P.3d 282.

Order for Remand Considered Final Appealable Order: The District Court reviewed plaintiff's utility rate case and concluded that the rate set by the Public Service Commission (PSC) was unreasonable and ordered that the case be remanded to the PSC to set a new rate that took avoided cost data into consideration. The PSC appealed, but plaintiff contended that the remand was an interlocutory order that did not finally decide the case and was thus unappealable. The Supreme Court disagreed. Section 2-4-702 provides for judicial review of an agency decision in a contested case, and to force the PSC to recalculate the rate in accordance with the District Court's remand instructions would have undermined the PSC's right to appeal under 2-4-711. Therefore, the remand order was considered final for purposes of appeal by the PSC. Whitehall Wind, LLC v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2010 MT 2, 355 Mont. 15, 223 P.3d 907, followed in Grenz v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2011 MT 17, 359 Mont. 154, 248 P.3d 785. See also In re Wage Claim of Mays, 2019 MT 219, 397 Mont. 248, 448 P.3d 1096.

CASES DECIDED UNDER SUPERSEDED RULES

GENERAL

Failure of Intervenor to File Notice of Appeal Precluding Appellate Jurisdiction: The Supreme Court will not accept jurisdiction or consider the arguments of an intervenor that fails to file its own notice of appeal. Reedal v. Reedal, 2008 MT 151, 343 M 235, 183 P3d 122 (2008).

Faxing of Notice of Appeal Not Allowed — Appeal Not Timely Filed: A notice of appeal is not a procedural motion for which fax filing is allowed under former Rule 10, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). A notice of appeal must be filed in hard copy form, and papers required to be filed with the Supreme Court are not considered timely unless the papers are actually received within the time fixed for filing. Reedal v. Reedal, 2008 MT 151, 343 M 235, 183 P3d 122 (2008).

Interim Appeal, Rather Than Trial De Novo, Appropriate for Consideration of Double Jeopardy Challenge: Barron appealed a Justice's Court decision to the District Court for trial de novo, then moved to dismiss the case on double jeopardy grounds. The motion was denied, and Barron appealed to the Supreme Court. Normally, the Supreme Court will not consider appeals from District Court unless a final judgment of conviction has been rendered. However, as set out in Three Forks v. Schillinger, 2007 MT 331, 340 M 211, 173 P3d 681 (2007), there is no trial de novo if a second trial in District Court would violate the provision against double jeopardy. Thus, notwithstanding the fact that the District Court had not rendered final judgment, the Supreme Court accepted Barron's interim appeal to consider the merits of the double jeopardy claim. St. v. Barron, 2008 MT 69, 342 M 100, 179 P3d 519 (2008).

Motion for Reconsideration Equated to Motion to Alter or Amend — Appeal Deadline Applicable: In a dissolution proceeding, the District Court entered its findings of fact concerning the value of a marital gift. Fifteen days later, the wife filed a motion with the court seeking reconsideration of the factual findings and asking the court to amend its order pursuant to former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), but the motion was denied. About 6 months later, the wife filed a notice of appeal. The wife asserted that the motion was timely because the husband never filed a notice of entry of judgment, and the time for filing an appeal generally runs from the date of filing of final judgment. However, under former Rule 5(a)(4), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), a notice of entry of judgment is not required to begin the running of the time for filing an appeal when a motion is made under certain rules, including former Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court noted that there is no motion for reconsideration under the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, but because the wife's motion was made pursuant to former Rule 59(g), it was considered to be a motion to alter or amend the judgment. Thus, the time for filing a notice of appeal began running from the time that the motion was denied, and the motion filed 6 months later was filed too late for consideration. Horton v. Horton, 2007 MT 181, 338 M 236, 165 P3d 1076 (2007).

District Court Divested of Jurisdiction to Consider Motion for Reconsideration Following Notice of Appeal: Plaintiff filed a collection action against the Birnels for payment of medical services. The Birnels then filed a third-party action against their health insurer, alleging breach of contract and unfair trade practices. When the insurer failed to answer the complaint, the District Court entered a default judgment against the insurer. The insurer moved to set aside the default on grounds that the complaint was improperly sent to an old address. The District Court agreed and set aside the default judgment and allowed the insurer to answer the complaint. The Birnels filed a motion for reconsideration of the order setting aside the default judgment, and the insurer then moved to strike the reconsideration motion. The Birnels filed a notice of appeal from the order granting the insurer's motion to set aside the default judgment. The following day, the District Court granted the Birnels' motion for reconsideration, and the insurer appealed, arguing that the notice of appeal terminated the District Court's jurisdiction over the case and that granting the motion for reconsideration was thus erroneous. The Supreme Court agreed with the insurer. Former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), provides for motions to alter or amend a judgment, but because the Birnels' motion to reconsider did not reference former Rule 59 or discuss a manifest error of law, it could not be considered a motion to alter or amend the judgment, but merely regurgitated arguments that the District Court had already considered and rejected. A motion for reconsideration of previously decided issues is not authorized by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. The Supreme Court concluded that the Birnels' notice of appeal divested the District Court of jurisdiction to rule on the reconsideration motion, so the Supreme Court reversed and remanded. ABC Collectors, Inc. v. Birnel, 2006 MT 148, 332 M 410, 138 P3d 802 (2006), following Nelson v. Driscoll, 285 M 355, 948 P2d 256 (1997).

On remand, the District Court, sua sponte, reinstated the original default judgment on grounds that the court erred in previously setting aside the default judgment because the insurer had failed to establish good cause to set the default judgment aside. The insurer appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Former Rule 55(b)(2), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), does not allow a District Court to enter a default judgment sua sponte without application by a party and without written notice to the party against whom judgment is sought. The District Court abused its discretion by doing so. ABC Collectors, Inc. v. Birnel, 2008 MT 35, 341 M 310, 176 P3d 1067 (2008).

Effect of Alford Plea on Subsequent Appeals — Request to Withdraw Alford Plea to Be Made in District Court: Hoots entered an Alford plea to DUI charges and later sought to withdraw the plea on appeal, contending that the plea was made only because Hoots was forced to plead guilty after the trial court denied a request for new counsel. However, Hoots did not request to withdraw the plea at any time during the District Court proceedings. Because a motion to withdraw an Alford plea must be made in District Court, the Supreme Court declined to address the issue on appeal. St. v. Hoots, 2005 MT 346, 330 M 144, 127 P3d 369 (2005), following St. v. Butler, 272 M 286, 900 P2d 908 (1995).

Withdrawal of Counsel — No Requirement That Party Provide Written Notice of Hearing Until Notice of Withdrawal of Counsel Filed: Defendant moved for sanctions and dismissal based on discovery abuses. Notice was sent to plaintiffs' counsel regarding a hearing on the motion, but plaintiffs' counsel had decided to withdraw. Although counsel mentioned the hearing to plaintiffs, plaintiffs failed to appear at the hearing, so defendant's motion was granted. No notice was filed with the court formalizing withdrawal of counsel until after the hearing. Plaintiffs' new counsel moved to set aside the judgment on grounds of mistake, surprise, and excusable neglect, asserting that defendant was required to notify plaintiffs in writing before the hearing, but the motion was denied, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Defendant was not required to provide written notice to plaintiffs until their former counsel filed a notice of withdrawal, and the rules of professional conduct prohibited defendant from contacting plaintiffs in person. Until the notice of withdrawal was filed, defendant was entitled to presume that plaintiffs' former counsel continued to provide representation and that plaintiffs had been properly notified of the hearing by counsel. Under these circumstances, denial of the motion to set aside the judgment was not an abuse of discretion. Flesch v. McDonald's Restaurant, 2005 MT 235, 328 M 407, 121 P3d 527 (2005).

No Jurisdiction to Hear Criminal Appeal Filed More Than Sixty Days After Judgment — Deadline Not Extended by Former Mailing Extension Rule: Dill filed notice of an appeal of a judgment in a criminal action 63 days after judgment was entered. Former Rule 5(b), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), requires filing of an appeal within 60 days after entry of judgment. Dill contended that the deadline should be extended because former Rule 21(e), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), allows an additional 3 days when service of a paper is made by mail. The District Court order was mailed to Dill, so Dill argued that the deadline was actually 63 days. The Supreme Court noted that under Mont. Fair Housing, Inc. v. Barnes, 2003 MT 16, 314 M 73, 68 P3d 653 (2003), former Rule 21(e) applies only to situations involving response-type pleadings, but when a deadline is required by court rule to be filed within a specified time, former Rule 21(e) does not apply. Dill's criminal appeal was filed more than 60 days after judgment was entered, the Supreme Court lacked jurisdiction to hear it, so the appeal was dismissed. Billings v. Dill, 2005 MT 134, 327 M 262, 113 P3d 302 (2005).

No Showing of Damages or That Client Would Have Prevailed on Lost Appeal of Marital Dissolution Case — Failure of Legal Malpractice Claim: Richards brought a malpractice claim against an attorney who negligently failed to appeal Richards' marriage dissolution proceeding prior to the deadline for appeal. The District Court dismissed the claim, ruling that the court, rather than a jury, should decide the consequences of the attorney's failure to file the appeal and that the lost appeal would not have succeeded. Richards appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Even though the attorney admitted malpractice by allowing the claim to expire, the attorney contended that no damages occurred. When a malpractice claim changes to the question of whether an attorney perfected an appeal, the analysis shifts from one of fact to one of law, which is properly considered by the court rather than a jury. The question of the probable outcome of a lost appeal also presents a question of law for the trial court to decide based on the special expertise required to analyze the relevant law and rules of appellate procedure, and the review is limited to the transcript and record of the underlying action and arguments presented by counsel. Here, there was substantial credible evidence regarding primary parenting time, valuation of the marital estate, and child support payments showing that Richards' lost appeal would not have resulted in a successful or favorable outcome. Further, one element of a legal malpractice claim requires a showing that the attorney's conduct proximately caused damages suffered by the claimant. Because Richards failed to show that the lost appeal would have been successful, he also failed to show that the attorney's breach caused any damages, so the malpractice claim failed. Richards v. Knuchel, 2005 MT 133, 327 M 249, 115 P3d 189 (2005).

Motion for Posttrial Relief Untimely — Posttrial Motion to Correct Clerical Mistakes Proper — Motion for Posttrial Relief Not Substitute for Appeal: Following notice of entry of judgment in a marriage dissolution trial, the husband had 10 days to file a motion under former Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), but missed the deadline by 2 days, so the motion was properly ruled untimely. The husband had 30 days to file a notice of appeal, but the untimely former Rule 59 motion did not toll the time for appeal, and that time also expired. The decree became final, subject only to the husband's motion for relief under the various provisions of former Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The District Court erred in not applying former Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., to correct clerical mistakes in the findings of facts. However, a former Rule 60 motion may not be used as a substitute for appeal, so the husband's former Rule 60 motion essentially seeking to set aside the decree based on insufficient evidence was properly denied. In re Marriage of Schoenthal, 2005 MT 24, 326 M 15, 106 P3d 1162 (2005).

Summary Judgment for Third Party Affecting Final Judgment Reviewable on Appeal: A tennis club filed a negligence and breach of contract action against a contractor who constructed a tennis facility for the club. The contractor in turn filed a third-party negligence and breach of contract action against the subcontractor who prepared the ground surface and laid the asphalt for the tennis courts. The District Court granted summary judgment for the subcontractor, and the contractor appealed. The subcontractor contended that the judgment was not appealable because it was not designated in the notice of appeal, as required by former Rule 4(c), M.R.App.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court noted that summary judgments are generally interlocutory and not appealable until final judgment is rendered, but also noted that under former Rule 2, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), any intermediate order or decision properly objected to that involves the merits or that necessarily affects the judgment, except a decision or order from which an appeal may be taken, is subject to review. The summary judgment in this case preceded and affected the final judgment, and because the contractor's objection was preserved, the summary judgment was reviewable on appeal. Glacier Tennis Club at the Summit, LLC v. Treweek Constr. Co., Inc., 2004 MT 70, 320 M 351, 87 P3d 431 (2004).

Failure of Counsel to Properly Withdraw or Preserve Direct Appeal — Denial of Postconviction Petition Erroneous: Adams filed a pro se petition for postconviction relief, alleging ineffective assistance of counsel because his original court-appointed attorney failed to move to dismiss for lack of a speedy trial and because his subsequently appointed trial counsel offered a lesser included instruction on aggravated assault to the jury and failed to appeal to the Supreme Court following Adams' conviction, despite Adams' request to do so. The petition was denied on grounds that Adams failed to file an appeal within 60 days of judgment as required by former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and Adams appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. Under 46-8-103, appointed counsel is required to continue representation until final judgment, including appellate review, unless counsel is relieved by court order. Adams' counsel failed to comply with the requirements of 46-8-103 and effect a valid withdrawal, so the right to appeal was not preserved. When a defendant would have appealed but for counsel's deficient performance, the error is prejudicial. Thus, denial of Adams' petition for postconviction relief on procedural grounds was reversible error, and on remand, Adams was allowed to raise the issues that would have been raised on direct appeal but for counsel's abandonment of the appeal, as well as the issues raised in the petition for postconviction relief that were not previously raised. St. v. Adams, 2002 MT 202, 311 M 202, 54 P3d 50 (2002), following In re Petition of Hans, 1998 MT 7, 288 M 168, 958 P2d 1175 (1998), and St. v. Rogers, 2001 MT 165, 306 M 130, 32 P3d 724 (2001).

Failure to Address Applicability of Alternative Dispute Resolution Process in Appeal of Child Support Case Not Grounds for Automatic Dismissal — Complicity of Clerk of District Court in Appellant's Failure to Follow Statutory Requirements: A father appealed a District Court determination of past-due child support amounts, but failed to address the applicability of alternative dispute resolution in the appeal notice, as provided in former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and subsection (c) of former Rule 4, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). The Clerk of the District Court subsequently failed to notify the father of the necessity to file an amended notice of appeal within 7 days. The mother contended that the appeal should be dismissed, citing Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71 (2000), for the proposition that failure to comply with applicable appellate rules will result in dismissal. The Supreme Court held that a court may dismiss an appeal for failure to comply with former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and subsection (c) of former Rule 4, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), but overruled Dobrocke to the extent that failure to comply will result in automatic dismissal. The court found the Dobrocke rule to be too severe, particularly when the Clerk of Court is complicit in the appellant's failure to abide by the statutory requirements, because it is unfair for all the consequences to fall on the appellant when the Clerk of Court also fails to adhere to the statutes. Rather, the Supreme Court will look at all circumstances surrounding the appeal before deciding whether to dismiss for failure to comply with former Rule 54, M.R.App.P., and subsection (c) of former Rule 4, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). In this case, dismissal was not proper because the Clerk of Court never issued the father the proper notice to file an amended appeal. Roberts v. Nickey, 2002 MT 37, 308 M 335, 43 P3d 263 (2002).

Failure to Certify Applicability of Arbitration in Appeal of Case Seeking Monetary Damages to Result in Dismissal of Case: Plaintiff appealed a summary judgment dismissing her negligence suit against the city of Columbia Falls, but totally failed to address the requirements of former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and subsection (c) of former Rule 4, M.R.App.P. (now superseded) regarding the use of alternative dispute resolution procedures. The city argued that the rules applied because plaintiff was seeking monetary damages, so failure to address dispute resolution was indefensible and the appeal should be dismissed. Plaintiff pointed out that the appeal was from a summary judgment holding that no cause of action existed, rather than from a monetary judgment. The Supreme Court concluded that the determining factor was the relief sought and not the order or judgment being appealed. Plaintiff sought damages, so the rules applied. However, because it was a case of first impression and part of the blame for not addressing dispute resolution lay with the District Court Clerk, who failed to direct plaintiff to file an amended notice of appeal containing the necessary certification, the Supreme Court did not dismiss this plaintiff's appeal, concluding that dismissal would be too harsh a remedy. Nevertheless, in the future, the consequence of failing to comply with former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and subsection (c) of former Rule 4, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), will be to subject the appeal to dismissal. Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71, 57 St. Rep. 718 (2000), overruled in Roberts v. Nickey, 2002 MT 37, 308 M 335, 43 P3d 263 (2002), to the extent that failure to comply will result in automatic dismissal.

Civil Procedure Rule That Notice of Entry of Order Be Served by Prevailing Party Inapplicable in Postconviction Relief Proceeding: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court addressed whether the notice of entry of judgment requirement under former Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), applied to postconviction relief proceedings governed by Title 46, ch. 21. The court previously held in cases unrelated to postconviction proceedings that only when the notice is served does a prospective appellant's time for filing a notice of appeal begin to run. (See In re Marriage of Robertson, 237 M 406, 773 P2d 1213 (1989), Buckley v. Wordal, 262 M 306, 865 P2d 240, 50 St. Rep. 1570 (1993), and Troglia v. Bartoletti, 266 M 240, 879 P2d 1169, 51 St. Rep. 783 (1994).) Here, Garner was convicted of forgery and felony theft and contended that because the state was the "prevailing party", notice should have been provided to him of the entry of the District Court's order and that because notice was not provided, the 60 days within which to appeal could not have expired because it never commenced to run. However, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure apply in a postconviction relief proceeding only when they are applicable and not inconsistent with postconviction statutes. Section 46-21-203 specifically requires that an appeal in postconviction proceedings be taken within 60 days of the entry of the order, which is inconsistent with the general notice rule in former Rule 77(d). The Supreme Court applied the particular provision over the general provision and concluded that former Rule 77(d) has no application in postconviction relief proceedings, so the 60-day filing deadline in 46-21-203 commences in all instances and without more upon entry of the court's order granting or denying postconviction relief. St. v. Garner, 1999 MT 295, 297 M 89, 990 P2d 175, 56 St. Rep. 1180 (1999).

Authority to Defer Imposition of Sentence When Financial Condition Imposed — Failure to File Timely Appeal: Ingersoll filed for postconviction relief, arguing that the District Court lacked statutory authority to either impose consecutive deferred sentences or to defer imposition of his sentence in excess of 3 years. The Supreme Court found that the District Court had statutory authority at the time of sentencing under 46-18-201 to impose a deferred sentence for up to 6 years for Ingersoll's felony conviction for criminal mischief. Therefore, pursuant to subsection (b) of former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), Ingersoll had 60 days after sentencing to appeal the court's authority to impose the sentence. Failure to file a timely appeal rendered Ingersoll's claim procedurally barred in a postconviction hearing. Ingersoll v. St., 1999 MT 215, 295 M 520, 986 P2d 403, 56 St. Rep. 843 (1999).

Indian Defendant — Failure to Challenge Transfer to District Court and Failure to Reserve Right to Appeal Issues — District Court Jurisdiction Upheld: After the state filed an amended petition in Youth Court to have Spotted Blanket declared a delinquent youth and a serious juvenile offender, the state and Spotted Blanket stipulated to transferring the case to District Court. Later, Spotted Blanket objected to the jurisdiction of the District Court, arguing that the Youth Court abused its discretion in making the transfer because there was insufficient evidence that the juvenile facilities were inadequate, as required by 41-5-206(1)(d)(ii) (see 1997 amendment), and because the District Court failed to make a finding of probable cause concerning some of the counts against him, as required by the same statute. The Supreme Court declined to address those issues, noting that: (1) Spotted Blanket's notice of appeal was limited to the District Court order denying his motion to dismiss and did not include the order transferring the case to District Court; (2) Spotted Blanket never challenged the propriety of the transfer to District Court and, citing the requirements of 46-12-204, St. v. Weeks, 270 M 63, 891 P2d 477 (1995), and St. v. Swoboda, 276 M 479, 918 P2d 296 (1996), holding that claims of error not properly preserved in the trial court are barred from appellate review; (3) Spotted Blanket stipulated to the transfer and that a probable cause hearing would not be necessary; and (4) Spotted Blanket pleaded guilty to the felony counts and noting that the plea acts as a waiver of nonjurisdictional defects under the Supreme Court's prior opinions in St. v. Butler, 272 M 286, 900 P2d 908 (1995), and Stilson v. St., 278 M 20, 924 P2d 238 (1996). St. v. Spotted Blanket, 1998 MT 59, 288 M 126, 955 P2d 1347, 55 St. Rep. 253 (1998).

"Motion for Reconsideration" — Procedural Trap for Unwary and Grave Risk to Meritorious Appeal — Criteria to Equate With Motion to Alter or Amend: Stephen Nelson filed a motion for reconsideration of the District Court's grant of the defendant's motion for summary judgment based on a later-decided Third Circuit Court of Appeals case. Stephen contended that the motion was filed to allow the District Court to alter or amend its judgment to correct its mistake of law. The motion for reconsideration was denied, and Stephen filed a notice of appeal more than 60 days after the notice of entry of judgment but within 60 days from the denial of the motion for reconsideration. The defendant moved for dismissal of the appeal, contending that it had not been timely filed under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), on the grounds that a motion for reconsideration is not a motion to alter or amend under former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court, warning against the use of motions for reconsideration, established criteria under which to evaluate the motions. When a motion for reconsideration substantively addresses one of the following areas, the court is more likely to conclude that the motion is actually a motion to alter or amend under former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded): (1) to correct manifest errors of law or fact upon which the judgment was based; (2) to raise newly discovered or previously unavailable evidence; (3) to prevent manifest injustice resulting from, among other things, serious misconduct of counsel; or (4) to bring to the court's attention an intervening change in controlling law. The Supreme Court denied the motion to dismiss. Nelson v. Driscoll, 285 M 355, 948 P2d 256, 54 St. Rep. 1190 (1997), followed in Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2001 MT 59, 304 M 356, 22 P3d 631 (2001).

Time for Appeal Not Tolled During Extra Time Granted to File Brief in Support of Posttrial Motion: A District Court cannot grant extensions under former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), for additional briefing time and must rule on a former Rule 59(g) motion to amend a judgment within the time allotted without regard to the status of the briefing. If the court does not rule on the motion within the allotted time, the motion is considered denied. The court's grant of a 16-day extension of time in which to file a brief in support of the motion did not suspend for 16 days the time allotted for appeal. Failure to file a notice of appeal within the allotted time was an absolute jurisdictional bar to Montana Supreme Court consideration of the appeal. Challinor v. Glacier Nat'l Bank, 283 M 342, 943 P2d 83, 54 St. Rep. 520 (1997).

Notice or Motion Not Required to Correct Clerical Error in Order — Reentry of Judgment Not Required: The District Court entered judgment terminating parental rights but misspelled the father's first name. One week later, the court issued an amended order correcting the clerical error but made no other changes. The state did not notify appellant of entry of the amended judgment. Seventeen months after the termination of parental rights, appellant served notice of the amended order on the state and filed a notice of appeal from the amended order based on former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), contending that the state never entered the amended judgment and that therefore the 60-day appeal period did not run until the amended judgment was entered by the appellant's attorney. Under former Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the District Court has inherent power at any time to correct clerical errors in its own judgments in order to ensure that the record speaks the truth and reflects the court's decision. A notice or motion is not required to rectify a clerical error, nor must the order that makes the correction be denominated a nunc pro tunc order. An error may also be corrected by the issuance of a new order that does not contain the clerical error and that entirely replaces the old order. In the present case, appellant was properly notified when judgment was entered and the original order was handed down. The state was not required to enter judgment again after the amended new order was issued or to notify appellant of the entry of the amended order in order to keep the appeal clock running. Because appellant failed to file a notice of appeal within 60 days of the entry of judgment, the appeal was dismissed as untimely. In re N.K.O. & Z.J.M., 277 M 122, 919 P2d 394, 53 St. Rep. 570 (1996), distinguishing El-Ce Storms Trust v. Svetahor, 223 M 113, 724 P2d 704 (1986), Kenny v. Koch, 227 M 155, 737 P2d 491 (1987), Hankinson v. Picotte, 235 M 143, 766 P2d 242 (1988), and In re Marriage of Robertson, 237 M 406, 773 P2d 1213 (1989).

Failure of State to Appeal — County Attorney Representation of State Position as Sufficient Opportunity for Hearing: Despite a District Court order in 1993, Sheppard was not admitted to phase II of the sexual offender program at the state prison. In 1995, Sheppard moved the District Court to order his enrollment in the program, serving the motion on the County Attorney who had prosecuted him for the underlying offense, but not on the state attorney for the Department of Corrections. The County Attorney appeared at the hearing on the motion and, pursuant to 7-4-2716, advanced the state's position that Sheppard was not eligible for the treatment program because he failed to accept responsibility for the crime. The court affirmed its 1993 order and ordered that Sheppard be allowed into the program. The state did not timely appeal the decision and thus was bound by the 1993 order. The representation by the County Attorney of the state's position at the hearing, coupled with the state's opportunity to address the issue at prior hearings, was adequate consideration. St. v. Sheppard, 277 M 76, 919 P2d 1057, 53 St. Rep. 548 (1996).

No Final Judgment When Conditions in Decree Anticipate Subsequent Modification — Appeal of Decree Not Limited: An original dissolution decree was made conditional on whether wife exercised her option to purchase the family business, leaving the rights and obligations of the parties with regard to maintenance, child support, and other matters uncertain until the purchase option period expired. After several court orders rendered her efforts to exercise the option unsuccessful, wife appealed 170 days after the original decree was entered, which husband contended was barred by the 30-day appeal limit in former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). While noting that under 40-4-108 a decree of dissolution is final when entered, the Supreme Court nevertheless adopted the holding in Heater v. Boston & Mont. Corp., 84 M 500, 277 P 11 (1929), that the finality of a judgment depends to a great extent on its apparent purpose and whether it contains provisions for subsequent modification. Because of the conditional language in the original decree, it could not be considered final until the option period expired, and orders issued prior to that time were interlocutory in effect, absent a final determination of the parties' rights. Wife's appeal filed 6 days after expiration of the option period was therefore timely and subject to appellate review. In re Marriage of Griffin, 260 M 124, 860 P2d 78, 50 St. Rep. 945 (1993), followed in Kirchner v. W. Mont. Regional Community Mental Health Center, Inc., River House Program, 261 M 227, 861 P2d 927, 50 St. Rep. 1299 (1993).

Ineffective Appeal After Motion to Alter or Amend Judgment — Failure to Cure Results in Dismissal: On April 30, Grounds filed a motion to alter or amend a judgment partially granting her former husband's (Coward's) posttrial motions. On May 17, before Grounds' motion was ruled upon, Coward filed a notice of appeal from the disposition of his pretrial motions. The Supreme Court held that under former Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the day the order was issued on his motions is not to be counted and that because the time for serving a motion to alter or amend judgment is less than the 11 days referred to in former Rule 6(a), intervening Saturdays and Sundays are not counted. Therefore, the District Court could still rule on Grounds' motion. Under subsection (a)(4) of former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), Coward filed a premature notice of appeal and should have waited until Grounds' motion was disposed of or considered denied. Failure of Coward to file a new notice of appeal after Grounds' motion was considered denied means that his own appeal must be dismissed. In re Marriage of Grounds & Coward, 256 M 397, 846 P2d 1034, 50 St. Rep. 114 (1993).

Retention of District Court Jurisdiction After Filing of Appeal: A motion filed under former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), must be determined by the District Court within 45 days. If the court fails to rule within that time, the motion is considered denied. Subsection (a)(1) of former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), requires the notice of appeal in civil cases to be filed within 30 days of judgment. However, if a motion is timely filed under former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P., the time for appeal runs from the entry of an order granting or denying the motion or, if applicable, from the time the motion is considered denied at the end of the 45-day period. If a notice of appeal is filed before the motion is disposed of, the notice of appeal has no effect. Semenza v. Hartelius, 248 M 294, 811 P2d 1262, 48 St. Rep. 356 (1991).

Use of "Et Al." in Notice of Appeal as Sufficient Identification of Appellants: Appellants' notice of appeal, filed on behalf of 152 discharged employees, was headed "Larry Deeds, et al.", which respondent contended was insufficient to convey notice under the decision in Torres v. Oakland Scavenger Co., 487 US 312, 101 L Ed 2d 285, 108 S Ct 2405 (1988), wherein the U.S. Supreme Court found that Rule 3(c), Fed.R.App.P. (identical to former Rule 4, M.R.App.P., now superseded), was jurisdictional in nature and required the listing of all parties taking part in the appeal. The Montana Supreme Court distinguished Torres and chose instead to adopt the holding in Nat'l Center for Immigrants' Rights v. I.N.S., 892 F2d 814 (9th Cir. 1989), that the use of "et al." in the caption of the notice clearly indicated that all defendants were appealing the decision below. To require all 152 appellants in this action to be named in the appeal would take two full pages and would be onerous. Rather, the use of "et al." as a common informality constituted sufficient notice of appeal under this rule. Deeds v. Decker Coal Co., 246 M 220, 805 P2d 1270, 47 St. Rep. 1902 (1990).

Technical Defect Not Bar to Appeal: The claimant in a workers' compensation case appealed the lower court's denial of his motion for a rehearing. The Supreme Court held that although he should have appealed from the findings and conclusions of the lower court in order to place the proper issues before it, technical defects of procedure should not bar a party from access to the courts. Wilhelm v. Owens Enterprises, Inc., 242 M 285, 790 P2d 467, 47 St. Rep. 699 (1990).

Effect of Failure to Designate Dismissed Charge as Subject of Appeal: State's argument that it was error to dismiss a charge had merit, but the issue was not properly before the court and would not be considered because the notice of appeal did not designate an appeal from the dismissal of that charge. St. v. Delap, 237 M 346, 772 P2d 1268, 46 St. Rep. 856 (1989), followed in St. v. Spotted Blanket, 1998 MT 59, 288 M 126, 955 P2d 1347, 55 St. Rep. 253 (1998), and Lewis v. Puget Sound Power & Light Co., 2001 MT 145, 306 M 37, 29 P3d 1028 (2001).

Prevailing Party — Proper Notice of Entry of Judgment: The prevailing party in an action has the duty of serving notice of entry of judgment, together with a copy of the judgment or a description of the nature and amount of relief and damages granted, on all parties who have made an appearance. If proper notice of entry of judgment is never served, the time for filing a notice of appeal never begins to run. El-Ce Storms Trust v. Svetahor, 223 M 113, 724 P2d 704, 43 St. Rep. 1575 (1986). See also Willoughby v. Loomis, 264 M 44, 869 P2d 271, 51 St. Rep. 138 (1994).

Bond Not Jurisdictional: Respondent contended an appeal to the Supreme Court should be dismissed for failure to file an undertaking for costs on appeal as stated in former Rule 6(a), M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Respondent argued that posting of bond is jurisdictional. The court noted that while under section 9733, R.C.M. 1935, posting a bond for costs on appeal was jurisdictional, that is no longer the case. The only step necessary to perfect an appeal is filing a notice of appeal within the time allowed by former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). While the filing of a bond for costs may be required, failure to file the bond does not affect the validity of the appeal. Failure to effect timely filing of the bond should not, without more, result in dismissal. There were no other circumstances mandating dismissal in this case. Westmont Tractor Co. v. Leighty, 222 M 336, 722 P2d 617, 43 St. Rep. 1309 (1986).

Cross-Appeal: Respondent raised two issues on appeal not addressed by appellant. The court did not consider the issues because respondent had not perfected a cross-appeal. Mydlarz v. Palmer/Duncan Constr. Co., 209 M 325, 682 P2d 695, 41 St. Rep. 738 (1984). See also Billings Firefighters Local 521 v. Billings, 1999 MT 6, 293 M 41, 973 P2d 222, 56 St. Rep. 23 (1999).

Supreme Court Equally Divided on Sufficiency of Notice of Appeal — Judgment Appealed From Affirmed: When the Supreme Court was equally divided on the issue of whether a defendant's notice of appeal was legally sufficient, three justices having voted that the notice was sufficient, three justices having voted that it was not sufficient, and one justice having abstained, the court ruled that there had not been a determination by the majority of the court that the notice was sufficient and that therefore the court did not have jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Doll v. Major Muffler Centers, Inc., 208 M 401, 687 P2d 48, 41 St. Rep. 429 (1984).

Permissible to Provide Reasons for Certification After Appeal Filed: The failure of the District Court to provide its reasons for a proper certification until after the notice of appeal was filed does not render the certification defective as long as the guidelines of former Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), have been complied with. Klaudt v. Flink, 202 M 247, 658 P2d 1065, 40 St. Rep. 64 (1983), overruling Churchhill v. Holly Sugar Corp., 192 M 533, 629 P2d 758, 38 St. Rep. 860 (1981).

Time Limits to Be Followed — Jurisdictional Requirement: The parties' marriage was dissolved on April 14, 1980, and a portion of the decree provided that the wife was to receive monthly payments equal to one-half the value of stock. On April 23, 1980, the wife moved under former Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), to amend the findings and judgment to correct the valuation of the stock. The motion was properly noticed for hearing under former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). On May 1, 1980, the judge continued the hearing for 30 days upon written stipulation of counsel. The hearing was held on June 5, 1980, but no order was entered. The court finally held a later hearing after the wife again moved on May 4, 1981, and in an order dated October 7, 1981, denied her request. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that once the former Rule 52(b) motion was made, the time limits of former Rule 59(g) applied and a hearing had to be held within 10 days or the court could continue the hearing not to exceed 30 days. In this case, the court held the hearing 5 days later than the extended date and thereby lost jurisdiction of the motion. Further, the court did not rule on the motion within the required 15 days. Because the time for the wife's appeal began to run on the last day that the District Court could have ruled on the former Rule 52 motion, her appeal was not timely and the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Winn, 200 M 402, 651 P2d 51, 39 St. Rep. 1831 (1982), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Conditional Notice of Appeal: Appellant filed a conditional notice of appeal conditioned upon the Supreme Court finding that the judgment being appealed was a final judgment. Because the notice was conditioned upon an action to be taken at an undetermined time in the future, it was totally ineffective. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Joint and Several Liability — Failure to Include Issue in Notice of Appeal: Where codefendant's notice of appeal did not include a certain item of damages, the Supreme Court must assume the other defendant was not informed by the notice of an intention to challenge responsibility for those damages, found below to be joint and several. The issue whether appellant was liable was not properly before the Supreme Court, and finding of joint and several liability must stand. McPherson v. Kerr, 195 M 454, 636 P2d 852, 38 St. Rep. 2021 (1981).

Appeal From Workers' Compensation Court — Starting Point for the Period for the Filing of Appeal: For an appeal from a final decision of the Workers' Compensation Judge to be filed in the manner provided by law for appeals from the District Court in civil cases, there must be a date that is the starting point for the period for filing notice of appeal under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). In that there is no judgment book in the Workers' Compensation Court in which to enter the judgment and therefore there can be no notice of entry of judgment, the court established, under the powers granted by Art. VII, sec. 2, Mont. Const., that the date on which a decision becomes final under ARM 2.52.222 (now repealed) shall be the starting point for the period for filing the notice of appeal. In this case the court therefore had jurisdiction over the appeal. McMahon v. The Anaconda Co., 38 St. Rep. 1233 (1981) (apparently not reported in Pacific Reporter or Montana Reports but consolidated for purposes of appeal with second case filed by plaintiff against Anaconda Co. and reported at 678 P2d 661 (1984)).

Dissolution of Marriage Appeal From Original Judgment or Amending Order to Preserve Issues of Both: Respondent husband raised the issue of the scope of the wife's notice of appeal from the District Court's order amending the decree made on dissolution of the marriage. The husband argued that the appeal should be limited solely to issues arising from the amending order. The Supreme Court said that the contention ignored the interdependent nature of the amending order and the original decree. Finality of the original judgment had to await a determination of the lower court regarding motions to amend or alter. The intertwining of an amending order and an original judgment necessitated review of all issues contained in both, and thus an appeal from either incorporated all issues of both for review. This was in accord with the idea that technical defects of procedure should not bar a party from access to the court. This was distinguished from the situation in which a party appealed from one order in a series or separate and distinct orders or from one part of a divisible judgment. An amending order and an original judgment could not be viewed as separate and distinct or divisible. The notice of appeal was therefore sufficient to preserve all issues for review. Tefft v. Tefft, 192 M 456, 628 P2d 1094, 38 St. Rep. 837 (1981), distinguishing St. v. Todd, 117 M 80, 158 P2d 299 (1945), and Sperling v. Calfee, 7 M 514, 19 P 204 (1888), in accord with J.C. Penney and Woolworth v. Employment Sec. Div., 192 M 289, 627 P2d 851, 38 St. Rep. 694 (1981).

Effect of Failure to Send Notice of Entry of Order in Formal Probate Proceeding: Under 72-3-318, the court may vacate orders in a formal probate proceeding within the time allowed for appeal. Since the clerk failed to send notice of entry of an order as required by former Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the time allowed for appeal had not begun to run and the party was still entitled to request the court to modify or vacate its order. Estate of Holmes, 183 M 290, 599 P2d 344 (1979).

Computation of Time Limit for Appeal in Workers' Compensation Case — Civil Procedure Rules Applied: A person who appeals from a final decision of the Workers' Compensation Court should in all fundamental fairness be given the benefit of that provision of former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), which states that ". . . except that in cases where service of notice of entry of judgment is required by former Rule 77(d) of the M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded) the time shall be 30 days from the service of notice of entry of judgment". When service of notice of the final decision is made as mandated by 2-4-623 and that service is made by mail, the provisions of former Rule 21(c), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), are automatically put into play, adding 3 days to the prescribed 30-day time limit for filing the notice of appeal set by former Rule 4(a), M.R.App.P. (now superseded). However, when the final day of the period falls on a Sunday, former Rule 21(a), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), came into play, extending the time limit to the next day. Dumont v. Aetna Fire Underwriters, 183 M 190, 598 P2d 1099 (1979).

Series of Proceedings — Jurisdiction on Appeal: The Supreme Court was without jurisdiction to review a series of legal proceedings surrounding a divorce decree other than the last decision and judgment because the appellant failed to give timely notice of appeal of the prior proceedings. Easton v. Easton, 175 M 416, 574 P2d 989 (1978).

Extraordinary Relief Denied: When petitioner for Writ of Supervisory Control had filed notice of appeal from a judgment 9 days prior to application for Writ, without showing of extenuating circumstances, the Supreme Court would not issue an extraordinary writ as a method to shortcut appeal. In re Crist, 172 M 38, 560 P2d 531 (1976).

Determining Propriety of Appeal — Excusable Neglect: Court was without jurisdiction to dismiss an appeal because Supreme Court has sole jurisdiction to determine propriety of appeal. A change of mind is not "excusable neglect". McCormick v. McCormick, 168 M 136, 541 P2d 765 (1975).

Sole Jurisdiction of Supreme Court to Determine Propriety of Appeal: Court was without jurisdiction to dismiss an appeal because Supreme Court had sole jurisdiction to determine propriety of appeal. A change of mind is not "excusable neglect". McCormick v. McCormick, 168 M 136, 541 P2d 765 (1975).

Commencement of Sixty-Day Period — Letter of Clerk of No Effect: Sixty-day allotted period in which to file an appeal commenced to run the day after motion for new trial was considered denied under the self-executing provision of former Rule 59(d) which provides that a motion for a new trial which does not contain a notice of hearing and upon which no hearing is held is automatically denied 10 days after service; District Court Clerk's letter mailed 22 days after service of notice stating that the motion for new trial had been denied had no effect on the commencement of the 60-day period in which appellants had to file their appeal. Leitheiser v. Mont. St. Prison, 161 M 343, 505 P2d 1203 (1973), overruled in part on other grounds by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Failure to File Timely Notice of Appeal — Jurisdictional Defect: Failure to comply with rule relating to filing notice of appeal creates a jurisdictional defect which the Supreme Court will alter only on most extenuating circumstances. Leitheiser v. Mont. St. Prison, 161 M 343, 505 P2d 1203 (1973), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Untimely Appeal From Motion for New Trial: When motion for new trial was filed without notice of hearing, the motion was automatically denied 10 days after service notwithstanding letter from clerk notifying movant of denial on some other date. Appeal filed later than 60 days after denial of the motion was untimely. Leitheiser v. Mont. St. Prison, 161 M 343, 505 P2d 1203 (1973), overruled in part on other grounds by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Failure to Serve Notice of Appeal — Appellate Jurisdiction Never Acquired: Where notice of appeal was not served on the respondent party within 6 months of the date of judgment, the Supreme Court could not acquire jurisdiction even though notice was filed with the District Court within the statutory period. Seiffert v. Police Comm'n, 144 M 52, 394 P2d 172 (1964).

Amending Notice of Appeal: Amendment of a notice of appeal to the Supreme Court after the time period for notice has run is not possible. Payne v. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. Co., 142 M 406, 385 P2d 100 (1963).

DISTRICT COURT DEPRIVED OF JURISDICTION AFTER APPEAL FILED

Deficiency Judgment Embraced Within Assignment Order Seeking to Enforce That Judgment — Appeal of Assignment Order Divesting District Court of Jurisdiction to Address Motion to Set Aside Deficiency Judgment: Andersen executed a promissory note in favor of the Alpine Buffalo, Elk and Llama Ranch, Inc. (Alpine), and secured the note with real property. When no payments were made, Alpine received a judgment and foreclosure decree. After Andersen's property was sold, Alpine also received a deficiency judgment in the amount still owing. Andersen neither appealed the judgment nor made payment. Alpine later learned that Andersen was plaintiff in a pending malpractice claim against her former attorney, so Alpine sought and received an assignment of the prospective proceeds from that action. Andersen appealed the assignment order, and on the same day moved to set aside the deficiency judgment pursuant to former Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), claiming that the judgment was improperly based on the value of the property from the Sheriff's sale rather than the fair market value of the property. The District Court declined to address Andersen's former Rule 60(b) motion on grounds that the appeal of the assignment order divested the court of jurisdiction. The Supreme Court affirmed. The assignment order and the motion to set aside the deficiency judgment were inextricably intertwined. The former Rule 60(b) motion challenged the validity of the very deficiency judgment on which the appealed assignment order was based and that the assignment order sought to enforce. The District Court did not err in finding that appeal of the assignment order divested the court of its jurisdiction to address the motion to set aside the deficiency judgment. Alpine Buffalo, Elk & Llama Ranch, Inc. v. Andersen, 2001 MT 307, 307 M 509, 38 P3d 815 (2001), following McCormick v. McCormick, 168 M 136, 541 P2d 765 (1975).

Child Custody — District Court Order Issued After Appeal Vacated: Following mother's appeal of a District Court decision to the Supreme Court, the District Court ordered a temporary change in child custody, a temporary restraining order, and an order to show cause. The long-established rule in Montana is that when a notice of appeal has been filed, jurisdiction passes from the District Court and vests with the Supreme Court. Although some exceptions apply, none were applicable to the present situation. The District Court, though arguably acting in the child's best interests, was without jurisdiction to generate any orders relating to issues on appeal to the Supreme Court, and those orders were vacated. Because of the sensitive nature of the case, power was reinvested with the District Court, the case was remanded for the limited purpose of determining custody, and a hearing on the matter was required to be expedited. In re Marriage of Dreesbach, 265 M 216, 875 P2d 1018, 51 St. Rep. 374 (1994).

Filing Notice of Appeal — District Court Deprived of Jurisdiction: A judgment entered after filing of a notice of appeal was invalid because the notice of appeal deprived the District Court of further jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Carlson, 220 M 204, 714 P2d 116, 43 St. Rep. 295 (1986).

Granting Witness Air Fare Costs Following Appeal: The filing of a notice of appeal did not deprive the District Court of jurisdiction to grant a pending bill for costs. However, the court properly disallowed as a cost the air fares for witnesses. Powers Mfg. Co. v. Leon Jacobs Enterprises, 216 M 407, 701 P2d 1377, 42 St. Rep. 906 (1985).

Perfected Appeal Despite Attempted "Withdrawal" — No District Court Jurisdiction Unless Properly Dismissed: The father filed a notice of appeal after the District Court denied his motion for a change of custody. He then filed a document entitled "Withdrawal of Appeal" with the District Court. Later the father filed a petition for change of custody and a motion to consolidate his petition with a dependency and neglect action filed by the State. After a trial, the mother appealed. On appeal, the Supreme Court stated that when a notice of appeal has been filed, jurisdiction passes to the Supreme Court. All that is required to perfect an appeal is the timely filing of a notice of appeal. The District Court could have dismissed the appeal before it was docketed upon motion and notice. The record discloses no motion or notice. The District Court was therefore without jurisdiction to hear the case. In re M.L.Y. & M.Y., 201 M 467, 655 P2d 499, 39 St. Rep. 2238 (1982).

Notice of Appeal Divests Trial Court of Jurisdiction to Amend Judgment: After respondent moved to amend the judgment of the District Court, appellant filed a notice of appeal. The filing of the notice of appeal deprived the trial court of jurisdiction to amend the judgment. However, under 3-2-204, the Supreme Court can return jurisdiction to the trial court. United Farm Agency v. Blome, 198 M 435, 646 P2d 1205, 39 St. Rep. 1115 (1982).

Same Day Filing of Appeal and Motion for Rehearing: The filing of an appeal to the Supreme Court stays proceedings in the lower court, thereby removing jurisdiction to proceed further in the matter from the lower court; thus, the Supreme Court denied the motion to dismiss the appeal, which was based on the fact that the notice of appeal and movant's motion for rehearing were filed on the same day. Green v. C.R. Anthony Co., 194 M 102, 634 P2d 629, 38 St. Rep. 1638 (1981).

Notice of Appeal Filed — District Court Divested of Jurisdiction to Enter Nunc Pro Tunc Order: The findings, conclusions, and decree of dissolution were filed on December 2, 1980. Appellant filed a motion to alter the court's findings and conclusions on December 4, 1980, and filed a notice of appeal on January 7, 1981. On January 20, 1981, the District Court entered amended findings and conclusions and dated them, nunc pro tunc, December 12, 1980. The Supreme Court held that a trial court cannot enter supplemental findings after a notice of appeal has been filed. Bartmess v. Bartmess, 193 M 200, 631 P2d 299, 38 St. Rep. 1097 (1981).

Notice of Appeal Filed After Order but Before Findings and Conclusions Entered: An employer appealed from an order of the Workers' Compensation Court determining that its former employee was permanently totally disabled. Through various states of the case, the court failed to make findings of fact. Notice of appeal to the Supreme Court was filed after the court entered its order. A week later the court entered its findings of fact and conclusions of law in support of its original order reinstating benefits cut off by the employer. The Supreme Court agreed with the appellant/employer that the supplemental findings entered after the notice of appeal was filed could not be considered. The trial court had lost jurisdiction, except for ancillary matters, when the notice of appeal was filed. The order reinstating the claimant's benefits, determining that she was permanently totally disabled, and ordering the employer to pay a penalty and attorney fees was not an interim order because, unless appealed, it would have to be obeyed. Therefore, proper findings and conclusions were needed to support the order. A new hearing was ordered with discovery to be enforced against both parties. Churchhill v. Holly Sugar Corp., 192 M 533, 629 P2d 758, 38 St. Rep. 860 (1981).

Loss of District Court Jurisdiction Upon Filing Notice of Appeal — Findings and Conclusions Improperly Amended: In an action for damages resulting from the defendants' breach of contract by failing to complete the construction of a road for the plaintiff, the trial court committed reversible error in attempting to amend its findings of fact and conclusions of law after the defendants filed a notice of appeal. Since 1954 it has been the rule in Montana that when a notice of appeal is filed, personal and subject matter jurisdiction pass from the District Court to the Supreme Court. When the District Court amended its findings and conclusions after filing of the notice of appeal, it did so without jurisdiction and the amendments were therefore void. Julian v. Buckley, 191 M 487, 625 P2d 526, 38 St. Rep. 128 (1981). See also St. v. Arlington, 265 M 127, 875 P2d 307, 51 St. Rep. 417 (1994).

Motion to Set Aside Judgment — Jurisdiction Not Retained by District Court After Appeal Taken: When petitioner moved the District Court to set aside its judgment and thereafter filed a notice of appeal to the Supreme Court, the District Court properly asserted that it had no authority to rule on petitioner's motion. Upon a proper appeal being taken, jurisdiction of the cause passes to the Supreme Court, subject to the right of the District Court to correct clerical errors. N. Plains Resource Council v. Bd. of Health & Environmental Sciences, 184 M 466, 603 P2d 684 (1979), followed in Lewistown Propane Co. v. Moncur, 2003 MT 368, 319 M 105, 82 P3d 896 (2003).

Loss of Jurisdiction to Hear Motion to Dismiss: Where District Court signed an order extending time to file an appeal alleging excusable neglect and notice of appeal was filed the same day, District Court was without jurisdiction to grant a motion to dismiss said appeal as upon the original filing of notice of appeal. Supreme Court was given sole jurisdiction to determine propriety of appeal. McCormick v. McCormick, 168 M 136, 541 P2d 765 (1975).

EXCUSABLE NEGLECT

Filing Mistake Not Considered Extraordinary Circumstance Warranting Out-of-Time Appeal: Defendants petitioned the Supreme Court to allow filing of an out-of-time appeal because notice of appeal was sent to the Clerk of the District Court rather than to the Clerk of the Supreme Court, and by the time the error was discovered, the time for appeal had run. The Supreme Court noted that this rule allows out-of-time appeals only in the infrequent harsh case under extraordinary circumstances amounting to a gross miscarriage of justice and that extraordinary circumstances do not include mere mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect. The petition was denied. Mtn. W. Bank v. W. Skys Ltd. Co., 2008 MT 54, 341 M 448, 177 P3d 1052 (2008).

Denial of Motion for Extension of Time Allowed for Filing Notice of Appeal as Appealable Order — Applicability of Forty-Five-Day Rule: The denial of a motion made pursuant to subsection (a)(5) (now (c)) of former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), for an extension of the time allowed for filing a notice of appeal is an appealable order. However, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying plaintiff's extension request because the 45-day limit for filing a motion for relief from summary judgment, as set out in former Rules 59(d) and 60(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), had expired. It was the responsibility of plaintiff's counsel to be aware of the 45-day rule, and lack of knowledge of a clear rule of civil procedure is not an excuse for relief from the rules. Sadowsky v. Glendive, 259 M 419, 856 P2d 556, 50 St. Rep. 860 (1993), citing Shields v. Pirkle Refrigerated Freightlines, 181 M 37, 591 P2d 1120 (1979), and distinguishing Zell v. Zell, 172 M 496, 565 P2d 311 (1977).

Counsel's Busy Schedule: Counsel's busy schedule is not a basis for a finding of excusable neglect. In re Marriage of Bahm, 225 M 331, 732 P2d 846, 44 St. Rep. 279 (1987).

Excusable Neglect — Appeal Timely Filed: On September 11, 1984, defendant filed a motion to set aside a default judgment. Since no hearing was held within 10 days as required by former Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the motion was considered denied on September 21, 1984. Defendant filed a notice of appeal on October 26, 1984, 35 days after his motion was considered denied. Plaintiff contended the notice of appeal was not timely filed. However, the Supreme Court pointed out that upon a showing of excusable neglect, the District Court may extend the time for filing the notice of appeal by any party for a period not to exceed 30 days from the expiration of the original time prescribed by former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Defendant was granted an extension on October 26, 1984, upon a showing of excusable neglect. The notice of appeal was filed within the 30-day extension of time authorized by former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded); thus, it was timely filed. Milbank Mut. Ins. Co. v. Eagleman, 218 M 58, 705 P2d 1117, 42 St. Rep. 1393 (1985).

Motion to Vacate Considered Denied — Time for Filing Notice of Appeal: A motion to vacate judgment was served on May 22, 1981, was set for hearing and heard on June 30, 1981, and was denied on July 28, 1981. The defendant filed a notice of appeal on August 3, 1981. Because former Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), requires a motion to vacate to be heard within 10 days after its service, it was considered denied on June 1, 1981. The notice of appeal, therefore, was not timely because it was not filed within 30 days of denial of the motion to vacate. Lerum v. Logue, 198 M 194, 645 P2d 418, 39 St. Rep. 873 (1982).

Excusable Neglect — Motion for Extension Properly Denied: The reasoning of Winchell v. Lortscher, 377 P2d 247 (8th Cir. 1967), applies to the present case. Plaintiff's attorney had notice shortly after the judgment was entered. Plaintiff actually knew that the case had been decided against him. He knew that he had 30 days from the entry of judgment within which to file an appeal, and yet he waited approximately 8 weeks to contact his attorney. Given these factors, plus the fact that the attorney was served with the required notice, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in finding there was no excusable neglect. Neuringer v. Wortman, 186 M 298, 607 P2d 543 (1980).

Change of Mind: In determining what constitutes "excusable neglect", court held affidavit which reflected appellant decided not to appeal and then, after time for filing a notice of appeal lapsed, decided to appeal; this change of mind is not an extraordinary case for which an extension of time to file an appeal is allowed. McCormick v. McCormick, 168 M 136, 541 P2d 765 (1975), followed in In re Marriage of Bahm, 225 M 331, 732 P2d 846, 44 St. Rep. 279 (1987).

TIMELY FILING OF NOTICE

Appeal Raising Unconstitutional Self-Incrimination — Motion to Amend Judgment Subject to Normal Time Limits: Parrish was required to complete Phase II of the sex offender treatment program at Montana State Prison but argued that fulfilling the program requirement for disclosing his past criminal history was a violation of his constitutional right against self-incrimination. He petitioned the District Court for modification of his sentence, but the petition was denied as untimely. The Supreme Court held that the same time limitations for review of a judgment by a District Court applied to Parrish's petition to the District Court notwithstanding that Parrish had raised a constitutional issue concerning his sentence, those time limitations being the ones set forth in 46-18-116, 46-21-102, and Rule 4(5)(b)(i), M.R. App. P. Parrish filed his motion to amend judgment more than a year after the time for appeal to the Supreme Court had expired. St. v. Parrish, 2010 MT 196, 357 Mont. 375, 239 P.3d 957.

Amendment of Final Judgment — Jurisdiction of District Court to Determine Costs and Fees When No Entry of Final Judgment Filed: A party may appeal from a final judgment. A final judgment conclusively determines the rights of the parties and settles all claims in controversy in an action or proceeding, including any necessary determination of the amount of costs or attorney fees awarded or sanctions imposed. In this case, neither party served notice of entry of judgment, so the District Court retained jurisdiction to alter or amend the judgment because the 10-day period for filing a motion to amend the judgment had not begun to run. Thus, defendant's motion for an award of attorney fees was timely, even though it was filed almost 7 weeks after summary judgment, and the case was remanded for a determination of whether attorney fees were warranted and if so, the amount of the fees. Estate of Pruyn v. Axmen Propane, Inc., 2008 MT 329, 346 M 162, 194 P3d 650 (2008).

Statutory Time Period for Filing Appeal of Petition for Adding Lands to Irrigation District Superseded by Rules of Appellate Procedure: The District Court dismissed a petition to extend the boundaries of an irrigation district. One of the parties appealed, but the other party contended that the appeal should be dismissed because it was not filed within the 10-day statutory period set out in 85-7-1810. The Supreme Court disagreed. Under Art. VII, sec. 2, Mont. Const., the Supreme Court has rulemaking authority to govern the appellate process. The court established a 30-day period for filing civil appeals in former Rule 4, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), so the statutory timeframe in 85-7-1810 has been superseded. Because the appeal in this case was filed within the 30-day period, the appeal was timely. In re Formation of E. Bench Irrigation District, 2008 MT 210, 344 M 184, 186 P3d 1266 (2008).

Appeal Filed Within Sixty Days of Entry of Judgment Timely: Clark was convicted on March 23, and the written judgment was entered with the Clerk of Court on March 27. Clark filed an appeal on May 23 and an amended notice of appeal on May 25. The state contended that the appeal was untimely because it was not entered within 60 days of the conviction. The Supreme Court disagreed. In criminal cases, an appeal must be entered within 60 days of entry of judgment, not conviction. Clark's appeal was filed 57 days after the written judgment was entered, and the amended notice was filed 59 days after entry of judgment. Thus, the appeal was timely. St. v. Clark, 2008 MT 112, 342 M 461, 182 P3d 62 (2008).

District Court Retention of Criminal Jurisdiction — State's Appeal of Order Granting Driving Privileges Not Timely: A condition of Jivelekas's sentence for felony DUI and misdemeanor driving with a revoked or suspended license provided that Jivelekas could not drive unless approval was granted by the sentencing court or Jivelekas's supervising officer. Nearly 2 years after Jivelekas completed all terms of his sentence, he asked the District Court for approval to operate a motor vehicle in order to maintain full-time employment. The state contended that because 61-8-731 required that Jivelekas's probation officer authorize motor vehicle operation, the District Court did not have jurisdiction to consider Jivelekas's motion. The Supreme Court disagreed. Even if the District Court exceeded its statutory authority in imposing the sentence condition, the court still retained jurisdiction to entertain Jivelekas's motion. Additionally, the Supreme Court was precluded from addressing the merits of the state's argument because the state failed to file a timely appeal pursuant to former Rule 5(b), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), so the appeal was time-barred. St. v. Jivelekas, 2005 MT 277, 329 M 204, 122 P3d 1248 (2005), following Pena v. St., 2004 MT 293, 323 M 347, 100 P3d 154 (2004).

Time Limit for Appeal of Termination of Parental Rights Running From Service of Notice of Entry of Judgment — Laches Inapplicable: The District Court determined that a mother abandoned her children and terminated the mother's parental rights; however, the mother was never served with notice of entry of judgment regarding the termination. The mother moved to vacate or void the order and requested a hearing on the termination, but the motion was denied. The state contended that further consideration of the issue was barred by 42-2-620 or by laches. The Supreme Court disagreed that the mother's appeal was barred by 42-2-620 because the statute does not alter the filing period for timely appeals but merely sets a 6-month time limit on all other challenges to orders terminating parental rights. Rather, former Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), applied. The rule requires service of notice of entry of judgment, and former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), provided that the 60-day time limit for appeals did not apply until service of notice of entry of judgment, but the mother was never served. The equitable doctrine of laches also did not apply because the state failed to discharge its simple affirmative duty to notify the mother of entry of judgment. Thus, the mother's appeal was timely. In re T.H. & C.D.F., 2005 MT 237, 328 M 428, 121 P3d 541 (2005), clarifying In re P.D.L., 2004 MT 346, 324 M 327, 102 P3d 1225 (2004).

Appeal of Appointment of Personal Representative Not Timely: The District Court appointed a son as personal representative of his mother's estate and ordered that letters of administration be issued to him, and his sister appealed the appointment. Pursuant to In re Estate of Peterson, 264 M 104, 874 P2d 1230 (1994), the Supreme Court reviewed the appointment to determine whether the District Court correctly interpreted the law. Under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), an order granting letters of administration was appealable, but former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), provided that an aggrieved party had 30 days from the date of entry of an order to file a notice of appeal. By the time that the sister appealed, her brother had been personal representative of the estate for 14 months, so the appeal was not timely. In re Estate of McMurchie, 2004 MT 98, 321 M 21, 89 P3d 18 (2004).

Conversion of Probate Proceeding From Informal to Formal Proceeding and Effect of Failure to Give Proper Notices: When the personal representative of an estate in informal proceedings petitioned for judicial approval of his final account and for the settlement and distribution of the estate, the proceeding was converted into a formal proceeding for those purposes. The Montana Rules of Civil Procedure apply to formal proceedings. The bank, which was a creditor of the estate and filed a claim against the estate, was entitled to notice of the hearing on the petition and entitled to an opportunity to appear and contest. Because the notice was not given, the court's decree was void and reversed as to the bank. The bank was also entitled to notice of the entry of the formal estate decree, and because that notice was not given, the 30-day time period for the bank to appeal did not run and the bank's appeal, filed after that period, was timely. In re Estate of Spencer, 2002 MT 304, 313 M 40, 59 P3d 1160 (2002).

Failure of Counsel to Preserve Defendant's Request for Appeal Prejudicial Per Se — Out-of-Time Appeal Appropriate Remedy: Despite a request to do so, Tweed's counsel failed to file a timely appeal of Tweed's sexual abuse conviction. Counsel did not intentionally abandon the appeal; rather, the failure was unintentional and resulted from a filing oversight and miscommunication. Nevertheless, the error was prejudicial per se and constituted ineffective assistance of counsel in violation of Tweed's constitutional rights. The failure to timely appeal was excusable, and because postconviction proceedings were considered an inadequate remedy, the Supreme Court decided that an out-of-time appeal was the appropriate remedy and, being in possession of a sufficient record, proceeded to consider the merits of the appeal. St. v. Tweed, 2002 MT 286, 312 M 482, 59 P3d 1105 (2002), following St. v. Rogers, 2001 MT 165, 306 M 130, 32 P3d 724 (2001).

Out-of-Time Appeal in Criminal Matters — Exclusive Jurisdiction With Supreme Court: Under 46-20-101, the only method for review in criminal cases is by notice of appeal. Time limits for filing an appeal are mandatory and jurisdictional. If a defendant takes no action to perfect an appeal within 90 days of judgment, the District Court loses its jurisdiction and the appeal is out-of-time. However, an out-of-time appeal is a remedy that may be available to a criminal defendant who, through no fault of the defendant, misses a deadline for filing an appeal. Although former Rule 21(b), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), precludes an out-of-time appeal in a civil case, the Supreme Court is not precluded from addressing a motion for an out-of-time appeal in a criminal case. Further, a District Court lacks jurisdiction to grant an out-of-time appeal. The Supreme Court has exclusive jurisdiction to grant a motion for an out-of-time appeal, and the motion is considered an original proceeding subject to the provisions of former Rule 17, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Upon a showing that the failure to timely notice a criminal appeal was excusable under the circumstances, the Supreme Court may conclude that an out-of-time appeal is the appropriate remedy pursuant to former Rule 21(b), M.R.App.P. (now superseded). In that event, the matter will be remanded to the District Court with instructions to vacate and reenter judgment to afford the defendant a second opportunity to act within the statutory timeframes for filing notice of appeal. St. v. Tweed, 2002 MT 286, 312 M 482, 59 P3d 1105 (2002).

Time Bar on Writ of Certiorari to Review Contempt Proceedings: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court was asked to establish a timeframe within which a petition for review of a contempt order must be filed. The issue was whether the time limitation should come from Title 25, which includes the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure and the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure, or from Title 27, which prescribes the various statutes of limitation for the commencement of actions. The court noted that there is no appeal, as such, from an order of contempt in a civil proceeding and that the exclusive method of review of civil contempt orders (with certain exceptions) is through a writ of certiorari or writ of review. That review is generally limited to jurisdictional questions and whether evidence supports the contempt. Therefore, the issue of timeliness for filing a petition for a writ of certiorari or review is not a statute of limitations issue, and to mechanically characterize those writs for the review of contempt proceedings as original proceedings governed by the 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231 would be to deny the basic nature of appellate review. Further, petitions for writs of certiorari to review contempt proceedings are fundamentally different from other original proceedings commenced in the Supreme Court and from petitions for writs of supervisory control, which do not so much involve appellate review of and a decision on the underlying proceedings as they involve the court dealing with discreet questions of law during the pendency of the underlying proceedings. Because the timeframe in which to file petitions for writs of certiorari to review contempt proceedings is a procedural issue analogous to the procedure for filing a notice of appeal, the Supreme Court held that former Rule 72, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), former Rule 17, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and 27-25-103 require that the timeframe for those petitions be determined by the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure. Specifically, pursuant to former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), a petition for a writ of certiorari to review contempt proceedings must be filed with the Clerk of the District Court within 30 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding, unless the state is a party, in which case the petition must be filed within 60 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding. This may not be construed to limit the Supreme Court's power to grant writs of supervisory control or to consider applications for other types of original proceedings. The Supreme Court chose not to establish a precedent that allows contempt proceedings to be delayed until the underlying cause is resolved. Jones v. District Court, 2001 MT 276, 307 M 305, 37 P3d 682 (2001), overruling Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937), to the extent that Shaffroth holds that the general 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231 applies to all writs of review authorized in 27-25-102.

Petition for Postconviction Relief Both Procedurally and Time Barred: Wells pleaded guilty to felony assault, and the District Court entered its written judgment and sentence on January 2, 1998. Wells did not appeal, and the time for filing an appeal expired 60 days later, on March 3, 1998, which became the date of final conviction. In order to come within the 1-year period for a petition for postconviction relief, Wells needed to file by March 3, 1999, but the petition was not filed until December 22, 1999, when Wells asserted a double jeopardy claim for weapons enhancement based on St. v. Guillaume, 1999 MT 29, 293 M 224, 975 P2d 312 (1999). The District Court dismissed the petition as untimely. Wells argued on appeal that the 1-year limitation is not a jurisdictional limitation, but rather a statute of limitations subject to equitable tolling, and contended that a tolling should be applied to the time period that Wells was incarcerated in New Mexico without adequate legal assistance. The Supreme Court recalled the holding in St. v. Rosales, 2000 MT 89, 299 M 226, 999 P2d 313 (2000), when it was held that the postconviction statute of limitations is indeed a jurisdictional limit on litigation to be waived only if there is a clear miscarriage of justice and defendant alleges newly discovered evidence that defendant did not commit the offense. Wells presented no new evidence of innocence. Further, Wells could have raised the Guillaume claim on direct appeal, but did not. Wells' petition was thus both procedurally and time-barred. St. v. Wells, 2001 MT 55, 304 M 329, 21 P3d 610 (2001), overruled in St. v. Whitehorn, 2002 MT 54, 309 M 63, 43 P3d 922 (2002), to the extent that Wells was barred from raising a double jeopardy claim in a petition for postconviction relief pursuant to 46-21-105 for failing to raise the issue on direct appeal.

Lack of Objection to Expert Testimony on Hedonic Damages — Testimony Allowed: In order to preserve an objection to the admission of evidence for purposes of appeal, the objecting party must make a timely objection and state specific grounds for the objection. To be timely, an objection must be made as soon as the grounds for the objection become apparent. Here, defendant became aware at least 1 year before trial that plaintiff intended to introduce expert testimony regarding plaintiff's hedonic damages for loss of enjoyment of life, but failed to file a motion in limine at that time seeking to have the evidence excluded. Defendant had another opportunity to object to introduction of the evidence when the District Court issued its pretrial order listing witnesses and exhibits to be used at trial, but defendant failed to object until the second day of trial. Thus, the court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the expert testimony because of the lack of a timely and specific objection or in denying defendant's motion for a new trial on grounds that the admission of the evidence resulted in an unfair trial and excessive damages. Hunt v. K-Mart Corp., 1999 MT 125, 294 M 444, 981 P2d 275, 56 St. Rep. 503 (1999), following Kizer v. Semitool, Inc., 251 M 199, 824 P2d 229, 48 St. Rep. 1115 (1991).

No Distinction Between Civil and Criminal Appellants With Regard to Filing of Timely Notice of Appeal: Roullier neglected to file notice of appeal of his criminal case in the District Court within the 60-day period required by subsection (b) of former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). The state cited the lack in former subsection (b) of a provision, similar to that for civil cases in subsection (a) of former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), that permits notice of an appeal mistakenly filed in the Supreme Court to be considered filed in the District Court on the date that it was filed in the Supreme Court and contended therefore that timely filing in the Supreme Court was of no significance and that the Supreme Court lacked jurisdiction to consider the merits of Roullier's mistakenly filed appeal. Citing an interpretation of identical Rule 4, Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure, in Brannan v. U.S., 993 F2d 709 (9th Cir. 1993), the Supreme Court found no rational basis for distinguishing between civil and criminal appellants in this procedural regard. Thus, when a criminal appellant has mistakenly filed a notice in the Supreme Court but has done so within the 60-day period established in former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and has complied with the rules in substantive respects, the criminal appellant will be given the same opportunity as the civil appellant to have the appeal determined on its merits. St. v. Roullier, 1999 MT 37, 293 M 304, 977 P2d 970, 56 St. Rep. 157 (1999).

"Motion for Reconsideration" — Procedural Trap for Unwary and Grave Risk to Meritorious Appeal — Criteria to Equate With Motion to Alter or Amend: Stephen Nelson filed a motion for reconsideration of the District Court's grant of the defendant's motion for summary judgment based on a later-decided Third Circuit Court of Appeals case. Stephen contended that the motion was filed to allow the District Court to alter or amend its judgment to correct its mistake of law. The motion for reconsideration was denied, and Stephen filed a notice of appeal more than 60 days after the notice of entry of judgment but within 60 days from the denial of the motion for reconsideration. The defendant moved for dismissal of the appeal, contending that it had not been timely filed under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), on the grounds that a motion for reconsideration is not a motion to alter or amend under former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court, warning against the use of motions for reconsideration, established criteria under which to evaluate the motions. When a motion for reconsideration substantively addresses one of the following areas, the court is more likely to conclude that the motion is actually a motion to alter or amend under former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded): (1) to correct manifest errors of law or fact upon which the judgment was based; (2) to raise newly discovered or previously unavailable evidence; (3) to prevent manifest injustice resulting from, among other things, serious misconduct of counsel; or (4) to bring to the court's attention an intervening change in controlling law. The Supreme Court denied the motion to dismiss. Nelson v. Driscoll, 285 M 355, 948 P2d 256, 54 St. Rep. 1190 (1997), followed in Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2001 MT 59, 304 M 356, 22 P3d 631 (2001).

Criminal Case — Court Modification of Sentence — No Extension of Time to Appeal: In a 1995 suspended sentence order, the defendant was ordered to pay restitution and was restricted from entering Cascade County. When the court modified the sentence in 1997 to order additional payment of restitution, the defendant appealed the order to remain out of Cascade County. The Supreme Court held that the modification of restitution did not reimpose the conditions of the suspended sentence and did not create a new sentence from which the defendant could appeal. St. v. Richards, 285 M 322, 948 P2d 240, 54 St. Rep. 1172 (1997).

Time Limit for Filing Cross-Appeal Jurisdictional, Not Discretionary With Court: The respondent requested permission to file a cross-appeal 52 days after the first notice of appeal was filed by the appellant. The Supreme Court ruled that the time limit for filing a cross-appeal in Montana is jurisdictional and that the respondent's failure to file the cross-appeal within the 14-day limit precludes the Supreme Court from considering the motion for leave to file a cross-appeal. Joseph Eve & Co. v. Allen, 284 M 511, 945 P2d 897, 54 St. Rep. 987 (1997).

Motion for Reconsideration Held Not to Be Motion to Alter or Amend Judgment — Subsection (a)(1) of Former Rule 5, (Now Superseded) Held Applicable — Notice of Appeal Filed Before Receipt of Notice of Entry of Judgment Not Premature: In an action to enforce the Individuals With Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), the Shieldses filed a motion for reconsideration shortly after the District Court dismissed their first amended complaint. Before the District Court ruled on the motion for reconsideration, the Shieldses filed a notice of appeal. The defendants claimed that the motion for reconsideration should be treated as a motion to alter or amend judgment under former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and that because subsection (a)(4) of former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), specifies that a notice of appeal filed before the disposition of a motion to alter or amend judgment has no effect until the motion to alter or amend judgment is disposed of, the Shieldses' notice of appeal was ineffective. The Supreme Court noted that a motion for reconsideration is not one of the motions provided for or authorized by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. The Supreme Court reviewed the substance of the motion for reconsideration to determine whether, under Haugen v. Blaine Bank of Mont., 279 M 1, 926 P2d 1364 (1996), the motion could be treated as a motion to alter or amend judgment and held that the motion could not be so treated. Because the motion could not be treated as a motion to alter or amend judgment, the time for the Shieldses to file a notice of appeal was governed by subsection (a)(1) of former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and not by subsection (a)(4) of former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Under subsection (a)(1) of former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), the Shieldses had 30 days from the time of notice of entry of judgment under former Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), in which to file their notice of appeal. However, the Supreme Court also noted that there was nothing in the Montana their notice of appeal earlier than provided under former Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P. and for that reason, the Supreme Court held the filing of the notice of appeal to be effective. Shields v. Helena School District No. 1, 284 M 138, 943 P2d 999, 54 St. Rep. 815 (1997).

Time for Appeal Not Tolled During Extra Time Granted to File Brief in Support of Posttrial Motion: A District Court cannot grant extensions under former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), for additional briefing time and must rule on a former Rule 59(g) motion to amend a judgment within the time allotted without regard to the status of the briefing. If the court does not rule on the motion within the allotted time, the motion is considered denied. The court's grant of a 16-day extension of time in which to file a brief in support of the motion did not suspend for 16 days the time allotted for appeal. Failure to file a notice of appeal within the allotted time was an absolute jurisdictional bar to Montana Supreme Court consideration of the appeal. Challinor v. Glacier Nat'l Bank, 283 M 342, 943 P2d 83, 54 St. Rep. 520 (1997).

Time for Filing Appeal When Required Service of Notice of Entry of Judgment Not Made: As the prevailing party, defendants were required by former Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), to serve plaintiffs with notice of entry of judgment. Under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), when such a notice is required, the time for filing a notice of appeal is within 30 days after service of the notice of entry of judgment. Because defendants failed to serve plaintiffs with a notice of entry of judgment, the 30 days never began to run. Therefore, notice of appeal filed on November 8, 1995, from an order filed on August 29, 1995, was timely. Haugen v. Blaine Bank of Mont., 279 M 1, 926 P2d 1364, 53 St. Rep. 1024 (1996).

Judgment as Including Sentence — Sentence Not Strictly Premised on Punishment: A defendant has 60 days under subsection (b) of former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), to appeal a final judgment. Although prior to the 1991 enactment of 46-1-202, "sentence" was interpreted as being the same as "punishment", 46-1-202 now defines a sentence as any judicial disposition of a criminal proceeding upon a plea, verdict, or finding of guilt. The judicial disposition is itself a sentence regardless of whether actual punishment is deferred or imposed immediately. This broader definition applies to deferment cases, but in double jeopardy cases, the narrower meaning premised on the punishment factor still applies. Therefore, a judgment that includes a deferred sentence is final for purposes of appeal, and an appeal filed more that 60 days after sentencing was dismissed as untimely. St. v. Rice, 275 M 81, 910 P2d 245, 53 St. Rep. 48 (1996), followed in St. v. Woods, 286 M 355, 951 P2d 981, 54 St. Rep. 1445 (1997), and Davis v. St., 2004 MT 112, 321 M 118, 88 P3d 1285 (2004).

Child Custody Dispositional Hearing — Timely Filed Notice of Appeal: In a dispositional hearing on petitions by the Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) and former foster parents for permanent custody of a child, the District Court dismissed the foster parents' petition and mailed denial on August 25. The foster parents filed an objection and motion to amend the court's order, which was considered denied 45 days later after the court failed to rule on the motion. Notice of appeal, which was filed on November 26, was well within the 60-day period provided for in former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). When a motion is made to alter or amend a judgment pursuant to former Rule 52 or former Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the time for filing a notice of appeal runs from the entry of an order in which the motion is denied or from the time that the motion is considered denied at the expiration of the 45-day period. In re J.J.G., 266 M 274, 880 P2d 808, 51 St. Rep. 793 (1994).

Calendaring Error — "Good Cause" and "Excusable Neglect" Properly Applied to Allow Late Filing: Following judgment, Dvoraks made a motion for extension of time in which to file a notice of appeal. The motion was made after expiration of the 30-day limit provided in former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). The District Court granted Dvoraks's motion for an extension of time. Northwest appealed from the District Court's order, arguing that the District Court should not have found either good cause or excusable neglect based upon Dvoraks's counsel's failure to properly calendar the motion. Citing Pioneer Inv. Serv. Co. v. Brunswick Associates Ltd. Partnership, 507 US 380, 123 L Ed 2d 74, 113 S Ct 1489 (1993), the Supreme Court held that the District Court properly construed the rule and had more opportunity to judge the good faith of counsel and prejudice to Dvoraks. NW. Truck & Trailer Sales, Inc. v. Dvorak, 265 M 327, 877 P2d 31, 51 St. Rep. 564 (1994).

Grant of Motion for Extension of Time for Appeal as Appealable Order: The District Court granted Dvoraks's motion for an extension of time in which to file a notice of appeal. Northwest appealed from the District Court's order. Dvoraks claimed that the order was not appealable because it was not specifically set forth in former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Citing Sadowsky v. Glendive, 259 M 419, 856 P2d 556 (1993), the Supreme Court held that an order extending the time to file a notice of appeal was a "special order made after final judgment" within the language of former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). NW. Truck & Trailer Sales, Inc. v. Dvorak, 265 M 327, 877 P2d 31, 51 St. Rep. 564 (1994).

Former Rule 5(c) "Good Cause" Construed — Extension of Time Because of Calendaring Error Properly Allowed: The District Court granted Dvoraks's motion for an extension of time in which to file a notice of appeal. Northwest appealed from the District Court's order. Northwest argued that the District Court should have construed the "good cause" standard of subsection (c) of former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded) in a manner similar to the construction of Rule 4 of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure given in Oreg. v. Champion Int'l Corp., 680 F2d 1300 (9th Cir. 1982), in which the court held that "good cause" applies only to motions made within the 30-day limit of the rule. Citing Kizer v. Semitool, Inc., 251 M 199, 824 P2d 229 (1991), the Supreme Court rejected Northwest's argument and allowed the filing of the motion for extension made after the 30-day limit. NW. Truck & Trailer Sales, Inc. v. Dvorak, 265 M 327, 877 P2d 31, 51 St. Rep. 564 (1994).

Denial of Motion to Set Aside Default as Final Judgment — Appeal Timely Filed: An order made after final judgment setting aside or refusing to vacate a default judgment is a special order that may be considered by the Supreme Court on appeal. During a hearing on a motion to set aside default, the District Court denied the motion, thus making a final determination of the parties' rights. An appeal perfected and filed within 30 days of dismissal of the motion was timely. In re Marriage of Martin, 265 M 95, 874 P2d 1219, 51 St. Rep. 443 (1994).

Interplay Between Time for Filing Notice of Appeal and Time for Filing Motion to Amend or Alter Judgment: District Courts retain jurisdiction to consider and resolve timely motions to alter or amend filed pursuant to former Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), or former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). A notice of appeal filed under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), prior to the expiration of the time allowed for motions to alter or amend but followed by such motions timely filed has no effect. Shull v. First Interstate Bank of Great Falls, 262 M 355, 864 P2d 1268, 50 St. Rep. 1594 (1993).

Denial of Motion for Extension of Time Allowed for Filing Notice of Appeal as Appealable Order — Applicability of Forty-Five-Day Rule: The denial of a motion made pursuant to subsection (a)(5) (now (c)) of former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), for an extension of the time allowed for filing a notice of appeal is an appealable order. However, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying plaintiff's extension request because the 45-day limit for filing a motion for relief from summary judgment, as set out in former Rules 59(d) and 60(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), had expired. It was the responsibility of plaintiff's counsel to be aware of the 45-day rule, and lack of knowledge of a clear rule of civil procedure is not an excuse for relief from the rules. Sadowsky v. Glendive, 259 M 419, 856 P2d 556, 50 St. Rep. 860 (1993), citing Shields v. Pirkle Refrigerated Freightlines, 181 M 37, 591 P2d 1120 (1979), and distinguishing Zell v. Zell, 172 M 496, 565 P2d 311 (1977).

Failure to Perfect Appeal Within Time Limits as Precluding Jurisdiction: Failure to perfect an appeal within the time limits provided by law prevents the Supreme Court from acquiring jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. First Sec. Bank of Havre v. Harmon, 255 M 168, 841 P2d 521, 49 St. Rep. 955 (1992), followed in In re Marriage of Yeanuzzi, 2001 MT 171, 306 M 163, 30 P3d 1095 (2001). See also St. v. Shockley, 2001 MT 180, 306 M 196, 31 P3d 350 (2001).

Extension of Time to File Notice Granted — Notice Timely Filed: After a District Court jury awarded the plaintiff employee judgment, the employer, Semitool, Inc., filed a notice of appeal. The Supreme Court held that the notice of appeal was timely filed because Semitool had filed and the District Court had granted a motion to extend the time for filing its notice. Under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), the time for filing the notice may be extended by the District Court if a motion to extend is filed within 30 days of expiration of the time for filing the notice and good cause is shown. It was unclear to counsel for Semitool whether counsel's posttrial motions had been denied from the bench or would be denied later in writing. The District Court found this to be good cause for extension of the time to file and granted the motion for extension. Filing within the extended time period therefore perfected the appeal. Kizer v. Semitool, Inc., 251 M 199, 824 P2d 229, 48 St. Rep. 1115 (1991).

Jurisdiction When Notice of Appeal Prematurely Filed: In order to prevent taking jurisdiction away from a District Court prior to the disposition of all matters before it, subsection (a)(4) of former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), provides that a prematurely filed notice of appeal has no effect. Therefore, a notice of appeal that is filed too early does not vest jurisdiction in the Supreme Court, but rather leaves jurisdiction in the District Court. Plains & Prairie Implement, Inc. v. Ag-Management & Associates, 243 M 235, 794 P2d 332, 47 St. Rep. 933 (1990).

More Than One "Prevailing Party" — Effect of Failure to Timely File Notice of Entry of Judgment — Appeal Allowed: Where the plaintiff was successful in his claim for conversion and the defendant was successful in his counterclaim for trespass, both parties were considered to have prevailed and both parties were responsible for the failure to technically comply with the filing requirements of the Rules of Civil Procedure. The defendant could not enforce technical compliance with the filing requirements of former Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), against the plaintiff when he had not complied with the same requirements. In this case, the time limitations for filing an appeal began to run on the date the plaintiff filed a notice of entry of judgment, 71 days after judgment on the posttrial motions. The appeal, filed on the same day, was timely filed, and the Supreme Court had jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Kenney v. Koch, 227 M 155, 737 P2d 491, 44 St. Rep. 960 (1987).

Standing of Attorney General to Appeal P.S.C. Order — P.S.C. Appeal Untimely: The Montana Power Company (M.P.C.) applied to the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) for a rate increase of over $96.3 million. The P.S.C. granted only $4.1 million and denied in toto M.P.C.'s request to recover costs associated with Colstrip Unit 3. The M.P.C. appealed to District Court for review under 2-4-701. The judge reversed the P.S.C. order. The Attorney General filed notice of appeal. More than 60 days after the judge's order was entered, the P.S.C. also filed notice of appeal. The M.P.C. filed a motion to dismiss the appeal of the Attorney General for lack of standing and the appeal of the P.S.C. as untimely. The Supreme Court granted the motion, holding that the Attorney General had no standing to represent the state on appeal since it was not an aggrieved party or a party to the proceedings before the District Court and because, in his official capacity, the Attorney General may not appeal a decision that is within the discretion of the P.S.C. as a party to the action. The appeal of the P.S.C. was untimely, although within 7 days of the notice of appeal filed by the Attorney General. The latter appeal being invalid, the P.S.C. appeal would have to fall within the 60-day rule. Mont. Power Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 218 M 471, 709 P2d 995, 42 St. Rep. 1750 (1985).

Notice of Denial of Motion Not Required — Appeal Period: Appellant's posttrial motion for a new trial was considered denied upon failure of the District Court to rule on it for 45 days, under former Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). No notice of such denial is required under former Rule 5, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The 30-day period for appeal under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), begins to run upon expiration of the 45-day period of former Rule 59(d). Mortensen Constr. Co. v. Burlington N., Inc., 218 M 415, 708 P2d 1006, 42 St. Rep. 1699 (1985).

Notice Timely Filed: Under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), a party has 30 days to file a notice of appeal after a motion to set aside a default judgment is denied or after denial by operation of law. In the present case, the motion to set aside the default judgment was filed on September 14, 1984, under former Rules 55(c) and 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Former Rule 60(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), provides that motions filed pursuant to former Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), shall be heard and determined within the times provided by former Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). That Rule requires that a hearing on the motion shall be had within 10 days after it has been served. Here the motion was filed on September 14 and the hearing set for September 17, well within the 10-day limit. The court initially continued the hearing to October 11, which was within the 30-day limit prescribed by former Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The court then continued the hearing beyond the 30-day limit to November 26. As a result, the motion to vacate the default judgment was considered denied on October 17. The appellant then filed the notice of appeal on October 24, well within the 30-day period under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). The notice of appeal was timely filed. In re Marriage of Neneman, 217 M 155, 703 P2d 164, 42 St. Rep. 1095 (1985).

Timely Hearing on Motion to Amend — Appeal Timely: A hearing on a motion to amend a judgment was within the 40 days which former Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), allows for such hearing. The notice of appeal filed under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), was filed exactly 30 days from the denial of the motion for amendment of the judgment. Therefore, the notice of appeal was timely filed. Redinger v. French, 216 M 16, 699 P2d 94, 42 St. Rep. 604 (1985).

Late Appeal — New Grounds for Argument Below — Failure to Argue on Appeal: The merits of appellants' arguments in support of removal of personal representative of an estate could not be considered on appeal from denial of final order denying motion to remove when: (1) since the order was final and appealable, it had to be appealed within 30 days of notice of its entry; (2) appeal was filed 34 days after notice of entry of the order; and (3) though appellants had, within the 30 days prior to their notice of appeal, filed a second petition for removal that raised a new ground for removal, appellants did not argue that failure to raise the ground earlier was excusable because of inadvertence, excusable neglect, or newly discovered evidence, and the lower court found appellants had earlier been in possession of all the facts. The order was conclusive as to all matters that could have been raised under the issues raised in the original petition for removal. In re Pegg's Estate, 209 M 71, 680 P2d 316, 41 St. Rep. 558 (1984).

Order Denying Venue Change Motion — Time Period for Appeal Calculated From Time of Service of Notice of Entry of Judgment: Former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), provided that ordinarily an appeal from a judgment or an order must be filed within 30 days of its entry. In this case the order denying defendant's motion to change venue was entered on December 8, 1982, and notice of appeal was not filed until April 25, 1983. However, the rule further provides that in cases where service of notice of entry of judgment is required by former Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the 30 days are to be counted from the date of service of the notice of entry of judgment. Here notice of the denial of the motion was given to defendant on April 4, 1983, so defendant's notice of appeal was timely. Tanniehill v. Remington Arms Co., 207 M 501, 675 P2d 948, 41 St. Rep. 103 (1984).

Technical Compliance With Rule on Notice of Entry of Judgment Required: It is the filing of the notice of entry of judgment that begins the running of the time limitations for filing a notice of appeal. Even though findings of fact, conclusions of law, and a decree were mailed to the parties by the Clerk of Court, no notice of entry of judgment was filed, and the time for filing a notice of appeal did not begin to run at that time. Morrison v. Higbee, 204 M 515, 668 P2d 1025, 40 St. Rep. 1031 (1983).

Motion Objecting to Costs — No Suspension of Time for Filing Notice of Appeal: On October 9, 1981, 1 day after the entry of judgment against the plaintiff in a quiet title action, the plaintiff filed a motion objecting to the defendant's memorandum of costs, which motion was noticed for hearing but the hearing was never held. Following the filing of a notice of appeal by the plaintiff on January 26, 1982, the Supreme Court held it did not have jurisdiction of the appeal because the 30-day period for the filing of the notice of appeal is not suspended by the filing of a motion objecting to costs. Time for appeal therefore expired on November 9, 1981. O'Connell v. Heisdorf, 202 M 89, 656 P2d 199, 39 St. Rep. 2347 (1982).

Motion to Amend Judgment Untimely Filed — Expiration of Time for Appeal: After the plaintiff and defendant stipulated to costs in a quiet title action, an amended judgment was entered by the District Court on October 29, 1981, but on November 13, the plaintiff filed a motion to amend judgment. On appeal by the plaintiff, the Supreme Court held that inasmuch as the motion to amend judgment was not timely filed, the motion did not suspend the running of the time for appeal, and that because the running of the time for filing an appeal had not been suspended, the notice of appeal was filed too late and the court lacked jurisdiction of the appeal. O'Connell v. Heisdorf, 202 M 89, 656 P2d 199, 39 St. Rep. 2347 (1982).

Motion to Amend Judgment Considered Denied Before Hearing — Untimely Appeal: Notice of entry of judgment against appellant was served on him on November 6, 1981. On November 20, 1981, he filed a motion to amend the findings. He did not file a notice of hearing on the motion. The motion was heard on February 1, 1982, and denied on February 2, 1982. Later in February, appellant filed a notice of appeal. The Supreme Court held that appellant's notice was not timely and dismissed the appeal. Under former Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), a motion to amend a judgment is considered denied at the end of the time period in which a hearing on the motion must be held. A hearing must be held within 10 days after the motion is filed. Therefore, appellant's motion was considered denied on November 30, 1981, and the notice of appeal was not timely. Fields v. Summit Eng'r, 201 M 204, 653 P2d 1204, 39 St. Rep. 2057 (1982). See also Redinger v. French, 216 M 16, 699 P2d 94, 42 St. Rep. 604 (1985).

Notice of Entry of Judgment Served by Mail — Effect on Time for Appeal:

The final notice of entry of judgment was mailed on November 5. Former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), required an appeal to be taken within 30 days after the service of the notice of entry of judgment. A notice of appeal was filed on December 7. Although more than 30 days had passed, allowing 3 days for the mailing of the notice of entry of judgment, the notice of appeal was filed within the 30-day requirement. Rudio v. Yellowstone Merchandising Corp., 200 M 537, 652 P2d 1163, 39 St. Rep. 1923 (1982).

Where, following a judgment for the defendants, one of whom was the city of Lewistown, the defendants served notice of entry of the judgment upon the plaintiffs by mail on June 13, that notice, for purposes of calculating the 60-day time limit for appeal under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), became effective on June 16 by operation of former Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). A notice of appeal filed on August 13 was therefore timely filed 2 days before the 60-day time limit had expired. Lewistown Propane Co. v. Util. Builders, Inc., 170 M 292, 552 P2d 1100 (1976).

Challenge of Decree and Property Settlement After Six Years — Res Judicata: A property settlement and decree entered in 1974 cannot be set aside in 1980 on the grounds of unconscionability. The failure of the spouse to appeal the court's decree in 1974 has rendered the issue res judicata. Hadford v. Hadford, 194 M 518, 633 P2d 1181, 38 St. Rep. 1308 (1981).

Late Entry of Order Granting Extension: The time for filing the notice of appeal from District Court may, upon a showing of excusable neglect, be extended for up to 30 days. However, that period is added to the initial 30 days, plus 3 days for mailing. Even though the Clerk of the Court neglected to send notice of entry of judgment to defendant's cocounsel in Missouri, which may have caused confusion constituting excusable neglect, the order granting an extension of time was not even entered until after the 63-day period, was beyond the limits of former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and was therefore erroneous. NW. Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Agra-Steel Corp., 193 M 437, 632 P2d 330, 38 St. Rep. 1257 (1981), followed in In re M.B., L.B., & F.B., 282 M 150, 935 P2d 1129, 54 St. Rep. 291 (1997). See also St. v. Garner, 1999 MT 295, 297 M 89, 990 P2d 175, 56 St. Rep. 1180 (1999).

Appeal From Workers' Compensation Court — Starting Point for the Period for Filing of Appeal: For an appeal from a final decision of the Workers' Compensation Judge to be filed in the manner provided by law for appeals from the District Court in civil cases, there must be a date that is the starting point for the period for filing notice of appeal under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). In that there is no judgment book in the Workers' Compensation Court in which to enter the judgment and therefore there can be no notice of entry of judgment, the court established, under the powers granted by Art. VII, sec. 2, Mont. Const., that the date on which a decision becomes final under ARM 2.52.222 (now repealed) shall be the starting point for the period for filing the notice of appeal. In this case the court therefore had jurisdiction over the appeal. McMahon v. The Anaconda Co., 38 St. Rep. 1233 (1981) (apparently not reported in Pacific Reporter or Montana Reports but consolidated for purposes of appeal with second case filed by plaintiff against defendant and reported at 678 P2d 661 (1984)).

Order Denying Motion for Relief From Default Judgment Properly Appealed — Special Appearance Abolished: When the defendant honey processing company twice moved to vacate and dismiss a default judgment obtained against it by the plaintiff honey producing company, the Supreme Court had jurisdiction over an appeal from the District Court's denial of the second motion to vacate and dismiss. The defendant's first motion was untimely filed, and the fact that it was brought to challenge the personal jurisdiction of the court and characterized as a "special appearance" is of no effect, as special appearances have been abolished and the same requirements for timely appeal applies to all appearances. The second motion was properly appealable as it is considered denied, which denial is a final order, if the court has not ruled on the motion within 15 days after submission. Foster Apiaries, Inc. v. Hubbard Apiaries, Inc., 193 M 156, 630 P2d 1213, 38 St. Rep. 1025 (1981).

Jurisdiction Over Appeal of Untimely Modification Order: The lower court order modified the findings of fact and conclusions of law more than 15 days after submission of appellant's posttrial motions. By exceeding the time period mandated by former Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the District Court divested itself of jurisdiction to determine the motion, and its order was a nullity. The original notice of appeal from the second decree, based on that order, was untimely under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction as to the second decree. However, the jurisdictional defect is cured by the appellants having lodged an appeal to the first decree. Sell v. Sell, 193 M 88, 630 P2d 222, 38 St. Rep. 956 (1981).

Time for Appeal Following Motion for New Trial Made Without Hearing — Time Limits of Rules Jurisdictional Regardless of Stipulation: Where, following a judgment against the defendant for damages caused by fraudulent misrepresentation and breach of warranty, the defendant and plaintiff orally agreed to waive the hearing on defendant's motion for a new trial, filed on April 23, and denied by the court on May 15, the defendant's notice of appeal filed on June 12 was untimely and the plaintiff's motion to dismiss the appeal was granted. Because no hearing was held on the motion for a new trial, the motion was considered denied, under former Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), 10 days after it was made and the time for appeal expired on June 2. The defendant's argument that the stipulation meant the motion for a new trial would be considered submitted "at the completion of briefing" cannot extend the time for the court's ruling, as the time limits imposed by the rules of procedure are mandatory and the parties may not by stipulation confer jurisdiction on the court beyond the time provided by the rules. Marvel Brute Steel Building, Inc. v. Bass, 189 M 480, 616 P2d 380, 37 St. Rep. 1670 (1980), distinguished in In re Marriage of Bryant, 276 M 317, 916 P2d 115, 53 St. Rep. 412 (1996).

Supreme Court — Acquisition of Appellate Jurisdiction: The time limits for filing an appeal are mandatory and jurisdictional. An appellant has a duty to perfect an appeal in the manner and within the time limits provided by law. Absent such compliance, the Montana Supreme Court does not acquire jurisdiction to entertain and determine an appeal. Price v. Zunchich, 188 M 230, 612 P2d 1296 (1980), followed in Garmann v. Employers Ins. Co. of Wausau, 234 M 466, 764 P2d 471, 45 St. Rep. 2054 (1988), and in Anderson v. Bashey, 241 M 252, 787 P2d 304, 47 St. Rep. 200 (1990).

Motion for a New Trial — Time for Notice of Appeal Extended: A judgment was entered against the appellant May 31. On June 6 appellant mailed a motion for a new trial and for extension of the time for filing briefs. On June 11 the District Court gave appellant until June 25 to file its brief, which appellant did on that date. On July 20 the District Court denied appellant's motion for a new trial without hearing, and on August 2 the appellant mailed his notice of appeal. Under these circumstances the notice of appeal was timely filed, since the filing of appellant's motion for a new trial suspended the running of the time in which to file a notice of appeal and the District Court's order extending the time for filing supporting briefs must by necessary implication extend the time for ruling on that motion. The 10-day period for ruling on the motion did not begin to run until the appellant's brief was filed within the time period allowed by the court. The motion for a new trial was automatically denied when it was not acted upon within 15 days. Appellant thereafter had 30 days in which to file its notice of appeal, which was done on August 3. Britton v. Burlington N., Inc., 184 M 107, 601 P2d 1192 (1979).

Notice of Appeal on Default Judgment: The court dismissed the appeal and stated it had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal because the notice of appeal was not timely filed pursuant to former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). It was filed more than 5 months after the entry of a default judgment. No notice of entry of judgment was served on appellants, and no such service is required. Snyder v. Gommenginger, 183 M 375, 600 P2d 171 (1979).

Thirty-Day Limit Not Affected by Petition for Attorney's Fees Filed After Its Expiration: Appellant had 30 days to appeal after he was served with notice of entry of an order denying his petition to modify a decree of dissolution, and the filing of a petition by respondent almost 3 months later for attorney's fees incurred by her in defense of appellant's petition did not affect the 30-day limit. McDonald v. McDonald, 183 M 312, 599 P2d 356 (1979), followed in Garmann v. Employers Ins. Co. of Wausau, 234 M 466, 764 P2d 471, 45 St. Rep. 2054 (1988).

Computation of Time Limit for Appeal in Workers' Compensation Case — Civil Procedure Rules Applied: A person who appeals from a final decision of the workers' compensation court should in all fundamental fairness be given the benefit of that provision of former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), which states that ". . . except that in cases where service of notice of entry of judgment is required by former Rule 77(d) of the M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded) the time shall be 30 days from the service of notice of entry of judgment". When service of notice of the final decision is made as mandated by 2-4-623 and that service is made by mail, the provisions of former Rule 21(c), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), are automatically put into play adding 3 days to the prescribed 30-day time limit for filing the notice of appeal set by former Rule 4(a), M.R.App.P. (now superseded). However, when the final day of the period falls on a Sunday, former Rule 21(a), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), comes into play extending the time limit to the next day. Dumont v. Aetna Fire Underwriters, 183 M 190, 598 P2d 1099 (1979). See also Garmann v. Employers Ins. Co. of Wausau, 234 M 466, 764 P2d 471, 45 St. Rep. 2054 (1988).

Second Motion for New Trial — Filing Deadline Not Suspended: The filing of a second motion for a new trial after denial of the first motion does not suspend the time for filing the notice of appeal. Flathead Hay Cubing, Inc. v. Moore, 35 St. Rep. 1260 (1978) (apparently not reported in Pacific Reporter or Montana Reports).

Violation of Montana Rules of Civil Procedure — Effect: Since counsel for petitioner violated former Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), by giving notice of entry of judgment himself rather than having the clerk of court serve notice of entry of judgment, opposing counsel was not required to adhere to the 30-day period for filing of notice of appeal until proper service was made; thus the court committed no error in denying petitioner's motion to strike all posttrial motions as untimely. Pierce Packing Co. v. District Court, 177 M 51, 579 P2d 760 (1978), followed in Granite Ditch Co. v. Anderson, 204 M 10, 662 P2d 1312, 40 St. Rep. 630 (1983).

Appeal Not Timely: When a motion to vacate and set aside a portion of a judgment was made 46 days beyond the authority of former Rule 52, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), it did not suspend the running of time permitted to file appeal under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Appellant's contention that former Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), was applicable did not operate to vest the Supreme Court with jurisdiction to hear the appeal. First Nat'l Bank v. Fry, 176 M 58, 575 P2d 1325 (1978).

Series of Proceedings — Jurisdiction on Appeal: The Supreme Court was without jurisdiction to review a series of legal proceedings surrounding a divorce decree other than the last decision and judgment because the appellant failed to give timely notice of appeal of the prior proceedings. Easton v. Easton, 175 M 416, 574 P2d 989 (1978).

Extension of Time Limit: A notice of appeal filed 53 days after judgment was entered was timely because the court granted an extension based on an affidavit signed by defense attorney alleging personal illness. Keller v. Llewellyn, 175 M 164, 573 P2d 166 (1977).

Failure to File Timely Notice of Appeal Extension by District Court: The Supreme Court has no authority to permit an appeal to be taken after the expiration of the time fixed by former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). If an extension of time is sought, the proper forum to make such a request is the District Court. An appellant must request any extension no later than 60 days from service of notice of entry of judgment. Zell v. Zell, 174 M 216, 565 P2d 311 (1977), followed in In re M.B., L.B., & F.B., 282 M 150, 935 P2d 1129, 54 St. Rep. 291 (1997). See also St. v. Garner, 1999 MT 295, 297 M 89, 990 P2d 175, 56 St. Rep. 1180 (1999).

Order to Vacate Order Changing Venue: Defendant's appeal of the order denying his motion to vacate an order changing venue should be dismissed since an order to vacate is not appealable under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and if treated as an appeal from the order for change of venue, it was not timely made. Myskewitz v. Berg, 173 M 46, 566 P2d 64 (1977).

Parties Entitled to Sixty-Day Period: When a party to an action is a state officer, state agency (including a municipality), or the State, any party may file notice of appeal within the 60-day limit of former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), irrespective of whether or not State, political subdivision, or agency is appellant. Lewistown Propane Co. v. Util. Bldrs., Inc., 170 M 292, 552 P2d 1100 (1976).

Untimely Appeal From Motion for New Trial: When motion for new trial was filed without notice of hearing, the motion was automatically denied 10 days after service notwithstanding letter from clerk notifying movant of denial on some other date. Appeal filed later than 60 days after denial of the motion was untimely. Leitheiser v. Mont. St. Prison, 161 M 343, 505 P2d 1203 (1973), overruled in part on other grounds by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Extension of Time — Notice: An order granting appellant additional time "to effect the composition of the record on appeal" was not an extension of time for filing notice of appeal. It is not necessary to serve a copy of the judgment on adverse party. Jackson v. Tinker, 161 M 51, 504 P2d 692 (1972).

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Petition for Postconviction Relief Time-Barred Absent Showing of Exceptions: Sanchez was convicted of deliberate homicide and sentenced to life in prison. Sentence was imposed on November 14, 1997, and Sanchez had 60 days to appeal. Sanchez filed no direct appeal, and sentence was final on January 13, 1998, for purposes of postconviction proceedings. Sanchez first filed for postconviction relief on August 31, 2000, and filed an amended petition for postconviction relief on December 5, 2002. Although 46-21-102 allowed 5 years for filing for postconviction relief when the crime was committed, the section was amended in 1997 and allowed only a 1-year period for filing when Sanchez's conviction became final and when the petitions were filed. Thus, Sanchez's first filing was 1 ½ years late, and the amended petition was nearly 4 years late. Absent a showing that any exceptions to the statutory time bar applied, such as newly discovered evidence or that a miscarriage of justice occurred, Sanchez's petitions for postconviction relief were properly denied as untimely. Sanchez v. St., 2004 MT 9, 319 M 226, 86 P3d 1 (2004).

Failure to Take Appeal — Supervisory Control Inapplicable: Where the plaintiff failed to take his appeal within the statutory time limitation he could not obtain relief by a Writ of Review or a Writ of Supervisory Control. McVay v. McVay, 128 M 31, 270 P2d 393 (1954).

Appeal Proper — Supervisory Control Inapplicable: An application for a Writ of Supervisory Control will be denied since an appeal may be taken from a special order made after judgment which modifies a judgment theretofore entered and adversely affects the rights of a party to the litigation. State ex rel. Ferris v. District Court, 126 M 623, 255 P2d 687 (1953).

Defaulting Adverse Party — Severable Appeal: A defaulting defendant must be served with notice of appeal if a reversal of the judgment may affect him adversely. Where in a foreclosure action all but one of several defendants defaulted, the plaintiff could not have a reversal thereof in its entirety without making the defaulting defendants adversely affected by it parties to the appeal and serving notice thereof upon them. But where a judgment is severable as between coparties to an action, an appeal may be taken as to any one of the coparties. And if a lone answering defendant makes no objection, reversal may be had as to him alone, but not favoring the others. W. Holding Co. v. NW. Land & Loan Co., 113 M 24, 120 P2d 557 (1941).

Status of Findings and Conclusions: The findings of fact and conclusions of law in an equity case do not constitute the judgment but are merely the foundation for the judgment within the meaning of this section. Hence, where respondents did not perfect their cross-appeal until more than 6 months after the filing of the findings, but within 6 months after the filing of the judgment, their appeal was timely and not subject to a motion for dismissal. Conway v. Fabian, 108 M 287, 89 P2d 1022 (1939).

Time for Cross-Appeal: Subdivision 1 of this section applies where a respondent takes a cross-appeal under section 93-8023, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by former Rule 14, M.R.App.P., now superseded), for the purpose of having rulings made against him during the course of the trial reviewed. Conway v. Fabian, 108 M 287, 89 P2d 1022 (1939).

Findings and Conclusions — Time Limits Inapplicable: Where the trial court, in a probate proceeding, filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law 3 weeks before entry of the decree, stating in effect that formal decree would follow (a practice commended as enabling the parties to move for amendment of findings and conclusions before entry of decree), the statutory period for appeal ran from the date of entry of the decree and not from the time the findings and conclusions were filed. In re Toomey's Estate, 96 M 489, 31 P2d 729 (1934).

Appeal From Minute Order Proper: On July 1 the District Court made an order, entered in the minutes, vacating one confirming a sale of real property belonging to an estate. On July 12 a formal order was made and filed. On September 7 an appeal was taken from the latter order. The order of July 1 was the order from which the appeal should have been taken. The order made on July 12 did not alter or amend the former one nor extend the time within which the appeal could be taken. Therefore, the appeal was not taken within the 60-day period prescribed by subdivision 4 and was vulnerable to a motion to dismiss. In re McCracken's Estate, 87 M 342, 287 P 941 (1930).

Effect of Failure to Appeal Within Time Provided: Where a creditor of an insolvent bank by order of court is denied a preference of payment of his claim but fails to appeal therefrom within the time allowed by this section, the order becomes final and the propriety of the court's order is not subject to review on appeal. State ex rel. Rankin v. Wibaux County Bank, 85 M 532, 281 P 341 (1929), followed in Colstrip Faculty Ass'n, MEA/NEA v. Trustees, School District No. 19, 251 M 309, 824 P2d 1008, 49 St. Rep. 43 (1992).

Multiple Parties — Parties Affected by Appeal: Where only one of a number of creditors of an insolvent bank, grouped under a certain class, appealed within 60 days from an order of the District Court refusing them a preference right to payment of their claims, and secured a reversal thereof as to her, the order as to the nonappealing claimants became final, and the action of the court in thereafter reinstating them as preferred creditors and prorating the money available in the bank for that purpose among them and the successful appellant was error. State ex rel. Rankin v. Banking Corp., 80 M 49, 257 P 1020 (1927).

Dismissal of Appeal: An appeal from a final judgment, not taken within the time provided for appeal will be dismissed. Hodson v. O'Keeffe, 71 M 322, 229 P 722 (1924); Wilson v. Norris, 43 M 454, 117 P 100 (1911); Reynolds v. Fitzpatrick, 40 M 593, 107 P 902 (1910); Kaufman v. Cooper, 38 M 6, 98 P 504 (1908); Ramsey v. Burns, 24 M 234, 61 P 129 (1900); Gallagher v. Cornelius, 23 M 27, 57 P 447 (1899).

School Superintendent Decisions — Time for Appeal: No time having been fixed by statute within which an appeal may be taken from the decision of a County Superintendent of Schools, and in the absence of regulations by the state superintendent with relation thereto, the appeal may be taken within a reasonable time after the making of the decision, a limitation of 6 months being deemed reasonable. State ex rel. School District v. Trumper, 69 M 468, 222 P 1064 (1924).

Amendment of Judgment — Time for Appeal: Where, in an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, an erroneous description of the land in the judgment was not corrected until some 70 days after its entry, the property rights of the defendant thus not becoming affected until after amendment, the rule that an order amending a judgment after entry is a special order after final judgment, and therefore appealable only within 60 days, does not apply, but the computation of time within which to perfect an appeal from the judgment dates from the time the amendment was made. St. Bank of New Salem v. Schultze, 63 M 410, 209 P 599 (1922).

Multiple Appeals Covered by One Notice: An order settling an administrator's account, disallowing two certain items, and directing him to deliver certain stock to a special administratrix, though included in one paper, is in effect several distinct and separate orders, and, though embraced in one notice of appeal, will be so treated for the purposes of the appeal. In re Barker's Estate, 26 M 279, 67 P 941 (1902). See also MacGinniss v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 29 M 428, 75 P 89 (1904).

Rule 5. Proceeding without the required filing fee.

Compiler's Comments

2008 Amendment: In (1) and (2) in subsection caption after "Motion" inserted "and affidavit"; in (1) in two places and in (2) substituted "combined motion and affidavit" for "motion"; and in (1) in first sentence near middle after "proceed" deleted "together with an affidavit". Amendment effective March 21, 2008.

Rule 6. Application of these rules.

CASES DECIDED UNDER CURRENT RULES

Substitution of Counsel Remand Hearing — Defendant Waived Objection Regarding Hearing Procedure: The District Court did not err in ruling that the defendant was not entitled to substitution of counsel. On appeal to the Supreme Court, the defendant argued that he and his former defense counsel should have been put under oath and subject to cross-examination. However, the defendant never objected to the procedure the District Court followed in determining the validity of the defendant's allegations. During the proceeding, the District Court invited both the defendant and his former counsel to state their complaints, to respond, and to raise objections. The District Court asked multiple times whether either party had anything to add and whether both parties were satisfied with the process. The defendant's failure to challenge the proceeding before the District Court constituted a waiver that barred the defendant from raising the issue on appeal and prevented the Supreme Court from reviewing the issue on appeal. St. v. Schowengerdt, 2018 MT 7, 390 Mont. 123, 409 P.3d 38.

Federal Arbitration Act — Sophisticated Businessman — Appeal Timing of District Court's Order: The plaintiff was terminated by the defendant financial institution. The plaintiff sued his former employer and its CEO, alleging wrongful discharge under the Montana Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act. The District Court granted the defendants' motion to compel arbitration pursuant to the parties' employment agreement, and the arbitrator subsequently granted summary judgment to the defendants. The plaintiff appealed after the District Court denied his application to vacate, correct, or modify the arbitrator's award. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the District Court's order compelling arbitration and staying further proceedings was not final and appealable, that the parties had a valid agreement to arbitrate, that the provision in the employment contract was not unconscionable because the plaintiff was an experienced businessman, that the Federal Arbitration Act did not prevent the plaintiff from filing his application in state court, that which rules were applicable to the arbitration was outside the scope of its review, and that the District Court did not abuse its discretion when ruling on discovery issues. Tedesco v. Home Sav. Bancorp, Inc., 2017 MT 304, 389 Mont. 468, 407 P.3d 289.

Record Not Sufficiently Developed for Ineffective Assistance Claim on Direct Appeal: The defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel was not reviewable on direct appeal. The defendant argued that his first attorney presented testimony, evidence, and confidential information in violation of his interests, thus violating their duty of loyalty, citing his attorney's statement in open court about his alibi defense. The defendant argued further that his second attorney improperly made statements about discovery related to the defense investigator and improperly directly questioned the defendant during a Gillham proceeding. The defendant argued even further that a third attorney was unprepared and could not have developed any loyalty toward the defendant given such a limited appointment. The state argued that the record was not sufficiently developed to determine whether counsel had been ineffective. Before reaching the merits of an ineffective assistance claim on direct appeal, the Supreme Court reasoned that it must determine whether the allegations are properly before it. The Supreme Court will review claims of ineffective assistance of counsel on direct appeal if the claims are based solely on the record. As applied, the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims were not factually established in the record, and the Supreme Court declined to address them on direct appeal. St. v. Howard, 2017 MT 285, 389 Mont. 356, 405 P.3d 1263.

Counsel's Failure to Introduce Potential Exculpatory Evidence — Record Silent on Counsel's Reasoning — Better Suited to Petition for Postconviction Relief: The defendant, who had been charged with sexual intercourse without consent and two other felonies, wanted his counsel to introduce a medical report that he believed was potentially exculpatory. His counsel did not attempt to introduce the report. After his conviction, the defendant appealed to the Supreme Court and claimed that he had received ineffective assistance of counsel. After reviewing the record, the court concluded that the record was silent as to why his attorney had not introduced the report and that more information from the attorney was required to analyze the defendant's claim. The court therefore dismissed the appeal without prejudice to allow him to later file a petition for postconviction relief. St. v. Cheetham, 2016 MT 151, 384 Mont. 1, 373 P.3d 45. See also Cheetham v. St., 2019 MT 290, 398 Mont. 131, 454 P.3d 673, for subsequent history.

Abuse of Discretion — Tax Consequences of Quick Ranch Sale or Equalization Payment Not Considered — Issue Preserved Through Posttrial Motion: The District Court abused its discretion by failing to consider the tax consequences of an order that required the husband to choose between selling a ranch or making an equalization payment to the wife within 120 days. Further, the husband did not waive his right to raise the tax consequences argument on appeal, given that the issue was raised in his posttrial motion after the 120-day deadline was imposed sua sponte by the District Court in its final decree. Given the District Court's short timeline for the equalization payment, the sale of the ranch was the only reasonable option to make the payment, which created a concrete and immediate tax event. In re Marriage of Clark, 2015 MT 263, 381 Mont. 50, 357 P.3d 314, distinguishing In re Marriage of Turbes, 234 Mont. 152, 762 P.2d 237 (1988), and In re Marriage of Taylor, 257 Mont. 122, 848 P.2d 478 (1993).

Standard of Review Applicable to District Court Exclusion of Expert Testimony: After the District Court determined that the expert testimony offered by the plaintiff was not admissible, it also determined that there was no evidence to demonstrate a genuine issue of material fact and granted summary judgment to the defendant. The plaintiff appealed the exclusion of expert testimony and the resulting entry of summary judgment. On appeal, the parties disputed the standard of review that the Supreme Court should apply in reviewing the District Court's exclusion of expert testimony, with the plaintiff arguing that the ruling should be reviewed de novo and the defendant arguing that the ruling should be reviewed for an abuse of discretion. The Supreme Court concluded that the abuse of discretion standard of review is the appropriate standard in reviewing the ruling excluding expert testimony and that the remaining entry of summary judgment will be reviewed de novo. McClue v. Safeco Ins. Co., 2015 MT 222, 380 Mont. 204, 354 P.3d 604.

Appeal in Commissioner of Political Practices Enforcement Action Premature — Dismissal for Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction Proper: In a Commissioner of Political Practices enforcement action, the defendant's motion to dismiss the enforcement action in the First Judicial District Court, Lewis and Clark County, for lack of subject matter jurisdiction was properly denied. Section 13-37-113, which allows for prosecutions in the county in which the violation occurred or in Lewis and Clark County, clearly conferred subject matter jurisdiction on the District Court. Because the issue at bar was not one of subject matter jurisdiction but, rather, was an issue of statutory interpretation, the Supreme Court determined that the defendant's appeal must be characterized as one seeking relief from the denial of a motion to dismiss, which is not appealable, and dismissed the appeal as premature. Comm'r of Political Practices v. Bannan, 2015 MT 220, 380 Mont. 194, 354 P.3d 601.

Transfer of Venue — Appealable: An order granting a motion to change venue on the basis that the county designated in the complaint was not the proper county was final and appealable. In re Guardianship of H.O., 2014 MT 285, 376 Mont. 519, 337 P.3d 91.

Substitution of Judge Not Appropriate After Case Remanded for Additional Findings — Mining Claim: In an action regarding a disputed mining claim, the District Court granted summary judgment and granted an injunction. The Supreme Court remanded, concluding that the lower court had not made sufficient findings to support the granting of the injunction and to permit appellate review. A party subsequently moved for substitution of the judge under 3-1-804. The District Court denied the motion for substitution because the Supreme Court had not reversed the District Court's prior determination. The Supreme Court agreed, holding that its remand did not adjudicate all claims of the parties and did not address the merits of the injunction itself. As a result, the motion for substitution was improper. Mines Mgmt. Inc. v. Fus, 2014 MT 256, 376 Mont. 375, 334 P.3d 929.

Agricultural Covenant — County Not Aggrieved Party: The defendant real estate developer attempted to lift an agricultural covenant. The county required multiple conditions before any development could proceed. The county subsequently sued the developer, finding that some of the conditions had not been met. The District Court denied the county's motion for summary judgment on the issue of whether the developer had notice of the conditions. A jury then found that the developer had notice of the conditions. The Supreme Court held that since the county was not an aggrieved party and the issue was moot, the county could not appeal the denial of summary judgment. Lewis & Clark County v. Hampton, 2014 MT 207, 376 Mont. 137, 333 P.3d 205.

Near Certainty of Second Appeal — Suspension of Rules Not Appropriate: The plaintiff's small intestine was perforated during a procedure by the defendant doctor. The plaintiff filed a claim with the Montana Medical Legal Panel (MMLP). In the District Court action, the defendant moved to dismiss, arguing that this issue was not specifically raised in the MMLP pleading and that the District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction. On interlocutory appeal of the jurisdictional issue, the defendant requested that the Supreme Court suspend the rules to consider additional issues. The Supreme Court declined to review the additional issues because a second appeal was not a near certainty. Pickett v. Cortese, 2014 MT 166, 375 Mont. 320, 328 P.3d 660.

Failure to Preserve Issue for Appeal — Expert Testimony on Standard of Care Not Subject to Appellate Review: In a suit against the state for negligent firefighting techniques, the state failed to object to the testimony of the plaintiffs' expert on fire suppression techniques. Additionally, the state did not move for judgment as a matter of law by arguing that the plaintiffs failed to present evidence of breach of the applicable standard of care. On appeal, the state claimed that the plaintiffs failed to establish the standard of care for wildfire suppression, breach, and causation through expert testimony, but the Supreme Court held that the state waived the opportunity to raise this issue when it failed to object in District Court. Weaver v. St., 2013 MT 247, 371 Mont. 476, 310 P.3d 495.

Law of Case Doctrine Inapplicable — Order Did Not Provide Affirmative Decision on a Stay or an Injunction: An order by the Supreme Court directing the District Court to resolve any remaining claims and to issue a final judgment did not render a decision on the issue of a stay or an injunction pending appeal and presented no law of the case roadblock on appeal. Plains Grains L.P. v. Bd. of County Commr's, 2010 MT 155, 357 Mont. 61, 238 P.3d 332.

Failure of Counsel to Move for Dismissal or Reduced Charges Based on Lack of Physical Evidence — Record-Based Claim Subject to Postconviction Review: Taylor contended on appeal that trial counsel was ineffective in failing to move for dismissal or reduction of a rape charge based on the absence of rape examination evidence. However, the record showed no explanation of the reasons for counsel's omissions. Therefore, consideration of the issue was not appropriate for direct appeal, but rather was best suited for postconviction review. The Supreme Court declined to address why counsel chose to proceed as he did and dismissed Taylor's appeal of this issue without prejudice. St. v. Taylor, 2010 MT 94, 356 Mont. 167, 231 P.3d 79. See also St. v. Cheetham, 2016 MT 151, 384 Mont. 1, 373 P.3d 45.

Issue of Dismissal of Trespass Charge in DUI Case Raised for First Time on Appeal — No Prejudice to Defendant's Rights: Sirles was charged with DUI and criminal trespass. At trial, the District Court dismissed the trespass charge. Sirles contended for the first time on appeal that the District Court invaded the province of the jury by dismissing the trespass charge. The Supreme Court noted that Sirles understandably would have preferred a trespass conviction to a DUI conviction, but absent a showing of any prejudice to his substantial rights, the Supreme Court declined to address the issue for the first time on appeal. St. v. Sirles, 2010 MT 88, 356 Mont. 133, 231 P.3d 1089.

Order for Remand Considered Final Appealable Order: The District Court reviewed plaintiff's utility rate case and concluded that the rate set by the Public Service Commission (PSC) was unreasonable and ordered that the case be remanded to the PSC to set a new rate that took avoided cost data into consideration. The PSC appealed, but plaintiff contended that the remand was an interlocutory order that did not finally decide the case and was thus unappealable. The Supreme Court disagreed. Section 2-4-702 provides for judicial review of an agency decision in a contested case, and to force the PSC to recalculate the rate in accordance with the District Court's remand instructions would have undermined the PSC's right to appeal under 2-4-711. Therefore, the remand order was considered final for purposes of appeal by the PSC. Whitehall Wind, LLC v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2010 MT 2, 355 Mont. 15, 223 P.3d 907, followed in Grenz v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2011 MT 17, 359 Mont. 154, 248 P.3d 785. See also In re Wage Claim of Mays, 2019 MT 219, 397 Mont. 248, 448 P.3d 1096.

Failure to Preserve Question of Constitutionality of Youth Court Procedure — Appeal Dismissed: Two youths who entered an informal consent adjustment without petition later violated the consent adjustments and the state petitioned to revoke the consent adjustments. Following a hearing at which the youths admitted the violations, the Youth Court revoked the consent adjustments and proceeded to formal disposition under 41-5-1512. The youths appealed on grounds that 41-5-1512 was unconstitutional on its face and as applied because it allowed formal revocation and disposition based on admissions made through informal involuntary means and that without a formal charging petition, the informal admissions were effectively equated as formal admissions or as findings that the youths were in need of intervention, which relieved the state of its burden of proof. The Supreme Court declined to reach the constitutionality question because the argument was not properly preserved for appeal through a sufficiently specific objection. In re B.I. & N.G., 2009 MT 350, 353 M 183, 218 P3d 1235 (2009). See also St. v. Benson, 1999 MT 324, 297 M 321, 992 P2d 831 (1999).

Standard of Review of Determination of Damages — Speculative Damages Not Recoverable: A District Court's determination of damages is a factual finding that must be upheld if it is supported by substantial evidence, and the Supreme Court will not overturn a damages determination unless it is clearly erroneous. However, speculative damages that are not clearly ascertainable are not recoverable. Watson v. West, 2009 MT 342, 353 M 120, 218 P3d 1227 (2009). See also Hallenberg v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 2006 MT 191, 333 M 143, 141 P3d 1216 (2006).

Standard of Review of Workers' Compensation Court Findings and Conclusions: Findings of fact of the Workers' Compensation Court are reviewed under the substantial credible evidence standard, and conclusions of law of the Workers' Compensation Court are reviewed de novo for correctness. Russell v. Watkins & Shepard Trucking Co., 2009 MT 217, 351 M 297, 211 P3d 864 (2009).

Dismissal Without Prejudice — Interlocutory Order: While a wrongful death claim was pending, the insurance company filed an action seeking a declaratory judgment that there was no liability coverage for motor vehicle accidents under the driver's policies with the company. The District Court dismissed the action without prejudice, and the insurance company appealed. The Supreme Court held that the order dismissing the action without prejudice was an interlocutory order and was not appealable in the absence of special circumstances. Because special circumstances were not present, the appeal was dismissed without prejudice. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Bodell, 2008 MT 363, 346 M 414, 197 P3d 913 (2008).

Standard of Review of Sentences Imposing More Than One Year of Incarceration — Review for Legality Only, Not Abuse of Discretion: The Supreme Court will generally review the imposition of a sentence for legality only, examining whether the sentence is within statutory parameters. The court will not apply an abuse of discretion standard, with two exceptions. First, if a defendant is sentenced to serve less than 1 year of actual incarceration, the sentence will be reviewed for both legality and for abuse of discretion. Second, the reasonableness of conditions imposed on probation will be reviewed for abuse of discretion. The court therefore overruled numerous prior cases decided between 1984 and 2006 to the extent that those cases stated that a sentence that imposes more than 1 year of actual incarceration and that does not fall within either enumerated exception will be reviewed for abuse of discretion. St. v. Herman, 2008 MT 187, 343 M 494, 188 P3d 978 (2008).

Interlocutory Judgment on Discovery Sanctions Not Appealable: Defendant appealed an interlocutory judgment by the District Court imposing sanctions against defendant for discovery abuses. The Supreme Court noted that although some interlocutory orders are appealable, an interlocutory judgment imposing discovery sanctions is not. Defendant's appeal was dismissed as premature absent a final judgment on the underlying issues in District Court. Johnson v. Booth, 2008 MT 155, 343 M 268, 184 P3d 289 (2008).

GENERAL

Failure of Trial Court to Rule on Motion to Dismiss Not Violative of Due Process Rights — Plenary Review of Constitutional Question: Following a sentencing hearing, Smerker simultaneously filed notice of appeal to the Supreme Court and a motion to dismiss a felony DUI charge on grounds that two prior misdemeanor DUI violations were constitutionally invalid and could not be used to enhance the current charge to a felony. The sentencing court declined to rule on the motion to dismiss, which Smerker contended was a violation of due process rights. The Supreme Court disagreed. Smerker's arguments were based on documentary evidence related to the prior offenses, and the Supreme Court is in as good a position as a District Court to judge the weight of documentary evidence. Therefore, the Supreme Court exercised plenary review of the constitutional validity of the prior convictions. Because the Supreme Court could adequately address the issue, the District Court's failure to rule on the motion to dismiss did not affect Smerker's substantial due process rights. St. v. Smerker, 2006 MT 117, 332 M 221, 136 P3d 543 (2006).

No Appeal From Academic Trial Court Ruling: A dispute arose in Sheehan's DUI trial when the trial court sustained the state's objection to a question asked of a nurse concerning whether she knew what happened to Sheehan following his release from the hospital on the night in question. Sheehan contended that the testimony was necessary to explain another possibility for his behavior other than the influence of alcohol. However, no one noticed that the nurse answered "No" when asked if she knew what happened to Sheehan after his release, so further questioning of the nurse would not have helped establish Sheehan's defense in any case. The trial court's ruling on the state's objection was therefore moot, and the Supreme Court declined to consider Sheehan's appeal from what amounted to an academic exercise. St. v. Sheehan, 2005 MT 305, 329 M 417, 124 P3d 1119 (2005).

Misinterpretation of Testimony Regarding Alleged Relinquishment of Claim — Reversible Error: Kane sued Morgan to recover the costs of two wells that Kane drilled on Morgan's property for which payment was not made. At one point in his testimony, Kane stated that he charged Morgan for the first 150 feet of drilling, but gave Morgan the rest of the 400-foot hole, and then said, "Yeah, I give it to him. I think I'd give it all to him." The District Court interpreted the statement as a relinquishment by Kane for payment of the entire well and compensated Kane only for the cost of the other well. Kane appealed. The Supreme Court applied the test in In re Marriage of Kotecki, 2000 MT 254, 301 M 460, 10 P3d 828 (2000), to determine if the finding was clearly erroneous: (1) whether the finding was supported by substantial evidence in the record; (2) whether the trial court misapprehended the effect of the evidence; and (3) if the first two factors are met, the Supreme Court is still left with a definite and firm conviction that a mistake was made. In this case, it was held that the District Court committed a mistake and misinterpreted Kane's testimony, so the Supreme Court reversed. Neither party interpreted the remark as a gift by Kane of the entire well. The comment was not followed up by either party during direct or cross-examination. Counsel for Morgan continued questioning both Kane and other witnesses as if Kane had not relinquished his claim, nor did Morgan assert relinquishment in the proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law. Kane v. Morgan, 2001 MT 182, 306 M 207, 32 P3d 747 (2001).

Motion In Limine Sufficient to Preserve Objection for Appeal: Defendant's motion in limine to exclude testimony regarding certain chemicals in his blood and bottles of prescription medication found in his car was sufficient to preserve the objection for appeal. The propriety of the admission of the evidence is a proper issue for the Supreme Court on appeal. St. v. Ingraham, 1998 MT 156, 290 M 18, 966 P2d 103, 55 St. Rep. 611 (1998).

Insufficient Evidence for Finding Relating to Mother's Mental State: In an action to modify custody (now parenting plan), the District Court denied the mother's motion and in addition found that the mother was hysterical and distressed with severe emotional problems of her own. The Supreme Court held that there was no evidence to support the lower court's impressions and that therefore it erred by entering such statements into the permanent record. In re Marriage of Nevin, 284 M 468, 945 P2d 58, 54 St. Rep. 981 (1997).

Denial of Motion to Dismiss — Matter of Law: Danichek appealed the lower court's refusal to grant his motion to dismiss, which he based on the argument that double jeopardy prohibited him from being prosecuted for driving under the influence because he had already been convicted and punished for refusing to take the Breathalyzer test. The Supreme Court held that the standard of review for the District Court's conclusion of law was plenary and that it would review the decision to determine whether the lower court's conclusion of law was correct. Helena v. Danichek, 277 M 461, 922 P2d 1170, 53 St. Rep. 767 (1996), following St. v. Hansen, 273 M 321, 903 P2d 194 (1995).

General Objection to Judicial Notice Insufficient to Preserve Issue on Appeal: Loh was charged with criminal possession of a controlled substance and sought to have her confession suppressed. The District Court denied the motion to suppress, and Loh was tried on the charge. At the trial, the prosecution requested the District Court to take judicial notice of the testimony of several firefighters given at the suppression hearing. The District Court agreed, over Loh's objection, saying that judicial notice of that former testimony was the very purpose contemplated by Rule 201, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). The Supreme Court held that the general objection made by Loh's counsel at the suppression hearing was an insufficient objection. The Supreme Court also noted that if there was error, it was harmless error and that Loh failed to make a further objection as to the sufficiency of any evidence offered at trial. St. v. Loh, 275 M 460, 914 P2d 592, 53 St. Rep. 226 (1996).

Standard of Review of Ruling on Motion to Suppress Evidence: The Supreme Court reviews a District Court ruling on a motion to suppress evidence to determine whether: (1) there is substantial credible evidence to support the court's findings of fact; (2) the court's interpretation and application of the law are correct; and (3) the court correctly applied the findings as a matter of law. St. v. Stubbs, 270 M 364, 892 P2d 547, 52 St. Rep. 232 (1995), following St. v. Rushton, 264 M 248, 870 P2d 1355 (1994), and St. v. Pastos, 269 M 43, 887 P2d 199, 51 St. Rep. 1441 (1994). See also St. v. Devlin, 1999 MT 90, 294 M 215, 980 P2d 1037, 56 St. Rep. 383 (1999).

DNA Evidence — General Objection in Motion In Limine Insufficient to Preserve Objection for Purposes of Appeal: Weeks was convicted of sexual intercourse without consent with his stepdaughter. The conviction was based in part upon DNA evidence that was combined with standard serological evidence to provide a combined statistical estimate of the probability that Weeks was the father of a child of his stepdaughter. Weeks objected to the combined evidence but not on a foundation basis. The state argued that Weeks waived any objection that he had to the combined evidence, but Weeks contended that his motion in limine preserved an objection to the evidence. The Supreme Court held that Weeks's motion in limine, which did not specify any reasons or authorities why the evidence should be excluded, did not contain an objection to the combined statistical evidence but simply concluded that the DNA evidence was prejudicial. The Supreme Court held that this objection was insufficient to preserve the issue for appeal. St. v. Weeks, 270 M 63, 891 P2d 477, 52 St. Rep. 78 (1995), followed in St. v. Loh, 275 M 460, 914 P2d 592, 53 St. Rep. 226 (1996), and followed in St. v. Fuhrmann, 278 M 396, 925 P2d 1162, 53 St. Rep. 966 (1996).

Ruling Regarding Arbitrability Subject to Appellate Review: The defendants argued that the lower court's ruling that the claims of the suit were subject to arbitration under the parties' contract was interlocutory and not subject to appeal. The Supreme Court ruled that the District Court, in ordering arbitration, had made a final determination at the state court level regarding the parties claims, and therefore the decision was appealable. Larsen v. Opie, 237 M 108, 771 P2d 977, 46 St. Rep. 660 (1989).

No Ruling on Motion In Limine Prior to Trial — Waiver of Objection: Plaintiff presented District Court with a motion in limine during pretrial conference, seeking to preclude defendant's mention at trial of a collateral source of insurance. The court reserved ruling on the matter. Plaintiff did not request a ruling prior to trial, object during trial, or present the court with any motions for mistrial or to strike the alleged testimony when insurance was first mentioned by defendant at trial. Failure to object or request corrective action after the subject was mentioned constituted a waiver of objection on the issue. Stewart v. Fisher, 235 M 432, 767 P2d 1321, 46 St. Rep. 116 (1989).

Sufficient Evidence Supporting Jury Verdict Against Union Officials for Misappropriation of Funds: A union sued former officers and business managers, alleging, among other things, misappropriation and conversion of union funds and constructive fraud. The union prevailed, and money damages were awarded to the union. On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that the evidence supported the award of money damages even though no one had testified at trial as to the specific amount of money defendants allegedly owed to the union. The jury heard evidence on mismanagement and self-dealing with regard to union property and on the financial losses of the union during defendant Bosh's administration. Testimony of the union indicated that defendants had not kept adequate financial records. The evidence may have contained contradictions, but it was substantial and adequate. Local Union No. 400 v. Bosh, 220 M 304, 715 P2d 36, 43 St. Rep. 388 (1986).

Substantial Credible Evidence of Medical Malpractice — Ingrown Toenail — Amputation of Leg: Substantial credible evidence supported a jury verdict of medical malpractice when treatment of a state prison inmate's ingrown toenail resulted in the amputation of his leg, even though the attending physicians contended that the inmate suffered from a preexisting condition of arteriosclerosis of the blood vessels of the legs which was the cause of the amputation. Kyriss v. St., 218 M 162, 707 P2d 5, 42 St. Rep. 1487 (1985).

Workers' Compensation Court Order Supported by Substantial Credible Evidence: In ruling that substantial evidence supported the Workers' Compensation Court's decision, the Supreme Court noted: (1) the claimant, the decedent's surviving spouse, was found to be a credible witness; (2) the claimant's hypothetical question presented to each party's expert was found to be accurate; (3) the claimant's medical expert was found to be more qualified and his opinion was accorded greater weight; and (4) the nature of decedent's work and the particular activity he was engaged in at the time the initial heart attack occurred supported the Workers' Compensation Court's order. Davis v. Jones, 216 M 300, 701 P2d 351, 42 St. Rep. 840 (1985).

Special Master's Report — Standard of Review: The same standard of review, that findings and conclusions will be overturned only if clearly erroneous, will be applied to a special master's report adopted by a District Court as is applied to any other District Court order. Schmidt v. Colonial Terrace Associates, 215 M 62, 694 P2d 1340, 42 St. Rep. 182 (1985).

Defective Service — Persons Entitled to Raise Issue: Questions of defective service may be raised only by a person upon whom the allegedly defective service was made, a rule that applies equally to parties and intervenors. Hull v. D. Irvin Transp., Ltd., 213 M 75, 690 P2d 414, 41 St. Rep. 1954 (1984).

Defects in Issuance — Persons Entitled to Raise Issue: Defects in the issuance of Writs of Attachment may be raised only by those named as defendants in the attachment proceeding. A third party not named as a defendant may assert its interest in the attached property but may not raise defects in the Writs. Hull v. D. Irvin Transp., Ltd., 213 M 75, 690 P2d 414, 41 St. Rep. 1954 (1984).

Application of Administrative Rule: The alleged application of an administrative rule would not be considered on appeal where it was not argued below. Hanley v. Dept. of Revenue, 207 M 302, 673 P2d 1257, 40 St. Rep. 2054 (1983).

No Fraud Found in Sale of Real Property — Theory of Negligent Misrepresentation Abandoned — Findings and Conclusions Not Clearly Erroneous: Where the plaintiffs agreed to purchase a bar and restaurant from the defendant seller and later brought an action for damages against the county and the county sanitarian, claiming that the sanitarian misrepresented the capacity of the sewer system and conditions of a county license, the findings and conclusions of the District Court were supported by substantial evidence and were not clearly erroneous. The District Court found that the plaintiffs failed to prove their claim of fraud and that the theory of negligent misrepresentation had been abandoned by the plaintiffs. The record contained conflicting evidence but showed that there could have been a misunderstanding between the parties, and a misunderstanding will not support a claim for fraud in the inducement. The statements made by the defendant may have been negligent, but the District Court properly concluded that by failing to argue the theory of negligent misrepresentation, the plaintiffs evidenced an intention to abandon that theory. Lacey v. Herndon, 205 M 379, 668 P2d 251, 40 St. Rep. 1375 (1983).

Methodology of Determination Substantiated by Record — Failure to Object in Administrative Proceeding: The Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) did not commit error in the application of the "rate of return" methodology, rather than the "market value" methodology, in determining the reasonableness of contract cost for the purchase of coal by the Montana Power Company (MPC) from a wholly-owned subsidiary. While the Supreme Court stated a preference for the "market value" methodology in Montana-Dakota Util. Co. v. Bollinger, 193 M 508, 632 P2d 1086 (1981), the court did not prohibit the P.S.C. from using a different methodology if the evidence warrants its use. In this case, the evidence introduced by the P.S.C. was not challenged by MPC. Rather, MPC seeks to do so for the first time on appeal. Limited review of the administrative record is appropriate, and that record supports the findings of the Commission. Mont. Power Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 204 M 224, 665 P2d 1121, 40 St. Rep. 805 (1983).

Evidence Insufficient for Involuntary Commitment: Testimony at trial did not clearly and convincingly establish that respondent, due to his mental condition, was unable to protect his life or health at the time of the trial. Therefore, the evidence that respondent was "seriously mentally ill" within the meaning of 53-21-102 was insufficient as a matter of law, and the District Court commitment order was vacated. In re R.T., 204 M 493, 665 P2d 789, 40 St. Rep. 1025 (1983).

Dissolution of Marriage — Appeal From Original Judgment Amending Order Preserves Issues of Both: Respondent husband raised the issue of the scope of the wife's notice of appeal from the District Court's order amending the decree made on dissolution of the marriage. The husband argued that the appeal should be limited solely to issues arising from the amending order. The Supreme Court said that the contention ignored the interdependent nature of the amending order and the original decree. Finality of the original judgment had to await a determination in the lower court of motions to amend or alter that judgment. The interrelationship of an amending order and an original judgment necessitated review of all issues contained in both, and thus an appeal from either incorporated all issues of both for review. This was in accord with the idea that technical defects of procedure should not bar a party from access to the court. This was distinguished from the situation in which a party appealed from one order in a series or separate and distinct orders or from one part of a divisible judgment. An amending order and an original judgment could not be viewed as separate and distinct or divisible. The notice of appeal was therefore sufficient to preserve all issues for review. Tefft v. Tefft, 192 M 456, 628 P2d 1094, 38 St. Rep. 837 (1981), distinguishing St. v. Todd, 117 M 80, 158 P2d 299 (1945), and Sperling v. Calfee, 7 M 514, 19 P 204 (1888), in accord with J.C. Penney and Woolworth v. Employment Sec. Div., 192 M 289, 627 P2d 851, 38 St. Rep 694 (1981).

Property Held Prior to Enactment Tax Payment Requirement — No Adverse Possession Established — Court Presumed Correct Despite Lack of Finding: Plaintiffs were properly denied adverse possession of yard space on the basis of nonpayment of taxes even though no finding was made regarding whether the property was held prior to enactment of the statute requiring payment of taxes to establish adverse possession. The District Court's judgment is presumed correct, and the Supreme Court will draw every legitimate inference to support that presumption. Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981).

Involuntary Commitment — Mootness — Issues Not Raised in District Court: Where, after a brief interview with a mental health counselor-therapist, the appellant was involuntarily committed to a state mental hospital for a period of 3 months and then challenged the commitment in the District Court, the appellant's appeal would not be dismissed even though the appellant had been released prior to submission of the appeal. The important constitutional issues raised by the appellant were not rendered moot by his release because other persons would be involuntarily committed for 3 months of evaluation and testing. This time period renders a timely appeal impossible under the current rules of appellate procedure. Nor would the appeal be dismissed because of the appellant's failure to raise the constitutional issues in the District Court since the Supreme Court reserves to itself the power to examine constitutional issues that involve broad public concerns to avoid future litigation on a point of law. In re N.B., 190 M 319, 620 P2d 1228, 37 St. Rep. 2031 (1980), followed in In re Mental Health of R.M., 270 M 40, 889 P2d 1201, 52 St. Rep. 68 (1995). See also Cottrill v. Cottrill Sodding Serv., 229 M 40, 744 P2d 895, 44 St. Rep. 1762 (1987), and In re Klos, 284 M 197, 943 P2d 1277, 54 St. Rep. 843 (1997).

Military Pension as Marital Property — Previous Ruling Requiring Remand: Where, following entry of the court's order dissolving the marriage of the appellant and respondent, who was eligible for retirement under a military pension plan, but before the parties filed their appellate briefs, the Supreme Court held in In re Marriage of Miller, 187 M 286, 609 P2d 1185 (1980), that a military pension is marital property to be considered as part of the marital estate, the appellant's case had to be remanded to the District Court for additional findings of fact. Because of the many factors that could be affected by inclusion of the pension in the marital estate, the Supreme Court should not fashion a formula for disposition of the pension until the District Court has done so. Ebert v. Ebert, 189 M 477, 616 P2d 379, 37 St. Rep. 1674 (1980).

Failure to Regulate Discovery as Grounds for Reversal: Massaro failed to respond to written interrogatories, a request to produce documents, and requests for admissions, although he asked for additional time and his counsel gave assurance that a response would be forthcoming. Dunham did not move for an order compelling discovery but at trial objected to and sought restriction of certain expected proof that he had not had an opportunity to inspect. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the District Court because it failed to regulate the discovery process and accorded an unfair advantage to Massaro. Massaro v. Dunham, 184 M 400, 603 P2d 249 (1979). See also In re Marriage of Deichl, 239 M 425, 781 P2d 254, 46 St. Rep. 1801 (1989).

Clerk's Affidavit Not Acceptable as to Variant Date of Service: A District Court Clerk's affidavit should not be accepted to prove that service was made on a date other than the date shown on the certificate of mailing on the notice of entry of judgment because the affidavit is not part of the record on appeal. Flathead Hay Cubing, Inc. v. Moore, 35 St. Rep. 1260 (1978) (apparently not reported in Pacific Reporter or Montana Reports).

Order Equivalent to Final Judgment: An order dismissing a complaint and denying leave to amend was equivalent to final judgment although judgment had not been entered. Prentice Lumber Co., Inc. v. Hukill, 161 M 8, 504 P2d 277 (1972).

Correction of Erroneous Judgment: Case would be remanded to District Court for purpose of amending, by incorporating appropriate terms, a judgment which omitted defaulting codefendant who was jointly and severally liable on obligation. White v. Nollmeyer, 151 M 387, 443 P2d 873 (1968).

Denial of Change of Venue: Specification of error arising from trial court's order denying motion for change of venue was not properly before Supreme Court because timely appeal was not made from order as required by rules. Sealey v. Majerus, 149 M 268, 425 P2d 70 (1967).

SCOPE OF APPELLATE REVIEW

Interim Appeal, Rather Than Trial De Novo, Appropriate for Consideration of Double Jeopardy Challenge: Barron appealed a Justice's Court decision to the District Court for trial de novo, then moved to dismiss the case on double jeopardy grounds. The motion was denied, and Barron appealed to the Supreme Court. Normally, the Supreme Court will not consider appeals from District Court unless a final judgment of conviction has been rendered. However, as set out in Three Forks v. Schillinger, 2007 MT 331, 340 M 211, 173 P3d 681 (2007), there is no trial de novo if a second trial in District Court would violate the provision against double jeopardy. Thus, notwithstanding the fact that the District Court had not rendered final judgment, the Supreme Court accepted Barron's interim appeal to consider the merits of the double jeopardy claim. St. v. Barron, 2008 MT 69, 342 M 100, 179 P3d 519 (2008).

Standard of Review of Jury Instructions in Criminal Case: The Supreme Court reviews jury instructions in a criminal case to determine if the instructions fully and fairly instructed the jury on the law applicable to the case. A District Court has broad discretion in instructing a jury and will be reversed only if an instruction prejudicially affects the substantial rights of a defendant. St. v. Dubois, 2006 MT 89, 332 M 44, 134 P3d 82 (2006). See also St. v. Baker, 2004 MT 393, 325 M 229, 104 P3d 491 (2004).

Failure to Appear at Parental Rights Termination Hearing and to Object to Termination — Waiver of Right to Appeal: A father appealed the termination of his parental rights on grounds that the District Court relied on evidence in the extensive record rather than live testimony at the termination hearing. However, to properly preserve an issue for appeal, a party must notify the trial court at the time that the objectionable conduct is at issue, and untimely objections may not be heard on appeal. The father failed to appear at the termination hearing and thus waived the right to testify, nor did the father's attorney object to termination, having had no contact with the father prior to the hearing. By failing to appear or to object in person or by counsel, the father waived the right to appeal the manner in which the hearing was conducted, including the District Court's decision to rely on the record rather than take live testimony. Termination was affirmed. In re A.T., 2006 MT 35, 331 M 155, 130 P3d 1249 (2006), following In re Parenting of K.P., 2005 MT 297, 329 M 337, 124 P3d 1091 (2005), and distinguishing In re M.O., 2003 MT 4, 314 M 13, 62 P3d 265 (2003).

Scope of Review — Jury Instructions: The Supreme Court reviews jury instructions to determine whether the instructions as a whole fully and fairly instructed the jury on the applicable law. The standard of review is whether the trial court abused its broad discretion in formulating jury instructions. St. v. Smith, 2005 MT 325, 329 M 526, 127 P3d 353 (2005). See also St. v. Meyer, 2005 MT 215, 328 M 247, 119 P3d 1214 (2005).

Probation Violation — Standard of Review: When a probation violation has occurred, the District Court must exercise its discretion in determining an appropriate action in response to the violation, and the Supreme Court will not intervene absent an abuse of that discretion. St. v. Burke, 2005 MT 250, 329 M 1, 122 P3d 427 (2005), following St. v. Pedersen, 2003 MT 315, 318 M 262, 80 P3d 79 (2003).

Review of Finding of Mental Disease or Defect — Abuse of Discretion Standard: The Supreme Court reviews a District Court determination of the existence of a mental disease or defect to determine whether the District Court has abused its discretion. An abuse of discretion occurs when the District Courts acts arbitrarily without the employment of conscientious judgment or exceeds the bounds of reason, resulting in substantial injustice. St. v. Burke, 2005 MT 250, 329 M 1, 122 P3d 427 (2005), following St. v. Weldele, 2003 MT 117, 315 M 452, 69 P3d 1162 (2003).

Counsel's Act or Omission Not Considered Trial Strategy Reviewable on Direct Appeal: Lucero contended that he received ineffective assistance of counsel because his attorney did not adequately explain the nature and terms of the state's plea bargain offer. Applying the Strickland test for ineffective assistance claims, the Supreme Court noted that before an ineffective assistance claim will be considered on direct appeal, the record must adequately document the reason why counsel acted in a particular manner, and if the record does not supply the reason, the claim is more appropriately raised in a petition for postconviction relief. However, the claimed act or omission in this case was not considered trial strategy because counsel's communication of the oral plea offer to Lucero was obligatory, not strategic. Thus, the question was not why counsel acted in a particular manner but whether counsel acted and, if so, whether counsel acted adequately, and review of an obligatory action may be reviewed on direct appeal. Lucero was fully informed of the offer and chose to go to trial anyway. Counsel's conduct in communicating the plea offer did not fall below the standard of reasonable representation,. Lucero's claim failed to meet the first prong of the Strickland test and was properly denied. St. v. Lucero, 2004 MT 248, 323 M 42, 97 P3d 1106 (2004). See also Hans v. St., 283 M 379, 942 P2d 674 (1997), St. v. Harris, 2001 MT 231, 306 M 525, 36 P3d 372 (2001), and St. v. Jefferson, 2003 MT 90, 315 M 146, 69 P3d 641 (2003).

Repealed Statute Regarding Sale or Lease of School Trust Lands to School Districts — No Justiciable Controversy or Action Upon Which Relief Could Be Granted: Former 20-6-621(4) allowed the Board of Land Commissioners to sell, for appraised value, or to lease, for $1 a year, school trust lands to a school district. The Department of Natural Resources and Conservation stipulated that the provision was unconstitutional because it made state lands available for less than full market value. The District Court agreed, noting that leasing school trust lands to some school districts would favor only some of the beneficiaries and not the school trust as a whole. The Legislature concurred and repealed the subsection in 1999. Plaintiff subsequently sued the Department, the Board, and the state, contending that the Department unlawfully determined that the provision was unconstitutional and failed to defend the constitutionality of the provision. The state moved to dismiss the complaint on grounds that no justiciable controversy existed and that the complaint alleged no cause of action upon which relief could be granted. The District Court granted summary judgment for the state, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Any determination that the Department exceeded its authority would have had no bearing on the existing rights or interests at issue, and a judgment granting the relief sought would not have effectively operated to resolve any issue in the case. Thus, there was no justiciable case or controversy, and the claim was properly dismissed. Advocates for Educ., Inc. v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2004 MT 230, 322 M 429, 97 P3d 553 (2004), following Mont.-Dak. Util. Co. v. Billings, 2003 MT 332, 318 M 862, 80 P3d 1247 (2003).

No Appellate Review of Trial Court's Refusal to Allow Expert Testimony Absent Contemporaneous Objection: During Olsen's arson trial, Olsen sought to introduce testimony from a chemical engineer who had concluded that a faulty junction box was the cause of the fire. After voir dire to determine the engineer's qualifications to testify, the District Court granted the state's motion to exclude the engineer's testimony on grounds that he lacked the necessary expertise to testify on the subject of forensic electrical engineering. Olsen made no offer of proof regarding the witness's qualifications to testify or the substance of the testimony, nor did Olsen object to the refusal to allow the testimony. Nevertheless, on appeal, Olsen contended that the trial court erred in disallowing the testimony. The Supreme Court held that Olsen's failure to make a contemporaneous objection at trial constituted waiver of the objection, so the issue was not subject to appellate review. St. v. Olsen, 2004 MT 158, 322 M 1, 92 P3d 1204 (2004).

Issues Subsumed in First Appeal Res Judicata on Second Appeal: In a noncite opinion (St. v. Kallowat, 2000 MT 354N), the Supreme Court affirmed defendant's Sanders County convictions for felony DUI, driving with a suspended or revoked license, and felony bail-jumping. Kallowat's petition for postconviction relief was denied, and Kallowat appealed. The issue decided in the first appeal was whether the arresting officer had probable cause, given that the officer was a prior felon. The Supreme Court held that even if the officer's employment status was questionable, he still had probable cause to make the arrest as a private citizen. Kallowat devoted most of the motion for postconviction relief reiterating the same arguments, and because the postconviction arguments were subsumed in the issues considered in the first appeal, the issue was res judicata and the Supreme Court declined further consideration. Kallowat v. St., 2004 MT 152, 321 M 501, 92 P3d 1176 (2004).

Preservation of Right to Argue Sufficient Evidence of Negligence on Appeal From Judgment as Matter of Law: Plaintiffs' mother was a domestic violence victim who was killed by her husband. Plaintiffs sued the County Sheriff for negligently failing to take action to protect the victim. A jury found for the plaintiffs. The Sheriff moved for judgment as a matter of law, and the District Court granted the motion and vacated the jury verdict, finding that the domestic violence statutes did not trigger mandatory legal duties upon the Sheriff regarding arrest and seizure. On appeal, the Sheriff argued that because plaintiffs did not specifically appeal from the District Court's refusal to instruct the jury that violations of the arrest and weapon seizure provisions of the domestic violence law were negligence per se, plaintiffs could not argue on appeal that evidence that the statutes were violated supported the verdict. The Supreme Court examined the definitions of common-law negligence and negligence per se, noting that the jury was given the full panoply of instructions on common-law negligence and that despite the fact that negligence per se instructions were not given, plaintiffs nevertheless argued that violation of the statutes was evidence of negligence. Pursuant to Nehring v. LaCounte, 219 M 462, 712 P2d 1329 (1986), even if a violation of a statute does not constitute negligence per se, the violation may nonetheless be considered as evidence of negligence. Because plaintiffs appealed from the judgment as a matter of law, they preserved their right to argue on appeal that the jury had before it sufficient evidence of negligence. Massee v. Thompson, 2004 MT 121, 321 M 210, 90 P3d 394 (2004).

Standard of Review of Family Law Contempt Decisions: Because contempt is intended as a discretionary power necessary to enforce the dignity and authority of the court, in a family law matter, the Supreme Court will review the findings and decision not to hold a party in contempt for a blatant abuse of discretion. In the present case, the husband was essentially in compliance with previous orders regarding payment of child support, so the District Court's dismissal of contempt charges was not a blatant abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Winters, 2004 MT 82, 320 M 459, 87 P3d 1005 (2004), following In re Marriage of Baer, 1998 MT 29, 287 M 322, 954 P2d 1125 (1998).

Limited Scope of Supreme Court Review of Jury Verdict: The Supreme Court's scope of review of a jury verdict is very limited, and the court will not reverse a jury verdict that is supported by substantial credible evidence. It is within the province of the jury to determine the weight and credibility afforded to the evidence, and it is not the court's function to agree or disagree with the jury's verdict. The Supreme Court will view evidence in the light most favorable to the prevailing party. Byers v. Cummings, 2004 MT 69, 320 M 339, 87 P3d 465 (2004). See also Magart v. Schank, 2000 MT 279, 302 M 151, 13 P3d 390 (2000), and Satterfield v. Medlin, 2002 MT 260, 312 M 234, 59 P3d 33 (2002).

Standard of Review of Refusal to Issue Proposed Jury Instruction: The standard of review of a District Court's refusal to issue a proposed jury instruction is whether the court abused its discretion. In reviewing for abuse of discretion, the Supreme Court does not determine whether it agrees with the District Court, but rather whether the District Court abused its discretion by acting arbitrarily without employment of conscientious judgment or by exceeding the bounds of reason in view of all the circumstances. Byers v. Cummings, 2004 MT 69, 320 M 339, 87 P3d 465 (2004). See also Finstad v. W.R. Grace & Co., 2000 MT 228, 301 M 240, 8 P3d 778 (2000), and Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002 (2000).

Submission of Written Motions Regarding Enforceability of Oral Marital Separation Agreement Sufficient to Preserve Issue for Appeal: The parties' oral separation agreement was read into the record but not reduced to writing before the wife moved out of state. The wife moved the District Court to enforce the oral agreement, but because 40-4-201 requires a written agreement for enforcement, the court declined and instead held a hearing on the merits. The wife claimed error in the refusal to enforce the oral agreement, but the husband contended that the issue was not preserved for appeal because the wife did not raise the issue at the hearing. The Supreme Court disagreed. The wife's written motions regarding enforceability and the District Court's refusal to enforce the oral agreement were sufficient to preserve the issue for appeal. In re Marriage of Killpack, 2004 MT 55, 320 M 186, 87 P3d 393 (2004).

Standard of Review of Motion In Limine: The Supreme Court reviews a District Court's grant or denial of a motion in limine for an abuse of discretion. A District Court abuses its discretion when it acts arbitrarily without conscientious judgment or exceeds the bounds of reason, resulting in substantial injustice. St. v. Brasda, 2003 MT 374, 319 M 146, 82 P3d 922 (2003).

Standard of Review of Grant or Denial of Injunction — Manifest Abuse of Discretion: For more than 100 years, the Supreme Court has applied two different standards of review when an injunction has been granted or denied. The first standard, applied in Nelson v. O'Neal, 1 M 284 (1871), was an abuse of discretion standard. Later, in Craver v. Stapp, 26 M 314, 67 P 937 (1902), a manifest abuse of discretion standard was introduced. To rectify the disparity, the Supreme Court decided that the high degree of discretion vested in District Courts to maintain the status quo through injunctive relief warranted application of the more appropriate deferential manifest abuse of discretion standard. A manifest abuse of discretion is one that is obvious, evident, or unmistakable. Nelson and any other cases that did not apply the manifest abuse standard were overruled to the extent of their inconsistency with this holding. Shammel v. Canyon Resources Corp., 2003 MT 372, 319 M 132, 82 P3d 912 (2003).

Standard of Review of Motion to Suppress Statements: The Supreme Court reviews a District Court's ruling on a motion to suppress to determine whether the District Court's findings of fact are clearly erroneous and whether its interpretation and application of the law are correct. A finding of fact is clearly erroneous if it is not supported by substantial evidence, if the District Court misapprehended the effect of the evidence, or if the Supreme Court has a definite or firm conviction that the District Court has committed a mistake. St. v. Reavley, 2003 MT 298, 318 M 150, 79 P3d 270 (2003).

Standard of Review of Contractual Stipulated Damages Provision — Enforceable Liquidated Damages Versus Unenforceable Penalty: Whether a stipulated damages provision in a contract constitutes enforceable liquidated damages or an unenforceable penalty is a question of law, and if the underlying facts are not in dispute, the Supreme Court will review a determination of this conclusion of law for correctness. Arrowhead School District No. 75 v. Klyap, 2003 MT 294, 318 M 103, 79 P3d 250 (2003), followed in Highway Specialties, Inc. v. Mont. Dept. of Transportation, 2009 MT 253, 351 M 527, 215 P3d 667 (2009). See also Lake River Corp. v. Carborundum Co., 769 F2d 1284 (7th Cir. 1985).

Standard of Review of Denial of Motion for Directed Verdict in Criminal Case: The Supreme Court reviews a denial of a motion for a directed verdict in a criminal case to determine whether, after viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution, any rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of the offense beyond a reasonable doubt. The decision is within the sound discretion of the trial court and will not be reversed on appeal absent an abuse of that discretion. Helena v. Kortum, 2003 MT 290, 318 M 77, 78 P3d 882 (2003), following St. v. Landis, 2002 MT 45, 308 M 354, 43 P3d 298 (2002).

Appellate Mediation Rule Mandatory and Self-Executing in Actions for Money Damages: Plaintiff sued for money damages, and the District Court issued an order on motion for a change of venue. Plaintiff's notice of appeal from that order stated that the appeal was subject to mediation required under former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Nevertheless, 5 days later, plaintiff filed an unopposed motion to dispense with mediation. The Supreme Court dismissed the motion to dispense with mediation and ordered mediation. It is the nature of the underlying action, not the type of order or judgment on appeal, that determines whether the appeal is subject to mediation under former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and because the underlying action sought money damages, which is clearly within the rule, mediation was mandatory. Former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), is self-executing, and the Supreme Court will not entertain motion practices on the rule. Liang v. Lai, 2003 MT 281, 317 M 524, 78 P3d 1212 (2003), following Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71 (2000).

Standard of Review of Evidentiary Rulings: The Supreme Court reviews a District Court's evidentiary rulings for an abuse of the lower court's broad discretion, and absent a showing of an abuse of discretion, the lower court will not be overruled. Sufficiency of evidence to support a jury verdict is reviewed to determine whether, after viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution, any rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. St. v. Runs Above, 2003 MT 181, 316 M 421, 73 P3d 161 (2003). See also St. v. Stevens, 2002 MT 181, 311 M 52, 53 P3d 356 (2002), and St. v. Bingman, 2002 MT 350, 313 M 376, 61 P3d 153 (2002).

Insurer's Breach of Duty to Indemnify — Recovery of Attorney Fees by Injured Third-Party Claimant Who Prevails in Insurance Coverage Action Against Motor Vehicle Liability Insurer — Modification of Insurance Exception — Standard of Review of Question of Law: Following remand in Christensen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 2000 MT 378, 303 M 493, 22 P3d 624 (2000), the Christensens requested attorney fees incurred in the declaratory judgment action. The District Court denied the request, and the Christensens appealed. Generally, under the American rule, a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory provision, although equitable exceptions are recognized. Here, the parties agreed that there was no contractual authority to support an award of attorney fees, although the Supreme Court held in Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum, 2003 MT 97, 315 M 210, 69 P3d 663 (2003), that 27-8-313 authorizes a District Court to award attorney fees when the court, in its discretion, considers such an award to be necessary or proper. The Christensens submitted that the defendant insurer was obligated to reimburse them based on the insurance exception rationale articulated in Home Ins. Co. v. Pinski Bros., Inc., 160 M 219, 500 P2d 945 (1972), which approved an award of attorney fees in cases in which an insurer breaches its obligation to defend an insured. The Supreme Court noted that the issue presented a question of law, so the standard of review was whether the District Court's interpretation of law was correct. The Supreme Court held that an insurer that breaches its duty to indemnify is liable for attorney fees when an insured is forced to assume the burden of legal action to obtain the full benefit of the insurance contract, regardless of whether the insurer's duty to defend is at issue. However, in this case, the Christensens were third-party beneficiaries, and the Supreme Court declined to extend the insurance exception to third-party claimants because that would sanction attorney fee awards for simply demonstrating the existence of any insurance contract from which a third-party claimant successfully established coverage, which would undermine the American rule. Thus, although the Christensens were precluded from recovering attorney fees under the obligatory insurance exception, the case was remanded for a determination of whether attorney fees were necessary or proper under 27-8-313 and Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Brewer, 2003 MT 98, 315 M 231, 69 P3d 652 (2003), overruling Yovish v. United Serv. Auto. Ass'n, 243 M 284, 794 P2d 682 (1990).

Acquiescence in Assessment of Interest on Unpaid Portion of Criminal Fine — Waiver of Right to Appeal: As part of a plea agreement on a felony drug charge, Micklon was fined $55,000. After hearing testimony on Micklon's financial status, the sentencing court agreed to allow five annual payments of $11,000, but assessed interest at 10% a year on the unpaid balance. Micklon appealed the interest charges on grounds that there was no statutory authority for requiring interest on a criminal fine. The state responded that appeal was waived by Micklon's failure to object to the interest provisions at the time of sentencing. The Supreme Court recognized that a defendant often must remain silent even in the face of invalid conditions to guard against the possibility that the sentencing court may forego a more lenient sentence if the defendant objects to one of the conditions, and that in those circumstances a defendant's failure to object does not necessarily constitute a waiver of the right to appeal. However, during sentencing Micklon did not remain silent, but in fact affirmatively agreed to inclusion of the interest condition in the sentence. Without addressing the legality of interest charges, the Supreme Court concluded that Micklon waived the right to appeal the issue and affirmed the sentencing court's assessment of interest on the unpaid portion of Micklon's criminal fine. St. v. Micklon, 2003 MT 45, 314 M 291, 65 P3d 559 (2003). Micklon was overruled in Kalispell v. Salsgiver, 2019 MT 126, 396 Mont. 57, 443 P.3d 504.

Voluntariness of Confession — Totality of Circumstances: When a defendant moves to suppress a confession or admission on grounds that it was given involuntarily, the prosecution must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that it was voluntary. On appeal, the Supreme Court will review denial of a suppression motion to determine whether findings of fact were clearly erroneous and correctly applied as a matter of law. A finding of fact is clearly erroneous if: (1) it is not supported by substantial evidence, which must be more than a scintilla of evidence but may be less than a preponderance of the evidence; (2) the trial court misapprehended the effect of the evidence; or (3) the Supreme Court has a definite or firm conviction that a mistake was made. When a determination of voluntariness depends on the credibility of witnesses, the Supreme Court will defer to the trial court. The emphasis in determining voluntariness is on whether the confession was the product of free choice or compulsion, which must take into account the totality of the circumstances, including the defendant's age and education, whether the defendant was advised of Miranda rights, the defendant's prior experience with the criminal justice system and police interrogation, the defendant's background, experience, demeanor, coherence, articulateness, and capacity to make full use of faculties, the length and method of interrogation, and whether the confession or admission was extracted through force, violence, or improper influence or by direct or implied promises. If the confession or admission was involuntary, its use violates self-incrimination and due process. Here, the Supreme Court considered the totality of the circumstances and found substantial credible evidence that Hoffman's confession was voluntary. St. v. Hoffman, 2003 MT 26, 314 M 155, 64 P3d 1013 (2003).

Standard of Review of Denial of Petition for Postconviction Relief: The correct standard of review of a District Court's denial of a petition for postconviction relief is whether the court's findings of fact are clearly erroneous and whether its conclusions of law are correct. A different standard of review, namely whether substantial evidence supports the findings and conclusions of the District Court, as set out in St. v. Coates, 241 M 331, 786 P2d 1182 (1990), Walker v. St., 261 M 1, 862 P2d 1 (1993), St. v. Moorman, 279 M 330, 928 P2d 145 (1996), and similar cases, is overruled. Porter v. St., 2002 MT 319, 313 M 149, 60 P3d 951 (2002), following St. v. Wright, 2001 MT 282, 307 M 349, 42 P3d 753 (2001).

Failure of Counsel to Preserve Defendant's Request for Appeal Prejudicial Per Se — Out-of-Time Appeal Appropriate Remedy: Despite a request to do so, Tweed's counsel failed to file a timely appeal of Tweed's sexual abuse conviction. Counsel did not intentionally abandon the appeal; rather, the failure was unintentional and resulted from a filing oversight and miscommunication. Nevertheless, the error was prejudicial per se and constituted ineffective assistance of counsel in violation of Tweed's constitutional rights. The failure to timely appeal was excusable, and because postconviction proceedings were considered an inadequate remedy, the Supreme Court decided that an out-of-time appeal was the appropriate remedy and, being in possession of a sufficient record, proceeded to consider the merits of the appeal. St. v. Tweed, 2002 MT 286, 312 M 482, 59 P3d 1105 (2002), following St. v. Rogers, 2001 MT 165, 306 M 130, 32 P3d 724 (2001).

Out-of-Time Appeal in Criminal Matters — Exclusive Jurisdiction With Supreme Court: Under 46-20-101, the only method for review in criminal cases is by notice of appeal. Time limits for filing an appeal are mandatory and jurisdictional. If a defendant takes no action to perfect an appeal within 90 days of judgment, the District Court loses its jurisdiction and the appeal is out-of-time. However, an out-of-time appeal is a remedy that may be available to a criminal defendant who, through no fault of the defendant, misses a deadline for filing an appeal. Although former Rule 21(b), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), precludes an out-of-time appeal in a civil case, the Supreme Court is not precluded from addressing a motion for an out-of-time appeal in a criminal case. Further, a District Court lacks jurisdiction to grant an out-of-time appeal. The Supreme Court has exclusive jurisdiction to grant a motion for an out-of-time appeal, and the motion is considered an original proceeding subject to the provisions of former Rule 17, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Upon a showing that the failure to timely notice a criminal appeal was excusable under the circumstances, the Supreme Court may conclude that an out-of-time appeal is the appropriate remedy pursuant to former Rule 21(b), M.R.App.P. (now superseded). In that event, the matter will be remanded to the District Court with instructions to vacate and reenter judgment to afford the defendant a second opportunity to act within the statutory timeframes for filing notice of appeal. St. v. Tweed, 2002 MT 286, 312 M 482, 59 P3d 1105 (2002).

De Novo Review of Excised Search Warrant Application by Supreme Court — Standard of Review: Supreme Court review of an application for a search warrant grants great deference to the issuing magistrate's determination that probable cause existed for issuing the warrant. However, when information has been excised from an application after the fact, that deference will not be paid to the magistrate's probable cause determination and the court will review the excised application de novo to determine whether probable cause supported the issuance of the search warrant. The Supreme Court's standard of review has often been articulated as whether the magistrate had a substantial basis to issue the search warrant, while the court's conclusions tended to be focused on whether sufficient probable cause existed. For purposes of review, the phrase "substantial basis for probable cause" has the same meaning as the phrase "sufficient probable cause". St. v. St. Marks, 2002 MT 285, 312 M 468, 59 P3d 1113 (2002). See also St. v. Kuneff, 1998 MT 287, 291 M 474, 970 P2d 556 (1998).

Supreme Court Decision Binding — Relitigation of Same Issues on Subsequent Appeal Inappropriate: When a decision has been rendered by the Supreme Court on a particular issue between the same parties in the same case, whether the decision is right or wrong, that decision is binding on the parties and the courts and cannot be relitigated in a subsequent appeal. When a case is reversed and remanded, the trial court may not ignore the mandate and opinion of the reviewing court, but must proceed in conformity with the views expressed by the appellate court. In the present case, the District Court's amended conclusion was in conformity with the Supreme Court's decision in Grenfell v. Anderson, 1999 MT 272, 296 M 474, 989 P2d 818 (1999), and with the law of the case, and the District Court did not exceed its jurisdiction in its amended conclusions regarding Grenfell's claim for unlawful detainer or in addressing Grenfell's other claims in the original complaint. Grenfell v. Anderson, 2002 MT 225, 311 M 385, 56 P3d 326 (2002).

Unsupported and Incomprehensible Issues Raised by Pro Se Appellant Dismissed: The wife appealed from a marital property distribution by filing a pro se brief that alluded to libelous conduct, unscrupulous activity regarding trial documents, false testimony, judicial bias, and erroneous calculation of marital assets. The Supreme Court found that the brief contained general contentions of impropriety, but no citations to the record or supporting legal authority. Although the Supreme Court has shown some willingness to make accommodations for pro se parties by relaxing technical requirements that do not impact fundamental bases for appeal, in this case, the appeal was dismissed because of an utter failure to comply with the former Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure (now superseded) by filing a brief that could be comprehended by the court and realistically responded to by the opposing party. In re Marriage of McMahon, 2002 MT 198, 311 M 175, 53 P3d 1266 (2002).

Failure to Properly Raise Issue in Opening Appellate Brief — Case Dismissed: In five issues presented for appeal, the appellant pro se set forth little or no argument and no citations in support of the argument in the opening brief. Instead, after setting forth the issue, the appellant simply stated that the issue was presented at face value without argument. Pursuant to former Rule 23(a), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), in order for an appellant to properly raise an issue in an opening brief, the appellant's contentions must be listed as to the issues presented and the reasons for presenting the arguments, along with citation to the authorities relied upon. The Supreme Court will not consider unsupported issues or arguments, conduct legal research on an appellant's behalf, guess an appellant's precise position, or develop legal analysis in support of an appellant's position. The opening brief violated the former Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure (now superseded) and was therefore dismissed. In re Marriage of Snow, 2002 MT 143, 310 M 260, 49 P3d 610 (2002).

Standard of Review for Statutes Applicable to Administrative Rules — Rules of Statutory Construction Inapplicable Absent Ambiguity in Statute or Rule — Deference Afforded Longstanding Agency Interpretation of Administrative Rule: The Supreme Court generally applies the same principles in construing administrative rules as it applies to statutes. If the plain meaning of a statute or rule can be determined from the language used, the court is not at liberty to add or detract from the language, and absent ambiguity in the language, the court may not consider legislative history or other means of statutory construction. When an agency's interpretation of an administrative rule or statute has stood unchallenged for a considerable length of time, it will be regarded as having great importance in arriving at the proper construction. However, even when a particular meaning has been ascribed to a statute by an agency through a long and continuous course of consistent interpretation, that interpretation will be afforded respectful consideration but is still not binding on the courts. Glendive Medical Center, Inc. v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2002 MT 131, 310 M 156, 49 P3d 560 (2002).

Standard of Appellate Review of Administrative Decision in Contested Case: When reviewing a District Court order affirming or reversing an administrative decision in a contested case, the Supreme Court employs the same standard applied by the District Court to determine whether the findings of fact are clearly erroneous and whether the agency correctly interpreted the law. O'Neill v. Dept. of Revenue, 2002 MT 130, 310 M 148, 49 P3d 43 (2002), followed in Ostergren v. Dept. of Revenue, 2004 MT 30, 319 M 405, 85 P3d 738 (2004), and Billings v. Owen, 2006 MT 16, 331 M 10, 127 P3d 1044 (2006). See also Glendive Medical Center, Inc. v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2002 MT 131, 310 M 156, 49 P3d 560 (2002), and Denke v. Shoemaker, 2008 MT 418, 347 M 322, 198 P3d 284 (2008).

Issue of Counsel's Effective Use of Peremptory Juror Challenges More Appropriate When Raised as Petition for Postconviction Relief Rather Than on Direct Appeal When Record Silent: Russell was convicted of attempted deliberate homicide and appealed claiming ineffective assistance of counsel during jury selection. Russell contended that counsel failed to challenge for cause a relative of the victim and used two peremptory challenges to strike jurors who were outside the jury pool. Under the Strickland test for ineffective assistance of counsel, challenged actions of counsel are presumed to be matters of trial strategy and a silent record cannot rebut the strong presumption that counsel rendered adequate assistance and made all significant decisions in the exercise of reasonable professional judgment. Pursuant to St. v. St. John, 2001 MT 1, 304 M 47, 15 P3d 970 (2001), when the record does not illuminate the basis for the challenged acts or omissions of counsel, a claim of ineffective assistance is more appropriately raised in a petition for postconviction relief so that a supplemental record may be made. Here, the record was silent as to why Russell's counsel acted or failed to act regarding the juror challenges. Thus, the Supreme Court declined to discuss the issue on direct appeal. St. v. Russell, 2001 MT 278, 307 M 322, 37 P3d 678 (2001).

Standard of Review of District Court Jurisdictional Questions: Whether a District Court has jurisdiction to rule on a matter is a question of law that the Supreme Court will review to determine whether the District Court had authority to act. A court exceeds jurisdiction through acts that exceed the defined power of the court, whether the power is defined by constitutional provisions, express statutes, or court rules. In re Marriage of Richards, 2001 MT 183, 306 M 212, 31 P3d 1002 (2001), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729, and following Lee v. Lee, 2000 MT 67, 299 M 78, 996 P2d 389 (2000), and Gen. Constructors, Inc. v. Chewculator, Inc., 2001 MT 54, 304 M 319, 21 P3d 604 (2001).

Claims Raised on Direct Appeal Barred by Statute or Res Judicata on Petition for Postconviction Relief: Dawson was convicted of robbery, four counts of aggravated kidnapping, and three counts of deliberate homicide and sentenced to death for each of three counts of aggravated kidnapping that resulted in the death of the victim. His conviction was appealed and affirmed (St. v. Dawson, 233 M 345, 761 P2d 352 (1988)). Dawson filed for postconviction relief, alleging 30 separate grounds for relief, but all except one claim, ineffective assistance of counsel, were summarily dismissed. Although res judicata prevents claims raised on appeal from being raised again in a petition for postconviction relief, Dawson argued that three of his claims for postconviction relief could not have been raised on direct appeal because they required evidence not found in the record and thus should not have been subject to summary judgment. The District Court concluded that the issues could have been raised on direct appeal and were not preserved through objection at trial and so were barred by res judicata and 46-21-105. The Supreme Court examined all three of Dawson's claims before affirming that 46-21-105 was properly applied to two of the claims and that no prejudice resulted from the application of res judicata to the third. Lastly, Dawson raised Kills On Top v. St., 279 M 384, 928 P2d 182 (1996), as grounds for reconsideration of several other claims based on serving the "ends of justice". The Supreme Court felt no compulsion to reconsider any of Dawson's claims to serve those ends because the claims were barred by res judicata. Dawson v. St., 2000 MT 219, 301 M 135, 10 P3d 49, 57 St. Rep. 883 (2000).

Partial Payment of Interest on Promissory Note Not Precluding Appeal: Plaintiff owed defendant $200,000 plus interest on a promissory note. The same day that plaintiff filed a claim for misrepresentation and failure to disclose, plaintiff also deposited the first promissory note payment with the Clerk of the District Court. Following judgment for plaintiff, the District Court ordered release of the funds, which defendant accepted. Plaintiff argued that by accepting the funds and the fruits of the judgment, defendant was prohibited from prosecuting an appeal to reverse the judgment. Defendant responded that because the judgment could not possibly affect the benefit that was accepted, the right to appeal was not waived. The long-recognized general rule is that the right to accept the fruits of a judgment and at the same time prosecute an appeal from it are not concurrent, but rather wholly inconsistent, rights and that the election of one excludes the enjoyment of the other (see Peck v. Bersanti, 101 M 6, 52 P2d 168 (1935)). The exception is that when reversal of the judgment cannot possibly affect the appellant's right to the benefit accepted under a judgment, then appeal may be taken and sustained despite the fact that the benefit was sought and secured (see Niles v. Carbon County, 174 M 20, 568 P2d 524 (1977)). The acceptance of payments that were not contested or that were irrevocably conceded as due by the opposing party does not preclude appeal. Here, when defendant accepted the funds, it simply accepted what plaintiff already conceded was due and no more than it conceded would be due in the event that the appeal was successful. Therefore, defendant did not waive the right to appeal. H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000).

Lack of Meritorious Argument on Appeal of Summary Judgment: Kinsey-Cartwright and Burleson had a dispute over an easement across Kinsey-Cartwright's property. Burleson took his attorney, Brower, to investigate the disputed easement, during which time a confrontation occurred, resulting in a complaint against Brower for assault and trespass. The District Court granted Brower's request for summary judgment, and Kinsey-Cartwright appealed. With the exception of four sentences in her reply brief, Kinsey-Cartwright's entire argument was devoted to arguing that no easement burdened her land. However, the appeal was related to the complaint of assault and trespass, not the validity of an easement. The four sentences were simply a collection of conclusions and contained no discussion of the law relating to trespass or assault, no citation to legal authority or to the record, and no application of the law to the facts. It is not the obligation of the Supreme Court to formulate arguments or locate authorities for parties who appeal. Thus, absent any meritorious argument to consider on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court award of summary judgment. Kinsey-Cartwright v. Brower, 2000 MT 198, 300 M 450, 5 P3d 1026, 57 St. Rep. 769 (2000). See also St. v. Blackcrow, 1999 MT 44, 293 M 374, 975 P2d 1253 (1999).

Offer of Proof Necessary to Enable Supreme Court Review of Ruling on Admissibility of Evidence: At Raugust's trial, he attempted to question witnesses regarding his prearrest statements, but the prosecution objected on grounds of hearsay and the trial court sustained the objections. On appeal, Raugust argued that the statements were offered to prove his state of mind rather than for the truth of the matter asserted and that he was thus denied the opportunity to present a defense because of the exclusion of evidence reflecting a reasonable doubt as to his guilt. However, when an objection to evidence is sustained and the answer of a witness is not apparent, an offer of proof is necessary to enable the Supreme Court to review the ruling. Raugust made no offer of proof or argument at trial with respect to why he felt the objection should be overruled and therefore waived his argument on appeal by failing to make an offer of proof once the objections were sustained. St. v. Raugust, 2000 MT 146, 300 M 54, 3 P3d 115, 57 St. Rep. 570 (2000). See also St. v. Jennings, 96 M 80, 28 P2d 448 (1934).

Failure to Object to Conduct of Psychological Evaluation or to Continuation of Sentencing Hearing — Waiver of Right to Consideration on Appeal: Osterloth was convicted of felony sexual assault and was required to undergo a sexual offender evaluation by a therapist of his choice at county expense. His scheduled sentencing was continued to allow the evaluation. On appeal, Osterloth contended that the District Court erred by sentencing him without an evaluation prepared by a qualified therapist, pursuant to 46-18-111, and by continuing sentencing instead of conducting a sentencing hearing without delay, as required in 46-18-115. The Supreme Court noted that under 46-20-104, it is precluded from considering an alleged error unless a timely objection was made or the criteria of 46-20-701 are met. Osterloth did not object to the evaluation being conducted by his own evaluator or to the sentencing continuation, nor did he assert that he could satisfy any of the requirements of 46-20-701. Thus, Osterloth waived the right to have the Supreme Court consider these alleged errors on appeal. St. v. Osterloth, 2000 MT 129, 299 M 517, 1 P3d 946, 57 St. Rep. 533 (2000).

Clarification of Family Law Exception to Supreme Court Review of District Court Contempt Orders — When Writ of Certiorari Required — Ancillary Order Exception: Seeking to narrow and clarify the judicially created family law exception to the writ of certiorari requirement of 3-1-523 that was expressly extended to dissolution of marriage contempt proceedings in In re Marriage of Smith, 212 M 223, 686 P2d 912 (1984), and In re Marriage of Sessions, 231 M 437, 753 P2d 1306, 45 St. Rep. 744 (1988), and to balance the exception with the statute and longstanding Montana case law generally allowing no direct appeal from a contempt order unless the writ is granted, the Supreme Court concluded that it would be poor public policy to create circumstances whereby a District Court's contempt powers are diminished in any manner by one party's ability to file a direct appeal that in turn frivolously and needlessly delays that party's compliance with the lower court's judgments and orders. To cover contentious disputes that arise in family law, the court created the ancillary order exception, establishing that the family law direct appeal exception applies only when the judgment appealed from includes an ancillary order, meaning an order that determines the rights of the parties as a result of the contemptuous conduct—all under one judgment, that affects the substantial rights of the parties. The ancillary order may result from the proper exercise of the court's jurisdiction, in which case a writ of certiorari would necessarily be denied. However, a lone contempt order, regardless of the underlying law of the case, cannot be reviewed by the Supreme Court on direct appeal. Lee v. Lee, 2000 MT 67, 299 M 78, 996 P2d 389, 57 St. Rep. 308 (2000), followed in In re Marriage of DeLude, 2000 MT 75, 299 M 123, 999 P2d 306, 57 St. Rep. 331 (2000). See also State ex rel. Zosel v. District Court, 56 M 578, 185 P 1112 (1919), and Milanovich v. Milanovich, 200 M 83, 655 P2d 959, 39 St. Rep. 1554 (1982).

Standard for Review of Family Law Contempt Orders — Jurisdiction and Evidence — Family Law Exception Clarified: The standard for review of contempt orders, pursuant to the granting of a writ of certiorari, is, first, to determine whether the court that found contempt acted within its jurisdiction. For a court to have acted within its jurisdiction: (1) it must have cognizance of the subject matter; (2) it must have presence of the proper parties; and (3) its action must be invoked by proper pleadings and the judgment must be within the issues raised. A court lacks or exceeds jurisdiction by any act that exceeds the defined power of the court, whether that power is defined by constitutional provision, statute, or court rule or under the doctrine of stare decisis. The second part of the standard for review of contempt orders is to determine whether substantial evidence exists to support the court's findings. The family law exception relevant to review on direct appeal of a District Court judgment and orders made in cases of contempt is subject to the same standard of review. Lee v. Lee, 2000 MT 67, 299 M 78, 996 P2d 389, 57 St. Rep. 308 (2000), following State ex rel. Porter v. First Judicial District, 123 M 447, 215 P2d 279 (1950), and Kauffman v. District Court, 1998 MT 239, 291 M 122, 966 P2d 715, 55 St. Rep. 1001 (1998), and followed in In re Marriage of Coward, 2000 MT 128, 300 M 1, 2 P3d 822, 57 St. Rep. 531 (2000). See also In re Marriage of Sullivan, 258 M 531, 853 P2d 1194, 50 St. Rep. 648 (1993).

Proper Cross-Appeal of Adverse District Court Decision Regarding City Court Denial of Motion for Continuance: The established doctrine governing appeals to all appellate courts is that a party must cross-appeal if the party seeks to change any part of the judgment below. Further, the Montana Supreme Court follows the rule that it has jurisdiction only over those issues addressed in the appeal or in a properly filed cross-appeal, not jurisdiction over the entire case. Conversely, it is also the general rule that a cross-appeal is not necessary to enable a prevailing party to defend its judgment on any ground properly raised below, whether or not that ground was relied upon, rejected, or even considered by the court below. The proper way for a respondent to raise an issue before the Supreme Court, if the issue would support the decision below and is an issue that the court below did not address because it found another issue to be dispositive, is to assert the issue in the brief to the Supreme Court and fully discuss it. If a respondent does not assert and fully discuss the issue, the Supreme Court may in its discretion: (1) review the issue itself; (2) decide that the respondent has waived the right to review of the issue; or (3) remand to the court below for a decision on the issue. Here, issues raised by respondent that the District Court declined to address, having found another issue dispositive, undoubtedly supported the District Court's decision reversing the City Court's judgment. Thus, because the respondent sufficiently asserted the issues and both parties fully briefed each one, the Supreme Court concluded that the respondent had properly cross-appealed and that it was proper to review the respondent's issues on appeal. Missoula v. Robertson, 2000 MT 52, 298 M 419, 998 P2d 144, 57 St. Rep. 250 (2000), following In Interest of Jamie L., 493 NW 2d 56 (Wis. 1992). See also Wash. v. Yakima Indian Nation, 439 US 463, 58 L Ed 2d 740, 99 S Ct 740 (1979).

Motion In Limine to Prevent In-Court Identification Considered Motion to Suppress — Standard of Review: A motion in limine to prevent an in-court identification is essentially a motion to suppress, and the standard of review of a District Court's denial of a motion to suppress is whether the court's findings of fact are clearly erroneous and whether the findings were correctly applied as a matter of law. St. v. Clark, 2000 MT 40, 298 M 300, 997 P2d 107, 57 St. Rep. 185 (2000).

Speculative Future Use of Bridge Easement Not Within Scope of Appeal — Cross-Appeal Denied: The District Court defined the scope and extent of a bridge easement, limiting what use could be made of the bridge based on use during the prescriptive period. Appellants cross-appealed, requesting the Supreme Court to direct an amendment to the lower court judgment specifying what future uses might be permitted within the scope of the adjudicated easement. The Supreme Court held that to foreclose speculative future uses would overreach its role in considering whether the District Court erred in its decision and declined to do so. Kelly v. Wallace, 1998 MT 307, 292 M 129, 972 P2d 1117, 55 St. Rep. 1271 (1998).

California Rule Regarding Certain Issues Raised for First Time on Appeal Rejected: The corporate appellant argued that even if it was arguing for the first time on appeal that it had not transacted business in this state, that issue fell within the general exception to the rule adopted by California courts. The California cases provided that a court may address an issue raised for the first time on appeal when the facts are not disputed and the issue merely raises a new question of law. The Supreme Court held that it would not adopt the California approach and declined to review the issue raised by the appellant for the first time on appeal. Unified Indus., Inc. v. Easley, 1998 MT 145, 289 M 255, 961 P2d 100, 55 St. Rep. 574 (1998), followed in Pearson v. Virginia City Ranches Ass'n, 2000 MT 12, 298 M 52, 993 P2d 688, 57 St. Rep. 65 (2000).

Review of Board of Adjustment Decision — Scope Broader Than General: A District Court's scope of review upon a writ of certiorari ordinarily cannot be extended further than to determine whether an inferior tribunal, board, or officer has regularly acted within its authority. However, under 76-2-327, a District Court has a broader scope of review of an appeal from a decision by the Board of Adjustment. The court may hold a hearing and reverse, modify, or affirm a Board decision. In reviewing a District Court decision involving the exercise of the statutory option to take additional evidence, the standard applied by the Supreme Court is whether the District Court abused its discretion and whether the decision was supported by substantial evidence. In re Petition of Sutey Oil Co., Inc. v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County Planning Bd., 1998 MT 127, 289 M 99, 959 P2d 496, 55 St. Rep. 499 (1998). See also Lambros v. Bd. of Adjustment, 153 M 20, 452 P2d 398 (1969), Cutone v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 187 M 515, 610 P2d 691 (1980), and Whistler v. Burlington N. RR Co., 228 M 150, 741 P2d 422 (1987).

Decision Regarding Preindictment Delay as Constitutional Question: A speedy trial analysis, which focuses on postindictment delay, involves an inquiry similar to that which the Supreme Court engages in when analyzing preindictment delay. Therefore, on appeal, the Supreme Court will review a District Court decision regarding preindictment delay as a question of constitutional law. The District Court's conclusions of law are reviewed to determine whether its interpretation of the law is correct. St. v. Taylor, 1998 MT 121, 289 M 63, 960 P2d 773, 55 St. Rep. 481 (1998). However, see St. v. Goltz, 197 M 361, 642 P2d 1079 (1982), in which the Supreme Court held that speedy trial guarantees do not extend to the period prior to formal accusation or arrest.

Review of Record for Substantial, Not Contrary, Evidence: When the Supreme Court reviews the record of a trial court to determine whether the trial court's findings are supported by substantial evidence, the review is a determination of whether there is substantial evidence to support the trial court's decision, not whether evidence was presented that might have supported contrary findings. St. v. Mont. Power Co., 284 M 59, 943 P2d 1251, 54 St. Rep. 747 (1997), following Buckentin v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 265 M 518, 878 P2d 262 (1994).

Search Warrant Issued by Unqualified Substitute Judge Invalid — Supervisory Control Necessary to Preclude Further Proceedings: In a case in which a search warrant issued by a previously qualified but legally unauthorized substitute judge was held to be void ab initio, the Supreme Court accepted supervisory control and assumed jurisdiction in order to forestall further needless and expensive litigation. The court determined that it would be fundamentally unfair and prejudicial, not to mention a waste of time and a waste of the limited resources of the court and counsel, to proceed further. Potter v. District Court, 266 M 384, 880 P2d 1319, 51 St. Rep. 853 (1994).

Agreement by County Commission to Pay Justice's Court Expenses — Failure to Object — Appeal Precluded: A Justice of the Peace requested approval of funds from the County Commission for employment of a temporary clerical assistant. The County Commission initially refused to approve the funds. The claim was then submitted for certification pursuant to Browman v. Wood, 168 M 341, 543 P2d 184 (1975), and was subsequently certified as an actual and necessary expense incurred in the performance of actual duties of the Justice's Court. When the bill was still not paid, the Justice of the Peace filed a petition for a contempt order against the County Commissioners for failure to pay the certified claim. The order was amended to include attorney fees. The County Commission then agreed to pay the claim and did not oppose the motion to amend, nor did it file a responsive brief. However, it later alleged error. The Supreme Court held that the County Commission waived the right to appeal by agreeing to pay the claim and then failing to object to the District Court order to pay the claim and taking no further action to challenge the claim. In re Certain Justice Court Expenses, 264 M 510, 872 P2d 795, 51 St. Rep. 372 (1994).

Appeal of Judgment Involving Declaratory Judgment and Injunction: Defendant argued that an appeal that concerned declaratory judgment was premature because plaintiff did not seek former Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), certification of the court's order. However, because plaintiff's motion for partial summary judgment involved both the declaratory judgment and an injunction issue and because plaintiff validly exercised the right to appeal the court's denial of the request for an injunction, the appeal was not considered premature and the entire case was subject to review by the Supreme Court. Hennen v. Omega Enterprises, Inc., 264 M 505, 872 P2d 797, 51 St. Rep. 369 (1994).

Objection Raised in Trial Brief but Never Ruled Upon Not Preserved for Appeal: Defendant claimed it adequately preserved its objection by raising the issue of speculative damages for plaintiff's lost future profits in its trial briefs. However, at no time did defendant solicit a ruling from the trial court on the issue of speculative future damages. Mere inclusion of the issue in the trial brief did not preserve the objection for appeal. Story v. Bozeman, 259 M 207, 856 P2d 202, 50 St. Rep. 761 (1993).

District Court Findings in Quiet Title Action Not Clearly Erroneous — Standard of Review: Cowles brought an action against Sheeline to quiet title to a Montana mining claim. The District Court awarded both Cowles and Sheeline 50% of the shares in the mining company. Sheeline appealed, claiming that nearly all of the District Court's 56 findings of fact were incorrect. The Supreme Court applied the three-part test for review of findings and conclusions announced in Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. DeSaye, 250 M 320, 820 P2d 1285 (1991), followed in Aasheim v. Reum, 277 M 471, 922 P2d 1167, 53 St. Rep. 771 (1996). Using that test, the Supreme Court found that the District Court correctly concluded that: (1) the evidence showed an intent by the two founders of the mining company that each own equal shares in the company; and (2) that an attempt to transfer most of the stock to Sheeline's predecessors in interest was fraudulent and should not be enforced. Cowles v. Sheeline, 259 M 1, 855 P2d 93, 50 St. Rep. 653 (1993).

Sufficiency of Evidence — Standard of Review: When sufficiency of the evidence or elements of the offense issues are presented on appeal, the standard of review applied by the Supreme Court will be whether, after review of the evidence in a light most favorable to the prosecution, any rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. St. v. Bower, 254 M 1, 833 P2d 1106, 49 St. Rep. 586 (1992), overruling the portion of St. v. Cope, 250 M 387, 819 P2d 1280 (1991), that holds that a "clearly erroneous" standard is to be applied to judge-made findings of fact on the substantive elements of a criminal offense, but leaving intact the Cope standard for review of findings of fact on other issues in criminal proceedings, distinguishing Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. DeSaye, 250 M 320, 820 P2d 1285 (1991), and followed, with regard to findings of fact regarding suppression hearing evidence, in St. v. Kaluza, 262 M 360, 865 P2d 263, 50 St. Rep. 1596 (1993). See also St. v. Riley, 252 M 469, 830 P2d 549, 49 St. Rep. 408 (1992), and St. v. Carter, 285 M 449, 948 P2d 1173, 54 St. Rep. 1235 (1997).

Substantial Evidence of Negligence:

Although in conflict with defendant's version of facts, substantial evidence existed to support plaintiff's claim. It was foreseeable that a freestanding light standard could fall and injure anyone in its path and that someone could act with a minimal amount of force in a manner to intervene with the standard's stability. The Supreme Court will not retry a case simply because the jury chooses to believe one side's evidence to the exclusion of the other and will not disturb a jury's negligence findings unless the results are inherently impossible to believe. Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158, 49 St. Rep. 473 (1992).

In reviewing the trial of a suit for damages suffered in a car accident, the Supreme Court refused to overturn a jury verdict of no negligence by respondent when the evidence indicated the following: (1) the respondent was traveling at a reasonable rate of speed; (2) respondent's headlamps were on and aimed properly; and (3) appellant and his companion were walking on the road, facing away from traffic, and wearing dark clothes on a dark night. Kukuchka v. Ziemet, 219 M 155, 710 P2d 1361, 42 St. Rep. 1916 (1985).

Evidence of Adequate Medical Care — Jury Finding of Lack of Medical Malpractice Affirmed: On appeal from judgment based on a jury verdict finding no medical malpractice for injuries sustained by a premature infant, the Supreme Court affirmed, finding sufficient evidence derived from expert testimony to establish a reasonable basis for the jury conclusion that medical care met or exceeded the applicable standard of care under the circumstances. Silvis v. Hobbs, 251 M 407, 824 P2d 1013, 49 St. Rep. 62 (1992).

Conflicting Evidence of Existence of Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing: The Supreme Court refused to set aside a jury verdict compensating an employee for his firing. The court held that while there was conflicting evidence as to whether the employer breached the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict. Barrett v. Asarco, 245 M 196, 799 P2d 1078, 47 St. Rep. 1980 (1990).

Contention of Laches and Estoppel Appealable: The city built a pumphouse that was allegedly on land of another property owner. On appeal from a judgment verdict in an inverse condemnation case, the city was found to have actively contested the boundary at trial and asserted its contention of laches and estoppel. The city could appeal these issues even though it did not present any witnesses at the first bifurcated trial, which concerned only the boundary line issue. Stidham v. Whitefish, 229 M 170, 746 P2d 591, 44 St. Rep. 1869 (1987).

Jury Verdict — Substantial Credible Evidence: A jury verdict will not be overturned when the record contains substantial credible evidence to support the verdict. Flynn v. Siren, 219 M 359, 711 P2d 1371, 43 St. Rep. 10 (1986), followed in Melotz v. Scheckla, 245 M 327, 801 P2d 593, 47 St. Rep. 2165 (1990). See also Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158 (1992), Arnold v. Boise Cascade Corp., 259 M 259, 856 P2d 217 (1993), and Schulke v. Gemar, 264 M 184, 870 P2d 1378, 51 St. Rep. 220 (1994).

Verdict Forms — No Finding of "Plain Error": Counsel did not commit "plain error" when, in summation to the jury, he explained to the jury two verdict forms that favored his client and incidentally explained that they should use the other two verdict forms if they found for the other party. Hill v. Turley, 218 M 511, 710 P2d 50, 42 St. Rep. 1783 (1985).

Evidence of Emancipation of Minor Child: When evidence in a URESA action indicated that the minor child lived away from the obligee but was not earning enough money to support herself, the District Court's determination that the minor child was not emancipated was not clearly erroneous. State of Oregon ex rel. Worden v. Drinkwalter, 216 M 9, 700 P2d 150, 42 St. Rep. 599 (1985).

No Indication of Weight Trial Court Placed on Inadmissible Evidence — New Trial: In the appeal of a conviction under 61-8-401 for driving under the influence of alcohol, the Supreme Court ruled inadmissible blood test results entered into evidence by the trial court. The Supreme Court further ruled that it could not decide whether there was sufficient evidence to convict the defendant without the blood test results because the Supreme Court had no indication of the weight the trial court placed upon the test in its decision. The case was remanded for a new trial. St. v. McDonald, 215 M 340, 697 P2d 1328, 42 St. Rep. 414 (1985).

District Court Findings Presumed Correct: The appellate standard for review is clear. The findings of the trial court are presumed to be correct if supported by substantial evidence. Robinson v. Schrade, 215 M 326, 697 P2d 923, 42 St. Rep. 401 (1985).

Standard of Review in Pro Se Appeal: The Supreme Court's powers of appellate review are the same whether or not a defendant appealing from a criminal conviction is represented by counsel on the appeal. St. v. Green, 212 M 20, 685 P2d 370, 41 St. Rep. 1562 (1984).

Summary Judgment Without Evidence or Jury — Broad Review: When a case is disposed of below on motion for summary judgment before a judge sitting without a jury and no testimony is taken as the facts are relatively uncontested, the scope of review is much broader than in other appeals. The Supreme Court is free to make its own examination of the entire case and reach a conclusion in accordance with its findings. Furthermore, the court will uphold the result below if it is correct, regardless of the reasons given below for the result. Shimsky v. Valley Credit Union, 208 M 186, 676 P2d 1308, 41 St. Rep. 258 (1984), followed in In re Estate of Pelzman, 261 M 461, 863 P2d 1019, 50 St. Rep. 1408 (1993).

Methodology of Determination Substantiated by Record — Failure to Object in Administrative Proceeding: The Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) did not commit error in the application of the "rate of return" methodology, rather than the "market value" methodology, in determining the reasonableness of contract cost for the purchase of coal by the Montana Power Company (MPC) from a wholly-owned subsidiary. While the Supreme Court stated a preference for the "market value" methodology in Montana-Dakota Util. Co. v. Bollinger, 193 M 508, 632 P2d 1086 (1981), the court did not prohibit the P.S.C. from using a different methodology if the evidence warrants its use. In this case, the evidence introduced by the P.S.C. was not challenged by MPC. Rather, MPC seeks to do so for the first time on appeal. Limited review of the administrative record is appropriate, and that record supports the findings of the Commission. Mont. Power Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 204 M 224, 665 P2d 1121, 40 St. Rep. 805 (1983).

Issues Not Argued on Appeal — Issues Merged in Claims: Though not specifically argued by either side on appeal, equal protection issue was considered on appeal where it appeared to be merged in the other considerations before the Supreme Court, which included due process claims. Akhtar v. Van De Wetering, 197 M 205, 642 P2d 149, 39 St. Rep. 470 (1982).

Review of Substantial Credible Evidence — Property Settlement — Accounting: The husband brought an action to enforce the property settlement. The wife sought modification. The property settlement provided that the wife was to provide an accounting for all sums paid. The trial judge found that the wife had made an adequate accounting. The wife testified that she made what she thought was an adequate accounting, and the husband testified that the accounting he received was not sufficient. On appeal, the Supreme Court said that it will not substitute its judgment for that of the trier of fact but rather will only consider whether substantial credible evidence supports the finding and conclusions. Those findings will not be overturned by the court unless there is a clear preponderance of the evidence against them. The court will view the evidence in a light most favorable to the prevailing party, recognizing that substantial evidence may be weak or conflicting with other evidence, yet still support the findings. The findings are affirmed since there is not a clear preponderance of evidence against the findings. Phennicie v. Phennicie, 185 M 120, 604 P2d 787 (1979).

Abuse of Discretion by Trial Court: A reviewing court is never justified in substituting its discretion for that of the trial court. In determining whether the trial court abused its discretion, the question is, did the trial court act arbitrarily without the use of conscientious judgment or exceed the bounds of reason, in view of all the circumstances, ignoring recognized principles resulting in substantial injustice. Jermunson v. Jermunson, 181 M 97, 592 P2d 491 (1979).

"Plain Error": In adopting the "plain error" doctrine appellate courts have a duty to determine whether the parties before them have been denied substantial justice by the trial court, and when that has occurred they can, within sound discretion, consider whether the trial court has deprived a litigant of a fair and impartial trial, even though no objection was made to the conduct during the trial. Such was the case when appellant was denied his day in court by the trial judge's recess and failure to reconvene. Halldorson v. Halldorson, 175 M 170, 573 P2d 169 (1977). See also Graham v. Clarks Fork Nat'l Bank, 204 M 141, 663 P2d 320, 40 St. Rep. 726 (1983).

Amendment of Judgment From Which No Appeal Taken: The Supreme Court exercised its power to correct the judgment against one party defendant as an incident to affording another party defendant relief upon appeal. White v. Nollmeyer, 151 M 387, 443 P2d 873 (1968).

NEW ISSUES RAISED ON APPEAL

Failure to Preserve Issue in District Court — No Consideration on Appeal: Other than filing a pretrial motion to dismiss plaintiff's bad faith claim, defendants did not challenge the sufficiency of the evidence for the claim at the trial level or in posttrial proceedings, nor did defendants object to the jury instruction on the claim. Thus, defendants failed to preserve the issue in District Court, and the Supreme Court declined to consider the issue for the first time on appeal. Ammondson v. NW. Corp., 2009 MT 331, 353 M 28, 220 P3d 1 (2009).

Ineffective Counsel Argument Raised for First Time on Direct Appeal Denied as Untimely: Godfrey argued on appeal that his trial counsel was ineffective by failing to argue on direct appeal that Godfrey was denied a fair trial. The Supreme Court held that because Godfrey raised the issue for the first time on appeal, the issue was untimely, and the court refused to reach the merits of the claim. St. v. Godfrey, 2009 MT 60, 349 M 335, 203 P3d 834 (2009).

Order to Pay Costs of Court-Appointed Counsel Within Statutory Parameters — Sentence Objectionable, Not Illegal Within Scope of Lenihan Rule and Not Colorable Claim on Appeal: Kirkland asserted for the first time on appeal that the sentencing court imposed an illegal sentence by ordering Kirkland to pay the costs of court-appointed counsel incurred during proceedings related to revocation of Kirkland's deferred sentence. Kirkland also contended that the sentencing court erred by not specifying in its written judgment that payment was to be made to the Office of State Public Defender, as required in 46-8-114. The Supreme Court noted that under St. v. Lenihan, 184 M 338, 602 P2d 997 (1979), appellate review of a sentence that is illegal or in excess of statutory mandates may be conducted even though that argument was not raised in District Court. However, the Supreme Court also noted that St. v. Kotwicki, 2007 MT 17, 335 M 344, 151 P3d 892 (2007), clarified Lenihan in that a sentencing court's failure to abide by a statutory requirement rises to an objectionable sentence, not necessarily an illegal one that would invoke the Lenihan exception. Here, Kirkland's sentence requiring payment of costs of counsel was statutorily authorized in 46-8-113 and was therefore considered objectionable, but not illegal. Thus, Kirkland failed to present a colorable claim that his sentence fell outside statutory parameters and warranted review under the Lenihan rule, so the Supreme Court declined to consider Kirkland's arguments for the first time on appeal. St. v. Kirkland, 2008 MT 107, 342 M 365, 181 P3d 616 (2008). See also St. v. MacDonald, 2013 MT 105, 370 Mont. 1, 299 P.3d 839.

Consideration of Irrelevant Information at Trial Violative of Fair Trial Guarantee — Failure to Request Exclusion of Irrelevant Information or Object at Trial — Review of Issue for First Time on Appeal Precluding Review: Prior to trial, defendant requested review of a state case file containing information concerning a witness. The trial court reviewed the file in camera, determined that there was nothing relevant to the defense, and denied defendant's request for review. At trial, the court mentioned the file to the witness and questioned the witness regarding the contents of the file. Defendant did not object to the reference at trial, but later appealed on grounds that the court committed reversible error after finding the file irrelevant and refusing defendant access to it when it contained information on the witness that might have led defendant to formulate a different defense. The Supreme Court held that the trial court's actions indeed denied defendant a fair trial. However, because defendant did not specifically request that the file be excluded at trial and failed to object when the trial court referred to the file, defendant was not allowed to raise the issue for the first time on appeal. St. v. Ramsey, 2007 MT 31, 336 M 44, 152 P3d 710 (2007).

Failure to Admit Person to Jail When Committed by Competent Authority — Negligence Per Se Argument Not Considered for First Time on Appeal: Russell violated the terms of his suspended sentence and was ordered to report to the county jail no later than 8 a.m. on December 28, 1998. When Russell appeared at the jail, a written order of commitment could not be found, so Russell was turned away. When Prindel was subsequently injured by Russell, Prindel argued that failure to admit Russell to jail constituted negligence per se on the part of the county. However, Prindel did not allege any elements of negligence per se in the action, so the Supreme Court declined to address the issue on appeal. Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006).

Theory That Prosecution Suppressed Material Evidence Favorable to Accused Not Considered for First Time on Appeal: Following conviction for attempted deliberate homicide, drug possession, threats and improper influence in official and political matters, and criminal endangerment, Johnson appealed on grounds that the prosecution had suppressed favorable exculpatory material evidence prior to trial. However, Johnson failed to object at trial or show how the evidence could have been exculpatory. Additionally, Johnson failed to provide a sufficient record and raised the issue for the first time on appeal, so the Supreme Court declined to consider the argument. St. v. Johnson, 2005 MT 318, 329 M 497, 125 P3d 1096 (2005).

Claim That Prior Convictions Could Not Serve as Basis for Charging Current Crime as Felony Considered Nonjurisdictional — Guilty Plea as Waiver of Nonjurisdictional Claims — Postconviction Relief Denied for Failure to Raise Legality of Sentence on Direct Appeal: Slavin was convicted of partner or family member assault in 1992 and 1993. In 2001, Slavin pleaded guilty to a third charge of the same crime, which was considered a felony because of the two prior convictions, and was sentenced. Slavin did not appeal, but later filed a pro se petition for postconviction relief on grounds that the two prior convictions were constitutionally infirm. The District Court denied the petition because Slavin failed to provide direct evidence overcoming the presumption of regularity attached to the prior convictions. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that Slavin's claim was a nonjurisdictional claim involving whether the District Court had statutory authority to impose the sentence, not whether the court had the power or capacity to impose the sentence. Slavin's knowing and voluntary guilty plea constituted a waiver of all nonjurisdictional defects and defenses that arose prior to the plea. Additionally, because Slavin failed to appeal the legality of the sentence, postconviction consideration of the sentence-related claim was precluded. The District Court was affirmed. Slavin v. St., 2005 MT 306, 329 M 424, 127 P3d 350 (2005), following Pena v. St., 2004 MT 293, 323 M 347, 100 P3d 154 (2005), and overruling St. v. LaPier, 1998 MT 174, 289 M 392, 961 P2d 1274 (1998).

Failure to Raise Legality of Sentence on Direct Appeal — Postconviction Consideration Barred: Osborne was convicted of a fourth DUI in 1999, and when charged with felony DUI in 2003, the state sought to have Osborne declared a persistent felony offender. The District Court obliged, and Osborne was declared a persistent felony offender and sentenced to 10 years in prison with 5 years suspended. Osborne did not appeal the sentence directly, but filed a petition for postconviction relief, asserting that the sentence was not legal. The petition was denied, and Osborne appealed. The state argued that the Supreme Court was procedurally barred under 46-21-105 from considering the petition because the legal challenge to the sentence could have been raised on direct appeal. Osborne asserted that because the state did not raise the procedural bar issue in District Court, that argument was waived. Although the Supreme Court as a rule does not consider issues raised for the first time on appeal, this general rule does not preclude consideration of jurisdictional questions raised for the first time on appeal. The procedural bar is jurisdictional, so the court considered the state's argument, concluding that lack of subject matter jurisdiction may not be waived and that 46-21-105 represents a jurisdictional limit on courts' ability to entertain and decide petitions for postconviction relief and effectively prohibits courts from exercising jurisdiction over grounds for relief that could have been raised on direct appeal. Thus, Osborne's failure to challenge the legality of the sentence on direct appeal precluded consideration in a postconviction petition. St. v. Osborne, 2005 MT 264, 329 M 95, 124 P3d 1085 (2005).

Use of Nontestimonial Intoxilyzer Certification Reports in DUI Trial Not Violative of Defendant's Right to Confront Witnesses — Crawford Rule: At Carter's DUI trial, the state introduced three certification reports in order to demonstrate that an Intoxilyzer 5000 was working properly when Carter was tested. The officers who prepared the reports did not testify at trial. Carter initially contended that the reports were hearsay, but on appeal, Carter asserted that admission of the reports violated his right to confront witnesses. Although the Supreme Court will generally not address new arguments raised on appeal, the court applied the exception in Cottrill v. Cottrill Sodding Serv., 229 M 40, 744 P2d 895 (1987), in this case because of the new confrontation clause jurisprudence set out in Crawford v. Wash., 541 US 36 (2004), which was decided while Carter's case was pending. In Crawford, the U.S. Supreme Court for the first time distinguished testimonial and nontestimonial out-of-court statements, delineating testimonial statements, at a minimum, as applying to prior testimony at a preliminary hearing, before a grand jury, or at a former trial as well as to police interrogations. States are allowed flexibility in the development of hearsay law when nontestimonial hearsay is at issue. In Carter's case, the state asserted that the certification reports used at Carter's trial were nontestimonial evidence because they did not fall within the core group of statements that the confrontation clause was meant to address. The Supreme Court held that the certification reports were nontestimonial in that they were not substantive evidence of a particular offense, but rather constituted foundational evidence necessary for the admission of substantive evidence. Thus, Carter's confrontation right was not implicated despite the fact that the authors were not present to testify or be confronted. The court noted that a defendant is always free to subpoena authors of such reports if the defendant's pretrial investigation reveals that the reports are erroneous or are otherwise subject to attack. Therefore, in conformance with the Crawford rule, the Supreme Court exempted the certification reports from confrontation clause scrutiny and affirmed Carter's conviction. St. v. Carter, 2005 MT 87, 326 M 427, 114 P3d 1001 (2005).

Placement of Children With Noncustodial Parent Proper — Parental Rights Not Terminated: A mother contended that her due process rights were violated when the children were adjudicated as youths in need of care and the state placed the children with their father. The Supreme Court declined to address the due process claims because they were raised for the first time on appeal, and the court affirmed the placement. The mother's parental rights were not terminated; rather, the District Court followed the statutory procedure in 41-3-438 after finding that placement with the father was in the children's best interests. The state took the necessary steps to ensure safe placement as required in the Interstate Placement of Children Compact, and the state was properly relieved of any further obligation once the concern for the children being youths in need of care was eliminated by the placement. In re A.C., T.C., & C.W., 2004 MT 320, 324 M 58, 101 P3d 761 (2004).

Failure to Request Jury Instruction on Sudden Emergency Doctrine — Appeal Precluded: Payne's son was killed while transporting an antique tractor purchased from defendants. The jury found that more than 51% of the negligence was attributable to Payne's son. Payne appealed on grounds that under the sudden emergency doctrine set out in Simonson v. White, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983 (1986), the son was not negligent as a matter of law. Defendants argued that the sudden emergency doctrine is no longer a recognized doctrine in Montana negligence law. Without ruling on whether the doctrine is still viable, the Supreme Court dismissed the issue because Payne failed to request a jury instruction on sudden emergency, thereby failing to preserve the issue for appeal. Payne v. Knutson, 2004 MT 271, 323 M 165, 99 P3d 200 (2004).

Unfounded and Unpleaded Speculative Argument Not Considered for First Time on Appeal: Kallowat contended for the first time on appeal that if the jury in his DUI case had known that the arresting officer had been convicted of a felony and was employed under questionable status, the case would in all probability have had a different outcome. However, Kallowat failed to properly plead the issue as required in 46-21-104, nor was this speculative contention supported by the record. Therefore, the Supreme Court declined to address Kallowat's unsupported argument raised for the first time on appeal. Kallowat v. St., 2004 MT 152, 321 M 501, 92 P3d 1176 (2004).

Failure to Raise Double Jeopardy Objection at Settling of Jury Instructions or to Object to Verdict Form in Which Offenses Listed as Separate Counts — Appeal Precluded: Minez was convicted of both criminal possession and criminal production of dangerous drugs. On appeal, Minez argued that conviction of both offenses, which arose out of the same transaction, constituted double jeopardy. However, at trial, Minez abandoned a request for jury instructions on double jeopardy and never returned to the issue, failed to raise a double jeopardy objection at the settling of jury instructions, and did not object to the verdict form in which both offenses were listed as independent counts. Having abandoned the constitutional double jeopardy objections at trial, Minez was precluded from raising the issue on appeal, and the convictions were affirmed. St. v. Minez, 2004 MT 115, 321 M 148, 89 P3d 966 (2004).

Failure to Raise Issue of Court Bias at Trial — Consideration of Issue Precluded on Appeal — Plain Error Doctrine Inapplicable: Following conviction for felony stalking, defendant contended on appeal that there was bias against him at trial because the victim worked for the County Attorney's office where the District Court was located, so both the office and the District Court Judge should have recused themselves. However, the plain error doctrine did not apply under the limited exceptions in St. v. Finley, 276 M 126, 915 P2d 208 (1996), and because the issue was not raised at trial, the Supreme Court declined to address it for the first time on appeal. St. v. Adgerson, 2003 MT 284, 318 M 22, 78 P3d 850 (2003).

Theory of Erroneous Jury Instruction Raised for First Time on Appeal — No Plain Error: At trial, the District Court instructed the jury to view with distrust the testimony of a witness who was legally accountable for the same crime as Daniels. Daniels objected to the instruction on grounds that the witness's testimony had changed and was no longer inculpatory, so the instruction was unnecessary. On appeal, Daniels argued that the instruction violated his right to a fair trial because it could have been construed to instruct the jury to distrust his exculpatory statements given to police immediately after his arrest, having implicated the witness in those statements. The Supreme Court found no prejudicial effect in the jury instruction, and Daniels could not argue on appeal a theory of error that was changed from the theory raised in trial court. St. v. Daniels, 2003 MT 247, 317 M 331, 77 P3d 224 (2003), followed in St. v. Rinkenbach, 2003 MT 348, 318 M 499, 82 P3d 8 (2003).

Waiver of Constitutional Issues Related to No-Bond Hold by Failure to Object in Trial Court: Hendricks contended that his constitutional right to due process and the right against excessive bail were violated when he was held without bond for more than 72 hours in violation of 46-23-1012. However, there was no factual record to support the allegations, nor did Hendricks object to the asserted constitutional violations at a revocation hearing or move to dismiss the proceedings. Failure to adequately raise the issue in District Court and to create a factual record constituted a waiver of objection and precluded review of the issue on appeal. Further, Hendricks' assertion of error in the District Court's reliance on hearsay testimony at the revocation hearing failed on the same grounds. St. v. Hendricks, 2003 MT 163, 316 M 296, 71 P3d 1212 (2003), following St. v. Azure, 2002 MT 22, 308 M 201, 41 P3d 899 (2002).

No Consideration on Appeal of Objection to Testimony Not Raised at Trial: At trial, Ely objected to the admission of expert testimony regarding the fact that Ely refused to provide a urine sample for drug testing and that the state was required to obtain a warrant to obtain one, on grounds that the probative value of the testimony would be outweighed by its prejudicial effect. On appeal, Ely asserted that the acquisition of a urine sample constituted a search and that it was impermissible for the state to use the fact that Ely exercised the constitutional right to refuse to consent to a search as evidence to establish guilt. The Supreme Court held that the objection to the testimony at trial was premised on different bases than those raised on appeal. An appellant may not change legal theories on appeal or raise issues that were not raised in the trial court. Thus, Ely abandoned the objections made at trial, and the Supreme Court declined to consider the new legal theory on appeal. St. v. Ely, 2003 MT 140, 316 M 169, 69 P3d 1189 (2003).

Termination of Parental Rights — Fundamental Fairness Issues Not Considered When Raised for First Time on Appeal: On appeal, the father raised numerous issues to support his claim that he was denied fundamental fairness in procedures resulting in the termination of his parental rights. However, by failing to raise the objections in District Court, the father failed to properly preserve the issues for appeal and waived the right to have the issues considered by the Supreme Court. A District Court cannot correct statutory deficiencies if those concerns are not brought to its attention during the course of the proceedings, and the court will not be faulted for failing to address issues not raised before it. The District Court properly considered the best interests of the children in this case, and termination of the father's parental rights was affirmed. In re T.E., M.E., & M.E., 2002 MT 195, 311 M 148, 54 P3d 38 (2002), following In re D.H., 2001 MT 200, 306 M 278, 33 P3d 616 (2001), and In re M.W., 2002 MT 126, 310 M 103, 49 P3d 31 (2002). See also In re M.C., 2017 MT 252, 389 Mont. 78, 403 P.3d 1266, holding that a mother's failure to raise the failure of the Department of Health and Human Services to accommodate her reading disability first in District Court barred her claim on appeal.

Alleged New Evidence Not Extending Statutory Time Bar for Postconviction Relief: Abe was found guilty of accountability for deliberate homicide and was sentenced to 60 years in prison. One year and 14 days after the deadline, Abe filed a petition for postconviction relief on grounds of newly discovered evidence. Allegedly, two jurors from Abe's trial sat in on the trial of Abe's coconspirator and heard two of the state's witnesses testify differently than they did in Abe's trial. The Supreme Court applied the factors to be considered when a District Court evaluates a motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence as set out in St. v. Sullivan, 285 M 235, 948 P2d 215 (1997) (see also St. v. Greeno, 135 M 580, 342 P2d 1052 (1959)), including the requirement that the evidence must have come to the knowledge of the defendant since trial and the requirement that the evidence must not be such as will tend only to impeach the character or credit of a witness. Here, Abe's counsel knew about the alleged discrepancies after Abe's trial but prior to Abe's appeal, so the discrepancies in testimony could have been raised on direct appeal. Further, the petition for postconviction relief alleged that the discrepancies undermined the credibility of the witnesses but did not establish that Abe did not engage in the criminal conduct for which he was convicted. Thus, the District Court concluded, and the Supreme Court agreed, that the alleged new evidence did not serve to extend the statutory bar for filing a petition for postconviction relief beyond the 1-year period in 46-21-102. Although Abe correctly pointed out that the state did not raise the issue of the statutory bar in District Court and that the District Court did not rule on the issue, the general rule that the Supreme Court will not address issues raised for the first time on appeal did not apply in this case because that rule does not apply when the issue is jurisdictional. The 1-year statute of limitations for postconviction relief is a jurisdictional limit, and lack of subject matter jurisdiction may be raised at any time under former Rule 12(h), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Dismissal of Abe's petition for postconviction relief was affirmed as procedurally barred. St. v. Abe, 2001 MT 260, 307 M 233, 37 P3d 77 (2001).

Issues Not Raised in District Court Precluded From Consideration on Appeal: The Timises sued the Youngs, alleging negligence and negligent supervision in the operation of the Youngs' day-care center. A voluntary settlement conference resulted in an oral agreement to settle the case. The Timises later repudiated the agreement and refused to sign the settlement documents. After lengthy negotiations failed to resolve the impasse, the Youngs moved to enforce the settlement agreement and dismiss the underlying case. The Timises did not respond, so the District Court granted the Youngs' motions without objection. The District Court held that the Timises' subsequent motion to set aside the order dismissing the case was denied pursuant to the 60-day limit in former Rules 59 and 60(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The Timises appealed, raising two new legal theories that were never raised, briefed, or argued in the District Court. Whatever the merits of the new issues, because they were not raised below, the Supreme Court refused to address them on appeal. Timis v. Young, 2001 MT 63, 305 M 18, 22 P3d 112 (2001), followed in Wamsley v. Nodak MutIns. Co., 2008 MT 56, 341 M 467, 178 P3d 102 (2008).

Failure to Raise Sentencing Objections Before District Court — Issue Not Preserved for Appeal: Tucker pleaded guilty to attempted aggravated assault with a weapon. At the sentencing hearing, Tucker argued that one of the sentencing exceptions applied to him because his mental capacity was impaired because of his transsexualism combined with the stress of his fiancee's custody battles. The District Court disagreed and added the minimum 2-year weapon enhancement to his sentence. At no time did Tucker complain to the court that its findings were inadequate under 46-18-223 or allege that the sentence was illegal, excessive, or improper. Instead, Tucker argued on appeal that the sentencing court erred as a matter of law in failing to state the reasons why the sentencing exception did not apply. The Supreme Court refused to remand for resentencing because Tucker failed to bring the allegations of sentencing error to the attention of the District Court in a timely manner. The purpose of the contemporaneous objection requirement is to give the District Court the first opportunity to correct any error. Failure to do so constitutes a waiver of the right to appeal the issue. St. v. Tucker, 2000 MT 255, 301 M 466, 10 P3d 832, 57 St. Rep. 1046 (2000).

Jury Instruction Disallowing Evidence of Intoxication in Determining State of Mind Not Error — Full and Fair Instructions on Law: Following Raugust's criminal trial, the court instructed the jury that it could not consider evidence of intoxication for any purpose, pursuant to 45-2-203. Raugust maintained on appeal that the instruction was in error because depriving him of the ability to admit intoxication evidence lessened the state's burden of proof and confused the jury, in violation of his due process rights. However, the error urged on appeal was not contained in the objection made to the instruction during the final settling of jury instructions, constituting waiver of the argument on appeal. Moreover, the plain error doctrine did not apply because review under that doctrine was requested for the first time on appeal. Here, the jury was instructed regarding: (1) the elements of each offense charged and the state's burden of proving each element beyond a reasonable doubt; (2) the definition of the applicable mental states—purposely and knowingly; (3) the fact that the existence of a mental state may be inferred from the acts of the accused and from the facts and circumstances connected with the offense; (4) the difference between direct and circumstantial evidence; (5) witness credibility; and (6) the need for a unanimous verdict. Read as a whole, these instructions fairly and fully instructed the jury on the law applicable to the case, and giving the instruction disallowing the defense of intoxication was not erroneous. St. v. Raugust, 2000 MT 146, 300 M 54, 3 P3d 115, 57 St. Rep. 570 (2000). See also St. v. Hagen, 283 M 156, 939 P2d 994 (1997).

Failure to Request Continuance of Trial Date — Issue Not Properly Raised or Preserved for Appeal: At a change of plea hearing 1 day before trial, Root requested that the public defender be removed and informed the court that he was seeking private counsel. The court postponed trial for 1 week, informing Root that if private counsel were retained, counsel must be ready for trial as scheduled. In the notice of substitution of counsel, Root's new counsel expressly stated an awareness of the trial date and the intention to be prepared to proceed that day. Root was convicted. On appeal, Root alleged error in the court's failure to grant a continuance of the trial. The Supreme Court noted that the trial court, either on its own motion or by granting what it considered a motion for continuance, did postpone the trial for an additional week upon learning that Root was seeking substitute counsel. Further, Root never requested a continuance, so the trial court could not be put in error on appeal regarding an issue that it had no opportunity to address. St. v. Root, 1999 MT 203, 296 M 1, 987 P2d 1140, 56 St. Rep. 792 (1999). See also St. v. Rodgers, 257 M 413, 849 P2d 1028, 50 St. Rep. 335 (1993).

Complaint Claiming Insurer Had Duty to Notify Insureds of Policy Change — Raising Statutory Duty to Inform for First Time on Appeal: Although the insureds did not raise in the District Court the statutory obligation of an insurer to inform an insured of a policy change on renewal of the policy, the insureds' complaint alleged that the insurer had a duty to notify the insureds of the policy change. Thus, the insurer's claim that the statutory obligation could not be raised on appeal because it was not raised in District Court was rejected. The statute was simply legal support for the complaint's claim of duty to notify, not a new liability theory. Thomas v. NW. Nat'l Ins. Co., 1998 MT 343, 292 M 357, 973 P2d 804, 55 St. Rep. 1388 (1998).

Newspaper Articles Improperly Attached to Opening Brief Set Aside: Counsel for the Franks attached several irrelevant newspaper articles to an opening brief, contending that it was permissible to supplement the record on appeal with judicially recognizable material. The Supreme Court found that the articles were not judicially recognizable under former Rule 2, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and were improperly attached to the brief. Affirming the District Court decision to set aside a default judgment, the Supreme Court cited Downs v. Smyk, 185 M 16, 604 P2d 307 (1979), in cautioning counsel against attempting to introduce extraneous evidence by the back door via attachment to briefs, a practice that is not tolerated. Frank v. Harding, 1998 MT 215, 290 M 448, 965 P2d 254, 55 St. Rep. 903 (1998), distinguishing In re Establishment & Organization of Ward Irrigation District, 216 M 315, 701 P2d 721, 42 St. Rep. 824 (1985).

Stipulation of Law or Fact as Precluding Appeal: It is improper to raise an issue on appeal as to a question of law or fact after the parties have entered into a stipulation as to that law or fact. Topco, Inc. v. St., 275 M 352, 912 P2d 805, 53 St. Rep. 175 (1996). See also Penn v. Burlington N., Inc., 185 M 223, 605 P2d 600 (1980), and St. v. Issue of Proper Protection of Children by Guardian Ad Litem Not Raised at Trial Precluded on Appeal: Mother whose parental rights were terminated contended that the guardian ad litem compromised the rights of the children by failing to conduct an independent investigation regarding alleged abuse and neglect. However, the issue was not raised at trial and so was not properly before the Supreme Court when raised for the first time on appeal. In re B.T.B. & B.B., 254 M 449, 840 P2d 558, 49 St. Rep. 594 (1992).

Failure to Object to Character Evidence and Impeachment Testimony at Trial — Appeal Precluded: Defendant alleged District Court error in allowing evidence of other crimes or acts and certain impeachment testimony of a defense witness. However, because the transcript showed that no objections were made at trial to either the evidence or testimony, defendant was precluded from raising the errors for the first time on appeal. St. v. Webb, 252 M 248, 828 P2d 1351, 49 St. Rep. 236 (1992).

Issue for Appeal — Not Preserved by Failure to Object Dismissal Not Res Judicata: An employee sued her employer a second time, alleging damages for wrongful discharge, violation of constitutional rights, and infliction of emotional distress. The District Court held that the employee conceded that the wrongful discharge and emotional distress claims were barred by the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act. The Supreme Court held that those two claims were not properly before the Supreme Court, inasmuch as they were not properly preserved for appeal, but that retrial of the issues was not barred by the doctrine of res judicata. Dagel v. Manzer, 251 M 176, 823 P2d 874, 48 St. Rep. 1166 (1991).

Water Rights Question Not Raised in Complaint or Pretrial Order and Waived at Trial Properly Excluded: Plaintiff requested the District Court to refer determination of his water rights to the Water Court. However, he did not raise the water rights question in his complaint; the District Court specifically excepted the issue from trial; the issue was not raised in the pretrial order; and the issue was expressly waived by plaintiff at the start of the trial. His request was properly denied. The Supreme Court will not hold the District Court in error for a procedure in which plaintiff acquiesced at trial. Boylan v. Van Dyke, 247 M 259, 806 P2d 1024, 48 St. Rep. 188 (1991).

Agency — Issue Raised for First Time on Appeal Not Considered: The Supreme Court will not determine the existence of an agency relationship for the first time on appeal. Serv. Funding, Inc. v. Craft, 234 M 431, 763 P2d 1131, 45 St. Rep. 2030 (1988).

Claim Lower Court's Construction of Statute at Issue in Case Violates Federal Constitution's Supremacy Clause: Plaintiff's argument that the lower court's construction of statute violated the supremacy clause of the federal constitution could be advanced for the first time on appeal. It was not an independent constitutional attack on the statute, under which his workers' compensation benefits were offset by half his social security disability benefits, but rather an attack on how the lower court construed the statute at issue. Watson v. Seekins, 234 M 309, 763 P2d 328, 45 St. Rep. 1931 (1988).

Custody Petition Withdrawn at Trial Nonappealable: Father's counsel withdrew at trial the portion of father's petition seeking sole custody. Because the custody motion was excised from the petition at hearing, the issue constituted new grounds and could not be asserted on appeal. In re Marriage of West, 233 M 47, 758 P2d 282, 45 St. Rep. 1281 (1988).

New Questions of Timeliness of Motions and Affidavits Not Proper on Appeal: The Supreme Court refused to consider, for the first time on appeal, questions of timeliness of service of a motion for partial summary judgment, service of an amended notice of deposition, and filing of affidavits. Eitel v. Ryan, 231 M 174, 751 P2d 682, 45 St. Rep. 521 (1988).

Accusation of District Court Judge Misconduct Raised on Appeal — Supreme Court Not to Consider: In reviewing a child custody modification determination, the Supreme Court refused to consider an affidavit submitted to the Supreme Court alleging an improper ex parte communication between the District Court judge and a person interested in the proceeding. Appellant had made no motion for a mistrial or to remove the District Court judge from the case, nor had appellant mentioned the alleged misconduct on the record. In re Marriage of Stout, 216 M 342, 701 P2d 729, 42 St. Rep. 856 (1985).

Judicial Notice of Maps and Descriptions on Appeal: In a dispute over control of an irrigation district's headgate, the Supreme Court permitted submission on appeal of government survey descriptions and maps that had not been introduced as evidence at trial. The court reasoned: first, that the commission comments to Rule 201, Montana Rules of Evidence, indicate that published maps or charts are included within the Rule's scope; and second, that maps and descriptions are acceptable articles of evidence by which to show a water right in the adjudication process. In re Establishment & Organization of Ward Irrigation District, 216 M 315, 701 P2d 721, 42 St. Rep. 824 (1985), distinguished in Frank v. Harding, 1998 MT 215, 290 M 448, 965 P2d 254, 55 St. Rep. 903 (1998).

No Evidence in Record on Factual Issue — No Ruling by Court: The defendant was convicted of driving under the influence of alcohol and sentenced to serve time in the county jail. She argues that imprisonment in the county jail is cruel and unusual punishment because of conditions allegedly existing there. The record contains no evidence of conditions existing at the jail. As appeals may be taken only on the record made, not on the record which should have been made, the court will not rule. In the absence of any record concerning conditions at the jail, the court will not determine whether confinement there constitutes cruel and unusual punishment. St. v. Bruns, 213 M 372, 691 P2d 817, 41 St. Rep. 2178 (1984).

Laches Defense Unavailable — First Raised on Appeal: Laches could not be raised for the first time on appeal as a defense to action for rescission of contract for the sale of a ranch because it is an affirmative defense that must be set forth in the answer. Deist v. Wachholz, 208 M 207, 678 P2d 188, 41 St. Rep. 286 (1984).

Equity Theory Raised Below but Not Argued at Length Until Appeal: The broad standard of review used in equitable cases was needed where appellant had raised two legal theories below but essentially argued only the first, the court and respondent had concentrated on the first, appellant conceded on the first theory on appeal and argued the second theory, an equitable one, at length, and the lower court's memo in support of its dismissal of the action related only to the first theory. Shimsky v. Valley Credit Union, 208 M 186, 676 P2d 1308, 41 St. Rep. 258 (1984).

Application of Administrative Rule: The alleged application of an administrative rule would not be considered on appeal where it was not argued below. Hanley v. Dept. of Revenue, 207 M 302, 673 P2d 1257, 40 St. Rep. 2054 (1983).

Methodology of Determination Substantiated by Record — Failure to Object in Administrative Proceeding: The Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) did not commit error in the application of the "rate of return" methodology, rather than the "market value" methodology, in determining the reasonableness of contract cost for the purchase of coal by the Montana Power Company (MPC) from a wholly-owned subsidiary. While the Supreme Court stated a preference for the "market value" methodology in Montana-Dakota Util. Co. v. Bollinger, 193 M 508, 632 P2d 1086 (1981), the court did not prohibit the P.S.C. from using a different methodology if the evidence warrants its use. In this case, the evidence introduced by the P.S.C. was not challenged by MPC. Rather, MPC seeks to do so for the first time on appeal. Limited review of the administrative record is appropriate, and that record supports the findings of the Commission. Mont. Power Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 204 M 224, 665 P2d 1121, 40 St. Rep. 805 (1983).

Sufficiency of Evidence: When a motion for a new trial on ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict was not made in the lower court, the Supreme Court will review the evidence to determine whether there is any substantial evidence to justify the verdict. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982), followed in Federated Mut. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 1999 MT 288, 297 M 33, 991 P2d 915, 56 St. Rep. 1152 (1999).

Issues First Raised on Appeal — Prejudicial Comment to Jury — Disqualification of Witnesses: Supreme Court would not review claims of defendant that prosecutor made prejudicial comment to jury and that two witnesses should have been disqualified because the claimed errors had not been previously raised or presented to the trial court. St. v. Johns, 201 M 192, 653 P2d 494, 39 St. Rep. 2049 (1982).

Issue Not in Pretrial Order: Appellant raised for the first time, on appeal, an issue that was not included on the pretrial order as an issue in dispute. The Supreme Court refused to review that issue since it was not raised in the trial court. Morse v. Cremer, 200 M 71, 647 P2d 358, 39 St. Rep. 1162 (1982).

Interlocutory Review — Issue Not Presented to District Court: In suit for damages arising out of railroad accident, issue regarding the admission of evidence of other accidents was not presented to the District Court upon application of one party for a Writ of Supervisory Control and a motion of the other party for a stay of proceedings, and thus the issue would not be addressed by Supreme Court in deciding the application and motion. Henry v. District Court, 198 M 8, 645 P2d 1350, 39 St. Rep. 430 (1982).

Issue Not in Complaint but in Brief, Proposed Conclusions, and Findings: Due process issue was sufficiently raised at trial to allow consideration of it on appeal where, although complaint did not refer to it, appellant's trial brief and proposed conclusions of law referred to it extensively and a finding of fact stated that plaintiff alleged that he was not accorded due process. Akhtar v. Van De Wetering, 197 M 205, 642 P2d 149, 39 St. Rep. 470 (1982).

Issues First Raised on Appeal — Exemption From Execution: The issue of whether certain items judgment debtor claimed were exempt from execution as necessary for support of his family were in fact not necessary would not be considered on appeal where it was not raised below. White v. White, 195 M 470, 636 P2d 844, 38 St. Rep. 2041 (1981).

Denial of Substantial Justice Below: Though objective urged for the first time on appeal will not normally be considered, the Supreme Court has the duty to determine whether parties were denied substantial justice below and can consider, within its sound discretion, whether the lower court deprived a party of a fair and impartial trial, even if an objection based on the mandate of a statute or an established precedent should have been made and was not. McAlpine v. Midland Elec. Co., 194 M 154, 634 P2d 1166, 38 St. Rep. 1577 (1981).

Involuntary Commitment — Mootness — Issues Not Raised in District Court: Where, after a brief interview with a mental health counselor-therapist, the appellant was involuntarily committed to a state mental hospital for a period of 3 months and then challenged the commitment in the District Court, the appellant's appeal would not be dismissed even though the appellant had been released prior to submission of the appeal. The important constitutional issues raised by the appellant were not rendered moot by his release because other persons would be involuntarily committed for 3 months of evaluation and testing. This time period renders a timely appeal impossible under the current rules of appellate procedure. Nor would the appeal be dismissed because of the appellant's failure to raise the constitutional issues in the District Court since the Supreme Court reserves to itself the power to examine constitutional issues that involve broad public concerns to avoid future litigation on a point of law. In re N.B., 190 M 319, 620 P2d 1228, 37 St. Rep. 2031 (1980), followed in In re Mental Health of R.M., 270 M 40, 889 P2d 1201, 52 St. Rep. 68 (1995). See also Cottrill v. Cottrill Sodding Serv., 229 M 40, 744 P2d 895, 44 St. Rep. 1762 (1987).

Mutual Assent on Elements of Contract — Raising at Trial Level: Plaintiff and defendants entered a buy-sell agreement for a parcel of land owned by defendants. From the filing of the complaint to the time of trial, both parties contended that the buy-sell was valid and enforceable against the other. The issue at trial was not the validity of the contract but whether it included certain alleged easements. Plaintiff was granted specific performance. On appeal, defendants contended that the parties had never agreed on the same terms, that there was no mutual assent or meeting of the minds, and therefore no enforceable contract. Because this contention had not been raised at the trial level, it could not be considered on appeal. Chadwick v. Giberson, 190 M 88, 618 P2d 1213, 37 St. Rep. 1723 (1980).

Laches — Issue Raised for First Time on Appeal Not Considered: The Supreme Court will consider for review only those questions raised in the trial court hearing or in the pleadings, and the doctrine of laches therefore cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Huggans v. Weer, 189 M 334, 615 P2d 922 (1980), followed in St. v. Bruns, 213 M 372, 691 P2d 817, 41 St. Rep. 2178 (1984).

No Appeal on Issue of Joint Venture Not First Raised in District Court: Appellants cannot assert for a matter of review on appeal that their relationship with respondents was that of joint venturers because this issue was not first presented to the District Court and as such cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Mont. Williams Double Diamond v. Royal Village, Inc., 186 M 359, 607 P2d 1120 (1980); Chamberlain v. Evans, 180 M 511, 591 P2d 237 (1979).

Workers' Compensation: In an appeal from the award of workers' compensation benefits, where the only issue raised before the workers' compensation court was whether there should be a trial de novo, the issue of sufficiency of the evidence to support the award could not be raised on appeal. Johnston v. Nat'l Auto. & Cas. Ins. Co., 184 M 538, 604 P2d 297 (1979).

Appeals — New Theories Not to Be Heard: When a decision did not involve a certain theory of law, that theory of law may not be examined on appeal. A party may not change his theory on appeal to the Supreme Court from that advanced in the trial court. Chamberlain v. Evans, 180 M 511, 591 P2d 239 (1979), affirmed in Peters v. Newkirk, 194 M 223, 633 P2d 1210, 38 St. Rep. 1526 (1981).

Offer of Proof — Effect on Appeal: The Supreme Court refused to review various documents attached to appellant's brief in an appeal pro se when no offer of proof was made at trial because, as such, they were not a part of the record on appeal. Jerome v. Jerome, 175 M 429, 574 P2d 997 (1978).

Objections First Raised on Appeal: The issue of failure to appoint counsel for a dependent minor child lacked merit because it was not raised at trial. Easton v. Easton, 175 M 416, 574 P2d 989 (1978).

Condemnation Proceedings — Objections First Raised on Appeal Not to Be Heard: In condemnation proceedings by the Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) to condemn a right-of-way for an interstate highway which divided ranch into two large tracts making an underpass necessary, alleged error of trial court in its preliminary order of condemnation of ordering Commission at its own expense to install, construct, and maintain the underpass on the ground that the Commission had previously agreed to install the underpass could not be raised for the first time on appeal where the question was not raised at the time of the trial in the lower court. State ex rel. St. Highway Comm'n v. Wheeler, 148 M 246, 419 P2d 492 (1966).

INTERLOCUTORY ORDERS

Summary Judgment for Third Party Affecting Final Judgment Reviewable on Appeal: A tennis club filed a negligence and breach of contract action against a contractor who constructed a tennis facility for the club. The contractor in turn filed a third-party negligence and breach of contract action against the subcontractor who prepared the ground surface and laid the asphalt for the tennis courts. The District Court granted summary judgment for the subcontractor, and the contractor appealed. The subcontractor contended that the judgment was not appealable because it was not designated in the notice of appeal, as required by former Rule 4(c), M.R.App.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court noted that summary judgments are generally interlocutory and not appealable until final judgment is rendered, but also noted that under former Rule 2, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), any intermediate order or decision properly objected to that involves the merits or that necessarily affects the judgment, except a decision or order from which an appeal may be taken, is subject to review. The summary judgment in this case preceded and affected the final judgment, and because the contractor's objection was preserved, the summary judgment was reviewable on appeal. Glacier Tennis Club at the Summit, LLC v. Treweek Constr. Co., Inc., 2004 MT 70, 320 M 351, 87 P3d 431 (2004).

Appropriateness of Intervention in Action Challenging Enforcement of Ballot Initiative: Two sporting groups sought to intervene in an action challenging the enforcement of a ballot initiative that prohibited the shooting of alternative livestock for a fee. The District Court denied the motion, and the groups appealed. After accepting supervisory control, the Supreme Court noted that an application for intervention as a matter of right must satisfy each of the following factors:

(1) timeliness; (2) interest in the subject matter of the litigation; (3) a showing that protection of the interest may be impaired by disposition of the action; and (4) a showing that the interest is not adequately represented by an existing party. In the present case, timeliness was not disputed. Regarding the second factor, the Supreme Court cited Idaho Farm Bureau Fed'n v. Babbitt, 58 F3d 1392 (9th Cir. 1995), for the proposition that a public interest group is entitled as a matter of right to intervene in an action challenging the legality of a measure that the group has supported. The District Court did not address the third factor because it determined that the groups had no legally protectable interest in the litigation. However, the Supreme Court found that an adverse decision in the suit would impair the groups' interest in the management and protection of Montana's game animals, so the third factor was met. Finally, the District Court determined that the groups failed to demonstrate that the Attorney General, on behalf of the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks, would not zealously defend the groups' position in the suit. The Supreme Court concluded that the groups that actively drafted and supported the initiative may be in the best position to defend their interpretation of the resulting legislation and may not have been adequately represented by the Department. Thus, all four factors were met, and the Supreme Court ordered the District Court to permit the groups to intervene in the case. Sportsmen for I-143 v. District Court, 2002 MT 18, 308 M 189, 40 P3d 400 (2002).

Order Allowing Intervention Appealable With Final Judgment: DeVoe brought an action against the state, alleging that it had abandoned property to which DeVoe was the successor in interest. The District Court granted a motion by the city of Missoula that the city be allowed to intervene. After final judgment in favor of Missoula, DeVoe appealed the District Court's order allowing Missoula to intervene. The Supreme Court held that an order granting intervention was not separately appealable under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), because the order was not individually listed in former Rule 1 as an appealable order, but held that the order was appealable after entry of final judgment. The Supreme Court noted that it had previously ruled to the same effect in Cont. Ins. Co. v. Bottomly, 233 M 277, 760 P2d 73 (1988), Estate of Schwenke v. Becktold, 252 M 127, 827 P2d 808 (1992), and In re Custody of R.R.K., 260 M 191, 859 P2d 998 (1993). DeVoe v. St., 281 M 356, 935 P2d 256, 54 St. Rep. 207 (1997).

Denial of Summary Judgment to One Party Reviewable Upon Appeal by Another Party: An order denying summary judgment to one party is reviewable upon the appeal of a final judgment by another party. Riley v. Carl, 191 M 128, 622 P2d 228, 38 St. Rep. 83 (1981).

Order Denying Motion to Strike: An order denying a motion to strike is not an appealable order, it being interlocutory in nature. It is reviewable on appeal from a final judgment. Fitzgerald v. Aetna Ins. Co., 176 M 186, 577 P2d 370 (1978).

Appeal of Order Denying Summary Judgment: An order denying summary judgment is not an appealable order. Such an order is reviewable upon appeal from a final judgment. To permit review by an extraordinary writ would accomplish indirectly that which cannot be done directly. State ex rel. Kosena v. District Court, 172 M 21, 560 P2d 522 (1977).

Order Denying Summary Judgment Reviewable With Final Judgment: Although order denying summary judgment is nonappealable order at time it is made because of its interlocutory character, it is nonetheless reviewable under appellate rule providing that all nonappealable intermediate orders or decisions properly excepted or objected to which involve merits or necessarily affect the judgment are reviewable on subsequent appeal from final judgment. Brown v. Midland Nat'l Bank, 150 M 422, 435 P2d 878 (1967).

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Common-Law Plain Error — Case-by-Case Review: Despite the passage of 46-20-701, Montana's plain error statute restricting the review of errors not objected to at trial, the doctrine of common-law plain error review by the Montana Supreme Court continues to exist to allow correction of errors not objected to at trial but that affect the fairness, integrity, and public reputation of judicial proceedings. The Supreme Court retains the inherent power and obligation to interpret the constitution, protect individual rights, prevent manifest injustice, and correspondingly review lower court decisions and actions for error. The power of such review is inherent in the appellate process itself. Thus, while acknowledging the constraints of 46-20-701, the Supreme Court will discretionarily review claimed errors that implicate a criminal defendant's fundamental constitutional rights even if no contemporaneous objection is made and notwithstanding the statutory criteria, in the class of cases when failure to conduct the review may result in a manifest miscarriage of justice, leave unsettled the question of the fundamental fairness of trial proceedings, or compromise the integrity of the judicial process. The doctrine will be applied sparingly and on a case-by-case basis. Nevertheless, the necessity for contemporaneous objection to claimed error remains because 46-20-701 will be applied, except in the class of cases mentioned above. St. v. Finley, 276 M 126, 915 P2d 208, 53 St. Rep. 310 (1996), followed in St. v. Monaco, 277 M 221, 921 P2d 863, 53 St. Rep. 604 (1996), St. v. Patton, 280 M 278, 930 P2d 635, 53 St. Rep. 1402 (1996), St. v. Harris, 1999 MT 115, 294 M 397, 983 P2d 881, 56 St. Rep. 481 (1999), St. v. Pizzichiello, 1999 MT 123, 294 M 436, 983 P2d 888, 56 St. Rep. 499 (1999), St. v. Hanson, 1999 MT 226, 296 M 82, 988 P2d 299, 56 St. Rep. 891 (1999), Columbus v. Harrington, 2001 MT 258, 307 M 215, 36 P3d 937 (2001), and St. v. Auld, 2006 MT 189, 333 M 125, 142 P3d 753 (2006). See also Halldorson v. Halldorson, 175 M 170, 573 P2d 169 (1977), St. v. Wilkins, 229 M 78, 746 P2d 588 (1987), Seyferth v. St., 277 M 377, 922 P2d 494, 53 St. Rep. 698 (1996), and their progeny.

Order Appointing Receiver to Be Appealed: An order appointing a receiver in a mortgage foreclosure suit being an appealable one, may not under this section be reviewed on appeal from the judgment. Rock Island Plow Co. v. Cut Bank Implement Co., 101 M 117, 53 P2d 116 (1935).

Denial of Injunction — Not Reviewable if Not Appealed: An order denying a motion to dissolve a temporary injunction is an appealable order, and if not appealed from, the correctness of the order may not, under this section, be reviewed on appeal from the judgment in the action in which the order was made. Little Horn St. Bank v. Gross, 89 M 472, 300 P 277 (1931).

Order Denying Injunction Reviewable Upon Appeal of Judgment: On appeal from an order denying an injunction pendente lite where the only question presented is whether in denying it the court erred, matters of pleading and practice subsequent to settlement of bill of exceptions, or rulings upon questions of law, will not be determined, they being reviewable on appeal from the final judgment, under this section. Nat'l Bank of Mont. v. Bingham, 83 M 21, 269 P 162 (1928).

No Application to Grant of New Trial: This section has no application on appeal from an order granting a new trial. Parsons v. Rice, 81 M 509, 264 P 396 (1928).

Correction of Verdict Appealable: An order of the District Court correcting the verdict in a civil action may be reviewed on appeal from the judgment. Frank v. Symons, 35 M 56, 88 P 561 (1907).

Previously Appealable Order Not Reviewable With Judgment: The Supreme Court cannot, on appeal from the judgment, review an order from which an appeal could have been taken. Great Falls Meat Co. v. Jenkins, 33 M 417, 84 P 74 (1906), followed in Carl v. Chilcote, 255 M 526, 844 P2d 79, 49 St. Rep. 1109 (1992).

Nonappealable Orders Determined by Statute: If a particular order is not enumerated in the statute among those from which an independent appeal may be taken, it must be reviewed on appeal from the judgment. Raymond v. Raymond, 32 M 170, 79 P 1056 (1905); Finlen v. Heinze, 27 M 107, 69 P 829, 70 P 517 (1902).

Substitution of Parties — Certiorari Not Applicable: An intermediate order substituting a claimant of property for defendant in a claim and delivery action may be reviewed on appeal from the final judgment, on exception reserved, and certiorari will not lie to have the order annulled as in excess of jurisdiction. State ex rel. Weinstein Co. v. District Court, 28 M 445, 72 P 867 (1903).

Postponement of Trial — Reviewable Upon Appeal of Judgment: While the statute does not provide for an independent appeal from an order denying a postponement of a trial, such an order may be reviewed upon appeal if an exception to it is properly preserved. State ex rel. Shores v. District Court, 27 M 349, 71 P 159 (1903).

CASES DECIDED WITHOUT REFERENCE TO RULES OR STATUTE

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Adoption of Herd Standard of Review of Challenges to Legality or Propriety of Probation Conditions: The appropriate standard of review for cases challenging the legality or propriety of probation conditions is the two-pronged standard set out in St. v. Herd, 2004 MT 85, 320 M 490, 87 P3d 1017 (2004). The sentencing condition is first reviewed for legality. Then, because sentencing statutes authorize the imposition of conditions on deferred or suspended sentences that constitute reasonable restrictions or conditions considered necessary for the rehabilitation or for the protection of the victim or society, the reasonableness of the conditions is reviewed for an abuse of discretion. St. v. Ashby, 2008 MT 83, 342 M 187, 179 P3d 1164 (2008).

Hybrid Standard of Supreme Court Review of Sentencing When Offender Ineligible for Review by Sentence Review Division: In St. v. Montoya, 1999 MT 180, 295 M 288, 983 P2d 937 (1999), the Supreme Court held that it will review a criminal sentence only for legality, discarding the previous two-tiered approach of reviewing sentences for both legality and abuse of discretion, which was considered a carryover from the days before the creation of the Sentence Review Division when the court reviewed all sentencing challenges. However, Montoya created a "no review" window once the Sentence Review Division came into being, which left offenders with unreasonable sentencing conditions, but no term of incarceration and thus no eligibility for Sentence Review Division consideration, without a remedy. Therefore, the court fashioned a hybrid standard of review to close the "no review" window. If an offender is sentenced to 1 year or more of actual incarceration and is eligible for review by the Sentence Review Division, the court will apply the Montoya standard and review the sentence for legality only, but if the offender is ineligible for review by the Sentence Review Division, the court will review a sentence for both legality and abuse of discretion, applying the two-tiered approach used prior to creation of the Sentence Review Division. St. v. Herd, 2004 MT 85, 320 M 490, 87 P3d 1017 (2004), followed in St. v. Ruiz, 2005 MT 117, 327 M 109, 112 P3d 1001 (2005).

Standard of Review of Denial of Motion to Suppress Evidence of Investigatory Stop: The Supreme Court reviews the denial of a motion to suppress evidence from an investigatory stop to determine whether the trial court's finding that the officer involved had a particularized suspicion to justify the investigatory stop was clearly erroneous. The trial court's conclusions of law are reviewed to determine whether the court's interpretation of the law was correct. St. v. Lovegren, 2002 MT 153, 310 M 358, 51 P3d 471 (2002).

School District Not Liable for Injury of Child on Playground — Witness Credibility as Question for Jury — Limited Review of Jury Verdict: The Morgans complained that the school district was liable for a teacher's negligence because their daughter, who needed close supervision, was injured on playground equipment at recess. The jury found in favor of the teacher. The Morgans sought a new trial on grounds of insufficient evidence to support the verdict. The Supreme Court's review of a jury verdict is necessarily very limited, and a jury verdict will not be reversed if it is supported by substantial credible evidence. The gist of the Morgans' appeal concerned the credibility and consistency of statements made by the only witness to the accident—the teacher. Witness credibility is a matter for determination by the jury after proper instruction from the court. Thus, the Supreme Court deferred to the properly instructed jury's evaluation of the teacher's credibility and affirmed the verdict. Morgan v. Great Falls School District No. 1, 2000 MT 28, 298 M 194, 995 P2d 422, 57 St. Rep. 134 (2000), following Whiting v. St., 248 M 207, 810 P2d 1177, 48 St. Rep. 396 (1991), Lee v. Kane, 270 M 505, 893 P2d 854, 52 St. Rep. 268 (1995), and Sandman v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 1998 MT 286, 291 M 456, 969 P2d 277, 55 St. Rep. 1165 (1998). Morgan was followed, with regard to the limited scope of review of a jury verdict and the test for substantial credible evidence, in Benson v. Diverse Computer Corp., 2004 MT 114, 321 M 140, 89 P3d 981 (2004).

Statutes Presumed Constitutional — Burden of Proof — Standard of Review: In deciding whether certain statutes violated the mandates of the Montana Constitution and The Enabling Act regarding use of school trust lands, the Supreme Court eschewed standards of review suggested by both parties, holding that the proper standard was whether the District Court's conclusions of law were correct. Statutes are presumed to be constitutional, and the Supreme Court will avoid an unconstitutional interpretation if possible. A party challenging the constitutionality of a statute has the burden of proving it unconstitutional beyond a reasonable doubt, and any doubt will be resolved in favor of the statute. Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800, 56 St. Rep. 1065 (1999), following Steer, Inc. v. Dept. of Revenue, 245 M 470, 803 P2d 601, 47 St. Rep. 2199 (1990), St. v. Martel, 273 M 143, 902 P2d 14, 52 St. Rep. 873 (1995), Davis v. Union Pac. RR Co., 282 M 233, 937 P2d 27, 54 St. Rep. 328 (1997), and St. v. Nye, 283 M 505, 943 P2d 96, 54 St. Rep. 766 (1997), and followed in Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. Darkenwald, 2005 MT 190, 328 M 105, 119 P3d 27 (2005), and Eklund v. Wheatland County, 2009 MT 231, 351 M 370, 212 P3d 297 (2009).

Standard of Review of Criminal Sentence Clarified — Supreme Court Review of Legality of Sentence Only: In an effort to clear up a prevalent inconsistency in Montana case law regarding the appropriate standard of review of criminal sentences, the Supreme Court held that it will review a criminal sentence only for legality, i.e., whether the sentence is within the parameters provided by statute, which in turn implies de novo review—a sentence is either legal or it is not. The court overruled St. v. Davison, 188 M 432, 614 P2d 489 (1980), St. v. White, 200 M 123, 650 P2d 765, 39 St. Rep. 1619 (1982), St. v. Graveley, 275 M 519, 915 P2d 184 (1996), St. v. Gunderson, 282 M 183, 936 P2d 804, 54 St. Rep. 283 (1997), and any other Montana decision that suggests that the Supreme Court will also review criminal sentences for an abuse of discretion. St. v. Montoya, 1999 MT 180, 295 M 288, 983 P2d 937, 56 St. Rep. 706 (1999), followed in St. v. Shreves, 2002 MT 333, 313 M 252, 60 P3d 991 (2002). However, see St. v. Herd, 2004 MT 85, 320 M 490, 87 P3d 1017 (2004), wherein the Supreme Court fashioned a hybrid standard of review for offenders with unreasonable sentencing conditions but no term of incarceration who are ineligible for review by the Sentence Review Division. In reviewing those sentences, the court will review a sentence for both legality and abuse of discretion, applying the two-tiered approach used prior to creation of the Sentence Review Division.

Denial of Motion to Dismiss — Matter of Law: Danichek appealed the lower court's refusal to grant his motion to dismiss, which he based on the argument that double jeopardy prohibited him from being prosecuted for driving under the influence because he had already been convicted and punished for refusing to take the Breathalyzer test. The Supreme Court held that the standard of review for the District Court's conclusion of law was plenary and that it would review the decision to determine whether the lower court's conclusion of law was correct. Helena v. Danichek, 277 M 461, 922 P2d 1170, 53 St. Rep. 767 (1996), following St. v. Hansen, 273 M 321, 903 P2d 194 (1995).

Standard of Review of Grant or Denial of New Trial — Jury or Bailiff Misconduct: In the two most recent cases in which jury or bailiff misconduct was the basis for granting or denying a new trial, the Supreme Court stated that the standard is that the decision is within the sound discretion of the trial judge, whose decision will not be disturbed absent a showing of manifest abuse of that discretion. The Supreme Court reaffirmed this standard and overruled those cases with a different standard. Allers v. Riley, 273 M 1, 901 P2d 600, 52 St. Rep. 920 (1995).

Standard of Review for Factfindings Made by Workers' Compensation Court: The following are principles applicable to a Supreme Court review of findings of fact made by the Workers' Compensation Court: (1) the Supreme Court cannot substitute its judgment for that of the trial court regarding the weight of evidence on questions of fact; (2) when there is substantial evidence to support the Workers' Compensation Court, the Supreme Court cannot overturn the decision; (3) the Supreme Court will not substitute its judgment for that of the Workers' Compensation Court in matters of witness credibility and the weight of witness testimony; and (4) it is not the responsibility of the Supreme Court to determine whether sufficient evidence supports a contrary finding—rather, review entails a determination of whether substantial evidence supports the decision of the Workers' Compensation Court. Stevens v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 268 M 460, 886 P2d 962, 51 St. Rep. 1396 (1994). See also Wood v. Consol. Freightways, Inc., 248 M 26, 808 P2d 502 (1991), Nave v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Contractor Comp. Fund, 1999 MT 158, 295 M 120, 983 P2d 300, 56 St. Rep. 623 (1999).

Confusing Medical Testimony That May Have Misled Jury — Other Evidence Sufficient to Support Verdict: Although disputed medical testimony tended to confuse the issues and may have misled the jury in a motor vehicle accident case, the police testimony and photographs alone provided sufficient evidence to support the verdict for defendant. The Supreme Court will not disturb a jury verdict when substantial credible evidence supports it, especially when the record has conflicting evidence and the jury resolves the conflict. Mason v. Ditzel, 255 M 364, 842 P2d 707, 49 St. Rep. 986 (1992).

Failure to Object to Alleged Improper Closing Comments: Failure to object at trial to alleged improper closing comments of counsel precludes an appellant from raising that issue on appeal. Whiting v. St., 248 M 207, 810 P2d 1177, 48 St. Rep. 396 (1991), followed in Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700, 53 St. Rep. 17 (1996). See also McDermott v. Carie, LLC, 2005 MT 293, 329 M 295, 124 P3d 168 (2005).

No Appeal of Issue Not Tried in Lower Court: Objections to the admissibility of evidence may not be raised for the first time on appeal because a defendant may not appeal an issue not tried at District Court level. St. v. Long, 223 M 502, 726 P2d 1364, 43 St. Rep. 1948 (1986), citing St. v. Powers, 198 M 289, 645 P2d 1357 (1982), and St. v. Patton, 183 M 417, 600 P2d 194 (1979).

Review of Judgment Paid Under Legal Coercion: If a judgment has been paid voluntarily, it amounts to an accord and satisfaction; however, if a judgment has been paid under legal coercion, that judgment remains a proper subject for judicial review. Twenty-Seventh Street, Inc. v. Johnson, 220 M 469, 716 P2d 210, 43 St. Rep. 534 (1986).

No Objection to Instructions — Law of the Case: An instruction given without objection becomes the law of the case. Nicholson v. United Pac. Ins. Co., 219 M 32, 710 P2d 1342, 42 St. Rep. 1822 (1985).

Substantial Credible Evidence: A trial court's proper function is to assess the evidence, ascertain the credibility of the witnesses, and render findings based upon substantial credible evidence; and if that is accomplished, the Supreme Court cannot overturn the decision of the trial court. Rose v. Rose, 201 M 86, 651 P2d 1018, 39 St. Rep. 1971 (1982), followed in Searight v. Cimino, 221 M 277, 718 P2d 652, 43 St. Rep. 810 (1986).

REVIEW NOT TIMELY

Advisory Comments on Summary Judgment Appeal: On appeal from and reversal of grant of summary judgment, it was premature for the court to advise the parties and the trial court on the possible application of Montana law. The case was not completely before the Supreme Court, and when all pertinent facts are known, the trial court is the forum for initial application of the law. Hull v. D. Irvin Transp., Ltd., 213 M 75, 690 P2d 414, 41 St. Rep. 1954 (1984).

ISSUES CONSIDERED

Failure to Record Voir Dire Examination — Britt Test to Determine Whether Failure to Record Portions of Criminal Trial Violative of Due Process: Deschon argued that his right to a meaningful appeal of his deliberate homicide conviction was violated because he had tenable appellate theories, such as possible juror prejudice, that could not be determined without a transcript of the voir dire proceedings, and that there was no alternative to a transcript available. The state pointed out that former Rule 9(d), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), provides a procedure whereby a party can submit its version of unrecorded portions of the record to the District Court, and then the court can generate a written summary to be included in the appeal. However, the state contended that Deschon made no effort to recreate the circumstances of voir dire and thus could not claim that the lack of a record was reversible error. The Supreme Court noted that a trial court should order its court reporter to record the voir dire examination and that diligent defense counsel should demand recording of voir dire proceedings (St. v. Seitzinger, 180 M 136, 589 P2d 655 (1979)). However, when the trial court fails to record portions of a criminal trial, Britt v. N.C., 404 US 226 (1971), is applied to determine whether due process has been violated, and two criteria are relevant to the determination: (1) the value of the transcript to defendant in connection with the appeal or trial for which it is sought; and (2) the availability of alternative devices that would fulfill the same function as a transcript, such as an evidentiary hearing to reconstruct the unrecorded portions of the trial. Here, Deschon established the first part of the Britt test by showing that a transcript was valuable in determining whether any jurors were prejudiced by pretrial publicity. The second part of the Britt test would be satisfied by a written summary prepared pursuant to former Rule 9(d), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), but lacking that summary, the Supreme Court remanded for an evidentiary hearing to reconstruct the unrecorded portions of the voir dire proceedings. St. v. Deschon, 2002 MT 16, 308 M 175, 40 P3d 391 (2002). Following remand and an evidentiary hearing to reconstruct the unrecorded voir dire portions of Deschon's trial, Deschon appealed again on grounds that the hearing was insufficient to provide information to determine whether jurors were biased. The Supreme Court concluded that, taken as a whole, the combined testimony from jurors, attorneys, and Deschon, together with the trial notes in exhibit, created a record of sufficient completeness to ensure that Deschon's right to due process was not violated and that the reconstruction hearing comprised an adequate alternative to the verbatim voir dire transcript to establish a fair and accurate picture of what transpired that was sufficiently complete to accord review of Deschon's issues on appeal, satisfying the second part of the Britt test. St. v. Deschon, 2004 MT 32, 320 M 1, 85 P3d 756 (2004). See also U.S. v. Cashwell, 950 F2d 699 (11th Cir. 1992), and U.S. v. Preciado-Cordobas, 981 F2d 1206 (11th Cir. 1993).

Failure to Present Issue to First Level Appellate Court as Precluding Consideration at Second Appellate Level: At their initial trial in Municipal Court, defendants raised an issue of reliance on treaties entered into by the United States, but the issue was not raised at the first level of appeal when the case was considered by the District Court pursuant to 3-6-110. As a result, the issue was held to be not properly before the Supreme Court at the second level of appeal. Missoula v. Asbury, 265 M 14, 873 P2d 936, 51 St. Rep. 383 (1994), followed in Missoula v. Robertson, 2000 MT 52, 298 M 419, 998 P2d 144, 57 St. Rep. 250 (2000).

Failure to Object to Evidence at Trial — No Right to Claim Error on Appeal: By failing to object to admission of evidence at trial, defendant waived his right to claim error on appeal. Moore v. Hardy, 230 M 158, 748 P2d 477, 45 St. Rep. 108 (1988). See also Story v. Bozeman, 259 M 207, 856 P2d 202, 50 St. Rep. 761 (1993).

Consent to Retroactive Increase in Judgment — Merits of Increase Waived: Wife obtained an increase in child support and maintenance after claiming the original amounts were not correctly determined. Husband consented to retroactively apply the increase back to the date of the original decree. This consent made it unnecessary for the Supreme Court to consider the merits of the wife's request for modification. The consent indicated the original decree was not correct. In re Marriage of Wilson, 216 M 392, 701 P2d 1372, 42 St. Rep. 894 (1985).

2011 Amendment: Supreme Court Order No. AF 07-0016 provided: "Rule 7(4)(d) is amended to promote the appointment of appellate mediators in reasonably close proximity to the parties. It is further amended to allow parties to an appeal subject to mandatory appellate alternative dispute resolution a second opportunity to select their own mediator."

2009 Amendment: Substituted (7)(b) concerning dismissal of appeal after mediator files report for former text that read: "Where the mediation results in resolution of the appeal, dismissal will be governed by rule 16(5) of these rules. In the event the appeal is resolved, the parties shall execute a settlement agreement and file a stipulation for dismissal within 15 days of the filing of the mediator's report"; in (9) near beginning inserted reference to section (7); and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

DECISIONS UNDER CURRENT RULES

Joint Motions for Mediation of Appeals Not Otherwise Subject to Mediation Rule Approved — Unilateral Motions Disapproved: The Supreme Court will welcome joint motions to mediate an appeal pursuant to Rule 7, M.R.App.P., on cases that may not fall within one of the identified categories for which mediation is required. However, the court will not consider a unilateral motion to designate for Rule 7 mediation, even a motion that indicates that opposing counsel has been contacted and does not object. Kuzara v. Musselshell County, 2008 MT 124, 342 M 547, 182 P3d 739 (2008).

DECISIONS UNDER SUPERSEDED RULES

Mediation Failure Because of Parties Being Too Far Apart Not Grounds for Dismissal: Marks argued that Marcher's appeal should be dismissed on the grounds that Marcher had not engaged in meaningful arbitration as required by former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court disagreed, pointing out that Marcher was represented at the mediation hearing by his attorney and that the attorney's affidavit indicated that Marks' attorney offered only a take-it-or-leave-it offer and therefore arbitration failed because the two parties were too far apart to negotiate. Marcher v. Bonzell, 2004 MT 294, 323 M 364, 104 P3d 436 (2004).

Mandatory Dispute Resolution on Appeal — No Remand: While a jurisdictional question was pending in a civil action seeking monetary damages in Nielsen v. Brocksmith Land & Livestock, Inc., 2004 MT 101, 321 M 37, 88 P3d 1269 (2004) (Nielsen I), the parties entered mandatory alternative dispute resolution pursuant to former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Nielsen contended that a settlement agreement was reached and filed a complaint in District Court to enforce the alleged agreement. The Brocksmiths disagreed that a settlement agreement was reached and moved to dismiss on grounds that the District Court did not have jurisdiction because Nielsen I was still pending on appeal. Nielsen moved the Supreme Court to remand the pending appeal to the District Court for adjudication of the settlement agreement, but that motion was denied. The District Court then dismissed the present action because Nielsen I was still pending, and Nielsen appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Jurisdiction passes from District Court to the Supreme Court when a notice of appeal is filed. Although Nielsen contended that the matter was resolved in mediation and that a settlement was reached, the Supreme Court cannot consider a matter resolved until a stipulation for dismissal is filed in either the Supreme Court or the trial court. The only stipulation filed here was that the parties were unable to complete and close the tentative agreement, and former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), did not provide for remand to the District Court when there is a disagreement whether a settlement was reached because returning the case to trial court before resolution would delay finality. Nielsen v. Brocksmith, 2004 MT 259, 323 M 98, 99 P3d 181 (2004).

Appellate Mediation Rule Mandatory and Self-Executing in Actions for Money Damages: Plaintiff sued for money damages, and the District Court issued an order on motion for a change of venue. Plaintiff's notice of appeal from that order stated that the appeal was subject to mediation required under former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Nevertheless, 5 days later, plaintiff filed an unopposed motion to dispense with mediation. The Supreme Court dismissed the motion to dispense with mediation and ordered mediation. It is the nature of the underlying action, not the type of order or judgment on appeal, that determined whether the appeal is subject to mediation under former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and because the underlying action sought money damages, which is clearly within the rule, mediation was mandatory. Former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), was self-executing, and the Supreme Court will not entertain motion practices on the rule. Liang v. Lai, 2003 MT 281, 317 M 524, 78 P3d 1212 (2003), following Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71 (2000).

Allowance of Additional Time After Service by Mail Applicable Only to Response-Type Pleadings — Inapplicable When Filing Deadline Specified: The Supreme Court entered an opinion in this case on December 31, 2002. On January 16, 2003, remittitur was entered, and the next day, defendants filed a petition for rehearing. After being advised that the petition was beyond the 10 days allowed under former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), defendants claimed that former Rule 21(3), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), provided an additional 3 days for timely filing. The Supreme Court took the opportunity to clarify the application of former Rule 21(e), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), holding that the rule applies only to response-type pleadings when parties are required or permitted to file a document or brief after having been served with a document or brief. When a filing deadline is specified by the Supreme Court or when a document is required to be filed with the court within a specified time, the rule did not apply and the party did not get the benefit of an extra 3 days for mailing. Former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), allowed petitions for rehearing to be filed within 10 days after a Supreme Court decision is rendered. Because this time period is specified by court rule, and because the petition for rehearing was not a response-type pleading, defendants' petition was not timely. However, defendants did not have the benefit of this interpretation when their petition was filed, so in the interest of fairness, the court applied this holding prospectively only and decided to entertain defendants' petition in this instance. Mont. Fair Housing, Inc. v. Barnes, 2003 MT 16, 314 M 73, 68 P3d 653 (2003).

Failure to Address Applicability of Alternative Dispute Resolution Process in Appeal of Child Support Case Not Grounds for Automatic Dismissal — Complicity of Clerk of District Court in Appellant's Failure to Follow Statutory Requirements: A father appealed a District Court determination of past-due child support amounts, but failed to address the applicability of alternative dispute resolution in the appeal notice, as provided in former Rule 4(c), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). The Clerk of the District Court subsequently failed to notify the father of the necessity to file an amended notice of appeal within 7 days. The mother contended that the appeal should be dismissed, citing Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71 (2000), for the proposition that failure to comply with applicable appellate rules will result in dismissal. The Supreme Court held that a court may dismiss an appeal for failure to comply with former Rule 4(c), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), but overruled Dobrocke to the extent that failure to comply will result in automatic dismissal. The court found the Dobrocke rule to be too severe, particularly when the Clerk of Court is complicit in the appellant's failure to abide by the statutory requirements, because it is unfair for all the consequences to fall on the appellant when the Clerk of Court also fails to adhere to the statutes. Rather, the Supreme Court will look at all circumstances surrounding the appeal before deciding whether to dismiss for failure to comply with former Rule 4(c), M.R.App.P., and former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). In this case, dismissal was not proper because the Clerk of Court never issued the father the proper notice to file an amended appeal. Roberts v. Nickey, 2002 MT 37, 308 M 335, 43 P3d 263 (2002).

Submission of Matter to Mediation Not Assisting in Resolution of Appeal — Motion to Dismiss for Failure to Mediate Denied: The third-party plaintiff respondents to a counterclaim sought to dismiss an appeal on grounds that the third-party defendant failed to comply with the mediation requirements of former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). In the notice of appeal, the third-party defendant certified that the appeal was not subject to the mediation process and opposed the motion to dismiss. The third-party plaintiffs contended otherwise, stating that because the cause of action appealed from was one in which monetary damages were sought, the appeal was subject to mediation. The third-party defendant noted that the appeal centered on the three primary issues of whether the District Court erred when it: (1) created an easement by grant in favor of the original plaintiff and across property owned by the third-party plaintiffs; (2) failed to recognize the real property interest of the plaintiff in maintaining a utility easement; and (3) issued an injunctive order and found both the plaintiff and third-party defendant in violation of the order. The third-party defendant further maintained that the money award portion of the judgment was incidental to and entirely dependent on the court's rulings related to the easement interests and injunctive relief and that former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), did not require parties to mediate matters that are totally incidental to the outcome of the substantive issues on appeal. The Supreme Court agreed and relied on McDonald v. Cosman, 1999 MT 294, 297 M 108, 995 P2d 922 (1999), in holding that, given the subjects of the appeal and the fact that the money judgment aspect was merely incidental, submission of the matter to mediation would not hasten or assist resolution of the appeal. The parties were advised that they did not have to comply with the mediation requirements of former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and the motion to dismiss for failure to mediate was denied. Hanley v. Lanier, 2001 MT 91, 305 M 175, 24 P3d 206 (2001).

Former Rule Inapplicable to Appeal Seeking Performance of Contract or Lease Term: McDonald received a favorable judgment for specific performance of an option to purchase land pursuant to a lease agreement, which also provided for an award of attorney fees to the prevailing party in the event of a dispute. Cosman moved for clarification regarding the applicability of former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), to the appeal. The mediation requirements of former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), applied inter alia to appeals in actions seeking monetary damages or recovery. The action underlying the appeal sought attorney fees as a matter incidental to the primary thrust of the action, but neither the award of the fees nor the amount of fees awarded was directly at issue in the appeal. An appeal seeking specific performance of a contract or lease term does not fall within any of the categories of appeals set forth in former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), so that rule did not apply in those cases. The fact that the lease also provided for an award of attorney fees to the prevailing party in an action not otherwise subject to former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), did not render the appeal subject to the rule requirements. To conclude otherwise would require parties to mediate a matter totally incidental to the outcome of the substantive issue on appeal without providing a concomitant opportunity to resolve the substantive issue, which would delay ultimate resolution of the appeal. McDonald v. Cosman, 1999 MT 294, 297 M 108, 995 P2d 922, 56 St. Rep. 1179 (1999).

Failure to Attend Mediation in Person Not Violative of Rule if Party Participates Through Authorized Representative: Although his counsel appeared at a mediation meeting on his behalf, Moon did not personally attend the mediation conference. Plaintiff sought to have Moon's appeal dismissed and Moon sanctioned for failure to comply with the mandatory mediation requirements of former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Although in-person meetings are the preferred medium of communication for mediation conferences, subsection (e)(3) of former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), addressed only the means by which the conference may be conducted, not who is required to attend. That requirement was addressed in subsection (e)(8) of former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), which provided that each party or a representative of each party is required to participate in the conference. Moon was represented by an attorney with full authority to engage in settlement negotiations and thus was within the bounds permitted by former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), notwithstanding his failure to appear in person. Because there was no rule violation, the Supreme Court did not address whether a party may be sanctioned under former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), for failure to participate in mandatory alternative dispute resolution. Envtl. Contractors, LLC v. Moon, 1999 MT 178, 295 M 268, 983 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 696 (1999).

Object of Mandatory Arbitration Is to Hold Down Parties' Expenses and Ease Caseload of Supreme Court: The parties failed to agree to a mediator within 15 days of the filing of notice of appeal, and subsequently, the court appointed a mediator for them. Thereafter, the parties agreed to an alternative mediator and moved the Supreme Court for an order allowing them to select their own mediator. The Supreme Court denied the motion and stated that the reason for former Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), was to allow parties to resolve their differences without incurring the high cost of appeals and to ease the Supreme Court's caseload. The Supreme Court held that the rule was self-executing and that the result would be self-defeating if the Supreme Court heard appeals concerning the rule except under unusual or extraordinary circumstances. Harwood v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 282 M 38, 939 P2d 981, 54 St. Rep. 89 (1997), followed in In re Marriage of Nagra, 283 M 339, 943 P2d 82, 54 St. Rep. 280 (1997).

CASES DECIDED UNDER CURRENT RULES

Failure to Record Portion of State's Case In Chief — Reconstructed Record Sufficient to Afford Effective Appellate Review — No Violation of Due Process: A jury found the defendant guilty of sexual intercourse without consent and the defendant appealed. In preparing the record for appeal, it was discovered that a portion of the state's case in chief was not recorded. Both the state and the defendant submitted statements and other documentation to reconstruct the unrecorded portion of the trial, and the District Court issued an order adopting a statement of unavailable evidence under Rule 8(7)(d), M.R.App.P., to which the defendant objected. On appeal, the defendant claimed that the lack of a complete record diminished his ability to pursue his appeal and consequently violated his right to due process. Applying the two-pronged test in Britt v. N.C., 404 US 226 (1971), the Supreme Court concluded that the reconstructed record was sufficient to afford effective appellate review and affirmed. St. v. Caswell, 2013 MT 39, 369 Mont. 70, 295 P.3d 1063.

Proper Refusal to Allow Preparation of Statement of Unavailable Evidence: Whittinghill cited this rule in moving the District Court for leave to file a statement of unavailable evidence in an appeal from City Court asserting double jeopardy violations. The motion was denied, and on appeal the Supreme Court affirmed. This rule is not designed to allow a party or attorney to present other evidence, arguments, or personal opinions to support its position, and Whittinghill made no showing that a reconstructed transcript of the original City Court trial would yield anything relevant to the issue of whether double jeopardy protections would prevent a retrial. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to grant leave to prepare a statement of unavailable evidence. Helena v. Whittinghill, 2009 MT 343, 353 M 131, 219 P3d 1244 (2009).

Award of Attorney Fees Affirmed Absent Record Transcript: The District Court awarded attorney fees to the wife in a dissolution proceeding. The husband appealed on grounds that the District Court incorrectly considered the parties' financial positions. The Supreme Court declined to review the issue because the husband failed to provide a transcript of the attorney fees hearing, and the court could not address the issue absent a transcript in the record. In re Marriage of Cameron, 2009 MT 302, 352 M 375, 217 P3d 78 (2009).

No Evidence of Pending Litigation Against Limited Liability Company to Preclude Dissolution: Plaintiff asserted that the District Court erred by ordering the dissolution of a limited liability company while unresolved patent infringement claims against the company were still outstanding. However, plaintiff failed to present any evidence in the record of pending litigation against the company, and the Supreme Court declined to depart from the record. Plaintiff failed to present a credible challenge to dissolution of the company, and the Supreme Court affirmed the dissolution order. Wallace v. Hayes, 2008 MT 248, 344 M 523, 191 P3d 365 (2008).

Failure of Defendant to Submit Photographs on Appeal — Review for Prejudice Precluded: Johnson asserted that the trial court erred by allowing the introduction of photographs showing injuries suffered by the victim during an alleged assault because the photographs were per se prejudicial because they were inherently inflammatory and because the existence of injury to the victim was not disputed. The Supreme Court noted that Johnson's failure to submit the photographs as part of the record on appeal inhibited the court's ability to review whether the photographs were prejudicial, and absent any explanation from Johnson of how or why the photographs prejudiced his case, Johnson failed to establish that the District Court abused its discretion in admitting the photographs at trial. St. v. Johnson, 2008 MT 227, 344 M 313, 187 P3d 662 (2008), following St. v. Kearney, 2005 MT 171, 327 M 485, 115 P3d 214 (2005).

CASES DECIDED UNDER SUPERSEDED RULES

Failure to Provide Trial Transcript Precluding Review of Compensatory Damage Award and Jury Instructions: Plaintiff asserted that the trial court erred by failing to grant plaintiff's motion for a new trial based on the jury's award of zero compensatory damages for pain and suffering and by refusing to allow the issue to go to the jury, contending that a new trial was necessary to protect the right to full legal redress. Plaintiff stated at least 14 times on appeal that evidence of pain and suffering was uncontroverted. However, plaintiff's counsel neglected to submit a trial transcript on appeal or to follow the alternative transcript submission procedures set out in former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), relying instead on District Court minutes and evidence of injuries as opposed to evidence of pain and suffering. Without a trial transcript, the Supreme Court was unable to address the merits of plaintiff's appeal, so the District Court was affirmed. Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007).

Written Transcript of Electronically Recorded Proceedings in Courts of Record of Limited Jurisdiction Not Required on Appeal — Format of Electronically Recorded Proceedings: A written transcript of electronically recorded proceedings in courts of record of limited jurisdiction is no longer required. The Supreme Court designated acceptable formats for filing the electronically recorded record of a trial or other proceeding in a court of record of limited jurisdiction in a case that is appealed to the Supreme Court. St. v. Fender, 2006 MT 92, 332 M 82, 140 P3d 472 (2006).

Theory That Prosecution Suppressed Material Evidence Favorable to Accused Not Considered for First Time on Appeal: Following conviction for attempted deliberate homicide, drug possession, threats and improper influence in official and political matters, and criminal endangerment, Johnson appealed on grounds that the prosecution had suppressed favorable exculpatory material evidence prior to trial. However, Johnson failed to object at trial or show how the evidence could have been exculpatory. Additionally, Johnson failed to provide a sufficient record and raised the issue for the first time on appeal, so the Supreme Court declined to consider the argument. St. v. Johnson, 2005 MT 318, 329 M 497, 125 P3d 1096 (2005).

Failure to Provide Trial Record Precluding Review of Trial Court Evidentiary Rulings: In an employment discrimination case, Rolison moved for a new trial in District Court on grounds that he was denied a fair trial when the employer did not disclose certain exhibits before trial and the trial court made an evidentiary ruling refusing any evidence of discrimination following Rolison's complaint to the Commission on Human Rights. The District Court denied the motion for a new trial, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Rolison did not mention the District Court's reasoning for denying the motion and did not provide a trial transcript or record for review on appeal. Absent an adequate record, the Supreme Court could not discern the substance of the anticipated testimony or whether any prejudice resulted from its exclusion. Absent a showing of a manifest abuse of discretion, denial of the new trial motion was affirmed. Rolison v. Bozeman Deaconess Health Serv., Inc., 2005 MT 95, 326 M 491, 111 P3d 202 (2005).

Electronic Recording of Municipal Court Evidentiary Hearing Part of Record on Appeal: Lyons contended on appeal of a DUI case that because the electronic recording of the Municipal Court's evidentiary hearing was not considered by the District Court, it was not part of the record and could not be considered on appeal. The Supreme Court disagreed. Regardless of whether the recording was used in District Court, it was part of the record available for Supreme Court review. Missoula v. Lyons, 2004 MT 255, 323 M 67, 97 P3d 1120 (2004).

Failure to Record Voir Dire Examination — Britt Test to Determine Whether Failure to Record Portions of Criminal Trial Violative of Due Process: Deschon argued that his right to a meaningful appeal of his deliberate homicide conviction was violated because he had tenable appellate theories, such as possible juror prejudice, that could not be determined without a transcript of the voir dire proceedings, and that there was no alternative to a transcript available. The state pointed out that subsection (d) of former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), provides a procedure whereby a party can submit its version of unrecorded portions of the record to the District Court, and then the court can generate a written summary to be included in the appeal. However, the state contended that Deschon made no effort to recreate the circumstances of voir dire and thus could not claim that the lack of a record was reversible error. The Supreme Court noted that a trial court should order its court reporter to record the voir dire examination and that diligent defense counsel should demand recording of voir dire proceedings (St. v. Seitzinger, 180 M 136, 589 P2d 655 (1979)). However, when the trial court fails to record portions of a criminal trial, Britt v. N.C., 404 US 226 (1971), is applied to determine whether due process has been violated, and two criteria are relevant to the determination: (1) the value of the transcript to defendant in connection with the appeal or trial for which it is sought; and (2) the availability of alternative devices that would fulfill the same function as a transcript, such as an evidentiary hearing to reconstruct the unrecorded portions of the trial. Here, Deschon established the first part of the Britt test by showing that a transcript was valuable in determining whether any jurors were prejudiced by pretrial publicity. The second part of the Britt test would be satisfied by a written summary prepared pursuant to subsection (d) of former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), but lacking that summary, the Supreme Court remanded for an evidentiary hearing to reconstruct the unrecorded portions of the voir dire proceedings. St. v. Deschon, 2002 MT 16, 308 M 175, 40 P3d 391 (2002). Following remand and an evidentiary hearing to reconstruct the unrecorded voir dire portions of Deschon's trial, Deschon appealed again on grounds that the hearing was insufficient to provide information to determine whether jurors were biased. The Supreme Court concluded that, taken as a whole, the combined testimony from jurors, attorneys, and Deschon, together with the trial notes in exhibit, created a record of sufficient completeness to ensure that Deschon's right to due process was not violated and that the reconstruction hearing comprised an adequate alternative to the verbatim voir dire transcript to establish a fair and accurate picture of what transpired that was sufficiently complete to accord review of Deschon's issues on appeal, satisfying the second part of the Britt test. St. v. Deschon, 2004 MT 32, 320 M 1, 85 P3d 756 (2004). See also U.S. v. Cashwell, 950 F2d 699 (11th Cir. 1992), U.S. v. Preciado-Cordobas, 981 F2d 1206 (11th Cir. 1993), and St. v. Caswell, 2013 MT 39, 369 Mont. 70, 295 P.3d 1063.

Newspaper Articles Improperly Attached to Opening Brief Set Aside: Counsel for the Franks attached several irrelevant newspaper articles to an opening brief, contending that it was permissible to supplement the record on appeal with judicially recognizable material. The Supreme Court found that the articles were not judicially recognizable under former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and were improperly attached to the brief. Affirming the District Court decision to set aside a default judgment, the Supreme Court cited Downs v. Smyk, 185 M 16, 604 P2d 307 (1979), in cautioning counsel against attempting to introduce extraneous evidence by the back door via attachment to briefs, a practice that is not tolerated. Frank v. Harding, 1998 MT 215, 290 M 448, 965 P2d 254, 55 St. Rep. 903 (1998), distinguishing In re Establishment & Organization of Ward Irrigation District, 216 M 315, 701 P2d 721, 42 St. Rep. 824 (1985).

Order Granting Temporary Guardianship Held Final Order and Special Proceeding for Purposes of Appeal — Noncompliance With Former Rule Excused — Expiration of Temporary Guardianship Held Not to Render Issue Moot: After a District Court twice appointed the same temporary guardians for Kathleen Klos pursuant to 72-5-317, once in writing and once by making an oral order with no documentation except a minute entry entered by the Clerk of Court, Klos filed a motion to set aside the second order of guardianship. The guardians argued that an order appointing a temporary guardian is not subject to appeal and that Klos had not complied with former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), because she did not file a transcript of a hearing appointing the guardians. The Supreme Court held that in as much as former Rule 1(b)(3), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), does not differentiate between a permanent order and a temporary order, a temporary order qualified as an appealable order. The Supreme Court also held that the temporary order is a "special proceeding", as defined by 27-1-102(2), for the purposes of former Rule 1(b)(1), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and therefore appealable for that reason as well. Concerning the argument on noncompliance with former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), the Supreme Court noted that no transcript could be provided because none was ever made and held that Klos had substantially complied by notifying the Clerk of the Supreme Court of the lack of a transcript and by providing the District Court Clerk's minute entry. Citing Butte-Silver Bow Local Gov't v. Olsen, 228 M 77, 743 P2d 564 (1987), the Supreme Court also noted that just because the order had expired by operation of law did not mean that the issue of appealability was moot because the guardians had twice been appointed by a temporary order that expired by operation of law and could be appointed in the same manner again. Thus, if the order was not appealable, it would be "capable of repetition, yet evade review". In re Klos, 284 M 197, 943 P2d 1277, 54 St. Rep. 843 (1997), followed in Fischer v. Fischer, 2007 MT 101, 337 M 122, 157 P3d 682 (2007).

No Obligation for State to Furnish Summaries of Testimony — Failure to Provide Transcript — No Surprise or Prejudice Found: Sol was convicted in Justice's Court of DUI and appealed to District Court. He argued that the state had failed to make available to him summaries of witnesses' testimony and had failed to deliver to him a copy of a summary of the testimony of one of the state's experts after he was informed of the identity of the expert. The Supreme Court held that there was no requirement in 46-15-322 for the state to provide a summary of the testimony of any witness and that the state's obligation to provide reports completed by its expert had been satisfied by notification of where the reports could be obtained. The Supreme Court also noted that Sol was unable to point to any prejudice or surprise that he suffered as a result of the alleged discovery violations. Because Sol had failed to order a transcript of the District Court trial in compliance with subsection (b) of former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), the Supreme Court was unable to determine whether disputed evidence had been offered at trial and, if it was, whether it resulted in surprise or prejudice. St. v. Sol, 282 M 69, 936 P2d 307, 54 St. Rep. 246 (1997).

Case Remanded — Insufficient Record: The Supreme Court stated that the record before it was lacking any factual record or findings by the lower court. The Supreme Court held that in light of the importance of the issues involved in the case, it was not prepared to make any rulings when there was insufficient information on which to base a ruling and therefore remanded the case to the District Court with instructions to develop an appropriate record. Balyeat Law, PC v. Pettit, 281 M 95, 931 P2d 50, 54 St. Rep. 77 (1997).

Failure to File Workers' Compensation Insurer's Claims File on Appeal — No Presumption of Error in Trial Court In Camera Inspection: Miller contended that the Workers' Compensation Court's order on disclosure of the insurer's claims file did not indicate whether certain documents not disclosed contained factual information otherwise discoverable. Miller could not prevail because she did not seek to have the insurer's claims file filed with the Supreme Court as a part of the record on appeal. As appellant, it was Miller's obligation to ensure the completeness and accuracy of the record and to have included all documents, discovery, and evidence related to the errors claimed. Without the file, there was no way for the Supreme Court to review the Workers' Compensation Court's decision to exclude some documents in the file from discovery and to produce other documents; therefore, the Supreme Court would not presume error in the in camera inspection. An appellant may not predicate error on an incomplete record. Miller v. Frasure, 264 M 354, 871 P2d 1302, 51 St. Rep. 233 (1994), followed in St. v. Arlington, 265 M 127, 875 P2d 307, 51 St. Rep. 417 (1994).

Entire Transcript Not Included in Record — Notification of Respondent Required: When the entire transcript is not included in the record on appeal, the provisions of former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), required the appellant to notify the respondent of the issues that the appellant intends to raise on appeal so that the respondent can determine whether a transcript of parts of the proceeding that are not included in the record will be required. S.M. v. R.B., 261 M 522, 862 P2d 1166, 50 St. Rep. 1437 (1993).

Supplementation of Record to Account for Circumstances Occurring Subsequent to Appeal Impermissible: Supplementation of the record to take into account circumstances occurring subsequent to the appeal was beyond the scope of former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and was impermissible. Trieweiler v. Spicher, 254 M 321, 838 P2d 382, 49 St. Rep. 711 (1992).

Rule Inapplicable When Record Not Part of Lower Court Proceedings: Appellant claimed that the original record on appeal was void of certain documents unavailable at the time of the lower court trial and sought to modify the record under subsection (f) of former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), to include the missing documents. To prevail, appellant must show that the record does not truly disclose what occurred in the court below. Modification was inappropriate because the record that appellant sought to introduce was not part of the proceedings below at the time of those proceedings. Richter v. Indus. Indem. Co., 241 M 518, 788 P2d 308, 47 St. Rep. 467 (1990).

Failure to Follow Rule Not Absolute Bar to Appeal: Appellant filed only a partial transcript of the lower court record with his appeal but did not provide a description of the included parts or a statement of the prospective issues to the respondent as required by former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Although dismissal of the appeal would be appropriate, an appeal need not be dismissed in every instance where there has not been strict compliance. Where the record contained sufficient information to consider some issues, the court considered those issues. Williams v. Rigler, 234 M 161, 761 P2d 833, 45 St. Rep. 1812 (1988).

Preservation of Record for Appeal — Counsel Duty: It is the duty of counsel to preserve the record for appeal. Searight v. Cimino, 230 M 96, 748 P2d 948, 45 St. Rep. 46 (1988).

Failure to File Transcript — Extension of Time: When the appellant's late filing of an appeal was held timely because the respondent had also failed to comply with the technical filing requirements of the Rules of Civil Procedure and when the District Court had granted a request for an extension of time to the court reporter to complete a transcript of the proceedings, the appeal was properly before the court. Kenney v. Koch, 227 M 155, 737 P2d 491, 44 St. Rep. 960 (1987).

Record on Appeal — Lack of Transcript: Arguments on the sufficiency of the evidence in action on charges of unfair labor practices could not be considered without a transcript of the testimony at the original administrative hearing. The cause was remanded to the trial court for election by the employee either to order and pay for the transcript so the trial court could receive it and enter further judgment or to accept affirmation of the trial court's decision. Klundt v. St., 222 M 172, 720 P2d 1181, 43 St. Rep. 1148 (1986).

Accusation of District Court Judge Misconduct Raised on Appeal — Supreme Court Not to Consider: In reviewing a child custody modification determination, the Supreme Court refused to consider an affidavit submitted to the Supreme Court alleging an improper ex parte communication between the District Court judge and a person interested in the proceeding. Appellant had made no motion for a mistrial or to remove the District Court judge from the case, nor had appellant mentioned the alleged misconduct on the record. In re Marriage of Stout, 216 M 342, 701 P2d 729, 42 St. Rep. 856 (1985).

Judicial Notice of Maps and Descriptions on Appeal: In a dispute over control of an irrigation district's headgate, the Supreme Court permitted submission on appeal of government survey descriptions and maps that had not been introduced as evidence at trial. The court reasoned: first, that the commission comments to Rule 201, Montana Rules of Evidence, indicate that published maps or charts are included within the Rule's scope; and second, that maps and descriptions are acceptable articles of evidence by which to show a water right in the adjudication process. In re Establishment & Organization of Ward Irrigation District, 216 M 315, 701 P2d 721, 42 St. Rep. 824 (1985), distinguished in Frank v. Harding, 1998 MT 215, 290 M 448, 965 P2d 254, 55 St. Rep. 903 (1998).

Necessity of Trial Transcript: A challenge to a final judgment cannot be reviewed on appeal in the absence of a transcript. Lutzenhiser v. Holzworth, 213 M 260, 690 P2d 990, 41 St. Rep. 2102 (1984).

County Resolution — Record Incomplete — Appeal Denied: An appeal from a District Court's granting motions to dismiss and quash in a case revolving around a county resolution was dismissed because the record on appeal did not contain the resolution or any reference to it. Bukvich v. Butte-Silver Bow, 200 M 259, 650 P2d 783, 39 St. Rep. 1727 (1982).

Appeal Denied for Failure to Keep Record: The Supreme Court noted in Guardianship of Gullette, 173 M 132, 566 P2d 396 (1977), that the District Court is, by statute, a court of record, and this implies that a record will be kept of the proceedings. Recently in Schneider v. Ostwald, 190 M 29, 617 P2d 1293, 37 St. Rep. 1728 (1980), a trial court contempt order was set aside because the contempt of court proceedings were not recorded. The same result obtains in the instant case. The record is silent as to why a court reporter was not present. But reasons aside, the failure to record the property distribution hearings has effectively denied the husband appellate review of the trial court's judgment. Malley v. Malley, 190 M 141, 619 P2d 531, 37 St. Rep. 1827 (1980).

Review of Equity Cases on Record Only: Where judgment was rendered against the appellant in a proceeding to quiet title and for an accounting of rents and profits from real property and appellant subsequently appealed to the Supreme Court, the Supreme Court would not consider depositions taken in a different action and submitted by the appellant but not made a part of the record in the case before the court. In appeals from equitable proceedings, the Supreme Court may not consider evidence extraneous to the record. Downs v. Smyk, 185 M 16, 604 P2d 307 (1979), followed in In re George Trust, 253 M 341, 834 P2d 1378, 49 St. Rep. 424 (1992).

Agreed Statement Insufficient: In a marriage dissolution case where the appellant challenged the sufficiency of the evidence, his "agreed statement of facts" was insufficient to comply with former Rule 9(d), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), because it merely recited the undisputed facts of the marriage and did not show ". . . how the issues presented by the appeal arose and were decided in the district court . . .". Harrington v. Harrington, 181 M 451, 594 P2d 319 (1979).

Agreed or Approved Statement — Failure to Provide: Appellant's challenge of the trial court's findings of fact was dismissed because he failed to provide the Supreme Court with a transcript or to comply with former Rule 9(c) or 9(d), M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Flathead Hay Cubing, Inc. v. Moore, 35 St. Rep. 1260 (1978) (apparently not reported in Pacific Reporter or Montana Reports).

Clerk's Affidavit Not Acceptable as to Variant Date of Service: A District Court Clerk's affidavit should not be accepted to prove that service was made on a date other than the date shown on the certificate of mailing on the notice of entry of judgment because the affidavit is not part of the record on appeal. Flathead Hay Cubing, Inc. v. Moore, 35 St. Rep. 1260 (1978) (apparently not reported in Pacific Reporter or Montana Reports).

Suspension of Rules: Appellants, upon petition to the Supreme Court, were granted a suspension of time limits set forth in former Rules 10, 11, and 26, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and substitution of specified time limits. Bd. of Natural Resources & Conservation v. N. Plains Resource Council, 183 M 540, 601 P2d 28, 35 St. Rep. 414 (1978).

Offer of Proof — Effect on Appeal: The Supreme Court refused to review various documents attached to appellant's brief in an appeal pro se when no offer of proof was made at trial because, as such, they were not a part of the record on appeal. Jerome v. Jerome, 175 M 429, 574 P2d 997 (1978).

Property Disposition — Insufficient Evidence: Lack of a court reporter's record was not a fatal error. As substitute, a bystander's bill and exhibits admitted at trial disclosed insufficient credible evidence to support a property disposition because certain assets were not considered. Martinez v. Martinez, 175 M 280, 573 P2d 667 (1978).

Failure to Transmit Transcript: Defendants demonstrated a complete lack of adherence to the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure. Their failure to transmit the transcript of the trial court proceedings required dismissal of the appeal. Yetter v. Kennedy, 175 M 1, 571 P2d 1152 (1977), followed in In re Marriage of Bell, 220 M 123, 713 P2d 552, 43 St. Rep. 226 (1986).

Failure to State Evidence at Issue: Appeal was dismissed for inadequacy of record where there was no statement of the evidence and sufficiency of evidence was in issue, even though appellant contended that only an issue of law was presented. Washington v. Washington, 161 M 516, 507 P2d 1071 (1973).

Dismissal of Appeal — Reasons: Appeal was dismissed where appellants had failed to docket the appeal or pay the docket fee, had not requested parts of the transcript within the time allowed, had not requested preparation of any part of the record on appeal, had not paid for copies of documents requested or portions of the transcript prepared, had not transmitted any part of the record on appeal to the Supreme Court, and had not, within the time allowed by the Chief Justice, replaced counsel desiring to withdraw for good cause. Larry C. Iverson, Inc. v. United Bank of Pueblo, 158 M 223, 490 P2d 352 (1971).

Failure to Perfect Appeal: Appeal was dismissed where appellants had failed to request parts of the transcript within the time allowed by subsection (b) of former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), had not requested preparation of any portion of the record on appeal, had failed to pay for copies of documents requested or portions of the transcript prepared, had failed to transmit any part of the record on appeal to the Supreme Court, had failed to docket the appeal or pay the docket fee, and had failed, within the time allowed by the Chief Justice, to replace counsel desiring to withdraw with good cause. Larry C. Iverson, Inc. v. United Bank of Pueblo, 158 M 223, 490 P2d 352 (1971).

Cost of Transcript: Under rule providing that District Court "may impose upon the respondent the cost of producing any part of the record which it deems unnecessary for the determination of the issues", court determined that cost of portion of transcript ordered by respondent, which did not bear on any issue presented upon appeal, should be assessed against respondent. (See 1993 amendment.) Ratcliff v. Murphy, 150 M 31, 430 P2d 627 (1967).

Failure to Provide Judge's Certificate on Evidence: Merits of appeal could not be determined where purported transcript on appeal did not contain certificate of judge that records included in the transcript had been used at the hearing. Anderson v. Mennie, 144 M 105, 394 P2d 853 (1964).

Late Presentment of Bill: A bill of exceptions presented after the time prescribed in section 93-5505, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by former Rule 9, M.R.App.P., now superseded), was a nullity and could not be considered on appeal. Anderson v. Mennie, 144 M 105, 394 P2d 853 (1964).

Amendment of Notice of Appeal Not Allowed: Where appellant sought to amend notice of appeal from a nonappealable order so as to make it an appeal from final judgment, the Supreme Court acquired no jurisdiction to allow such amendment when the statutory provisions for time and manner of appeal were not complied with. Payne v. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. Co., 142 M 406, 385 P2d 100 (1963).

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Delay in Appeal — Order of Trial Court as Evidence: On motion to dismiss appeal the fact that appellant did obtain an order from the trial court purporting to extend the time may be considered in determining whether she was guilty of laches in preparing her transcript on appeal. Rader v. Taylor, 134 M 419, 333 P2d 480 (1958).

Copy of Notice of Appeal Required: Where no copy of any notice of appeal appears in either the transcript on appeal or in the files of the Supreme Court or having been supplied in the court, the purported appeal will be dismissed for want of jurisdiction. Hansen v. Hansen, 129 M 516, 290 P2d 438 (1955).

Delay in Filing Transcript — No Laches Found: A motion to dismiss an appeal on the grounds that no transcript or brief of appeal had been served or filed by the appellants within the time prescribed by the rules of the Supreme Court will be denied when it appears that prior to the consideration of the motion to dismiss the appellant's transcript had been filed with the Supreme Court and the record perfected to the satisfaction of the court and the delay in filing such transcript has been without laches on the part of the appellants. McNaught v. McCahan, 126 M 616, 250 P2d 912 (1952).

Superfluous Papers Incorporated in Transcript on Appeal: Papers and documents incorporated in the transcript on appeal from a final judgment which are not properly a part of the judgment roll and not included in a bill of exceptions duly settled are no part of the record and will be stricken therefrom. Thompson v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Ry., 78 M 170, 253 P 313 (1927).

Rule 9. Transmission of the record and other matters relating to the record on appeal.

Compiler's Comments

2011 Amendment: Supreme Court Order No. AF 07-0016 provided: "Rule 9 is amended by the addition of subsection (7), allowing the Clerk of Court to charge appellants in civil cases for the mailing costs of returning the record to the district court."

CASES DECIDED UNDER SUPERSEDED RULES

Appeal Not Dismissed for Appellant's Failure to Comply With Former Rule 10(c) (Now Superseded): More than 90 days elapsed from date of filing notice of appeal and forwarding of the record to Supreme Court. The court noted that the District Court had no authority to grant an extension, and that both appellant and the District Court displayed a relaxed attitude about the Appellate Rules, which the Supreme Court did not encourage. However, the violation was not egregious and there was no evidence that it was anything but inadvertent. The Supreme Court refused to dismiss. Scheitlin v. R&D Minerals, 217 M 8, 701 P2d 1388, 42 St. Rep. 986 (1985).

Failure to Timely Transmit Transcript — Refusal to Dismiss Appeal: Although the Supreme Court received the transcript 12 days beyond the 40-day deadline and the transcript lacked pertinent documents, the court refused to dismiss the appeal. The court noted that the procedural violation was not one that would affect the validity of the appeal, caused no substantive harm, and was not intended to mislead the court. Garza v. Peppard, 213 M 25, 689 P2d 279, 41 St. Rep. 1922 (1984).

Appeal Allowed Despite Failure to Comply With Procedural Rules: A seller was granted summary judgment against a buyer. Several months later, the court amended its order nunc pro tunc and certified the case for appeal under former Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Despite failure to comply with the former Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure (now superseded), the Supreme Court chose to hear the appeal under former Rules 3, 10, and 21, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Marcus Daly Mem. Hosp. v. Borkoski, 191 M 366, 624 P2d 997, 38 St. Rep. 322 (1981).

Suspension of Rules: Appellants, upon petition to the Supreme Court, were granted a suspension of time limits set forth in former Rules 10, 11, and 26, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and substitution of specified time limits. Bd. of Natural Resources & Conservation v. N. Plains Resource Council, 183 M 540, 601 P2d 28, 35 St. Rep. 414 (1978).

Failure to Transmit Transcript: Defendants demonstrated a complete lack of adherence to the former Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure (now superseded). Their failure to transmit the transcript of the trial court proceedings required dismissal of the appeal. Yetter v. Kennedy, 175 M 1, 571 P2d 1152 (1977), followed in In re Marriage of Bell, 220 M 123, 713 P2d 552, 43 St. Rep. 226 (1986).

Error of Defendant — Refusal to Dismiss Appeal: Supreme Court refused to dismiss appeal for failure to file record within time limit where appellant-defendant had been granted a 90-day extension for filing the record, but through error of defendant or District Court, the order granted the appellant over 130 days in which to file record and where appellant at the end of that period moved for a 30-day extension which was granted and on the day of that motion filed the record. Hannifin v. Retail Clerks Int'l Ass'n, 162 M 170, 511 P2d 982 (1973).

Extension of Time — Notice: An order granting appellant additional time "to effect the composition of the record on appeal" was not an extension of time for filing notice of appeal. It is not necessary to serve a copy of the judgment on adverse party. Jackson v. Tinker, 161 M 51, 504 P2d 692 (1972).

Dismissal of Appeal — Failure to Comply With Rules: Appeal was dismissed where appellants had not transmitted any part of the record on appeal within the time required by subsection (a) of former Rule 10, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), had not applied for an extension of time, had not requested parts of the transcript from the District Court Clerk within the time allowed, had not requested preparation of any part of the record on appeal, had not paid for copies of documents requested or portions of the transcript prepared, had not docketed the appeal or paid the docket fee, and had failed, within the time allowed by the Chief Justice, to replace counsel desiring to withdraw with good cause. Larry C. Iverson, Inc. v. United Bank of Pueblo, 158 M 223, 490 P2d 352 (1971).

Rule 10. Filing and service of papers - generally.

Rule Temporarily Suspended: Supreme Court Order No. AF 06-0377, dated September 14, 2011, ordered that this rule be temporarily suspended for an indefinite period of time, effective October 1, 2011.

2011 Amendment: Supreme Court Order No. AF 07-0016 provided: "Rule 10(2) is amended concerning service of transcripts on county attorneys in certain types of cases. Rule 10(6) is amended to eliminate the redaction requirement in appendices filed with the Court. Rule 10(7) is reworded, amended to eliminate the requirement that full names of minor children be redacted, and expanded to incorporate several new provisions, consistent with those in the Rules of Civil Procedure, concerning redaction of confidential personal information."

2009 Amendment: In (1)(a) inserted caption; in (1)(b) inserted caption, in first sentence near beginning inserted reference to notice of appeal and cross-appeal substantially complying with Form 1 or 2, and at end of sentence deleted "provided the original document is filed with the clerk within 5 business days of the receipt of the facsimile; otherwise, the filing will be treated as void", and inserted second, third, and fourth sentences concerning facsimile filing; in (6) inserted references to Youth Court Act and Guardians of Incapacitated Persons; in (7) inserted first and second sentences concerning filing original under seal and caption for documents with redacted information and in last sentence at beginning substituted "The" for "One" and near middle after "information shall" deleted "be filed with the clerk of the supreme court and shall"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Faxing of Notice of Appeal Not Allowed — Appeal Not Timely Filed: A notice of appeal is not a procedural motion for which fax filing is allowed under former Rule 10, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). A notice of appeal must be filed in hard copy form, and papers required to be filed with the Supreme Court are not considered timely unless the papers are actually received within the time fixed for filing. Reedal v. Reedal, 2008 MT 151, 343 M 235, 183 P3d 122 (2008).

Rule 11. Form of briefs and other papers - duplication.

Compiler's Comments

2011 Amendment: Supreme Court Order No. AF 07-0016 provided: "Rule 11(1) is amended by deletion of some requirements as to the type of recycled paper to be used in documents filed with the Court. A revision to Rule 11(6)(a) changes the required brief color for appellees- briefs from red to salmon, in order to allow for recycling of those brief covers.

Both Rules 11(6)(a) and 12(5) are amended to prohibit the use of plastic-coated tabs in briefs and other papers filed with this Court."

2009 Amendment: In (4)(a) and (4)(b) after "amicus brief" deleted "or petition for rehearing"; in (4)(c) decreased size of petitions from 5,000 to 4,000 words and from 14 to 12 pages; in (4)(d) and (4)(e) inserted reference to (4)(c); and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

DECISIONS UNDER SUPERSEDED RULES

Excluded Documents Never Offered and Refused as Exhibits — Refusal to Consider on Appeal — Admonishment for Attaching to Appeal Brief: Medical documents that were excluded as evidence but were never offered as exhibits at trial and thus were not in the record as refused exhibits were included as part of an appendix to the defendant's appeal brief. The Supreme Court held that it was unable to evaluate or rule on the admissibility of documents that were never offered into evidence or described in the record and admonished counsel for attaching extraneous material to briefs as an attempt to introduce evidence through the "back door". Garza v. Peppard, 222 M 244, 722 P2d 610, 43 St. Rep. 1233 (1986), followed in Murphy v. St., 248 M 82, 809 P2d 16, 48 St. Rep. 335 (1991).

Rule 12. Briefs.

Compiler's Comments

2011 Amendment: Supreme Court Order No. AF 07-0016 provided: "Rule 12(3) is amended to clarify the word or page limit for reply briefs in cases with multiple appellees or cross-appeals. Rule 12(11) is amended to provide that filed DVD copies of briefs shall not include attachments or appendices, and to require the redaction of all confidential information from DVD copies of briefs."

"Both Rules 11(6)(a) and 12(5) are amended to prohibit the use of plastic-coated tabs in briefs and other papers filed with this Court."

2009 Amendment: In (1)(b) inserted second sentence concerning limiting issues; in (1)(c) inserted second sentence concerning relevant procedural background; substituted (1)(h) concerning appendix for former text that read: "The judgment, order, findings of fact, conclusions of law, or decision in question, together with the memorandum opinion, if any, in support thereof"; substituted (5) concerning separate appendix containing additional documents of material for former text that read: "If desired, parties may attach an appendix to their briefs, or may submit a separately-bound appendix, to provide the judgment or order from which appeal is taken, challenged jury instructions (whether given or offered but not given), statutes and other legal sources, or to reference matters from the record necessary to their argument. The appendix shall include a table of contents and colored page separators. Given that the court has available to it the entire record, parties are advised to include in their appendix only those documents essential to their arguments"; substituted (8) concerning references to parties for former text that read: "References to parties by such formal designations as "appellant" and "appellee" shall be minimal. It promotes clarity to use names or descriptive terms such as "John," "Sue," "the employee," "the injured person," or "the taxpayer""; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

DECISIONS UNDER CURRENT RULES

Fees Not Awarded — Misleading Arguments — No Citation to Record: On appeal of a divorce decree, the husband argued that the District Court failed to consider relevant case law. The Supreme Court noted that the husband's arguments in the briefing were misleading and significantly misrepresented or omitted facts. The Supreme Court declined to award attorney fees as sanctions because the case itself provided enough reason to challenge the District Court's application of law and distribution of property. In re Marriage of Rintoul, 2014 MT 210, 376 Mont. 167, 330 P.3d 1203.

Merits of Argument Not Considered Without Legal Analysis and Research: The Supreme Court declined to consider the merits of a contention that statements in affidavits for a summary judgment were admissible as hearsay exceptions pursuant to the transaction rule because no supporting authority was cited nor was any legal analysis provided. In re Estate of Harmon, 2011 MT 84, 360 Mont. 150, 253 P.3d 821. See also St. v. Whalen, 2013 MT 26, 368 Mont. 354, 295 P.3d 1055.

Defendants' Failure to Support Position on Issues With Reasoned Argument: The defendants presented undeveloped and unsupported arguments concerning standing and easement rights. The Supreme Court held that it is not the court's job to conduct legal research on a party's behalf, to guess as to the party's precise position, or to develop legal analysis that may lend support to that position. Osman v. Cavalier, 2011 MT 60, 360 Mont. 17, 251 P.3d 686.

Incarceration of Mentally Ill Defendant — No Plain Error Review for Alleged Due Process Violation: Following Rovin's parole violations, the District Court revoked Rovin's suspended sentence and imposed a sentence in the state prison, despite the fact that Rovin suffered from mental illness. Rovin argued for the first time on appeal that incarceration would fail to achieve rehabilitation and thus violated due process, that the Supreme Court should invoke plain error review to address the constitutional violation, and that failure to do so would be a manifest miscarriage of justice. The Supreme Court declined. Rovin failed to demonstrate that the due process claim met the elements for plain error review. The District Court considered sentencing alternatives but rejected community-based treatment over concerns for the safety of Rovin and the public. Rovin was represented at every stage of the proceedings, knowingly and voluntarily admitted the parole violations, and waived the right to appeal by failing to object at trial. Further, a mere assertion that failure to review a claimed error might result in a manifest miscarriage of justice is not sufficient to implicate plain error review. St. v. Rovin, 2009 MT 16, 349 M 57, 201 P3d 780 (2009), following St. v. Mackrill, 2008 MT 297, 345 M 469, 191 P3d 451 (2008).

Valuation of Damaged Automobile of "At Least $1,000" in Youth Court Held Insufficient to Support Adjudication as Delinquent Youth — Failure to Develop Argument in Brief: J.D.N. was adjudicated in Youth Court of damaging an automobile that the court valued to be of "at least $1,000" for the purposes of 45-6-101. The court concluded that J.D.N. committed felony criminal mischief and was therefore adjudicated to be a delinquent youth under 41-5-1502. J.D.N. argued that the finding by the court that the vehicle was worth "at least $1,000" was insufficient to support an adjudication that he was a delinquent youth as defined in 41-5-103. The Supreme Court agreed, noting that the criminal mischief statute uses the language "in excess of $1,000." The Supreme Court therefore remanded the case to the Youth Court and directed a disposition consistent with the finding that J.D.N. committed an offense that, if committed by an adult, would be a misdemeanor. The court declined to enter an order dismissing the petition charging J.D.N. to be a delinquent youth, saying that J.D.N. had failed to develop an argument for that result in his brief and that the court would not do it for him, citing St. v. Torgerson, 2008 MT 303, 345 M 532, 192 P3d 695 (2008). In re J.D.N., 2008 MT 420, 347 M 368, 199 P3d 189 (2008).

Appellant Failed to Conduct Legal Analysis: In an appeal brief arguing inadmissible hearsay and prosecutorial misconduct, the burden under this rule is on the appellant to conduct legal research or develop legal analysis to support his position establishing trial court error. State v. Torgerson, 2008 MT 303, 345 M 532, 192 P3d 695 (2008), followed in In re J.D.N., 2008 MT 420, 347 M 368, 199 P3d 189 (2008).

No Showing of Ineffective Counsel — Postconviction Relief Properly Denied: In a petition for postconviction relief, DuBray asserted ineffective assistance of trial and appellate counsel based on: (1) trial counsel's introduction of prejudicial issues during trial; (2) trial counsel's conflict of interest; (3) failure of trial counsel to ensure DuBray's presence at all critical stages of the trial; and (4) appellate counsel's failure to raise issues 2 and 3 on appeal. The District Court found no ineffective assistance and denied DuBray's petition, and on appeal, the Supreme Court considered each claim and affirmed. Counsel's actions regarding the introduction of allegedly prejudicial issues were made for tactical reasons and stemmed from informed professional deliberation, and DuBray could not demonstrate that counsel's actions were deficient. Defense counsel clearly revealed the potential conflict of interest within the trial record, so that claim was procedurally barred by 46-21-105. The claim that counsel erred by not ensuring DuBray's presence at all critical trial stages could have been raised on direct appeal and thus was procedurally barred from consideration in postconviction proceedings. DuBray's contention of error by appellate counsel for failure to raise the conflict of interest claim failed because DuBray did not establish that trial counsel actively represented conflicting interests and because DuBray himself stated that he did not wish to discharge trial counsel merely because counsel had a previous attorney-client relationship with a potentially adverse party. Last, Dubray's assertion that he might have demanded that trial counsel act differently had DuBray been present during interactions between the trial court and the jury foreman was pure speculation, particularly given that DuBray deferred to counsel on such matters. DuBray's postconviction petition was properly denied. DuBray v. St., 2008 MT 121, 342 M 520, 182 P3d 753 (2008). In Marble v. St., 2015 MT 242, 380 Mont. 366, 355 P.3d 742, the Supreme Court overruled DuBray to the extent it applied the fifth factor in the Clark test to a petition for postconviction relief that is based upon newly discovered evidence.

DECISIONS UNDER SUPERSEDED RULES

Failure to Challenge Admissibility of Victim's Statements on All Grounds as Precluding Consideration on Appeal: English challenged the admissibility of statements made by a negligent homicide victim, contending that the trial court erred in admitting the statements as excited utterances or medical diagnosis. However, the court admitted the statements on other grounds as well, including present sense impression, mental or physical condition, and circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, and English failed to challenge these additional bases for admissibility. Because English failed to challenge each of the alternative bases, the Supreme Court declined to address the admissibility issue on appeal. St. v. English, 2006 MT 177, 333 M 23, 140 P3d 454 (2006).

No Authority for Proposition That Marital Assets Be Equitably Divided After Subtracting Related Marital Debts: The wife asserted but did not provide the required authority for the proposition that a court must equitably divide each marital asset after subtracting related marital debts rather than equitably distributing the entire marital estate. The Supreme Court found no abuse of discretion in the determination that certain real business property and related debts were marital and part of the husband's premarital assets and inheritance and should be allocated to the husband, with an equalization payment to the wife for her contributions to the marital home. The distribution of the marital estate was affirmed. In re Marriage of Markegard, 2006 MT 111, 332 M 187, 136 P3d 532 (2006), overruled in part in In re Marriage of Funk, 2012 MT 14, 363 Mont. 352, 270 P.3d 39, holding that there are no restrictions on when a District Court may distribute preacquired, gifted, or inherited property as long as the court equitably apportions the parties' property in accordance with 40-4-202.

Mailing to Attorney of Record and Party's Last-Known Address Considered Adequate Notice — Personal Service Not Required: After 11 years passed from the time that a dissolution decree was entered, the wife moved to obtain her share of the husband's retirement benefits as ordered in the decree. Notice of the action was sent to the husband's last attorney of record, who filed a motion to dismiss, and by mail to the husband's last-known address in Hawaii. The husband contended that personal service was required because so much time had passed since the decree and because the attorney-client relationship was stale. However, the husband cited no authorities for the argument that personal service was required because the passage of time concluded the attorney-client relationship or that service requirements were modified based upon the last date of activity in a case. The attorney was clearly acting as the husband's attorney, and the decree was intended to extend to the issue of retirement, which had only recently occurred. Thus, under former Rule 5(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), service was perfected and complete upon mailing a copy to the husband's last attorney of record and to the husband's last-known address. In re Marriage of Weber, 2004 MT 206, 322 M 324, 95 P3d 694 (2004).

Offset of Unpaid Retirement Benefits Proper Under Prior Family Law Order: The District Court ordered the husband to pay $734 a month from his retirement benefits, as ordered in a dissolution decree, and allowed the wife to offset her obligations to the husband when he became eligible to share in her retirement benefits to cover accrued payments of more than $10,000 owed by the husband. On appeal, the husband contended that he was exempt from this legal process under 19-2-1004 because 11 years had passed since the decree was issued, so the decree should no longer be considered a family law order under 19-2-907. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed. The husband cited no authority for the proposition that a family law order is no longer a family law order after 11 years. The District Court did not err in allowing the wife to collect accrued payments by setoff or otherwise. In re Marriage of Weber, 2004 MT 206, 322 M 324, 95 P3d 694 (2004).

Unsupported and Incomprehensible Issues Raised by Pro Se Appellant Dismissed: The wife appealed from a marital property distribution by filing a pro se brief that alluded to libelous conduct, unscrupulous activity regarding trial documents, false testimony, judicial bias, and erroneous calculation of marital assets. The Supreme Court found that the brief contained general contentions of impropriety, but no citations to the record or supporting legal authority. Although the Supreme Court has shown some willingness to make accommodations for pro se parties by relaxing technical requirements that do not impact fundamental bases for appeal, in this case, the appeal was dismissed because of an utter failure to comply with the former Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure (now superseded) by filing a brief that could be comprehended by the court and realistically responded to by the opposing party. In re Marriage of McMahon, 2002 MT 198, 311 M 175, 53 P3d 1266 (2002).

Failure to Properly Raise Issue in Opening Appellate Brief — Case Dismissed: In five issues presented for appeal, the appellant pro se set forth little or no argument and no citations in support of the argument in the opening brief. Instead, after setting forth the issue, the appellant simply stated that the issue was presented at face value without argument. Pursuant to subsection (a) of former Rule 23, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), in order for an appellant to properly raise an issue in an opening brief, the appellant's contentions must be listed as to the issues presented and the reasons for presenting the arguments, along with citation to the authorities relied upon. The Supreme Court will not consider unsupported issues or arguments, conduct legal research on an appellant's behalf, guess an appellant's precise position, or develop legal analysis in support of an appellant's position. The opening brief violated the former Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure (now superseded) and was therefore dismissed. In re Marriage of Snow, 2002 MT 143, 310 M 260, 49 P3d 610 (2002).

Denial of Will Contestants' Discovery Requests for Probate and Adoption Files Affirmed: The will contestants questioned Lande's testamentary capacity and asserted undue influence, claiming District Court error in failing to strike privilege-based objections from the record and to require production of Lande's complete estate planning files, particularly Lande's wife's file and a son's adoption file. The suggestion that the court was required to strike privilege-based objections, in addition to rejecting the applicability of the privilege, was raised without supporting authority as required by subsection (a)(4) of former Rule 23, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and thus was disregarded as without merit. The Supreme Court, citing Duck Inn, Inc. v. Mont. St. Univ., 285 M 519, 949 P2d 1179 (1997), stated that having failed to advance supporting authority, the contestants cannot establish error in this regard. Lande's wife's file was irrelevant because it had been completed years prior, and the question of when it was prepared bore no connection to the underlying questions of Lande's testamentary capacity or undue influence. The adoption file was also irrelevant because the contestants conceded that the adopted son had long been a substantial devisee and they did not challenge the son's adoption or status as a beneficiary. The contestants further failed to show that the entire estate planning files were not produced and thus failed to meet their burden of establishing District Court error. In re Estate of Lande, 1999 MT 162, 295 M 160, 983 P2d 308, 56 St. Rep. 642 (1999).

Response and Cross-Appeal Brief Limited to 14,000 Words: Idaho Asphalt Supply, the respondent in an appeal, filed with the Montana Supreme Court a combined response brief and cross-appeal brief containing 90 pages and 20,163 words. When the Supreme Court returned the brief because it failed to comply with the length limitation provided in former Rule 27(d)(i), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), Idaho Asphalt Supply filed a motion for order allowing it to file an overlength brief, arguing that it was entitled under former Rule 27(d)(i), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and subsection (h) of former Rule 23, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), to file a response brief of a maximum of 14,000 words and a cross-appeal brief of 14,000 words and that there was no rule limiting it to a combined brief of 14,000 words. The Supreme Court pointed out that the language of subsection (h) of former Rule 23, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), regarding briefs involving cross-appeals required that the respondent's brief address the cross-appeal "as well as" respond to the appellant's brief. The Supreme Court therefore read former Rule 27(d)(i), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and subsection (h) of former Rule 23, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), together to provide that in the case of a cross-appeal, a respondent may file one principal brief serving the purposes of both a response brief and a cross-appeal brief and that the combined brief is limited to a maximum of 14,000 words. The Supreme Court noted that although it is fairly liberal in allowing overlength briefs, there was nothing particularly unusual or complex about the issues involved in Idaho Asphalt Supply's response and cross-appeal. The Supreme Court therefore held, because it was given no compelling reasons to allow the overlength brief, that the 14,000-word limitation would apply to the combined brief. Idaho Asphalt Supply v. Dept. of Transportation, 1998 MT 312, 292 M 162, 974 P2d 1117, 55 St. Rep. 1287 (1998).

Failure to Cite Authority or Legal Analysis — No Error Established: Carter contended on appeal that admission of the results of a blood test taken as part of a DUI arrest was improper but cited no authority or legal analysis to support the argument. Failure to cite authority for the position being advanced on appeal precluded Carter from establishing any error in the trial court's admission of the blood test results. St. v. Carter, 285 M 449, 948 P2d 1173, 54 St. Rep. 1235 (1997).

Failure to Cite Authority — Constitutional Argument Not Addressed: In a property dispute over the existence of an easement, the Goods, who appeared pro se, argued that the District Court unconstitutionally took their property, because the District Court did not find an easement in their favor. The Supreme Court noted that the Goods had the burden of proof on the issue of the establishment of their easement and also that former Rule 23, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), required that the party advancing an argument cite authority that supports the party's argument. Because the Goods cited no authority for their position, the Supreme Court refused to address the constitutional issue raised by the Goods. Small v. Good, 284 M 159, 943 P2d 1258, 54 St. Rep. 825 (1997).

Appeal From Justice's Court to District Court — Failure to Include Citation of Authority for Lack of Jurisdiction — Jurisdictional Argument Not Addressed on Appeal: Sol appealed his DUI conviction in Justice's Court to the District Court. In the Supreme Court, Sol argued that the failure of the Justice's Court Clerk to timely transmit the file to the District Court within the time provided by 46-17-311 deprived the District Court of jurisdiction. The Supreme Court noted that Sol had failed to cite any authority, as required by former Rule 23, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), for his assertion that the clerk's failure deprived the District Court of jurisdiction. For this reason, the Supreme Court declined to address the issue of the District Court's jurisdiction. St. v. Sol, 282 M 69, 936 P2d 307, 54 St. Rep. 246 (1997).

Corporate Officer Without Authority for Pro Se Representation of Corporation — Refusal to Consider Brief: Plaintiff realty corporation brought an action in District Court to find defendants in default for failure to make payments under a contract for deed. Plaintiff was represented by counsel in District Court, but on appeal, it was represented by the president of the corporation.

The Supreme Court, sua sponte, raised the issue of whether the corporation could be represented by its president and held that it could not. Citing Weaver v. Law Firm of Graybill, 246 M 175, 803 P2d 1089 (1990), the Supreme Court held that a corporation is a separate legal entity and cannot appear on its own behalf through an agent other than an attorney. The Supreme Court therefore determined not to consider the brief filed by the president on behalf of the corporation. Cont. Realty, Inc. v. Gerry, 251 M 150, 822 P2d 1083, 48 St. Rep. 1134 (1991).

Damages to Respondent for Appeal Taken Without Substantial Grounds — Skimpy Briefs: Damages to respondent were proper when counsel for appellant was repeatedly informed by the trial judge of the need to establish a duty owing by the respondent, but no evidence of a duty was presented. Assessment of damages was further warranted because appellant's brief did not contain: (1) a statement of the case; (2) citations to authority for numerous contentions; (3) citations to pages of the record relied upon; and (4) accurate quotations of case law, commissioners' comments, and the record. Rookhuizen v. Blain's Mobile Home Court, Inc., 236 M 7, 767 P2d 1331, 46 St. Rep. 139 (1989).

Excluded Documents Never Offered and Refused as Exhibits — Refusal to Consider on Appeal — Admonishment for Attaching to Appeal Brief: Medical documents that were excluded as evidence but were never offered as exhibits at trial and thus were not in the record as refused exhibits were included as part of an appendix to the defendant's appeal brief. The Supreme Court held that it was unable to evaluate or rule on the admissibility of documents that were never offered into evidence or described in the record and admonished counsel for attaching extraneous material to briefs as an attempt to introduce evidence through the "back door". Garza v. Peppard, 222 M 244, 722 P2d 610, 43 St. Rep. 1233 (1986), followed in Murphy v. St., 248 M 82, 809 P2d 16, 48 St. Rep. 335 (1991).

Motion to Strike Reply Brief Denied: Respondent made a motion before the Supreme Court to strike appellants' reply brief in its entirety because it raised as a new matter a constitutional argument. The court denied the motion, stating that the court would not consider any portion of the reply brief not in conformance with former Rule 23(c), M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Denend v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 218 M 505, 710 P2d 61, 42 St. Rep. 1778 (1985).

Jury Instruction Error — How Set Forth in Brief: When an appellant claims jury instruction error, he should set forth the text of the instructions in the brief as well as the trial court's ruling on the instructions and any related instructions the appellant claims should have been given. Goodnough v. St., 199 M 9, 647 P2d 364, 39 St. Rep. 1170 (1982).

No Statement of Issues: When appellant fails to set forth the issues of its case on appeal the Supreme Court will discuss the matter on issues delineated and set forth by respondent. School District v. Driscoll, 173 M 492, 568 P2d 149 (1977).

CASES DECIDED UNDER CURRENT RULES

Supervisory Control Exercised — Personal Jurisdiction Question Urgent, Purely Legal, Constitutional, and of Statewide and National Importance: The District Court denied a car manufacturer's motion to dismiss for lack of specific personal jurisdiction. The manufacturer petitioned the Supreme Court for a writ of supervisory control and the Supreme Court granted it because (1) urgency makes the normal appeal process inadequate when there is a question of personal jurisdiction, (2) the manufacturer's constitutional right to due process was at issue, (3) the question of whether personal jurisdiction existed was purely legal, and (4) the question was of statewide and national importance. Ford Motor Co. v. 8th Judicial District Court, 2019 MT 115, 395 Mont. 478, 443 P.3d 407.

Order Requiring Public Defender Overturned — Supervisory Control — Nonjailable Offenses: The Justice Court ordered the Office of State Public Defender (OPD) to appoint a public defender to represent a defendant in a misdemeanor theft case. The OPD appealed on a writ of supervisory control, arguing that the Justice Court had no authority to compel it to provide a public defender in a case involving a nonjailable misdemeanor offense, pursuant to 46-8-101. In response, the Justice Court argued that the defendant had a right to government-provided counsel under the federal and state constitutions in all cases. The Supreme Court overruled the Justice Court, holding that supervisory control was necessary and proper, 46-8-101 did not require a public defender in the underlying case because it did not involve a jailable offense, and there was no authority suggesting that this statutory restriction of public defenders to felonies and misdemeanors involving jailable offenses was unconstitutional. Office of St. Pub. Defender v. Fagenstrom, 2019 MT 104, 395 Mont. 397, 439 P.3d 1285.

Probation Officer's Motion to Dismiss Contempt Proceeding Granted — Supervisory Control Appropriate: The petitioner was a probation officer who prepared the presentence investigation report for a Montana State Prison inmate who had pleaded guilty to vehicular homicide while under the influence and to criminal endangerment and had received a 30-year commitment to the Department of Corrections (DOC). Three years after sentencing, the inmate moved the District Court to hold the petitioner in contempt on the basis of her use of falsified information for his initial DOC placement at the prison, which delayed his placement in an addiction treatment program and impeded his parole eligibility. The petitioner filed a motion to dismiss the contempt proceedings, which was denied by the District Court. The petitioner then asked the Supreme Court to intervene via supervisory control. After determining supervisory control was appropriate in this case, the court held that while it was unclear what type of contempt motion was filed, the inmate's contempt motion failed under the standard for indirect criminal contempt, because only the state can prosecute such a motion, and likewise failed under the indirect civil contempt standard, because a cognizable claim under this standard must seek to compel the contemnor to perform an act within the contemnor's power to perform but the inmate merely sought a contempt citation and sanction against the probation officer in her individual capacity as a DOC employee without the authority to determine or alter a placement within the context of a court-ordered DOC commitment. VanSkyock v. 20th Judicial District Court, 2017 MT 99, 387 Mont. 307, 393 P.3d 1068.

Appointed Retired Judge Subject to Substitution Under 3-1-804: The plaintiff filed a lawsuit in Lake County. The defendant moved for substitution under 3-1-804 and a second judge assumed jurisdiction. The second judge then requested a retired District Court Judge to preside over the case, who was appointed by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. The plaintiff then moved to substitute the retired judge under 3-1-804. The judges then issued an order returning jurisdiction to the original judge or the Chief Justice. The petitioner sought supervisory control, arguing that 3-1-804 does not apply to sitting retired judges. The Supreme Court held that specific assignments of retired District Judges under 19-5-103 are contemplated by the language of 3-1-804. Cushman v. 20th Judicial District Court, 2015 MT 311, 381 Mont. 324, 360 P.3d 492.

Supervisory Control Granted — Appeal Cannot Undo Damage to Privacy Right for Unwarranted Psychological Evaluation: After being hit by a vehicle that left the scene, the plaintiff sought compensation from her insurer under her uninsured motorist coverage for past and future medical expenses and for physical and emotional pain, suffering, and anxiety associated with the physical injuries. The District Court issued an order for an independent psychological examination for the purpose of determining whether the plaintiff's chronic pain was caused or exacerbated by preexisting mental health issues. Subsequently, the Supreme Court granted the plaintiff's request for supervisory control based on the factors in Rule 14(3), M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), reasoning that an appeal of a final judgment could not undo the damage to the plaintiff's privacy right caused by an unwarranted psychological evaluation. Lewis v. District Court, 2012 MT 200, 366 Mont. 217, 286 P.3d 577.

Letter Written by Insurer's Counsel and Disclosed to Employer in Workers' Compensation Claim — No Application of Attorney-Client Privilege — Protection of Work-Product Doctrine Waived by Disclosure — Supervisory Control Granted: An employee was injured at Roscoe Steel and filed a workers' compensation claim. Zurich, which insured Roscoe Steel, accepted liability for the claim and contracted with a third party to adjust the claim. Over time, the employee and Zurich disagreed about the employee's level of impairment. Eventually, Zurich had an attorney prepare an opinion and evaluation letter regarding the employee's case. The letter was given to Zurich as well as to the claims adjuster, who, without the knowledge of Zurich or the attorney, gave a copy of it to Roscoe Steel. Ultimately, the employee filed an action for unfair claims settlement practices against Zurich and the claims adjuster. As a part of discovery, the employee served a subpoena duces tecum on Roscoe Steel requesting all correspondence with Zurich, the adjuster, and the attorney's law firm. Counsel for Roscoe Steel filed an action to quash the subpoena, citing the attorney-client privilege and the attorney work-product doctrine. After the District Court denied the motion, Zurich petitioned the Supreme Court for a writ of supervisory control, which was granted. The Supreme Court agreed that the attorney-client privilege did not apply because Roscoe Steel and Zurich did not share a common legal interest in the adjustment of the employee's claim and that Roscoe Steel was not protected by Zurich's privilege with its counsel. Similarly, because Roscoe Steel and Zurich did not share common litigation interests, there was no reasonable expectation that Roscoe Steel would keep Zurich's work product confidential, and the privilege had been waived by the letter's disclosure to Roscoe Steel. American Zurich Ins. Co. v. 13th Judicial District Court, 2012 MT 61, 364 Mont. 299, 280 P.3d 240.

Appeal From District Court's Denial of Petition for Writ of Habeas Corpus Prohibited: After the District Court denied a criminal defendant's petition for a writ of habeas corpus, the defendant appealed to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court held it will no longer consider as an original petition a party's appeal from a District Court's denial of a petition for a writ of habeas corpus. A petitioner must file an original petition for a writ of habeas corpus in the Supreme Court in order for the court to consider it. Thomas v. Doe, 2011 MT 283, 362 Mont. 454, 266 P.3d 1255.

Evidence of Use or Nonuse of Seatbelt Admissible in Case for Damages Related to Vehicle's Seatbelt System — Writ of Supervisory Control Granted — District Court' s Grant of Motion in Limine Reversed: Decedent's vehicle was struck by another vehicle, causing his car to roll. The personal representative of the decedent's estate, alleging that the decedent was killed because his seatbelt, which he was wearing at the time of the accident, had slackened and caused him to be ejected from the vehicle as it rolled, filed a lawsuit against Ford, the vehicle manufacturer, alleging negligent design and strict liability. The District Court granted Ford's motion in limine to prohibit evidence of the decedent's use of his seatbelt at the time of the accident pursuant to 61-13-106, or for the personal representative to forego his negligence claims if he chose to introduce evidence of the use of the seatbelt. The personal representative filed a petition for a writ of supervisory control, arguing that the District Court was proceeding under a mistake of law. The Supreme Court granted the petition and held that as long as an action for damages is related to injuries arising out of the condition of the vehicle's seatbelt system, 61-13-106 does not prohibit evidence of seatbelt use. Stokes v. 13th Judicial District Court, 2011 MT 182, 361 Mont. 279, 259 P.3d 754.

Supervisory Control Appropriate When District Court Proceeding Under Mistake of Law: While evidentiary rulings are generally reviewed for abuse of discretion, when a case involves purely legal questions involving the construction of a law or statute, a de novo review is appropriate. In this case, the Supreme Court determined that supervisory control was appropriate for several reasons, including the District Court's mistake of law and the absence of the ability to appeal pretrial evidentiary rulings, constituting a gross injustice. St. v. 18th Judicial District Court, 2010 MT 263, 358 Mont. 325, 246 P.3d 415.

Stay of Proceedings Improper for Bad Faith Action If Underlying Liability Resolved — Ongoing Remedy Immaterial: When the particular dispute upon which a bad faith action is premised — an insurer's liability for occupational disease — is fully resolved, the bad faith action has accrued, and the full scope of future medical treatments or other disputes that may arise will be addressed separately in the future. The District Court was in error in staying the bad faith action after the action had accrued based on the defendant's allegation that discovery on the bad faith claim would prejudice defense of continuing remedies of the now resolved underlying claim. Lamb v. Fourth Judicial District Court, 2010 MT 141, 356 Mont. 534, 234 P.3d 893.

Stay Order of Indeterminate Length — Purely Legal Question — Subject of Supervisory Control: An order to stay bad faith claims against defendants until resolution of financial liability for a permanent degenerative condition because of concerns that discovery would be prejudicial in the continuing underlying claim was subject to a writ of supervisory control because a stay is unappealable under Rule 6(3), M.R.App.P., the stay resulted in a gross injustice, and all the issues were purely legal issues. Lamb v. Fourth Judicial District Court, 2010 MT 141, 356 Mont. 534, 234 P.3d 893.

Supervisory Control Exercised to Clarify Standard of Review of Sentences by Sentence Review Division: Several defendants who intended to have their sentences reviewed moved that the Sentence Review Division clarify the standard applied to sentences submitted for review. The Division had applied the "clearly inadequate or excessive" standard in Rule 17 of the Division's rules, but defendants asked that the Division instead review cases for equity. Defendants petitioned for supervisory control by the Supreme Court, and the petition was granted pursuant to the court's authority to ensure that the Division complies with applicable constitutional and statutory rules. The court noted that the Legislature did not articulate a specific standard of review, but instead granted the Division authority to adopt rules to expedite sentence review. The court concluded that the Division's rules provide for an appropriately broad review of the totality of the facts and circumstances of each case, including review for equity, disparity, or considerations of justice. Under 46-18-904, the sentence imposed by the District Court is presumed correct, and after a hearing, the Division then decides if this presumption has been overcome and whether a new sentence should be imposed, after determining whether the original sentence was clearly inadequate or excessive. This standard is a valid application of the Division's statutory duty and is the standard to be applied to sentence review. Driver v. Sentence Review Div., 2010 MT 43, 355 Mont. 273, 227 P.3d 1018, clarifying In re Jones, 176 Mont. 412, 578 P.2d 1150 (1978).

Supervisory Control Appropriate to Address Constitutionality of Statute Requiring Person to Remain at Site of Fatal Accident: Steglich was charged with failure to remain at the scene of a fatal accident pursuant to 61-7-103. Steglich moved to dismiss on grounds that the statute was unconstitutionally vague. The District Court held that the statute was vague both facially and as applied to Steglich and granted the dismissal motion. The state filed a petition for supervisory control. The Supreme Court held that urgency or emergency factors existed that made the normal appeal process inadequate and that because the case involved purely legal questions as well as constitutional issues of statewide importance and because the District Court was proceeding under a mistake of law causing a gross injustice, supervisory control was appropriate. St. v. 13th Judicial District Court, 2009 MT 163, 350 M 465, 208 P3d 408 (2009). See also St. v. Spady, 2015 MT 218, 380 Mont. 179, 354 P.3d 590.

Application for Extraordinary Relief from Montana Supreme Court Only Recourse for Defendant Who Wishes to Challenge Decision of the Sentence Review Division: The District Court lacked jurisdiction to review decisions of the Sentence Review Division because it is a division of the Montana Supreme Court. Jordan v. St., 2008 MT 334, 346 M 193, 194 P3d 657, (2008).

No Mistake of Law in City Court's Failure to Appoint Counsel Given Defendant's Prior Refusal of Appointed Counsel or Appropriate Request: Compton was arrested in Flathead County and charged with first offense DUI. At both Compton's initial appearance in City Court and at the subsequent arraignment hearing, Compton refused appointed counsel. However, a few days later, Compton submitted a whimsical, handwritten document to the Office of State Public Defender (OSPD) in Whitefish requesting appointment of counsel. The OSPD then appeared in court and requested permission to file a notice of appearance on behalf of Compton, but the judge refused to enter the OSPD's appearance because of the absence of documents demonstrating an attorney-client relationship. The OSPD then faxed the handwritten document to the court, but the judge declined to appoint counsel absent a request from Compton, either in person or by an appropriate written request. The OSPD then filed a petition for supervisory control with the Supreme Court requesting that the court order the City Judge to appoint the OSPD to represent counsel. The Supreme Court noted that a writ of supervisory control is appropriate only in extraordinary circumstances when a court is proceeding under a mistake of law that will result in significant injustice if not corrected. Here, the OSPD was unable to demonstrate a mistake of law. Under 47-1-111, it is assumed that a court's initial order for appointment of counsel will follow an appropriate request by a defendant. Compton had twice refused appointed counsel, and the handwritten request lacked credibility and was inappropriate, so refusal to appoint counsel absent a request from Compton, either in person or by an appropriate written request, was not a mistake of law. The Supreme Court denied the petition for supervisory control, noting that if Compton desired appointed counsel, he could submit an appropriate request and that his eligibility could then be determined in accordance with statute. Office of St. Pub. Defender v. Whitefish City Court, 2008 MT 79, 342 M 141, 188 P3d 43 (2008), distinguishing Rios v. Justice's Court, 2006 MT 256, 334 M 111, 148 P3d 602 (2006).

GENERAL

Failure of Counsel to Preserve Defendant's Request for Appeal Prejudicial Per Se — Out-of-Time Appeal Appropriate Remedy: Despite a request to do so, Tweed's counsel failed to file a timely appeal of Tweed's sexual abuse conviction. Counsel did not intentionally abandon the appeal; rather, the failure was unintentional and resulted from a filing oversight and miscommunication. Nevertheless, the error was prejudicial per se and constituted ineffective assistance of counsel in violation of Tweed's constitutional rights. The failure to timely appeal was excusable, and because postconviction proceedings were considered an inadequate remedy, the Supreme Court decided that an out-of-time appeal was the appropriate remedy and, being in possession of a sufficient record, proceeded to consider the merits of the appeal. St. v. Tweed, 2002 MT 286, 312 M 482, 59 P3d 1105 (2002), following St. v. Rogers, 2001 MT 165, 306 M 130, 32 P3d 724 (2001).

Out-of-Time Appeal in Criminal Matters — Exclusive Jurisdiction With Supreme Court: Under 46-20-101, the only method for review in criminal cases is by notice of appeal. Time limits for filing an appeal are mandatory and jurisdictional. If a defendant takes no action to perfect an appeal within 90 days of judgment, the District Court loses its jurisdiction and the appeal is out-of-time. However, an out-of-time appeal is a remedy that may be available to a criminal defendant who, through no fault of the defendant, misses a deadline for filing an appeal. Although former Rule 21(b), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), precludes an out-of-time appeal in a civil case, the Supreme Court is not precluded from addressing a motion for an out-of-time appeal in a criminal case. Further, a District Court lacks jurisdiction to grant an out-of-time appeal. The Supreme Court has exclusive jurisdiction to grant a motion for an out-of-time appeal, and the motion is considered an original proceeding subject to the provisions of former Rule 17, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Upon a showing that the failure to timely notice a criminal appeal was excusable under the circumstances, the Supreme Court may conclude that an out-of-time appeal is the appropriate remedy pursuant to former Rule 21(b), M.R.App.P. (now superseded). In that event, the matter will be remanded to the District Court with instructions to vacate and reenter judgment to afford the defendant a second opportunity to act within the statutory timeframes for filing notice of appeal. St. v. Tweed, 2002 MT 286, 312 M 482, 59 P3d 1105 (2002).

District Court Proceeding Under Mistake of Law in Determining Whether Implied Consent Statute Applicable to Blood Drawn for Medical Reasons — Supervisory Control Accepted: The District Court suppressed the results of a blood test taken for medical reasons after a DUI suspect declined to give consent for a blood test following a car accident in which the use of alcohol was suspected. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court was proceeding under a mistake of law, and that if the mistake was left uncorrected, the state would be without an adequate remedy on appeal. Given the state's limited ability to appeal an evidentiary ruling, the Supreme Court accepted original jurisdiction in the matter to prevent the introduction of evidence when correction of the ruling by a later court decision would be ineffective. State ex rel. McGrath v. District Court, 2001 MT 305, 307 M 491, 38 P3d 820 (2001), following State ex rel. Mazurek v. District Court, 277 M 349, 922 P2d 474 (1996), and Park v. District Court, 1998 MT 164, 289 M 367, 961 P2d 1267 (1998).

Time Bar on Writ of Certiorari to Review Contempt Proceedings: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court was asked to establish a timeframe within which a petition for review of a contempt order must be filed. The issue was whether the time limitation should come from Title 25, which includes the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure and the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure, or from Title 27, which prescribes the various statutes of limitation for the commencement of actions. The court noted that there is no appeal, as such, from an order of contempt in a civil proceeding and that the exclusive method of review of civil contempt orders (with certain exceptions) is through a writ of certiorari or writ of review. That review is generally limited to jurisdictional questions and whether evidence supports the contempt. Therefore, the issue of timeliness for filing a petition for a writ of certiorari or review is not a statute of limitations issue, and to mechanically characterize those writs for the review of contempt proceedings as original proceedings governed by the 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231 would be to deny the basic nature of appellate review. Further, petitions for writs of certiorari to review contempt proceedings are fundamentally different from other original proceedings commenced in the Supreme Court and from petitions for writs of supervisory control, which do not so much involve appellate review of and a decision on the underlying proceedings as they involve the court dealing with discreet questions of law during the pendency of the underlying proceedings. Because the timeframe in which to file petitions for writs of certiorari to review contempt proceedings is a procedural issue analogous to the procedure for filing a notice of appeal, the Supreme Court held that former Rule 72, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), 27-25-103, and former Rule 17, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), required that the timeframe for those petitions be determined by the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure. Specifically, pursuant to former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), a petition for a writ of certiorari to review contempt proceedings must be filed with the Clerk of the District Court within 30 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding, unless the state is a party, in which case the petition must be filed within 60 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding. This may not be construed to limit the Supreme Court's power to grant writs of supervisory control or to consider applications for other types of original proceedings. The Supreme Court chose not to establish a precedent that allows contempt proceedings to be delayed until the underlying cause is resolved. Jones v. District Court, 2001 MT 276, 307 M 305, 37 P3d 682 (2001), overruling Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937), to the extent that Shaffroth holds that the general 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231 applies to all writs of review authorized in 27-25-102.

Criteria Met for Supreme Court Jurisdiction of Death Row Petition for Injunctive Relief: Pursuant to the version of 46-19-103 that was in effect at the time that Langford was sentenced for execution, he affirmatively elected that death be imposed by hanging rather than lethal injection. Langford appealed to the District Court for a declaration that execution by hanging was cruel and unusual punishment that violated the eighth amendment to the U.S. Constitution. The District Court denied the motion, holding that Langford's choice of hanging rendered the cruel and unusual punishment argument moot. Langford appealed to the appropriate federal courts for a writ of habeas corpus, applying the same argument. During the pendency of Langford's federal habeas corpus proceedings, the Montana Legislature met and amended 46-19-103 by removing the hanging option, rendering the federal proceedings moot and nonjusticiable. Langford then filed an original proceeding with the Montana Supreme Court, asserting that the state impermissibly truncated his ability to fully appeal his death sentence by removing hanging as a means of execution and that the state should be permanently enjoined from executing him under the current version of 49-19-103. After examining the applicable statutory criteria, the Supreme Court accepted jurisdiction of the petition for writ of injunction because: (1) the state was clearly a party to the action; (2) the public had an interest in establishing and maintaining the validity of state actions in a proceeding that attempted to curtail the state's ability to enact, amend, and enforce state legislation; and (3) Langford's imminent execution constituted sufficient emergency circumstances to render due consideration in the trial court and appeal to the Supreme Court an inadequate remedy. Langford v. St., 287 M 107, 951 P2d 1357, 54 St. Rep. 1522 (1997).

Factors Necessary for Acceptance of Original Jurisdiction:

Although it is correct that prior to the decision in State ex rel. Racicot v. District Court, 244 M 521, 798 P2d 1004 (1990), the Supreme Court had exercised supervisory control under all three circumstances set forth in the Racicot test, subsequent decisions interpreted Racicot to mean that all three circumstances must be present before supervisory control will be accepted. However, the Supreme Court recognizes that there will be circumstances that are appropriate for the exercise of supervisory control that do not satisfy the three-part test. To the extent that Racicot suggests that all three elements must be established and to the extent that subsequent decisions have applied the test in that fashion, they are reversed. Plumb v. District Court, 279 M 363, 927 P2d 1011, 53 St. Rep. 1187 (1996).

Once standing to bring an action is established, the question shifts to whether the action meets the necessary factors for the Supreme Court to accept original jurisdiction. Assumption of original jurisdiction is proper when: (1) constitutional issues of major statewide importance are involved; (2) the case involves purely legal questions of statutory and constitutional construction; and (3) urgency and emergency factors exist, making the normal appeal process inadequate. Butte-Silver Bow Local Gov't v. St., 235 M 398, 768 P2d 327, 46 St. Rep. 87 (1989), followed in State ex rel. Racicot v. District Court, 244 M 521, 798 P2d 1004, 47 St. Rep. 1785 (1990), and Montanans for the Coal Trust v. St., 2000 MT 13, 298 M 69, 996 P2d 856, 57 St. Rep. 73 (2000).

See also State ex rel. Greely v. Water Court, 214 M 143, 691 P2d 833 (1984), State ex rel. Nelson v. District Court, 262 M 70, 863 P2d 1027, 50 St. Rep. 1447 (1993), and Craig v. District Court, 262 M 201, 864 P2d 791, 50 St. Rep. 1515 (1993).

No Legal Duty to Provide Party Copies of Transcripts in Pending Matter: Walker petitioned the Supreme Court for a writ of mandamus ordering the District Court to provide him with copies of the transcripts, minutes, and documents in his pending criminal case. The Supreme Court refused to issue the order on the basis that there was no clear legal duty requiring the District Court to provide the requested information and that Walker could appeal any final decision by the District Court. Walker v. Colberg, 250 M 382, 822 P2d 82, 48 St. Rep. 971 (1991).

Supreme Court — Refusal to Determine Factual Issues: In an original proceeding before the Supreme Court, petitioners protested the physical conditions under which they were held in a county jail. They alleged a tort cause of action and violation of their constitutional right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment. They sought relief under the habeas corpus and declaratory judgment statutes. It is not the role of the Supreme Court to function as the primary fact finder, and petitioners have demonstrated no emergency justifying departure from the usual proceedings in District Court to decide the merits of the issues raised by their allegations. Therefore, there is no basis on which the Supreme Court should accept original jurisdiction. Gates v. Missoula County Comm'rs, 235 M 261, 766 P2d 884, 45 St. Rep. 2370 (1988).

Writ Denied — No Abuse of Discretion: Relator failed to show that the District Court abused its discretion by denying her motion for visitation pending the outcome of the appeal; consequently, her petition for a writ directing the court to allow such visitation was denied. State ex rel. C.M.J. v. District Court, 179 M 32, 585 P2d 1312 (1978).

Petition Attacking Bar Unification: A petition to test the efficacy, constitutional legality, and beneficial application of the Supreme Court order and opinion of January 29, 1974, unifying the Montana Bar was dismissed for failure to state a claim on which relief could be granted. In re Petition of Morris, 175 M 456, 575 P2d 37 (1978).

Writ of Supervisory Control — Lower Court Order to Seek: The Writ of Supervisory Control was denied even though petitioner was ordered by the lower court to seek the Writ to determine jurisdiction in a child custody case. State ex rel. Jennings v. District Court, 178 M 187, 582 P2d 1260 (1978).

Original Jurisdiction Accepted: The Supreme Court accepted original jurisdiction pursuant to former Rule 17, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), because of the shortness of time before the next meeting of the Legislature. Huber v. Groff, 171 M 442, 558 P2d 1124 (1976).

Emergency Review — Constitutionality of Legislative Finance Committee: Since substantial questions of constitutionality existed with 5-12-102 through 5-12-402 (5-12-402 now repealed), except 5-12-304, establishing and empowering defendant Legislative Finance Committee and its office of Legislative Fiscal Analyst and because operation of these laws would have such significant impact on state government functions during delay before final resolution by Supreme Court, original jurisdiction of Supreme Court for declaratory judgment as to constitutionality was properly invoked. State ex rel. Judge v. Legislative Fin. Comm., 168 M 470, 543 P2d 1317 (1975).

Injunction Against State Agency — Protection of Court's Jurisdiction: Where Public Service Commission reopened its docket and issued further orders in connection with rate schedule change which was being challenged in courts at that time, Commission had no authority to take that action, and protective order was issued enjoining respondents from taking actions which interfere with court's appellate jurisdiction. Mont. Consumer Counsel v. P.S.C., 168 M 177, 541 P2d 769 (1975).

Emergency Nature: Since the effect of Ch. 417, L. 1971, concerning minimum wages, was broad and touched all of the state's citizens, the Supreme Court accepted an original action alleging the unconstitutionality of the act as an emergency matter. Billings v. Smith, 158 M 197, 490 P2d 221 (1971).

Denial of Injunction — No Emergency: Supreme Court declined jurisdiction in original proceeding seeking injunction restraining defendant school districts from collecting certain fees and levies and requiring students to purchase certain material because no emergency existed, class action could be established in District Court, and thorough examination into multiple problems presented could not have been achieved. State ex rel. Thompson v. Elementary School District, 156 M 79, 474 P2d 700 (1970).

Writ of Review When Appeal Available: Notwithstanding the fact that appeal was available as a remedy, the Supreme Court determined that a Writ of Review was available when children were made illegitimate and support was cut off by action which exceeded court's jurisdiction. Butler v. Brownlee, 152 M 453, 451 P2d 836 (1969).

Alternative Writ to Review Discovery Order: Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission), ordered by District Court to produce certain appraisals under discovery rules, was entitled to have order reviewed on allegations that order required production of irrelevant and privileged matter in excess of lower court's jurisdiction, that it was not an appealable order, and that Commission had no remedy at law, which allegations were sufficient to authorize issuance of alternative Writ. St. Highway Comm'n v. District Court, 149 M 384, 427 P2d 49 (1967).

WRIT OF SUPERVISORY CONTROL

Discovery of Corporate Communications Conducted During Former Director's Tenure — No Violation of Attorney-Client Privilege: Plaintiff corporation sought a writ of supervisory control on grounds that the District Court was proceeding under a mistake of law by controlling a discovery attempt by the former director of a corporation to discover communications between the corporation's current directors and corporate counsel that occurred while the former director was a director. Plaintiff contended that allowing discovery violated the attorney-client privilege. The Supreme Court concluded that although the corporation was the client, the directors were jointly responsible for the management of the corporation and that, consistent with this responsibility, the directors must be treated as joint clients with the corporation when legal advice is rendered to the corporation through its officers or directors. When the former director was a corporate officer, he was entitled to access attorney-client communications, and the fact that he was no longer a director was not sufficient cause to render those communications privileged against him. The confidentiality of the attorney-client privilege is not violated when a former director of a closely held corporation who brings claims against the corporation is allowed to discover communication between corporate counsel and other directors that occurred during the former director's tenure as a director. Thus, the Supreme Court declined to accept supervisory control. Inter-Fluve v. District Court, 2005 MT 103, 327 M 14, 112 P3d 258 (2005).

Supervisory Control Appropriate to Address Res Judicata Claim: Following a dispute over the sale of irrigation equipment, H-D Irrigating and Lane sued Kimble Properties and Kimble for false representation of the irrigation equipment and damages. Kimble Properties and Kimble counterclaimed for the balance due on the equipment, alleging that H-D Irrigating was a sham and the alter ego of Lane. The alter ego claim was never pursued. The Supreme Court eventually decided the case in H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95 (2000), and remanded for judgment in favor of Kimble. In an effort to collect, Kimble sought to compel Lane to testify regarding the assets of H-D Irrigating, but rather than appear, Lane filed bankruptcy and received a stay on further proceedings. Kimble then filed an action to collect from Lane personally, again raising the alter ego issue. Lane asserted that the issue had been already decided in the prior litigation and sought supervisory control on res judicata grounds. The Supreme Court held that the case was appropriate for supervisory control because if the res judicata claim was correct, Lane was entitled to summary judgment, but if denial of the summary judgment motion was in error, Lane would be required to defend against the same claim a second time and incur the attendant delay and expense, resulting in a gross injustice. The case was remanded for further proceedings on the alter ego claim. Lane v. District Court, 2003 MT 130, 316 M 55, 68 P3d 819 (2003), following Plumb v. District Court, 279 M 363, 927 P2d 1011 (1996).

Dual Insurance Claims — Supervisory Control Proper to Facilitate Convenience and Judicial Economy: Following a vehicle accident, a couple sought recovery for injuries and loss of consortium and also alleged that the damages exceeded the limits of defendants' coverage, entitling them to recover from their own policy. The District Court bifurcated the claims, and the couple sought relief from the order on grounds that they would be prejudiced by having to prosecute two separate trials. The Supreme Court concurred with the couple and, in the interests of the convenience of the parties and judicial economy, agreed to exercise supervisory control. State ex rel. Gadbaw v. District Court, 2003 MT 127, 316 M 25, 75 P3d 1238 (2003), following Malta Pub. School District A & 14 v. District Court, 283 M 46, 938 P2d 1238 (1997).

Temporary Custody Order Not Considered Final for Purposes of Appeal — Writ of Supervisory Control Appropriate Mechanism to Challenge Temporary Custody: The District Court ordered temporary legal custody for a child, and the child's mother appealed. The Supreme Court held that orders of temporary legal custody do not embrace a final determination of the rights of the parties contemplated in former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), that would subject the temporary order to direct appeal. Rather, temporary custody orders are considered interlocutory orders from which the Supreme Court will grant relief in extraordinary circumstances. This ensures the expeditious review of legal errors while still protecting children from the instability of protracted, piecemeal litigation. However, qualifying temporary custody orders as interlocutory does not leave a parent who is aggrieved by an erroneous order without a remedy. The parent may invoke the extraordinary remedy of a writ of supervisory control, which is the appropriate mechanism to challenge an order of temporary custody. In re D.A., 2003 MT 109, 315 M 340, 68 P3d 735 (2003). See also G.B. v. M.M.B., 670 A2d 714 (Pa. Sup. Ct. 1996).

Supervisory Control Proper to Determine Whether Admission of Evidence of Subsequent Accidents With Nonparties Admissible to Disprove Liability for Damages: Following Truman's injury in an automobile accident, she was involved in a second automobile accident and in an accident involving an ultralight aircraft. The District Court held that evidence of Truman's injuries in the second automobile accident and the aircraft accident would be admissible in a trial related to the first automobile accident to disprove causation. Truman requested that the Supreme Court exercise supervisory control because the District Court made a mistake of law that would place Truman at a significant disadvantage in litigating the case. If the District Court's conclusion, that evidence of subsequent accidents with nonparties was admissible, proved incorrect, that conclusion would impact all aspects of the trial, render the trial results unreliable, and substantially increase the cost to Truman in both time and finances. Therefore, the Supreme Court acceded to the request and exercised supervisory control to determine whether the District Court was proceeding based upon a mistake of law. Truman v. District Court, 2003 MT 91, 315 M 165, 68 P3d 654 (2003), following Plumb v. District Court, 279 M 363, 927 P2d 1011 (1996).

Supervisory Control Proper to Determine Scope of Court-Ordered Medical Examination: Pursuant to former Rule 35, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the District Court ordered plaintiff to undergo an extensive independent medical examination by an expert 750 miles away. The examination would have subjected plaintiff to burdensome, painful, invasive, elective, and potentially harmful procedures. Plaintiff requested that the Supreme Court assume supervisory control, asserting that the District Court was proceeding on a mistake of law that posed a risk of gross injustice to plaintiff. The Supreme Court agreed. The extent to which Rule 35 permits an individual to be subjected to extensive and potentially harmful procedures is an issue of statewide importance, and an appeal from a mistake of law compelled by the rule would be an inadequate remedy. Therefore, the Supreme Court determined that supervisory control was appropriate to determine whether the District Court was proceeding under a mistake of law in ordering the examination. Simms v. District Court, 2003 MT 89, 315 M 135, 68 P3d 678 (2003). See also Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2001 MT 269, 307 M 269, 38 P3d 148 (2001).

Supervisory Control of Issue Related to Wrongful Death and Survival Action and Evidence of Economic Consumption: Plaintiff sought supervisory control of an action related to evidence of economic consumption as it pertained to a survival action and wrongful death. The Supreme Court found that allowing the District Court to permit the jury to consider evidence of economic consumption in this case would be a mistake of law constituting a deviation from well-established jurisprudence that would alter the cost of and preparation for trial, affect settlement negotiations, and call into question the value of any potential verdict, resulting in additional time and expense for appellate resolution and subsequent litigation. Any remedy available to plaintiff on direct appeal would thus prove inadequate, resulting in a gross injustice. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that this was an appropriate case in which to exercise supervisory control. Payne v. District Court, 2002 MT 313, 313 M 118, 60 P3d 469 (2002).

Supervisory Control Granted to Address Stay of Declaratory Judgment Until Settlement Reached or Judgment Entered: Hill was injured in a vehicle accident caused by the negligence of Bennett, an insured of Safeco Insurance Company of Illinois (Safeco). Although Safeco apparently paid some of Hill's initial medical bills, Safeco eventually disputed the causal relationship between the accident and the injuries, refusing to pay any further medical bills after a specific date. Hill sued Bennett for negligence and Safeco for nonpayment of medical expenses, seeking a declaratory judgment that he was entitled to advance payment of medical costs prior to settlement or final judgment and claiming that a declaratory judgment was proper under the Unfair Trade Practices Act and Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997). The District Court granted the declaratory judgment, and Safeco sought a writ of supervisory control because a direct appeal would be an inadequate remedy. The Supreme Court agreed and granted the writ. Safeco's application presented an appropriate legal issue for supervisory control because if the ordered payment of medical expenses was a mistake of law or incorrect, the delay in awaiting the outcome of the corollary litigation could create an unfair prejudice for Safeco, while any unnecessary delay in the payment of the medical costs would certainly prejudice Hill. Ultimately, the Supreme Court affirmed on grounds that the declaratory judgment did not constitute a money judgment for damages in the ordinary sense, but merely removed all uncertainty and controversy over the issue of when the inevitable policy proceeds were due. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834, 57 St. Rep. 604 (2000).

Youth Considered in Custody — Supervisory Control Appropriate When Lower Court Proceeding Under Mistake of Law: Fourteen-year-old Evans was taken by his mother to the Flathead County Sheriff's office, upon request of the Deputy Sheriff, because he had been observed talking to a child on the day of her disappearance. Evans and his mother were separated upon arrival at the office, and Evans was taken to a 9-by-9-foot windowless interrogation room with a shut door where he was questioned for 2½ hours by two officers wearing badges and weapons. Evans waived his Miranda rights outside the presence and without the consent of his mother and without an opportunity to discuss his rights or the waiver with counsel. The officers did not tell Evans that he could leave the interrogation room or consult with his mother, and during the course of the interview, Evans' mother was denied contact with Evans. Although initially adamantly denying involvement, the officers repeatedly suggested that Evans had "more to tell them" and misled him into believing that the police had fingerprints from the girl's body that could be matched to his. Toward the end of the interrogation, Evans confessed that he drowned the child and was charged with her death, arrested, handcuffed, and escorted to juvenile detention without an opportunity to speak to his mother. Evans filed a motion to suppress the confession on grounds that his waiver of rights while in custody was invalid under 41-5-331. The District Court denied the motion, concluding that Evans was not in custody during the interview and that the confession was voluntary. Accepting supervisory control because the District Court was proceeding under a mistake of law, the Supreme Court, finding it difficult to imagine a more "custodial" setting, applied the factors in St. v. Staat, 251 M 1, 822 P2d 643, 48 St. Rep. 1041 (1991), and concluded that Evans was in custody during the interview, that his waiver of rights without the consent of a parent or advice of counsel was invalid under 41-5-331, and that the confession was not voluntary under the totality of the circumstances. Although the record on appeal was not sufficient to determine whether the state had other evidence sufficient to charge Evans, the case was nevertheless remanded for consideration of the evidence without the confession. Evans v. District Court, 2000 MT 38, 298 M 279, 995 P2d 455, 57 St. Rep. 175 (2000), followed, with regard to applicability of the totality of circumstances test for determining voluntariness of a juvenile's waiver and consent, in In re C.T.P., 2004 MT 63, 320 M 279, 87 P3d 399 (2004). See also State ex rel. D.M.B. v. District Court, 2004 MT 335, 324 M 190, 103 P3d 514 (2004).

Examination of Defendant by State Psychiatrist — Supervisory Control Granted to Prevent Denial of Defendant's Fifth Amendment Right Against Self-Incrimination: Park, who was charged with forgery and deliberate homicide, filed notice of his intent to use the affirmative defense that extreme mental and emotional stress caused him to commit the offenses and gave notice of his intent to use expert psychological testimony in the course of his defense. The state requested an examination of Park by its own psychological expert, but Park objected to the oral part of the requested examination on the grounds that, first, his defense was not reliance upon a mental disease or defect and the state therefore had no right to a psychological examination, and, second, he did not want to discuss his offenses with the psychological expert for fear of waiving his constitutional right against self-incrimination. The Supreme Court, citing Mapes v. District Court, 250 M 524, 822 P2d 91 (1991), held that the case was appropriate for supervisory control because Park was faced with the loss of a constitutional right as part of the psychological interview and appeal could not prevent the loss of that right. Park v. District Court, 1998 MT 164, 289 M 367, 961 P2d 1267, 55 St. Rep. 657 (1998).

Court Reporter Salary Dispute — Writ of Supervisory Control Appropriate: The Board of Lewis and Clark County Commissioners set the salary for court reporters, based on its interpretation of the 1997 amendment to 3-5-602. The salary did not include fringe benefits because the statute states that a court reporter is to receive the base salary "and no other compensation except as provided in 3-4-604", which allows a court reporter to collect only certain fees for providing transcripts. The District Court Judges ordered the Board to give the court reporters the maximum raise allowed and to continue their benefits at the prior level. The Board appealed the order directly to the Supreme Court. The judges contended that the appeal was improper because the Board filed no appropriate underlying civil action, whether a petition for a writ of mandamus, a petition for a writ of prohibition, or another action, and sought to have the appeal dismissed. The Board characterized the judges' order as a final appealable order rather than an administrative action. The Supreme Court found some merit to both arguments. Applying the rationale in Awareness Group v. School District, 243 M 469, 795 P2d 447 (1990), the court found that neither a writ of mandamus nor a writ of prohibition was appropriate and that they would not provide meaningful relief because it would be futile to seek to prohibit or to compel an act already accomplished. While granting the judges' motion to dismiss without prejudice to the underlying merits of the case, the Supreme Court held that if the Board decided to do so, it could file a petition for a writ of supervisory control with the Supreme Court, pursuant to former Rule 17, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and could raise whatever legal questions that it determined were at issue. If the Supreme Court determined it necessary, it could then remand for an evidentiary hearing in a neutral District Court in the same manner as in Gallatin County v. District Court, 281 M 33, 930 P2d 680 (1997). In re District Court Budget Order, 1998 MT 4, 287 M 137, 952 P2d 427, 55 St. Rep. 9 (1998).

Writ Granted — District Court's Order Error: The petitioner requested that the Supreme Court accept supervisory control over his petition for dissolution on the basis that the District Court was ordering him to have his trust land appraised in order to help the District Court determine the property settlement. The Supreme Court stated that based on prior decisions, it was clear that a state court may not distribute Indian trust land and that it therefore followed that a state court may not order an appraisal of the land. In order to avoid substantial injustice, the Supreme Court would accept supervisory control and reverse the District Court's order that the petitioner have the land appraised. Smith v. McKeon, 284 M 528, 946 P2d 117, 54 St. Rep. 990 (1997).

Bifurcation of Breach of Insurance Contract and Bad Faith Claims — Use of Supervisory Control to Require That Both Claims Be Tried to Same Jury: After the District Court bifurcated the Malta school district's insurance contract and bad faith claims, the school district requested by motion that both claims be tried to the same jury, one claim immediately following the other. The District Court denied the motion, and the school district sought a writ of supervisory control. The Supreme Court granted the writ and directed the District Court to try the contract claim and the bad faith claim to the same jury. Because 33-18-242 contains no standards governing whether a bifurcated case should be tried to the same jury, the Supreme Court looked to cases decided under former Rule 42(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), for guidance and, after finding the state and federal versions of the same rule sufficiently similar, relied upon Martin v. Bell Helicopter Co., 85 FRD 654 (1980). The Supreme Court held that a two-step process should be used; it should first be determined whether bifurcation is appropriate and then whether the interests of judicial economy, fairness to the parties, clarity of the issues, and convenience require trial of the issues to the same or a different jury. In determining whether to grant the writ of supervisory control, the Supreme Court weighed the same or similar considerations also weighed by the Supreme Court pursuant to Martin v. Bell Helicopter Co. to determine whether separate juries should be used. The Supreme Court reviewed the circumstances of the case and found that the writ of supervisory control should be granted and that the District Court abused its discretion in refusing to try the two claims to the same jury. Malta Pub. School District A & 14 v. District Court, 283 M 46, 938 P2d 1335, 54 St. Rep. 486 (1997), followed in State ex rel. Gadbaw v. District Court, 2003 MT 127, 316 M 25, 75 P3d 1238 (2003).

Court Order for Suitable Jury Room — Supervisory Control Properly Used — Inherent Powers Not Implicated — Findings Not Clearly Erroneous: Judge Moran issued an order pursuant to 3-5-404 (now repealed) for the Gallatin County Sheriff to provide a specific space in the Gallatin County courthouse for use as a jury room and to have the room remodeled and for the expenses to be paid from the Gallatin County general fund. Gallatin County requested the Supreme Court to take supervisory control to prevent protracted litigation, a request with which Judge Moran joined. However, Judge Moran asked that a District Court Judge be appointed to make findings and conclusions. The Supreme Court accepted jurisdiction in order to prevent protracted litigation of the issues and appointed a neutral District Court Judge, Judge Wilson, to hold a hearing and make findings and conclusions. The Supreme Court held that Judge Moran had the authority under 3-5-404 (now repealed) to issue an order to the Sheriff to provide a suitable jury room; that the space provided by the Sheriff pursuant to the order was "suitable", within the dictionary definition of that word; that because the Legislature provided the authority under which Judge Moran acted, the implied powers of the District Court and the separation of powers doctrine were not implicated by Judge Moran's action; and that the findings of fact concerning the suitability of the room provided by the Sheriff and the suitability of another alternative jury room designated by the County Commissioners were not clearly erroneous. Gallatin County v. District Court, 281 M 33, 930 P2d 680, 54 St. Rep. 46 (1997).

Constitutionality of Statute Regarding Multiple Defendants Proper Issue for Supervisory Control: Although all three circumstances for the exercise of supervisory control in State ex rel. Racicot v. District Court, 244 M 521, 798 P2d 1004 (1990), were not present, the Supreme Court nevertheless concluded that the constitutionality of 27-1-703(6) was an appropriate issue to decide by supervisory control after finding that any remedy available to plaintiffs by appeal was inadequate and that denial of a speedy remedy by supervisory control would be a denial of justice. (See 1997 amendment to former Rule 17, M.R.App.P., now superseded.) Plumb v. District Court, 279 M 363, 927 P2d 1011, 53 St. Rep. 1187 (1996), following State ex rel. Deere & Co. v. District Court, 224 M 384, 730 P2d 396 (1986), and followed in Preston v. District Court, 282 M 200, 936 P2d 814, 54 St. Rep. 312 (1997), and Park v. District Court, 1998 MT 164, 289 M 367, 961 P2d 1267, 55 St. Rep. 657 (1998).

District Court Without Authority to Issue Writ of Supervisory Control to City Court: Maloney was convicted in City Court of speeding and driving under the influence of alcohol. Maloney appealed his conviction de novo for a trial in District Court and, at the same time, filed a petition for a writ of review, mandamus, and supervisory control, asking the District Court to direct the City Court to dismiss the charges. The District Court denied the petition. The Supreme Court held that the District Court had no authority to issue a writ of supervisory control to a City Court. Maloney v. Gordon, 254 M 314, 837 P2d 1341, 49 St. Rep. 834 (1992).

Defendant's Discovery Needs Balanced by Plaintiff's Right to Privacy: The defendant in a personal injury case sought access to the files of Mapes's psychologist. Mapes resisted the motion on the basis that it violated his right to privacy. The Supreme Court held that granting the supervisory writ was necessary because the defendant's discovery rights and the plaintiff's statutory privacy rights were in conflict. The court further held that the defendant could seek information pertaining only to prior physical or mental conditions that might relate to the damages being claimed in the present action. State ex rel. Mapes v. District Court, 250 M 524, 822 P2d 91, 48 St. Rep. 954 (1991), followed in Park v. District Court, 1998 MT 164, 289 M 367, 961 P2d 1267, 55 St. Rep. 657 (1998), and Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2001 MT 269, 307 M 269, 38 P3d 148 (2001).

Writ Proper to Avoid Needless and Expensive Litigation: The lower court erred in granting the plaintiff's summary judgment motion on the question of liability. The Supreme Court ruled that its granting of a writ of supervisory control requested by the defendant was proper in order to avoid a trial only on the question of damages. Such a trial would constitute needless and expensive litigation because the question of liability had been improperly excluded by the lower court. State ex rel. First Bank System v. District Court, 240 M 77, 782 P2d 1260, 46 St. Rep. 1956 (1989), followed in St. v. District Court, 265 M 445, 877 P2d 1008, 51 St. Rep. 599 (1994).

Writ Proper to Clarify Law and Provide Judicial Economy: In a negligence action against a school district and its employees, the District Court granted summary judgment dismissing the school district defendant pursuant to the immunity provisions of 2-9-111 and allowed plaintiffs to amend their complaint to name particular school district employees, namely school janitors, as defendants. This is a proper case for a writ of supervisory control to clarify the law and promote judicial economy. The lack of any issue of material fact renders the case appropriate for disposition upon summary judgment. The problem confronting the District Court is whether 2-9-111 provides immunity to school district employees, thereby entitling them to summary judgment. State ex rel. Eccleston v. District Court, 240 M 44, 783 P2d 363, 46 St. Rep. 1929 (1989).

Appropriateness of Writ of Supervisory Control Regarding Motion to Compel Discovery — Discovery of Potentially Privileged Material: Although a discovery order is interlocutory and normally not appealable, the Supreme Court accepted supervisory control in a case involving the discovery of potentially privileged material when it was apparent that the discovery order would place the defendant at a significant disadvantage in litigating the merits of the case. State ex rel. Burlington N. RR Co. v. District Court, 239 M 207, 779 P2d 885, 46 St. Rep. 1625 (1989), followed in Preston v. District Court, 282 M 200, 936 P2d 814, 54 St. Rep. 312 (1997). See also Park v. District Court, 1998 MT 164, 289 M 367, 961 P2d 1267, 55 St. Rep. 657 (1998).

Exercise of Supervisory Control Improper — No Ruling by Trial Court on Subject: The defendants' motion in limine granted by the trial court excludes references to judicial statements made in the underlying action in the present voir dire of prospective jurors, opening statements, and examination of witnesses, until the trial court has ruled the statements are admissible. The plaintiff thus is not prevented from applying to the trial court for a pretrial determination of the admissibility of such statements. It is improper for the Supreme Court to exercise supervisory control in advance of any rulings by the trial court on this subject. Also, such rulings may be reviewed on appeal. State ex rel. Fitzgerald v. District Court, 217 M 106, 703 P2d 148, 42 St. Rep. 1061 (1985).

Fundamental Rights of Petitioner in Jeopardy — Appeal — May Be Inadequate Remedy: Plaintiff in an action against an insurance company for payment of a judgment under an insurance policy was granted a Writ of Supervisory Control. The Supreme Court determined that there were procedural entanglements caused by rulings made in the trial court that might prolong the litigation and potentially make an appeal an inadequate remedy. Fundamental rights of the petitioner are in sufficient jeopardy as to require supervisory control. State ex rel. Fitzgerald v. District Court, 217 M 106, 703 P2d 148, 42 St. Rep. 1061 (1985), followed in State ex rel. Boyne USA, Inc. v. District Court, 228 M 314, 742 P2d 464, 44 St. Rep. 1550 (1987). See also State ex rel. Eccleston v. District Court, 240 M 44, 783 P2d 363, 46 St. Rep. 1929 (1989), and State ex rel. USF&G. Co. v. District Court, 240 M 5, 783 P2d 911, 46 St. Rep. 1896 (1989).

Criminal Trial Pending — No Emergency Shown — Writ Denied: In 1980, defendant was convicted of the deliberate homicide of his wife. The conviction was reversed in 1982 (St. v. Forsyth, 197 M 248, 642 P2d 1035). Upon his retrial, the jury was deadlocked and a mistrial was declared. Upon the scheduling of the third trial, defendant moved to dismiss: first, for double jeopardy and lack of due process predicated upon a claim of jury tampering and prosecutorial misconduct in the second trial; and second, for lack of a speedy trial. Defendant also moved for a change of venue. The motions were denied by the District Court. Defendant then petitioned the Supreme Court for a Writ of Supervisory Control. The Supreme Court refused to issue the Writ, ruling that, with respect to all four issues, defendant had failed to demonstrate that any emergency exists which renders appeal an inadequate remedy. State ex rel. Forsyth v. District Court, 216 M 480, 701 P2d 1346, 42 St. Rep. 65 (1985).

Supervisory Control of Water Court Accepted — Federal Reserved Water Rights: Following the U.S. Supreme Court decision in Ariz. v. San Carlos Apache Tribe, 463 US 545, 77 L Ed 2d 837, 103 S Ct 3201 (1983), that to the extent state courts have taken jurisdiction over Indian water rights, such jurisdiction is proper, the state requested that the Montana Supreme Court exercise its powers of supervisory control over the state Water Court concerning the adjudication of federal reserved water rights. In assuming jurisdiction, the Supreme Court concluded that factors of urgency and emergency argued for acceptance of original jurisdiction. The request is not barred by the suspension provisions of 85-2-217, as the proceeding will not generally adjudicate an Indian reserved water right or any federal reserved water right. The issues before the court are limited to a determination of the effect of the so-called disclaimer clause of Art. I of the Montana Constitution on subject matter jurisdiction by the Water Court, and whether the Water Use Act is adequate to adjudicate Indian reserved water rights. State ex rel. Greely v. Water Court, 214 M 143, 691 P2d 833, 41 St. Rep. 2373 (1984).

Same Defendant — Similar Facts — Change of Venue Required: Paisley appealed to the District Court a conviction of a misdemeanor sexual assault. The case was to be tried de novo in the District Court. Earlier in St. v. Paisley, 204 M 191, 663 P2d 322, 40 St. Rep. 763 (1983), the Supreme Court had approved an order granting a change of venue in companion cases on felony charges. In the interests of consistency, the Supreme Court issued a Writ of Supervisory Control ordering the District Court to grant a change of venue. State ex rel. Paisley v. District Court, 673 P2d 815, 40 St. Rep. 1852 (1983) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports).

Appellate Review on Motion for Writ of Supervisory Control — Issues Not Raised Below: In suit for damages arising out of railroad accident, issue regarding the admission of evidence of other accidents was not presented to the District Court upon application of one party for a Writ of Supervisory Control and a motion of the other party for a stay of proceedings, and thus the issue would not be addressed by Supreme Court in deciding the application and motion. Henry v. District Court, 198 M 8, 645 P2d 1350, 39 St. Rep. 430 (1982).

Error Below — Finding of Federal Preemption of Issue: Petition for Writ of Supervisory Control, brought by plaintiff suing railroad in crossing accident case, was granted where District Court incorrectly decided that federal law preempted the field of warning devices on locomotives and that the jury could thus not deliberate on the question of whether the railroad had the duty to equip its locomotives with devices other than those required by federal law. Henry v. District Court, 198 M 8, 645 P2d 1350, 39 St. Rep. 430 (1982).

Interlocutory Review of Interrogatories Rulings — Exhaustion of Remedies Required: Applicant for a Writ of Supervisory Control seeking reversal of lower court's order denying applicant's objections to interrogatories failed to exhaust its remedies in lower court where it did not apply there for a protective order under former Rule 17, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), or for an order under former Rule 37(a)(4), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), assessing costs and attorney fees against its opponent should the lower court order be reversed on appeal. State ex rel. Guarantee Ins. Co. v. District Court, 194 M 64, 634 P2d 648, 38 St. Rep. 1682 (1981).

Supervisory Writ Granted Where Right of Access to Courts Impaired: A Writ of Supervisory Control is an appropriate form for judicial review where, as here, no direct appeal was available from the District Court's order requiring petitioners to pay respondent's attorney's fees as a condition to allowing petitioners to revise their second amended complaint and where, as here, extraordinary and compelling circumstances are presented. If the Supreme Court declined to review the claim, petitioners could be precluded from proceeding on all counts they consider necessary for appropriate relief, resulting in a possible improper denial of petitioners' right of access to the courts. St. v. District Court, 193 M 413, 632 P2d 318, 38 St. Rep. 1204 (1981).

District Court Without Authority to Order "Interviews" of Witnesses — Supervisory Control: In a personal injury case, the defendant obtained a court order stating that the plaintiff had waived her physician-patient privilege and that the plaintiff's doctors were to be treated as any other witnesses in the case. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed with the order on its face but held that the District Court did not have the power under the rules of discovery to order private interviews between counsel for one party and possibly adverse witnesses, expert or not. The Supreme Court noted that other rules of discovery serve to supplement former Rule 26(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The District Court must relate discovery it allows and enforces to one of the methods provided for in that rule. A Writ of Supervisory Control was issued in this case. Jaap v. District Court, 191 M 319, 623 P2d 1389, 38 St. Rep. 280 (1981).

Order Vacating Default Judgment Nonappealable — Supervisory Control Inappropriate: Where, after obtaining a default judgment in a breach of contract action against the defendant, the plaintiff sought a review, both by appeal and Writ of Supervisory Control, of the court's order setting aside the default judgment, the Supreme Court held that the order was interlocutory and nonappealable. The Supreme Court also held that a Writ of Supervisory Control was inappropriate to review the court's order, for to issue the Writ would be to allow the appellant to do indirectly what could not be done directly. Kinion v. Design Sys., 190 M 226, 620 P2d 852, 37 St. Rep. 2036 (1980), overruled in part in Roberts v. Empire Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 276 M 225, 915 P2d 872, 53 St. Rep. 359 (1996).

Rights of Legal Heir Adequately Represented by Special Administrator — Intervention Denied: After a special administrator was appointed to continue prosecution of an action begun before the testatrix's death, the heir to the estate sought to intervene in the case but was denied. Although holding that ruling nonappealable, the Supreme Court did grant the heir's Writ of Supervisory Control. Nonetheless, it found the heir was not a proper intervenor in the suit because her interest was represented adequately by the special administrator, noting that the heir had no right to pursue the action herself unless the personal representative failed to act on the claim, which was not the case here. Further, an administrator could sue in his own name without joining with him the party for whose benefit the action is brought. State ex rel. Palmer v. District Court, 190 M 185, 619 P2d 1201, 37 St. Rep. 1876 (1980).

No Supervisory Control Power in District Court: Relator was arrested for driving while intoxicated. He refused to take a blood alcohol test and subsequently applied to the District Court for a Writ of Supervisory Control on the issue of the admissibility of evidence of the refusal, arguing that the nonlawyer Justice of the Peace was ill-equipped to handle the constitutional aspects of his case. Relator appealed from the District Court's ruling against him after hearing the Writ on the merits. The Supreme Court found no power in the District Courts to exercise supervisory control and stated that a Writ of Supervisory Control was not to be used as a means to circumvent the appeal process. Only in the most extenuating circumstances will a Writ be granted. State ex rel. Ward v. Schmall, 190 M 1, 617 P2d 140, 37 St. Rep. 1720 (1980). See also Joslyn v. City Court, 198 M 223, 645 P2d 428, 39 St. Rep. 884 (1982).

Supervisory Control — Denial of Dismissal in Complex Workers' Compensation-Related Action: When an employee alleged a "wanton" negligent tort against his employer and third parties as an additional remedy to workers' compensation and the employer, after being denied a motion to dismiss by the District Court, applied for supervisory control alleging that the case involved complex liability claims against multiple defendants that would require extended and complicated discovery, the situation existed where there was no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy at law and there was no right to appeal the order of the District Court. Therefore, it was a proper circumstance for the Supreme Court to assume jurisdiction and to order supervisory control to dismiss the employee's complaint against the employer because the action, not being an intentional tort, belonged exclusively within the purview of the Workers' Compensation Act. Great W. Sugar Co. v. District Court, 188 M 1, 610 P2d 717 (1980).

Writ of Supervisory Control Denied — Remedy by Appeal Adequate: Review by Writ of Supervisory Control of the decision of a District Court that resulted in an estimated tax loss of over $2 million and that also will result in appeals to the District Courts of 25 counties was denied since the decision of the District Court had been appealed to the Supreme Court and was ready to be set for the next court calendar. The remedy by appeal was adequate precluding review by supervisory control. Dept. of Revenue v. St. Tax Appeal Bd., 185 M 172, 605 P2d 170 (1980).

Writ of Supervisory Control to Terminate Needless Litigation: Where a Writ of Supervisory Control will not terminate needless litigation, the Supreme Court will not issue the Writ. Beamer v. Rice, 182 M 1, 594 P2d 321 (1979).

Immediate Appeal From Partial Judgment: This is a proper case for a Writ of Supervisory Control because relator wife has no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law by appeal. Neither 40-4-108 nor former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), provide for immediate appeal from a partial judgment. Instead, the right of immediate appeal from a judgment on part but not all of the claims for relief in a single action is governed by former Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). State ex rel. Marlenee v. District Court, 181 M 59, 592 P2d 153 (1979).

Prosecutorial Immunity — Writ of Supervisory Control Proper: Invocation of original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court was a proper remedy for the state, Department of Justice, and Attorney General to seek in order to establish that a third party's civil damage suit against them charging malicious prosecution was barred under the doctrine of prosecutorial immunity. State ex rel. Dept. of Justice v. District Court, 172 M 88, 560 P2d 1328 (1976).

Restitution of Funds — Previous Judgment Vacated on Appeal: The Supreme Court denied the defendant's request for a Writ of Supervisory Control requiring the District Court to order an accounting and restitution of funds, since execution was based upon a previous judgment reversed only as to damages and because the defendant failed to post a supersedeas bond. State ex rel. Burlington N., Inc. v. District Court, 169 M 480, 548 P2d 1390 (1976).

Request to Convene Grand Jury Denied — Review: Although there is no statutory means provided for appealing from the denial of a request to convene a grand jury, a Writ of Supervisory Control may issue so that the decision by the lower court may be reviewed by the Montana Supreme Court. State ex rel. Woodahl v. District Court 166 M 31, 530 P2d 780 (1975).

Needless Litigation Prevented: Writ of Supervisory Control was proper where District Court orders requiring Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) to quiet title against all possible lienholders of land subject to condemnation and to use valuation date more than 3 years beyond the alleged proper date were not appealable until after final judgment, and this would result in extended and needless litigation if District Court was wrong. St. Highway Comm'n v. District Court, 160 M 35, 499 P2d 1228 (1972), followed in Cont. Oil Co. v. Elks Nat'l Foundation, 235 M 438, 767 P2d 1324, 46 St. Rep. 121 (1989).

Class Action — Writ of Supervisory Control Unjustified: Writ of Supervisory Control granting relief from District Court order permitting maintenance of class action was not justified since the order was subject to alteration or amendment as the matter progresses and since the question can be considered on appeal from final judgment. State ex rel. Anaconda Aluminum Co. v. District Court, 158 M 228, 490 P2d 351 (1971).

Writ of Supervisory Control — Dismissal of Removal Petition: Writ of Supervisory Control to compel dismissal of removal petition that could not be granted even if the facts alleged were proved was a necessary and proper supervision of District Court. State ex rel. Arnot v. District Court, 155 M 344, 472 P2d 302 (1970).

Appeal Inadequate — Writ of Supervisory Control Available: Although denial of Writ of Assistance, placing purchaser at Sheriff's sale under mortgage foreclosure into possession of lands involved, by District Court was appealable under rule either as "an order directing . . . surrender of property" or as "any special order made after final judgment", Writ of Supervisory Control to compel the District Court to issue Writ of Assistance was available as remedy since remedy by appeal was neither speedy nor adequate. State ex rel. Foss v. District Court, 152 M 73, 446 P2d 707 (1968).

Sustaining of Demurrer — Right to Supervisory Writ: Notwithstanding that former statute providing for appeals gave party against whom demurrer (abolished by former Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., now superseded, and 25-31-503, now repealed) was sustained plain and speedy remedy by appeal, court would not dismiss application for Supervisory Writ where judgment sustaining demurrer also stayed proceedings and expressly accorded losing party right to apply for Supervisory Writ. State ex rel. Cave Constr. Co. v. District Court, 150 M 18, 430 P2d 624 (1967).

Denial of Motion to Dismiss — Writ Proper to Prevent Needless Litigation: Where the District Court improperly denied the defendant's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim in a contract action against the defendant, a Writ of Supervisory Control will be issued directing that the order denying the defendant's motion be vacated. The order denying the defendant's motion is not appealable under former Rule 1, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and the Writ is therefore proper to prevent needless litigation when no claim has in fact been stated. Buttrey Foods, Inc. v. District Court, 148 M 350, 420 P2d 845 (1966).

Motion to Dismiss Improperly Denied — Writ of Supervisory Control Proper: Writ of Supervisory Control was proper where lessor's motion to dismiss sublessees' action for breach of lease agreement, to which sublessees were not parties, was denied by the District Court, the order denying the motion to dismiss not being appealable under former Rule 17, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). State ex rel. Buttrey Foods, Inc. v. District Court, 148 M 350, 420 P2d 845 (1966).

Writ of Supervisory Control Denied: When appeal is available from a summary judgment, the Supreme Court will not issue a Writ of Supervisory Control without extremely extenuating circumstances. Circumstances here were insufficient. State ex rel. Kober v. District Court, 147 M 116, 410 P2d 945 (1966).

DECISIONS UNDER CURRENT RULES

Payment of Policy Limits to Injured Party Without Release for Insured — Insurer Not in Breach of Duty to Insured: On a question certified from the federal District Court, the Supreme Court held that in the wake of a motor vehicle accident, when the liability for the accident is reasonably clear and it is reasonably clear that the total damages caused by the insured party exceed the insurance policy limits, the insurer is not in breach of a duty to the insured by paying the injured party the policy limits without obtaining a release for its insured. High Country Paving, Inc. v. United Fire & Cas. Co., 2019 MT 297, 398 Mont. 191, 454 P.3d 1210.

Certified Question — No Stacking of Third-Party Liability Coverage Related to Airplane Crash — Liability Coverage Not Personal and Portable: The insurer of a plane that crashed and killed both the insured and a passenger claimed that it was required to pay one policy limit to the passenger's estate even though the insured held policies for two other planes as well. The federal District Court certified the question to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court held that the policy was not subject to stacking because the plain unambiguous language of the contract limited the coverage to the aircraft involved. U.S. Specialty Ins. Co. v. Estate of Ward, 2019 MT 72, 395 Mont. 199, 444 P.3d 381.

Certified Question — Application of Revocation Upon Divorce Statute: In response to a certified question from the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, the Supreme Court held that 72-2-814 operates at the time of the insured's death and applies to any divorce that took place during the insured's lifetime. Although the parties divorced before the statute took effect and the beneficiary designation was never changed, the former spouse's property interest was equivalent to that of a devisee under a will, i.e., ambulatory and nonexistent until death. DECISIONS UNDER SUPERSEDED RULES

Montana Debtor May Claim Exemption for One Gun in Addition to Statutory Exemptions: On a certified question from the U.S. Bankruptcy Court, the Supreme Court held that the plain language of 25-13-613(1)(b) allows a Montana debtor to claim an exemption for one gun in addition to the exemption allowed and claimed for firearms, within monetary limits, allowed under 25-13-609(1). In re Maynard, 2006 MT 162, 332 M 485, 139 P3d 803 (2006), distinguishing Dept. of Revenue v. Puget Sound Power & Light Co., 179 M 255, 587 P2d 1282 (1978).

Interpretation of Wyoming Arbitration Law by Montana Supreme Court: Plaintiff brought a case in Montana against a limited liability company, of which plaintiff was a member, and against six other members. The District Court ordered the parties to arbitrate the disagreement pursuant to the company's operating agreement, which stipulated that Wyoming law would govern the arbitration. The arbitrator ordered a transfer of units to plaintiff and found that plaintiff was liable for $2.5 million in nominal and exemplary damages for defaulting on his obligations. Plaintiff moved to vacate the arbitration award, but the motion was denied, and defendants' motion to confirm the award was granted. On appeal, the Montana Supreme Court decided to interpret Wyoming arbitration laws, including several issues of first impression. The Supreme Court held that: (1) issues on appeal should be addressed under Wyoming law; (2) plaintiff's motion to vacate was timely filed; (3) sufficient findings supported the arbitrator's award under Wyoming law; (4) the District Court did not abuse its discretion in finding that, under Wyoming law, plaintiff had defaulted and was liable for damages; (5) the amended judgment correctly reflected relative ownership interests in the company following the transfer of shares to plaintiff; and (6) the District Court did not abuse its discretion in confirming the arbitrator's awards pursuant to Wyoming law. Wallace v. Hayes, 2005 MT 253, 329 M 23, 124 P3d 110 (2005).

Insufficient Facts in Certification Order to Render Precedential Opinion — Dismissal Without Prejudice: The Supreme Court accepted a certified question from the U.S. District Court regarding the constitutionality of 39-71-413. However, after receiving briefs, including amicus curiae briefs, and conducting an oral hearing, the court determined that it had improvidently accepted the certified question and that there were not sufficient relevant facts in the certification order to permit a decision on the important constitutional issues presented. The matter was dismissed without prejudice. Brady v. PPL Mont., LLC, 2003 MT 262, 317 M 425, 77 P3d 523 (2003).

Accidental Death Coverage Considered Life Insurance for Purposes of Conversion Rights: Golt worked as a civilian employee of the Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) until he was discharged from employment in 1994 for cause. Thirty days after termination, Golt died of carbon monoxide poisoning. As a benefit of employment, Golt was covered by an accident insurance policy issued by General American Life Insurance Company (General), which provided that if he died while covered by the policy, his estate was eligible to receive $200,000. The policy also provided that coverage would terminate on the first premium due date after Golt ceased to be an employee, which in this case was 6 days after Golt was terminated from employment. The General policy also allowed the group accident policy to be converted to an individual policy within 31 days of discharge upon written application and payment of the first premium. In addition to the General policy, Golt was also insured by Aetna Life Insurance Company (Aetna) under a group life and accident and health insurance policy, which provided a life insurance benefit of $32,000 if Golt died from any cause while insured, plus an accidental death benefit of $32,000 in the event of Golt's accidental death. The Aetna policy provided that coverage ceased upon termination of employment, but allowed the group life insurance policy to be converted to individual life insurance within 31 days of discharge and provided that if Golt died during that period, benefits would be payable. AAFES transmitted the Aetna claim, which paid $32,000 under the life insurance provisions but denied the claim for accidental death benefits on grounds that the coverage ended when employment was terminated. AAFES did not transmit the General claim. A subsequent request for benefits from General was denied because the claim was not submitted within 20 days after the covered loss occurred. Golt's wife commenced an action in 1996 in federal court, seeking accidental death benefits from both Aetna and General. The federal District Court concluded that there was no coverage under either policy and entered final judgment in favor of the insurers. In 1999, the Supreme Court agreed to address three questions certified by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals pursuant to former Rule 44, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), regarding the Montana statutory definitions of life insurance for purposes of determining an insured's conversions rights. The Supreme Court held that under 33-1-205, an insurance coverage may come within the definition of two kinds of insurance. Therefore, although accidental death coverage is disability insurance, for purposes of conversion rights, it is also life insurance as defined in 33-1-208. As life insurance, accidental death coverage is subject to a 31-day conversion right upon termination of coverage pursuant to 33-20-1209 and, in the event of death within the 31-day conversion period, is subject to automatic conversion under 33-20-1211. With regard to Golt's policies, the accidental death policy remained in effect, even when Golt died during the 31-day grace period without exercising the right to convert the policy by making application and paying the first premium. Golt v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 2000 MT 155, 300 M 142, 2 P3d 841, 57 St. Rep. 613 (2000).

Rule 16. Motions.

DECISIONS UNDER CURRENT RULES

Joint Motions for Mediation of Appeals Not Otherwise Subject to Mediation Rule Approved — Unilateral Motions Disapproved: The Supreme Court will welcome joint motions to mediate an appeal pursuant to Rule 7, M.R.App.P., on cases that may not fall within one of the identified categories for which mediation is required. However, the court will not consider a unilateral motion to designate for Rule 7 mediation, even a motion that indicates that opposing counsel has been contacted and does not object. Kuzara v. Musselshell County, 2008 MT 124, 342 M 547, 182 P3d 739 (2008).

DECISIONS UNDER SUPERSEDED RULES

No Pretrial Determination Regarding Whether Statement Admissible for Impeachment Purposes — Waiver of Right to Object to Admissibility: At the time of arrest, Harris admitted an act of sexual intercourse with his adopted daughter. Prior to trial, Harris moved to suppress the statement on grounds that it was involuntary and obtained in violation of his fifth amendment rights under the United States Constitution. The District Court agreed that the statement could not be used, but expressly stated that its limited suppression order did not address whether it could be used by the state for impeachment purposes in the event that Harris testified, essentially reserving its ruling for a later time, as authorized in 46-13-104. Harris's testimony about the statement during direct examination brought the statement into evidence by his own volition, constituting waiver of the right to appeal the admissibility of the statement for use as impeachment. St. v. Harris, 1999 MT 115, 294 M 397, 983 P2d 881, 56 St. Rep. 481 (1999), distinguishing St. v. Fuhrmann, 278 M 396, 925 P2d 1162, 53 St. Rep. 966 (1996), and St. v. Ingraham, 284 M 77, 945 P2d 16, 54 St. Rep. 614 (1997).

Denial of Bond Pending Appeal — Method of Supreme Court Review — Jurisdiction: After conviction for negligent homicide and on related charges, Ingraham moved the District Court to continue bond pending appeal. The District Court denied the motion, finding that Ingraham was a danger to the community and therefore did not meet the requirements of 46-9-107. Ingraham then moved the Supreme Court, pursuant to former Rule 22, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), to continue bond pending appeal or, in the alternative, to accept appeal of the District Court's order denying bond, pursuant to former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and 46-20-104. The Attorney General moved to dismiss, contending that there was no provision in law for appeal from a District Court order denying bond pending appeal and that Ingraham should have brought an original habeas corpus proceeding. The Supreme Court agreed with the Attorney General and dismissed Ingraham's motion or appeal, holding that Ingraham should have brought a petition for a writ of habeas corpus pursuant to 46-22-103. Ingraham then filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, which was filed with Justice Trieweiler pursuant to 3-2-212. Justice Trieweiler granted the petition to the extent necessary for the District Court to hold an evidentiary hearing as provided by statute, under the theory that the District Court was the more appropriate court for the hearing than was the Supreme Court. The Attorney General opposed the order by applying to the full Supreme Court for a writ of supervisory control, arguing, contrary to the state's previous position, that 46-22-103 does not really apply to persons convicted in a criminal case and that the more appropriate procedure was an original proceeding "in the nature of habeas corpus" before the full Supreme Court. The application for a writ of supervisory control was denied, was treated by the Supreme Court as a late-filed response to Ingraham's petition for a writ of habeas corpus, and was referred to Justice Trieweiler. Justice Trieweiler determined that it was inappropriate for him alone to determine the form of review of the District Court's denial of bond. Justice Trieweiler also determined that: (1) Ingraham had no constitutional right to bond pending appeal; (2) Ingraham did have a right to the proper exercise of the District Court's discretion in the application of 46-9-107; and (3) that right was a substantial right for the purposes of 46-20-104. For these reasons, Justice Trieweiler vacated his previous order granting Ingraham's petition for a writ of habeas corpus and referred the matter to the full Supreme Court for review of the District Court's order denying bond pending appeal. St. v. Ingraham, 284 M 77, 945 P2d 16, 54 St. Rep. 614 (1997).

Compiler's Comments

2009 Amendment: Substituted (3) concerning order designating amount of time for oral argument for former text that read: "Upon oral argument of an appeal or original proceeding, 40 minutes will be allowed to appellant or applicant and 30 minutes to appellee. Rule 19. Relief.

Case Notes

DECISIONS UNDER CURRENT RULES

No Costs Awarded — Challenge to Trial Costs Implicit in Challenge on Merits — No Waiver: When there is no prevailing party, each party remains responsible for its own costs. When challenging on appeal the merits of a trial court's decision, there is no authority that requires an appellant to separately challenge the imposition of trial costs in favor of the prevailing party. Rather, a challenge to trial costs is implicitly tied to a challenge on the merits. Thus, a party does not waive its right to challenge an order on costs by failure to appeal if the costs were awarded per 25-10-102. However, 25-10-103 allows for costs in the District Court's discretion. In that case, a party should appeal the District Court's award to avoid waiver. Letica Land Co., LLC v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge, 2019 MT 30, 394 Mont. 218, 435 P.3d 634.

Vexatious Litigant Status Declared During Appeal — Court Approval Required for Future Pro Se Litigation by Appellant: While an appeal was pending in the Supreme Court, the appellees filed a joint motion requesting an order declaring that the appellant was a vexatious litigant. After taking judicial notice of prior court filings by the appellant and finding that the applicable factors in Motta v. Granite County Comm'rs, 2013 MT 172, 370 Mont. 469, 304 P.3d 720, were satisfied, the Supreme Court concluded that the appellant was a vexatious litigant. However, given the broad range of litigation the appellant brought in multiple judicial districts, the Supreme Court could not determine how to effectively narrow a prefiling order to a particular type of claim. As such, the Supreme Court ordered that before the appellant could file any pleading pro se in a Montana District Court or the Supreme Court, he was required to obtain prefiling approval from the court in which he seeks to file. The order was sent to all Montana District Courts. Stokes v. First Am. Title Co. of Mont., Inc., 2017 MT 275, 389 Mont. 245, 406 P.3d 439. See also McCann v. McCann, 2018 MT 207, 392 Mont. 385, 425 P.3d 682, requiring that a former attorney deemed a vexatious litigant must gain court approval prior to filing.

Joinder of Party in Supreme Court After Dismissal of Party in District Court — Fees and Costs Not Warranted: A prime contractor that was dismissed as a defendant in District Court sought fees and costs for being subsequently included as an appellee in the Supreme Court proceeding. The prime contractor argued that since the other appellee did not object to the District Court dismissal, it cannot now seek to join the prime contractor as a party again. The Supreme Court denied the request for fees and costs, reasoning that it already considered the joinder issue in a previous motion for dismissal. McDonald v. Ponderosa Enterprises, Inc., 2015 MT 160, 379 Mont. 379, 352 P.3d 14.

Vexatious Litigant — Costs on Appeal Awarded to Former Wife: The former husband owed his former wife more than $100,000 pursuant to a court-ordered distribution of the parties' marital estate. During an earlier appeal to the Supreme Court, the court had warned the husband that it would not tolerate any further efforts on his part to delay her receipt of the marital estate as set forth in the order. After the husband again appealed the distribution, the wife asked the Supreme Court to sanction him as a vexatious litigant, which it did, ordering him to pay her attorney fees for the appeal as to be determined by the District Court and prohibiting him from filing future appeals or civil actions against the wife without advance court approval. In re Marriage of Guill, 2014 MT 316, 377 Mont. 216, 339 P.3d 81.

Attorney Fees on Prior Appeal: The plaintiffs sued the city related to the widening of a city road and the taking of their property for that purpose. The city lost in District Court and appealed the decision to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court affirmed in part and reversed in part and remanded the case to the District Court to recalculate the amount of damages owed to the plaintiffs. The city claimed that the plaintiffs were not entitled to fees and costs incurred during the appeal because they did not prevail on their cross-appeal. The plaintiffs argued that they were the prevailing party and thus were entitled to fees and costs incurred during both the underlying litigation and the appeal. The District Court agreed and awarded fees and costs as requested by the plaintiffs. The city appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed the award, noting that the plaintiffs had a constitutional right to be made whole in a condemnation case in which the landowner prevails. Wohl v. Missoula, 2014 MT 310, 377 Mont. 148, 339 P.3d 58.

Fees Not Awarded — Misleading Arguments — No Citation to Record: On appeal of a divorce decree, the husband argued that the District Court failed to consider relevant case law. The Supreme Court noted that the husband's arguments in the briefing were misleading and significantly misrepresented or omitted facts. The Supreme Court declined to award attorney fees as sanctions because the case itself provided enough reason to challenge the District Court's application of law and distribution of property. In re Marriage of Rintoul, 2014 MT 210, 376 Mont. 167, 330 P.3d 1203.

Sanctions Appropriate in Vexatious Litigation: A former husband filed multiple appeals and court cases in three states since his divorce from his wife 20 years ago. The District Court had previously warned the husband not to continue delaying or multiplying the litigation. Finding that the husband's third appeal in Montana was vexatious and was filed for the purpose of delay, the Supreme Court awarded costs and fees to the wife. However, because the husband was no longer represented by counsel, the court assessed the penalties only against the husband and not against his former attorney. Jonas v. Jonas, 2013 MT 202, 371 Mont. 113, 308 P.3d 33.

Attorney Fees Inappropriate — Party's Claims Not Frivolous or Lacking in Good Faith: In a dissolution of marriage proceeding, the husband's claims were affirmed on appeal. However, the Supreme Court declined to award attorney fees to the husband, holding that although the wife's arguments lacked merit, they were not entirely frivolous or lacking in good faith. In re Marriage of Parker, 2013 MT 194, 371 Mont. 74, 305 P.3d 816. See also In re Marriage of Schmidt, 2014 MT 182, 375 Mont. 420, 329 P.3d 570, holding that the husband was not entitled to costs as a prevailing party and that sanctions were not justified because the wife prevailed on multiple issues on appeal.

Dispute as to Prevailing Party on Appeal to Be Determined by District Court: The Public Service Commission (PSC) dismissed the petitioners' complaint and on appeal the Supreme Court sent the case back to the District Court, directing that court to remand the matter to the PSC for further consideration. The petitioners sought reimbursement for their costs in appealing to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court held that this rule gave the District Court the discretion to determine whether the petitioners were a prevailing party and that the District Court had not abused its discretion in holding that there was no prevailing party at that stage of the controversy. Williamson v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2012 MT 299, 367 Mont. 379, 291 P.3d 1116.

Arguable Issue of Arbitration Forum — Sanctions Inappropriate: Appellees argued that they should be granted attorney fees on appeal because appellant's appeal was without merit. The Supreme Court disagreed. Although appellant's contentions regarding the forum applicable to an arbitration dispute were rejected be the court, the contentions were arguable and advanced in good faith, so sanctions were inappropriate. Wolf's Interstate Leasing & Sales, LLC v. Banks, 2009 MT 354, 353 M 189, 219 P3d 1260 (2009).

DECISIONS UNDER SUPERSEDED RULES

Costs in Attorney Disciplinary Action Governed by Montana Rules for Lawyer Disciplinary Enforcement: Attorney Potts objected to the statement of costs filed by the Office of Disciplinary Counsel stemming from disciplinary proceedings against Potts before the Commission on Practice, asserted that the Office violated several statutes and former Rule 33, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), in assigning costs as directed in In re Potts, 2007 MT 81, 336 M 517, 158 P3d 418 (2007), and requested a hearing before an adjudicatory panel regarding reasonableness of the costs. The Supreme Court held that, in accord with the court's authority to regulate and discipline attorneys, the Montana Rules for Lawyer Disciplinary Enforcement (MRLDE), not the statutes and rules applicable to civil actions generally, govern costs imposed by the Office as discipline or sanctions against attorneys. Under Rule 9(A)(8), MRLDE, the attorney must pay reasonable costs of any professional services employed by the Commission, and the case was remanded for a hearing before an adjudicatory panel for consideration of the reasonableness of the amount requested by the Office for each category of costs. In re Potts, 2007 MT 236, 339 M 186, 171 P3d 286 (2007).

Attorney Fees on Appeal Proper for Frivolous Appeal: Generally, the Supreme Court will not impose sanctions pursuant to former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), unless an appeal is entirely unfounded and intended to cause delay or unless counsel's actions otherwise constitute an abuse of the judicial system. In this case, defendants made numerous errors in filing their appeal brief, attempted to circumvent page limitations by including information in an appendix to their brief that should have been included in the brief itself, and improperly asked the Supreme Court to adopt and incorporate by reference into the brief more than 200 pages of facts, citations to depositions and trial testimony, authorities, and arguments contained in numerous filings before the District Court. Their brief was convoluted and confusing, and their list of 11 issues did not correspond in any meaningful way to the more than 29 contentions that they set forth in the argument portion of their brief. The brief was dominated by bald declarations of error by the District Court with little or no substantiation. The Supreme Court held that defendants proceeded without respect for the integrity of the judicial process and did so without sufficient reasonable grounds. Thus, plaintiff's request for attorney fees and costs of appeal was appropriate, and the case was remanded for a determination of plaintiff's attorney fees and costs and entry of an award of those fees and costs to plaintiff. Murphy Homes, Inc. v. Muller, 2007 MT 140, 337 M 411, 162 P3d 106 (2007). See also Fick v. Brown, 2011 MT 127, 360 Mont. 513, 254 P.3d 593.

Landlord-Tenant Dispute — Award of Attorney Fees and Costs for Appeal: Defendant prevailed on an appeal of a landlord-tenant dispute and requested attorney fees and costs. The Supreme Court noted that the lease agreement and former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded) both entitled defendant, as prevailing party, to recover reasonable attorney fees and costs on appeal, and the award was granted. Bugger v. McGough, 2006 MT 248, 334 M 77, 144 P3d 802 (2006).

Money Judgment Partially Modified and Reversed by Supreme Court — Postjudgment Interest Owing From Date New Judgment Entered on Remand: Plaintiff sought postjudgment interest on various amounts owed pursuant to a Construction lien. The Supreme Court affirmed part of the judgment entered by the District Court and held that plaintiff was entitled to postjudgment interest on that amount, but the court reversed another part of the money judgment, holding that plaintiff was not entitled to postjudgment interest on an amount erroneously withheld by defendant or on an amount that plaintiff was erroneously ordered to pay to cover defendant's expenses incurred after defendant breached the construction contract. Credit due to plaintiff for the latter amounts bore interest only from the date of judgment on remand. In cases when the amount of judgment entered in District Court is increased by the Supreme Court as the result of an appeal and the amount of the increase equates to an amount sought by the prevailing party but wrongly denied by the District Court, that amount will bear interest from the date of the District Court decree or judgment from which the appeal is taken. James Talcott Constr., Inc. v. P&D Land Enterprises, 2006 MT 188, 333 M 107, 141 P3d 1200 (2006), following and clarifying Woods v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2004 MT 384, 325 M 106, 104 P3d 1045 (2004).

General Rules for When Interest Begins to Accrue: As former Rule 31, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), set forth, in those cases in which a judgment for money in a civil case is affirmed, whatever interest is allowed by law is payable from the date on which the judgment was entered in the District Court. In those cases in which a money judgment is either modified or reversed by virtue of a decision of the Supreme Court, the following rules apply:

a. To the extent that a discreet and identifiable portion of the original judgment is upheld on appeal, the amount of that judgment bears interest from the date on which the original judgment was entered in the District Court.

b. In those cases in which a money judgment is modified or reversed by the Supreme Court, with the result that the money judgment is increased over that entered by the District Court, the amount representing the increase bears interest from the date on which the new judgment is entered on remand pursuant to the Supreme Court's direction.

c. In those cases in which a money judgment rendered in the District Court is reversed, modified, or vacated on appeal, with the consequence that the District Court is directed to enter an entirely new judgment, no portion of which is discreetly identifiable from the original verdict or judgment, then interest on the new judgment begins to accrue from the date on which the new judgment is entered on remand pursuant to the Supreme Court's direction.

The portion of Resner v. N. Pac. Ry., 161 M 177, 505 P2d 86 (1973), announcing the manner in which postjudgment interest should be assessed following reversal or modification of a judgment is overruled. Woods v. Burlington N. Ry., 2004 MT 384, 325 M 106, 104 P3d 1045 (2004).

Substantial Grounds for Appeal of Marital Property Valuation and Distribution — Costs of Appeal Denied: The wife sought sanctions based on the husband's allegedly unreasonable appeal of the parties' marital property valuation and distribution. The Supreme Court denied sanctions after finding that the husband's appeal was based on substantial and reasonable grounds and was not intended to cause delay. Collins v. Collins, 2004 MT 365, 324 M 500, 104 P3d 1059 (2004), followed in Clark v. Heirs & Devisees of Dwyer, 2007 MT 237, 339 M 197, 170 P3d 927 (2007). See also In re Marriage of Moss, 1999 MT 62, 293 M 500, 977 P2d 322 (1999).

Assertion of Interpretation of Rule Regarding Remand of Pending Appeal — No Award of Sanctions: While a jurisdictional question was pending in a civil action seeking monetary damages, Nielsen contended that a settlement agreement was reached and filed a complaint in District Court to enforce the alleged agreement. The motion was dismissed because the underlying action was pending on appeal. Nielsen then appealed, but dismissal was affirmed. The Brocksmiths sought sanctions. However, Nielsen had participated in mediation and believed that an agreement was reached and thus presented the issue to the Supreme Court regarding remand of a pending appeal to settle an alleged agreement question, an issue not previously addressed. Because Nielsen's action could not be considered entirely unfounded, the Brocksmiths' motion for sanctions was denied. Nielsen v. Brocksmith, 2004 MT 259, 323 M 98, 99 P3d 181 (2004).

Sanctions Appropriate for Appeal Without Merit or Legal Support: Following affirmation of all underlying legal issues in this case in Lewistown Propane Co. v. Moncur, 2002 MT 349, 313 M 368, 61 P3d 780 (2002), defendants filed another appeal seeking a determination of whether the District Court improperly denied their motion seeking relief from judgment. Following examination of the record, the Supreme Court concluded that defendants' brief was less an appeal to revise a judgment based on a supportable legal analysis and precedent than it was a vexatious personal attack on the presiding District Court Judge, which unreasonably lengthened the proceedings, resulted in unnecessary costs to the parties, and unnecessarily consumed court time. Therefore, sanctions were warranted and were ordered to be paid by defendants' attorney pursuant to 37-61-421 and former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Lewistown Propane Co. v. Moncur, 2003 MT 368, 319 M 105, 82 P3d 896 (2003).

Prevailing Party Entitled to Costs of Appeal on Remand: In Muri v. Frank, 2001 MT 29, 304 M 171, 18 P3d 1022 (2001), the Supreme Court found for defendants and remanded. Defendants asked for costs of the appeal, but the District Court refused to award them on remand. Defendants appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. As the prevailing party in the 2001 appeal, defendants were entitled to the costs of their appeal as a matter of law, and the District Court abused its discretion in failing to award reasonable costs for that appeal. Muri v. Frank, 2003 MT 316, 318 M 269, 80 P3d 77 (2003).

Reasonable Grounds for Appeal of Child Medical Support Case — Sanctions Inappropriate: Cynthia waited 6 years to file a claim to require Lorney to pay his portion of their child's medical expenses and then requested sanctions on grounds that Lorney caused delay by appealing the trial court's decision. The Supreme Court found no evidence of delay caused by Lorney's appeal and concluded that there were substantial and reasonable grounds for the appeal, so sanctions were not imposed. In re Marriage of Deist, 2003 MT 263, 317 M 427, 77 P3d 525 (2003).

Sanctions Not Presumptively Assumed on Appeal Barred by Res Judicata: Defendant contended that sanctions were appropriate because plaintiff brought an appeal that was barred by res judicata. However, the fact that an appeal is barred by res judicata does not mean that an award of sanctions is presumptively appropriate. Absent a showing that the appeal was entirely unfounded, intended to cause delay, or constituted an abuse of the judicial system, sanctions are not appropriate. Johnson v. Hamilton, 2003 MT 199, 317 M 24, 75 P3d 778 (2003).

Failure to Cite Supporting Authority or File Record on Appeal — Sanctions Awarded: Hodge appealed the distribution of the marital estate, but failed to cite any authority to support his positions on the issues or file a record upon which the Supreme Court might base its review in considering his claims. Hodge's actions constituted an abuse of the judicial system, and sanctions were awarded to the wife for the costs and attorney fees associated with the appeal. In re Marriage of Hodge, 2003 MT 146, 316 M 194, 69 P3d 1192 (2003), following In re Marriage of Snow, 2002 MT 143, 310 M 260, 49 P3d 610 (2002).

Appeal of Parenting Plan Not Unfounded — Award of Attorney Fees Declined: Each parent submitted a different plan for custody and visitation. The District Court adopted most provisions of the mother's proposed plan, and the father appealed. The Supreme Court ruled in the mother's favor, and she requested attorney fees and costs on grounds that the father's appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds. The Supreme Court found that the appeal was not entirely unfounded or intended to cause delay and did not constitute an abuse of the judicial system, so the request for attorney fees and costs was denied. In re Marriage of Carter, 2003 MT 19, 314 M 84, 63 P3d 1124 (2003).

Groundless Appeal of Easement Case — Damages Assessed: In District Court, defendant proceeded with an easement case, contending that a road did not exist in 1985, even though aerial photographs clearly showed that the road existed in exactly the same location since 1979. Fees and costs were assessed against defendant for unreasonably and vexatiously multiplying the proceedings, yet defendant brought exactly the same arguments on appeal. The Supreme Court awarded plaintiff reasonable attorney fees for defending an appeal taken without substantial or reasonable grounds. Ponderosa Pines Ranch, Inc. v. Hevner, 2002 MT 184, 311 M 82, 53 P3d 381 (2002).

Statute Allowing Attorney Fees in Appeal From Small Claims Court Not Applicable to Appeal From District Court: Plaintiffs prevailed in an appeal from District Court to the Supreme Court, which began as an appeal from Small Claims Court, and sought attorney fees and costs related to the appeal, citing 25-35-806. The Supreme Court held that 25-35-806 applies only to appeals from Small Claims Court to District Court, and declined to award plaintiffs their attorney fees incurred during the appeal from District Court to the Supreme Court. However, as the prevailing party in the Supreme Court appeal, plaintiffs were entitled to costs under former Rule 33, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Allen v. Hubbard, 2002 MT 95, 309 M 375, 46 P3d 639 (2002).

Appeal of Denial of Motion to Compel Arbitration Not Considered Frivolous: An employer failed to timely respond to an employee's request for arbitration, and subsequently moved to compel arbitration. When the District Court denied the employer's motion to compel, the employer appealed. The employee then sought sanctions pursuant to former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), contending that unnecessary delay and needless increase in the costs of litigation were compounded by the employer's appeal. The Supreme Court was not convinced from the record that the appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds and thus declined to award sanctions. Firestone v. Oasis Telecommunications, Data & Records, Inc., 2001 MT 297, 307 M 469, 38 P3d 796 (2001).

Costs and Attorney Fees Awarded to Prevailing Party on Appeal of Civil Rights Case: Laudert was the prevailing party in a civil rights case and was awarded full attorney fees. That award was appealed, and Laudert prevailed again. The Supreme Court cited Ihler v. Chisholm, 2000 MT 37, 298 M 254, 995 P2d 439 (2000), in holding that as the prevailing party in the underlying civil rights action, Laudert was entitled to reimbursement of fees reasonably incurred, whether the fees were incurred in the original civil rights trial and appeal, in proving those fees, or in defending the District Court's fee award. Laudert v. Richland County Sheriff's Dept., 2001 MT 287, 307 M 403, 38 P3d 790 (2001), followed in Edwards v. Cascade County, 2009 MT 229, 351 M 360, 212 P3d 289 (2009).

Reasonable Grounds for Appeal of Trial Court's Imposition of Sanctions — No Sanctions Awarded on Appeal: The District Court awarded sanctions against Pospisil in favor of his ex-wife and a bank because the complaint was groundless and was not pursued in good faith and because Pospisil's conduct was not reasonable under the circumstances. Pospisil appealed, and the ex-wife also sought sanctions on appeal. Although the trial court's award of sanctions was proper, there were reasonable grounds for Pospisil to appeal the sanctions, so the Supreme Court declined to award additional sanctions on appeal. Pospisil v. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown, 2001 MT 286, 307 M 392, 37 P3d 704 (2001).

Award of Attorney Fees Based on Contract — Prevailing Party Entitled to Attorney Fees on Appeal: When an award of attorney fees is based on a contract, the prevailing party is entitled to reasonable attorney fees on appeal. Eschenbacher v. Anderson, 2001 MT 206, 306 M 321, 34 P3d 87 (2001). See also Smith v. Johnson, 245 M 137, 798 P2d 106 (1990).

Failure to Succeed on Appeal Not Equated to Taking Appeal Without Substantial or Reasonable Grounds — Attorney Fees Denied: The Supreme Court dismissed the father's appeal in a custody dispute because it was not timely filed, and the mother sought attorney fees as damages, contending that because the father had repeatedly sought custody over a short span of time in three different states, presenting different arguments depending on which state's court that he was appearing in, and that all of the claims lacked merit. The mother also contended that the appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds, so attorney fees were warranted. The Supreme Court noted that it did not reach the merits of the father's claim and thus was unable to determine whether the appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds and that even if it had reached the merits of the appeal, the failure to succeed on appeal does not necessarily equate to taking an appeal without substantial or reasonable grounds. Further, the lack of timeliness of the appeal was not blatant and was not the focus of the mother's request for attorney fees, so the fees were denied. In re Marriage of Yeanuzzi, 2001 MT 171, 306 M 163, 30 P3d 1095 (2001).

Fees for Posttrial Work and Appeal Denied in Light of Generous Award of Attorney Fees at Trial: The Slacks accepted a Department of Transportation offer to pay $168,069, plus interest and necessary litigation expenses, in a property condemnation case, but the amount of litigation expenses was disputed and was not settled by the District Court until some years later. The Department appealed the award, and the Slacks cross-appealed, seeking attorney fees for posttrial work and for responding to the appeal. The Supreme Court noted that although the District Court's findings justifying its award of necessary litigation expenses were not clearly erroneous, the District Court's attorney fee award was clearly generous and that Slack's attorney was granted everything that he requested despite two witnesses for the Department who testified that the attorney's claims were excessive and duplicative. The Supreme Court declined to award additional attorney fees for posttrial work and the appeal. State ex rel. Dept. of Transportation v. Slack, 2001 MT 137, 305 M 488, 29 P3d 503 (2001).

Sanction for Alleged Frivolous Appeal and Undue Influence Refused Against Party Who Partly Prevailed on Appeal: The wife in a divorce case argued that her attorney fees on appeal should be ordered paid by the husband because his appeal of denial of enforcement of a settlement agreement was frivolous and because he continually attempted to use his superior financial position to leverage her into a disadvantageous settlement. The Supreme Court would not impose sanctions because there were reasonable grounds for appeal, as evidenced by the Supreme Court's reversal in the husband's favor on the issue of the apportioning of the marital assets. In re Marriage of Rolf, 2000 MT 361, 303 M 349, 16 P3d 345, 57 St. Rep. 1536 (2000).

Transcript Cost Recoverable if Necessary for Appeal Determination: Parents for whom the Department of Public Health and Human Services had filed a petition for temporary investigative services appealed an order by the District Court that denied recovery of the cost for reproducing a transcript incurred on a previous appeal. The parents argued that former Rule 9(b), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), required them to order a transcript of the entire proceedings not already on file. In affirming the District Court's denial of recovery, the Supreme Court held that although former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), is the general authority that guides the ordering, preparation, and filing of transcripts, former Rule 33, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), was the specific rule controlling whether the cost of reproducing the transcript can be taxed as a cost. Former Rule 33, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), clearly established that appeal transcript costs are recoverable only if the transcript was necessary for the determination of the appeal. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying recovery because the transcript was not required to resolve the legal issue on appeal. In re Inquiry Into A.W., 2000 MT 311, 302 M 447, 14 P3d 1252, 57 St. Rep. 1317 (2000).

Recovery of Attorney Fees, Including Appeal Costs, Based on Indemnification Provision in Underlying Contract: Four people decided to start a business, but ultimately three decided to opt out and exchange their respective corporate shares of stock for cash. The release agreement also held the three harmless from all causes of action relating to the incorporation and provided an indemnification clause that held each party harmless from and against all liability, claim, loss, damage, or expense, including attorney fees, incurred or required to be paid by the other parties by reason of any breach or failure of observance or performance of any representation, warranty, or covenant or other provision of the agreement. Nevertheless, the corporation subsequently sued one of the three resigning members for breach of fiduciary duty, conversion, actual and constructive fraud, and negligent misrepresentation, seeking $110,000 in general damages and also punitive damages. Defendant counterclaimed that by filing a claim that was barred by the release agreement, the corporation had breached its contract. Following trial, the District Court awarded only $3,673.53 for constructive fraud, but also concluded that all claims based on the parties' contractual relationship were barred. Each party then requested attorney fees as the prevailing party pursuant to the indemnification clause, but the court denied the motions, holding that there was no prevailing party because each party had gained a victory but also suffered a loss. The corporation appealed, seeking attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that pursuant to the reciprocal right under 28-3-704, the corporation had the statutory right to recover attorney fees, but only the fees incurred in defending the breach of contract counterclaim as the prevailing party, pursuant to the contractual indemnification provision. Under the same reasoning, the Supreme Court awarded attorney fees for costs of appeal as well, remanding for a determination of fees. Transaction Network, Inc. v. Wellington Technologies, Inc., 2000 MT 223, 301 M 212, 7 P3d 409, 57 St. Rep. 920 (2000), followed in Peschel Family Trust v. Colonna, 2003 MT 216, 317 M 127, 75 P3d 793 (2003).

Appeal Taken Without Substantial or Reasonable Grounds — Sanctions Imposed: With the exception of four sentences in her brief, plaintiff's entire argument on appeal was devoted to arguing that no easement burdened her land. However, the appeal was related to a complaint of assault and trespass, not the validity of an easement. The four sentences were simply a collection of conclusions and contained no discussion of the law relating to trespass or assault, no citation to legal authority or to the record, and no application of the law to the facts. The Supreme Court found this to be a proper case in which to impose sanctions for a frivolous appeal and remanded for a determination of defendant's reasonable attorney fees and costs incurred on appeal. Kinsey-Cartwright v. Brower, 2000 MT 198, 300 M 450, 5 P3d 1026, 57 St. Rep. 769 (2000).

Performance of Public Service in Enforcement of Constitutional Provisions Through Litigation — Costs and Attorney Fees Payable: Plaintiffs successfully contested the constitutional validity of a Department of Revenue administrative rule regarding the confidentiality of corporate tax information. In doing so, plaintiffs performed a public service by enforcing a portion of the Montana Constitution that would otherwise have been violated. Because of the public benefits gained through plaintiffs' efforts, the Supreme Court spread the cost of the litigation among its beneficiaries and awarded plaintiffs their costs and reasonable attorney fees, including those incurred on appeal. Assoc. Press, Inc. v. Dept. of Revenue, 2000 MT 160, 300 M 233, 4 P3d 5, 57 St. Rep. 657 (2000), distinguished in In re Petition of Billings High School District No. 2 v. Billings Gazette, 2006 MT 329, 335 M 94, 149 P3d 565 (2006).

Attorney Fees Not Imposed Absent Evidence That Pro Se Appeal Brought in Bad Faith: As a general rule, the Supreme Court will not impose sanctions under former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), unless an appeal is entirely unfounded and intended to cause delay or unless counsel's actions otherwise constitute an abuse of the judicial system. Here, even though a plaintiff's pro se arguments were legally unsound and untimely, there was no indication that the arguments were brought in bad faith, so the court declined to award defendants their attorney fees on appeal. Greenup v. Russell, 2000 MT 154, 300 M 136, 3 P3d 124, 57 St. Rep. 610 (2000). See also Cooper v. Glaser, 2010 MT 55, 355 Mont. 342, 228 P.3d 443.

Dissolution Decree Granting Ranch to Husband — Wife Not Entitled to Appreciation or Subject to Liability Accruing on Property — Judgment Interest Owing on Money Judgment: A dissolution decree entered in 1996 granted ranch property to the husband and a liquidated money judgment of $305,855 to the wife. When the remainder of the issues concerning the marital estate was finally addressed in 1999, the wife contended that the subsequent appreciation of the ranch marital assets must be accounted for in determining the final disposition of the 1996 decree. The Supreme Court held that the wife was not entitled either to appreciation or, conversely, to any liability that may have accrued on the property because the ranch was exclusively awarded to the husband. However, the wife was entitled to judgment interest on the money as a statutory right pursuant to 25-9-205. On remand, the Supreme Court applied the statutory 10% interest rate to the balance of the wife's money judgment that remained unpaid following entry of the decree, not including interest accruing during the pendency of the appeal. The Supreme Court refigured the dollar amount due the wife after adjusting the figure, which had been incorrectly offset by the District Court because of the wife's alleged receipt of livestock and sales and an interest debt allegedly due to the husband's mother under a "conspiratorial sham" designed to deprive the wife of her interest in the farm property and to directly benefit the husband. In re Marriage of Pospisil, 2000 MT 132, 299 M 527, 1 P3d 364, 57 St. Rep. 547 (2000).

Award of Postjudgment Interest Improper When Money Judgment Not Affirmed: In a prior appeal, the wife asserted that the District Court had erroneously valued her possessory interest in the family home (see In re Marriage of Pfeifer, 282 M 461, 938 P2d 684, 54 St. Rep. 432 (1997)). The Supreme Court agreed and reversed for consideration of evidence regarding the value of the wife's possessory interest. On remand, the District Court awarded the wife postjudgment interest accrued on a $400,000 equalization cash payment between the date of the initial decree and the date that the payment was finally made. The husband appealed the award of postjudgment interest, contending that the interest was not owing because the wife had appealed the initial distribution of the marital estate, seeking a greater share, and lost. The wife responded that under former Rule 31, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), it is irrelevant who appealed or cross-appealed when determining whether a judgment creditor is entitled to postjudgment interest. The Supreme Court noted that the question of the propriety of an award of postjudgment interest depended on whether the District Court's judgment was affirmed on appeal. In this case, the distribution of the marital estate, and thus the cash equalization payment, was not affirmed; therefore, the award of postjudgment interest was reversible error. In re Marriage of Pfeifer, 2000 MT 100, 299 M 268, 999 P2d 340, 57 St. Rep. 406 (2000).

Lack of Respect for Judicial Process and Appeal Without Reasonable Grounds — Award of Fees and Costs Appropriate: The Supreme Court held that under former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), sanctions were appropriate against appellant who proceeded without respect for the judicial process and did so without sufficient reasonable grounds. Lee v. Lee, 2000 MT 67, 299 M 78, 996 P2d 389, 57 St. Rep. 308 (2000). See also Spoonheim v. Norwest Bank Mont., 277 M 417, 922 P2d 528, 53 St. Rep. 764 (1996).

Motion for Relief From Judgment Barred by Res Judicata — Sanctions Appropriate: McLaughlins moved for relief from judgment under former Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), but the motion was denied by the District Court. On appeal, McLaughlins raised 14 different reasons why the District Court's judgment following remand was void. The thrust of their argument was that the District Court failed to follow statutory law when awarding punitive damages against them. In denying the former Rule 60(b) motion, the District Court noted that the issues raised by the motion had been appealed three times to the Supreme Court and affirmed each time in noncite opinions and held that the former Rule 60(b) motion was dilatory in nature and without substance in law or fact. On this fourth appeal, the Supreme Court agreed, finding that all of the issues raised by the McLaughlins in their former Rule 60(b) motion were barred by res judicata because they either had been previously litigated or could have been litigated in prior proceedings. Further, because the latest appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds, it was frivolous pursuant to former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), so sanctions in the form of reasonable costs and attorney fees were ordered to be added to the judgment against McLaughlins on remand. Bragg v. McLaughlin, 1999 MT 320, 297 M 282, 993 P2d 662, 56 St. Rep. 1276 (1999). See also Wellman v. Wellman, 198 M 42, 643 P2d 573 (1982), Searight v. Cimino, 238 M 218, 777 P2d 335, 46 St. Rep. 1217 (1989), and Loney v. Milodragovich, Dale & Dye, P.C., 273 M 506, 905 P2d 158, 52 St. Rep. 1093 (1995).

Failure to Participate in Water Court Hearing — Attorney Fees Assessed as Sanction for Defense of Unreasonable Appeal: Despite warnings from the Water Court of the consequences, plaintiffs chose not to participate in a Water Court hearing, thereby creating no record of their issues and preserving none of their arguments for appeal. They appealed anyway, contending that the Water Court's findings were in error. The Supreme Court first found that the findings and conclusions were correct, then sanctioned plaintiffs pursuant to former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), finding that defendant was entitled to attorney fees incurred in defending an appeal that was taken without any substantial or reasonable grounds, that delayed the case, and that wasted the resources of defendant and the Supreme Court. Swinger v. Collins, 1999 MT 202, 295 M 447, 984 P2d 151, 56 St. Rep. 787 (1999).

Issue of Sanctions as Meritorious Question — Award of Damages Declined: Respondents sought damages pursuant to former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), arguing that attorney fees and costs were appropriate because an appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds. Appellants had raised the question on appeal as to whether former Rule 37(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), sanctions could be imposed jointly and severally. The Supreme Court, noting that the appeal was not taken solely for delay or harassment and that the issue was a meritorious question worthy of appeal, declined to award damages. Morris v. Big Sky Thoroughbred Farms, Inc., 1998 MT 229, 291 M 32, 965 P2d 890, 55 St. Rep. 957 (1998).

Bond for Costs on Appeal May Not Include Attorney Fees: When allowed by law, attorney fees that a party incurs on appeal may be recovered by that party if that party prevails on appeal. Section 39-2-915 provides that if a party in a wrongful discharge proceeding declines an offer to arbitrate and then loses in court, the party that offered to arbitrate is entitled to reasonable attorney fees incurred after the offer was made, including those incurred on appeal. However, for purposes of determining the amount of a bond or security under former Rule 6, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), a District Court may not include anticipated attorney fees for the future defense of an appeal as part of the anticipated costs on appeal. Moore v. Imperial Hotels Corp., 285 M 188, 948 P2d 211, 54 St. Rep. 1104 (1997).

Section 1983 Action — Denial of Summary Judgment on Qualified Immunity Held Not Appealable — Lack of Supreme Court Jurisdiction — Sanctions Awarded: After a riot at the Montana State Prison (MSP) in which several prison inmates were killed or injured, inmates brought a negligence and section 1983 action against MSP officials. The MSP officials moved for summary judgment on the issue of qualified immunity from the section 1983 action. The District Court denied the motion, and the MSP officials appealed the denial. The Supreme Court held that the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction over the appeal from the District Court's denial of the summary judgment motion because the District Court order is not a final judgment within the meaning of former Rule 1(b)(1), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and that the appeal was likewise not authorized by former Rule 1(b)(2) or (b)(3), M.R.App.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court noted that this result was not changed by the state's allegation that the record was "ripe for appeal" and was "easily reviewable". The Supreme Court also held that the case law of the federal courts interpreting 28 U.S.C. 1291, especially Mitchell v. Forsyth, 472 US 511 (1985), and Johnson v. Jones, 515 US 304, 132 L Ed 2d 238, 115 S Ct 2151 (1995), was not relevant because the Montana Supreme Court derives its authority over appeals from the state constitution and the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure and not from 28 U.S.C. 1291. Because the appellants had not made any arguments in favor of their appeal, the Supreme Court determined that it was frivolous and, pursuant to former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), awarded the respondents their attorney fees on appeal. In re Litigation Relating to Riot, 283 M 277, 939 P2d 1013, 54 St. Rep. 598 (1997).

Good Faith Argument Despite Lack of Underlying Law — Damages Unwarranted: Although plaintiff's argument regarding the doctrine of equitable tolling was unconvincing, absent evidence that the argument was not made in good faith or that the appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds, defendant's claim for damages was denied. Sorenson v. Massey-Ferguson, Inc., 279 M 527, 927 P2d 1030, 53 St. Rep. 1269 (1996).

Attorney Fees: Whenever an appeal is entirely unfounded and causes delay, the other party should be reimbursed to a reasonable extent for his costs and attorney fees in connection with the appellate proceedings. Spoonheim v. Norwest Bank Mont., 277 M 417, 922 P2d 528, 53 St. Rep. 764 (1996); Reilly v. Farm Credit Bank of Spokane, 261 M 532, 863 P2d 420, 50 St. Rep. 1441 (1993), followed in CNA Ins. Co. v. Dunn, 273 M 295, 902 P2d 1014, 52 St. Rep. 981 (1995); Hock v. Lienco Cedar Prod., 194 M 131, 634 P2d 1174, 38 St. Rep. 1598 (1981); Carbon County v. Schwend, 182 M 89, 594 P2d 1121 (1979). See also Tipp v. Skjelset, 1998 MT 263, 291 M 288, 967 P2d 787, 55 St. Rep. 1084 (1998).

Award of Attorney Fees and Costs on Appeal of Contract Action: Under former Rule 33, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), costs in civil actions were automatically awarded to the prevailing party and, additionally, when an award of attorney fees was based on a contract, the prevailing party was also entitled to an award of reasonable attorney fees incurred on appeal. Chamberlin v. Puckett Constr., 277 M 198, 921 P2d 1237, 53 St. Rep. 593 (1996). See also Quigley v. Acker, 1998 MT 72, 288 M 190, 955 P2d 1377, 55 St. Rep. 295 (1998), and Riverview Homes II, Ltd. v. Canton, 2001 MT 309, 307 M 517, 38 P3d 848 (2001).

Sanctions Applicable Based on Conflicting Positions, Baseless Claims, and Inaccurate Citations: The Supreme Court applied former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), in holding that sanctions were appropriate against an appellant who had taken inconsistent and conflicting positions throughout the case, asserted baseless claims on appeal, and used inaccurate citations in its appellate brief. Federated Mut. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 277 M 134, 920 P2d 97, 53 St. Rep. 618 (1996), followed in Tipp v. Skjelset, 1998 MT 263, 291 M 288, 967 P2d 787, 55 St. Rep. 1084 (1998). On remand, defendant was entitled to present proof to the jury that third-party defendant, which had been sanctioned for prosecuting a meritless appeal, was involved in a continuing course of bad faith postjudgment conduct, and proof of that conduct was admissible to prove malice. Third-party defendant's alleged failure to conduct a reasonable investigation and its subsequent refusal to pay the claim, although occurring more than 2 years before commencement of plaintiff's cause of action, were, if proved, ostensibly part of the bad faith postjudgment conduct. The evidence of those acts was not time-barred. Federated Mut. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 1999 MT 288, 297 M 33, 991 P2d 915, 56 St. Rep. 1152 (1999), followed in Disler v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 2000 MT 304, 302 M 391, 15 P3d 864, 57 St. Rep. 1288 (2000).

Sanctions Warranted by Petition in Workers' Compensation Court When Jurisdiction of District Court Previously Invoked: After Dunn brought an action in District Court pursuant to 39-71-515 and 39-71-516 against an uninsured employer, CNA Insurance brought a petition in the Workers' Compensation Court for that court to determine Dunn's insurance coverage. The Supreme Court held that since the employer could admit liability, the petition in Workers' Compensation Court served no purpose other than to attempt to circumvent or delay the District Court action. The Supreme Court therefore awarded a $500 sanction against CNA and its counsel. CNA Ins. Co. v. Dunn, 273 M 295, 902 P2d 1014, 52 St. Rep. 981 (1995), distinguished in Neustrom v. St., 283 M 179, 939 P2d 990, 54 St. Rep. 552 (1997). See also Krause v. Neuman, 284 M 399, 943 P2d 1328, 54 St. Rep. 937 (1997), and Grenz v. Fire & Cas. of Conn., 2001 MT 8, 304 M 83, 18 P3d 994 (2001), in which the court enjoined the claimant from filing further civil appeals until the sanction was paid.

Appeal From Order Removing Counsel From Duties as Personal Representative — No Basis for Sanctions for Bringing Meritless Appeal: An attorney appealed an order removing him for cause from his duties as personal representative in an informal probate proceeding. Based on the record in this case, there was no basis for sanctions to be assessed against appellant for attorney fees and costs pursuant to former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), for bringing a meritless appeal. In re Estate of Peterson, 265 M 104, 874 P2d 1230, 51 St. Rep. 454 (1994).

Costs Denied Winner of Trust Invalidation Case: Under the circumstances of the case, the Supreme Court declined to order that the sons challenging parts of their father's trust benefiting his wife be assessed costs of appeal on the grounds that they appealed without substantial or reasonable grounds. In re McKittrick Trust, 262 M 406, 865 P2d 1099, 50 St. Rep. 1613 (1993).

Appeal Taken Without Reasonable Grounds — Sanctions Imposed: Sanctions were imposed against a pro se appellant who was no stranger to litigation when the appeal was not warranted by existing law, no good faith argument was made for a change in the existing law, and the appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds under the circumstances. Mogan v. Cargill, Inc., 259 M 400, 856 P2d 973, 50 St. Rep. 851 (1993).

Future Fees Payable Under Underlying Mortgage: Attorney fees incurred in an appeal were payable by debtor when an underlying mortgage obligated debtor to pay creditor's attorney fees incurred in connection with any future foreclosure action. Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. Newton, 252 M 336, 829 P2d 931, 49 St. Rep. 267 (1992).

Suspension of Accrual of Interest Appropriate: The trustees appealed the Supreme Court's directive to suspend the interest accruing on a loan from the date of the Sheriff's sale to the date of entry of the new judgment. The Supreme Court ruled that although the District Court decision was not reversed, the judgment was modified in respect to the deficiency amount allowed. Since instructions pursuant to interest allowance were provided, the directive to suspend interest until entry of the new judgment was appropriate. Trustees of the Wash.-Idaho-Mont. Carpenters-Employers Retirement Trust Fund v. Galleria Partnership, 250 M 175, 819 P2d 158, 48 St. Rep. 724 (1991), affirming Trustees of the Wash.-Idaho-Mont. Carpenters-Employers Retirement Trust Fund v. Galleria Partnership, 239 M 250, 780 P2d 608, 46 St. Rep. 1661 (1989).

Appeal of Dismissal of Parties After Prior Concurrence — Fees and Costs Warranted: Despite the fact that he agreed to dismissal of several parties at the District Court level, plaintiff argued on appeal that dismissal was improper. The appeal was barred by plaintiff's prior acquiescence to the dismissal. Assessment of attorney fees and costs of appeal against him was appropriate. Buck v. Billings Mont. Chevrolet, Inc., 248 M 276, 811 P2d 537, 48 St. Rep. 431 (1991), distinguished in McDonald v. Ponderosa Enterprises, Inc., 2015 MT 160, 379 Mont. 379, 352 P.3d 14.

Insurance Company's Appeal of Lower Court's Interpretation of Insurance Law Not Without Merit: An applicant for an insurance policy answered "no" to a question on the insurance form as to whether he had visited a physician for any purpose during the previous 3 years. In fact, the applicant had been treated for alcoholism and depression. Subsequently, the insurance company alleged that the insured committed suicide, and the insurance company refused to pay on the policy. The death was later ruled to not be suicide. The Supreme Court held that if alcoholism was a material concern of the insurance company, then it should have specifically requested information concerning alcohol use on the application form as it did with respect to other medical conditions, such as heart or kidney disease. The court also held that the defendant was not liable for damages on the basis that its appeal was without merit because the questions presented on appeal were not clearcut but delved into an area in which there was little state case law. Schneider v. Minn. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 247 M 334, 806 P2d 1032, 48 St. Rep. 224 (1991).

Sanctions Imposed in Visitation Rights Case: Parental and visitation rights were the subject of at least five separate legal actions or proceedings over a 2-year period, all but one of which were initiated by the father. Each proceeding caused unnecessary emotional and financial distress for all parties involved, including a profound adverse effect on the well-being of the child involved. Wishing to put an end to the father's abuse of the judicial system, especially regarding appeals taken without substantial or reasonable grounds, the Supreme Court imposed $250 in damages on the father. Thomas v. Hale, 246 M 64, 802 P2d 1255, 47 St. Rep. 2261 (1990).

Modification of Support and Maintenance — Not Frivolous Appeal: In a divorce action, the husband brought a motion to modify support and maintenance on the basis that he had remarried and had a new family to support. The lower court refused to modify the original decree, and the husband appealed. The wife argued that she was entitled to damages and attorney fees incurred as a result of the appeal. The Supreme Court held that the appeal was not without merit and therefore the wife was not entitled to fees and costs. In re Marriage of Jones, 242 M 119, 788 P2d 1351, 47 St. Rep. 595 (1990).

Appeal of Settled Issue — Sanctions Appropriate: After several trials and hearings concerning the construction of an airfield on the appellants' land by the respondent, the appellants brought a motion to set aside most of the prior rulings by the District Court, arguing that the court did not have subject matter jurisdiction. The Supreme Court held that the issue of jurisdiction could have been raised on several prior occasions and public policy dictated that at some time litigation must come to an end. The court additionally held that the appellants were merely attempting to open the case and relitigate previously settled issues and therefore imposed damages in the amount of $500 on the appellants. Searight v. Cimino, 238 M 218, 777 P2d 335, 46 St. Rep. 1217

(1989), followed in S. Gallatin Land Corp. v. Yetter, 245 M 320, 801 P2d 575, 47 St. Rep. 2139 (1990), and cited in Shull v. First Interstate Bank of Great Falls, 269 M 32, 887 P2d 193, 51 St. Rep. 1345 (1994).

Interest Payable From Date of Judgment: Interest due on the amount wife was ordered to pay husband under the dissolution judgment is calculated from the date of the judgment. In re Marriage of Dalley, 237 M 287, 773 P2d 295, 46 St. Rep. 808 (1989).

Damages to Respondent for Appeal Taken Without Substantial Grounds — Skimpy Briefs: Damages to respondent were proper when counsel for appellant was repeatedly informed by the trial judge of the need to establish a duty owing by the respondent, but no evidence of a duty was presented. Assessment of damages was further warranted because appellant's brief did not contain: (1) a statement of the case; (2) citations to authority for numerous contentions; (3) citations to pages of the record relied upon; and (4) accurate quotations of case law, commissioners' comments, and the record. Rookhuizen v. Blain's Mobile Home Court, Inc., 236 M 7, 767 P2d 1331, 46 St. Rep. 139 (1989).

Attorney Fees Denied: When a reasonable ground for an appeal exists, no sanctions under former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), will be imposed. Tope v. Taylor, 235 M 124, 768 P2d 845, 45 St. Rep. 2242 (1988), followed in Bickler v. The Racquet Club Heights Associates, 258 M 19, 850 P2d 967, 50 St. Rep. 409 (1993), and Bi-Lo Foods, Inc. v. Alpine Bank, 1998 MT 40, 287 M 367, 955 P2d 154, 55 St. Rep. 131 (1998). See also In re Estate of Goick, 275 M 13, 909 P2d 1165, 53 St. Rep. 12 (1996), and In re Parenting of K.P., 2005 MT 297, 329 M 337, 124 P3d 1091 (2005). However, see Tipp v. Skjelset, 1998 MT 263, 291 M 288, 967 P2d 787, 55 St. Rep. 1084 (1998).

Frivolous Appeal in Dissolution Case From Distribution of Property and Award of Child Support: In dividing a modest amount of marital property and awarding child support in this dissolution action, the District Court apparently tried to make certain that each party had an automobile and his own pension benefits and personal property and set the child support amount well within child support guidelines. The husband's appeal was obviously trifling, without substantial basis, and perhaps mean-spirited. The wife is entitled to an award of damages in the form of her attorney fees incurred in the appeal. In re Marriage of Larson, 234 M 400, 763 P2d 1109, 45 St. Rep. 2003 (1988).

Repeated Custody Challenges — Attorney Fees Proper — Meritless Appeal Warranting Sanctions: The District Court's determination that the father's repeated actions for sole custody were intended to harass, obstruct, and delay the mother's right to joint custody and were an abuse of process highly detrimental to the best interests of the children was sufficient to trigger the award of attorney fees and costs against the father under 40-4-219. Appeal of the custody question to the Supreme Court was meritless, and sanctions were proper under former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). In re Marriage of West, 233 M 47, 758 P2d 282, 45 St. Rep. 1281 (1988).

Provision for Fees by Contract or Statute: Attorney fees are allowed when they are provided for by statute or contractual provision. Poulsen's, Inc. v. Wood, 232 M 411, 756 P2d 1162, 45 St. Rep. 1154 (1988), followed in Wise v. Sebena, 248 M 32, 808 P2d 494, 48 St. Rep. 309 (1991), and in Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. Hill, 266 M 258, 879 P2d 1158, 50 St. Rep. 726 (1993).

Attorney Fees as Element of Costs Granted Against Governmental Entity: In a case where the Department of Revenue sought back child support, received and cashed a check from defendant in an accord and satisfaction, then 1 year later levied execution on defendant's accrued and future wages and, although under a restraining order not to attempt collection or enforcement of a distraint warrant, intercepted defendant's federal and state income tax refunds, the District Court properly awarded costs to the defendant in the form of attorney fees under 25-10-711. The Supreme Court affirmed, citing the holding in State ex rel. Florence-Carlton Consol. School District v. District Court, 193 M 413, 632 P2d 318, 38 St. Rep. 1204 (1981), that if, under all the circumstances of a case, justice would require the imposition of costs, equity can further provide in extreme cases to allow attorney fees as an element of those costs. St. v. Frank, 226 M 283, 735 P2d 290, 44 St. Rep. 657 (1987), distinguished, in the absence of proof of extreme state conduct, in Weber v. St., 253 M 148, 831 P2d 1359, 49 St. Rep. 397 (1992).

Minor Changes in Grant of Custody on Remand — No Legal Issues Reversed: In affirming a decision on remand by the District Court to hold each party responsible for its own costs of the original appeal and to equally divide the costs of the children's lawyer, the court followed State ex rel. Nesbitt v. District Court, 119 M 198, 173 P2d 412 (1946), in holding that under former Rule 33, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), the slight modification in the previous decree did not make appellant the successful party on appeal and that absent reversal of legal questions in favor of either party, assignment of individual costs was proper. In re Marriage of Kuzara, 224 M 124, 728 P2d 786, 43 St. Rep. 2068 (1986).

Modification of Judgment — Recalculation of Damages Based on When Interest to Accrue: The jury set the date on which interest on damages would begin to accrue as October 16, the expected date of harvest according to the jury form. Defendant argued that the determination was nonsensical because it put the date of expected harvest after the date in October on which the replacement crop was actually harvested. In modifying the judgment, the Supreme Court found no appearance of jury passion or prejudice in reaching the verdict and remanded for recalculation of damages using October 2 as the expected date of harvest. Vandalia Ranch, Inc. v. Farmers Union & Oil Supply Co., 221 M 253, 718 P2d 647, 43 St. Rep. 790 (1986).

Intervening Statutory Amendment as Justification for Appealing Question of Law Decided Previously: When appellant based its appeal on a question of law previously decided, its appeal was not taken without reasonable grounds when the law in question had since been amended. Mortensen Constr. Co. v. Burlington N., Inc., 218 M 415, 708 P2d 1006, 42 St. Rep. 1699 (1985).

Workers' Compensation Claim — Penalty Denied: A penalty under former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), was inappropriate when the insurer pursued substantial and reasonable legal grounds throughout the protracted litigation. Conway v. Blackfeet Indian Dev., Inc., 217 M 54, 702 P2d 970, 42 St. Rep. 1020 (1985).

Modification of Incorrect Money Judgment — Interest Due on Retroactively Due Increase: If a judgment is effective from the date of entry and any changes to the judgment relate back to the entry date, it follows that interest is assessed from the date of judgment. Where a child support and maintenance decree was later modified and larger payments granted, with the increase made retroactive to the date of the original decree, interest was due on that retroactive amount, beginning on the date of the original decree. In re Marriage of Wilson, 216 M 392, 701 P2d 1372, 42 St. Rep. 894 (1985).

Workers' Compensation Court — No Interest on Claimants' Judgments: On remand from the Supreme Court to the Workers' Compensation Court for a determination of reasonable costs and attorney fees, the Workers' Compensation Court determined that claimant was not entitled to interest based on past due compensation and medical benefits awarded by its earlier judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed. The penalties and assessments allowed against an insurer under the Workers' Compensation Act are the exclusive penalties and assessments that can be assessed against an insurer in absence of authorizing legislation. Carlson v. Cain, 216 M 129, 700 P2d 607, 42 St. Rep. 695 (1985).

Frivolous Appeal Without Purpose of Delay — No Attorney's Fees Awarded: Although appeal appeared to be taken without substantial reasonable grounds, the rule allowing damages for a frivolous appeal has another prong. The appeal must be taken for purposes of delay only. Finding no such purpose, the Supreme Court denied respondent's petition for attorney's fees and costs for the appeal, except as provided in former Rule 33, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Smith v. Smith, 212 M 223, 686 P2d 912, 41 St. Rep. 1695 (1984).

Damages for Frivolous Appeal on Claim of Judicial Prejudice: On November 17, 1981, the Supreme Court decided Larry C. Iverson, Inc. v. Bouma, 195 M 351, 639 P2d 47, 38 St. Rep. 1911 (1981). In that case the court partially affirmed a summary judgment for the plaintiff and remanded the case to modify the accounting decree in accordance with its opinion. Defendant sought to disqualify the District Court Judge, and a hearing was held. No bias or prejudice was found, and at a later hearing the accounting decree was modified. Defendant then appealed, claiming that the District Court Judge and the Supreme Court had violated his rights to due process because of prejudice. The Supreme Court dismissed the appeal as frivolous and assessed damages in the amount of $500 against the appellant. Larry C. Iverson, Inc. v. Bouma, 39 St. Rep. 2126 (1982) (apparently not reported in Pacific Reporter or Montana Reports).

Award of Fees Reasonable — Appeal to Clarify Alternative Judgment Not Frivolous: In an original judgment of October 31, 1979, plaintiffs were given the alternatives of either repairing a damaged irrigation ditch or paying damages of $5,500. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court, and in Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981), the court found substantial evidence to support the District Court's findings. This became the law of the case. The case was remanded for a determination of attorney fees to be awarded to defendant. On remand, attorneys for defendant requested fees of $11,000. The District Court awarded fees of $2,000 based on testimony received. The Supreme Court found that this finding was not clearly erroneous. The court also declined to award attorney fees under former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), for the appeal because plaintiffs were justified in bringing the appeal to clarify the alternative judgment. Marta v. Smith, 200 M 414, 650 P2d 1387, 39 St. Rep. 1839 (1982).

Appeal Taken to Prevent Amendment — Sanction Imposed: After respondent moved to amend the judgment of the District Court, appellant filed a notice of appeal. The Supreme Court held that the filing of the notice of appeal divested the trial court of jurisdiction to amend the judgment. The court further stated that sanctions under former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), would be imposed on parties using this type of unfair procedural tactic. United Farm Agency v. Blome, 198 M 435, 646 P2d 1205, 39 St. Rep. 1115 (1982).

Abuse of Process to Delay Possession of Real Property — Damages Awarded: In a suit brought by Sun Dial to regain possession of land from Gold Creek, a settlement was reached on the day set for trial. The settlement required Gold Creek to pay Sun Dial $1.3 million within 1 year of the settlement date. Payment was not made and the court ordered judgment for Sun Dial's immediate possession of the land. Gold Creek then began various legal maneuvers that culminated in this appeal. The Supreme Court found that the purpose of these maneuvers was to give Gold Creek more time to sell the land and that this amounted to abuse of the appeal process. A judgment was entered against Gold Creek under former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Sun Dial Land Co., Inc. v. Gold Creek Ranches, Inc., 198 M 247, 645 P2d 936, 39 St. Rep. 908 (1982).

Unequal Division of Marital Assets — Reasonable Grounds for Appeal: Where the court divided the marital assets unequally, abuse of discretion was reasonably at issue, thereby precluding respondent from recovering attorney fees on appeal. In re the Marriage of Martens v. Martens, 196 M 71, 637 P2d 523, 38 St. Rep. 2135 (1981).

Child Custody Case — Appeal Held Not Frivolous: Where, following a decree awarding all of the children of the parties to the father, the mother appealed, alleging generally that the record did not support the award of custody, the Supreme Court refused to find that the appeal was frivolous. The court held that, unlike the case of Billings v. Billings, 189 M 520, 616 P2d 1104 (1980), the mother did not appear to be motivated by a desire to needlessly tie up the litigation process and that, although the facts afforded the appellant little hope of prevailing an appeal, the court would find an appeal in a child custody case to be frivolous in only the most limited circumstances. In re Marriage of Bier v. Sherrard, 191 M 215, 623 P2d 550, 38 St. Rep. 158 (1981).

Property Settlement — Liability for Interest Pending Appeal — Burden of Parties: Where, following a decree dissolving the marriage of the parties and awarding a money judgment to the wife, the husband obtained a stay of execution pending appeal, the trial court did not err upon remand in ordering the husband to pay interest upon the previous judgment, calculated from the day the judgment was originally rendered. Under the holding in Kerner v. N. Pac. Ry., 161 M 177, 505 P2d 86 (1973), a judgment bears interest from the date of its entry even though it is subject to direct attack. As the husband made no attempt to see what obligations were accruing, the court will not allow the husband to avoid his interest obligations by claiming that his wife did not do enough to secure it. Knudson v. Knudson, 191 M 204, 622 P2d 1025, 38 St. Rep. 154 (1981).

Frivolous Appeal From Workers' Compensation Court: An appeal by an insurance company from a decision of the Workers' Compensation Court to not assume jurisdiction over an action filed by the insurance company was frivolous where the insurance company filed the action in Workers' Compensation Court subsequent to an action filed in District Court for the purpose of obtaining a declaratory ruling on an issue being addressed in District Court. This is "an instance where an insurance company has abused the court system in its efforts to avoid meeting the issues head-on in District Court", and as a real party in interest, the insurance company bears the responsibility for the appeal and is liable for penalties to be paid to the parties forced into Workers' Compensation Court proceedings. Alaska Pac. Assurance v. L.H.C., Inc., 191 M 120, 622 P2d 224, 38 St. Rep. 23 (1981). The Supreme Court declared its opinion to be substituted for the opinion in Alaska Pac. Assurance Co. v. L.H.C., Inc., 37 St. Rep. 1616 (1980).

Removal of Child From State — Appeal Held Not Frivolous: The mother, custodian of the couple's child, moved to North Carolina without informing the District Court as required by the divorce decree. The father brought suit for change of custody, which was denied. The mother contended that his appeal was frivolous and sought attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that neither of the mother's contentions was proper, as she had forced the father to initiate the litigation by moving to North Carolina without first getting a change in the visitation privileges. In re Marriage of Winn, 190 M 73, 618 P2d 870, 37 St. Rep. 1734 (1980).

Motion for Modification of Divorce Decree Not New Action Supporting Venue Change: After a divorce was granted, the husband filed three petitions for modification of the divorce decree over a period of 6 years, the third of which sought custody of the minor son of the marriage. Since the divorce, the mother had moved to another county, and upon the third petition by her former husband, she moved for a change of venue to her county of residence. Her primary argument for this motion was that she was entitled to a change of venue under 25-2-108 (renumbered 25-2-118) because the former husband's petition was the commencement of a new action. The Supreme Court called this frivolous and said it would assess damages under former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), in future appeals of this nature. In re Billings v. Billings, 189 M 520, 616 P2d 1104, 37 St. Rep. 1704 (1980).

Workers' Compensation Court — Declaratory Judgment — Frivolous Appeal: The Workers' Compensation Court properly refused to take jurisdiction of a petition seeking, in essence, a declaratory judgment that petitioner, Raines, was an employee rather than an independent contractor so as to relieve him of liability in a wrongful death action filed in District Court. The decision was one for the District Court since the workers' compensation court is not empowered to issue declaratory judgments. The insurance company and its counsel are charged with such minimum knowledge and, thus, must pay a $500 penalty for filing a frivolous appeal. Alaska Pac. Assurance Co. v. L.H.C., Inc., 37 St. Rep. 1616 (1980). (This opinion was withdrawn by the opinion in Alaska Pac. Assurance Co. v. L.H.C., Inc., 191 M 120, 622 P2d 224, 38 St. Rep. 23 (1981).)

No Frivolous Appeal — Bona Fide Difference of Opinion: Albertson's requested the court to impose sanctions upon the Department of Business Regulation for a frivolous appeal under former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). The request was denied. The Department's position is well within the bounds of legitimate argument on a substantive issue on which there is a bona fide difference of opinion. The appeal is not frivolous within the meaning of the rule. Albertson's v. Dept. of Business Regulation, 184 M 12, 601 P2d 43 (1979).

Sanctions Inappropriate — Sufficiency of Evidence as to Competency to Make Will: The specifications of error raised by appellants regarding sufficiency of evidence as to competency of decedent to make a will are not groundless or unreasonable. Thus under former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), damages were not appropriate in this appeal. In re Holm, Holm v. Parsons, 179 M 375, 588 P2d 531 (1979).

Arguable Contentions: While the Supreme Court did not find that the arguments advanced by the plaintiff on appeal were controlling, his contentions were certainly arguable. Hence defendant's request for costs and attorney's fees under former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), was denied. LaForest v. Texaco, Inc., 179 M 42, 585 P2d 1318 (1978), followed in Medders v. Joyes, 233 M 183, 758 P2d 769, 45 St. Rep. 1409 (1988).

Sanctions Not Authorized Against Respondent: The sanctions for bringing a frivolous appeal are authorized against an appellant, not a respondent in whose favor the District Court ruled. McGee v. Burlington N., Inc., 179 M 1, 585 P2d 1296 (1978).

Sufficiency of Evidence at Issue: The question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the court's findings of fact and conclusions of law and judgment was reasonably in issue, thus respondent was not entitled to damages under former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Erdman v. C & C Sales, Inc., 176 M 177, 577 P2d 55 (1978).

Damages Denied: The Supreme Court held that an appeal of the granting of motion for summary judgment was not taken "without substantial or reasonable grounds" and declined to grant damages under former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Keller v. Llewellyn, 175 M 164, 573 P2d 166 (1977).

Reasonable Grounds for Appeal: The Supreme Court failed to find substantial evidence that an appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds or only for purposes of delay. Poeppel v. Fisher, 175 M 136, 572 P2d 912 (1977).

Quiet Title Action — Tax Deed: Appeal from judgment against plaintiff in action to obtain a tax deed from the county and quiet title to property was not frivolous. Niles v. Carbon County, 174 M 20, 568 P2d 524 (1977).

Frivolous Appeal — Writ of Execution: Where defendants, who were liable under two judgments to pay plaintiff in excess of $16,000, offered him $152 as satisfaction in full pursuant to a stipulation by the parties' attorneys allegedly authorizing such a settlement, then appealed issuance of a Writ of Execution to enforce the judgment after plaintiff's rejection of their tender, they were guilty of attempting to delay payment of their debt by means of a frivolous appeal, and plaintiff was entitled to damages under former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Heller v. Osburnsen, 169 M 459, 548 P2d 607 (1976).

Damages Denied — Question Not Previously Decided: Assessment of damages against appellants was declined where issue of penalty payment due to professional employee was arguable and had not previously been decided by the appellate court. Hammill v. Young, 168 M 81, 540 P2d 971 (1975).

Reversal Without Directions: Where Supreme Court by its reversal of judgment granted plaintiff's demand for payment of dishonored checks, further evidence as to damages would not be proper; and although court omitted specific directions, there was no need for a new trial. Sun River Cattle Co. v. Miners' Bank of Mont., 164 M 479, 525 P2d 19 (1974).

Frivolous Appeal — Striking of Documents: Strangers to action who filed various documents which were stricken as frivolous, then appealed from such striking, were assessed $1,000 damages under former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Farmers St. Bank of Conrad v. Iverson, 162 M 130, 509 P2d 839 (1973).

Damages Not Allowed: Appellee was not entitled to recover additional damages under former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), where appellant had a reasonable ground for appeal. Larry Larson & Assoc. v. John R. Daily, Inc., 158 M 231, 490 P2d 355 (1971).

Rule 20. Petitions for rehearing.

Case Notes

DECISIONS UNDER SUPERSEDED RULES

Improper Denial of Motion to Amend Prior Judgment on Remand Under Law of Case Doctrine: Following remand of Muri v. Frank, 2001 MT 29, 304 M 171, 18 P3d 1022 (2001) (Muri I), defendants moved to amend the judgment to conform to the Supreme Court decision. The District Court denied the motion and instead made new findings of fact that conflicted with the previously unchallenged findings upon which the Supreme Court's decision was based. Defendants appealed the denial of their motion, and the Supreme Court reversed. Under the doctrine of the law of the case, a prior Supreme Court decision resolving an issue between the same parties is binding and may not be relitigated. Because plaintiff did not appeal the findings upon which the Supreme Court relied in Muri I, the District Court had no authority to reconsider the findings on remand, and denial of the motion to amend the previously amended judgment was reversible error. Muri v. Frank, 2003 MT 316, 318 M 269, 80 P3d 77 (2003).

Retroactivity of New Judicial Rules and Judicial Interpretation — Section 46-23-1012 (1999) Applied Retroactively to Parole Revocations Between April 28, 1999, and May 1, 2001: On April 26, 2001, the Supreme Court held that a probable cause hearing was mandatory only when an offender had been arrested pursuant to a warrant issued by a judge. On May 4, 2001, Goebel petitioned the court to look beyond the plain language of 46-23-1012 and hold that the probable cause hearing was mandatory only when an offender has been arrested by a probation officer rather than pursuant to a warrant issued by a judge. Effective May 1, 2001, the Legislature amended 46-23-1012 to delete the requirement for a probable cause hearing. On May 9, 2001, Giddings filed a petition for rehearing, asking the court to direct the District Court to dismiss the petition to revoke Giddings' suspended sentence on grounds that the District Court lacked jurisdiction to revoke the suspended sentence because of the amendment to 46-23-1012, contending that application of the new statute would violate the constitutional ban on ex post facto legislation. The Supreme Court declined to modify the decision in either Goebel or Giddings because no material fact or question decisive of the cases themselves was overlooked and the decisions did not conflict with any express statute or controlling decision. However, the court did discuss the retroactive application of judicial rules of criminal procedure and the judicial interpretation of a statute, as well as the claim that the retroactive application of 46-23-1012 was a violation of the ex post facto clause. Citing Rivers v. Roadway Express, 511 US 298 (1994), the court held that a court's interpretation of a statute is never new law because the decision declares what the statute meant from the day of its enactment, not from the date of the decision. In determining whether a statute violates the ex post facto clause, the court referred to the test in St. v. Duffy, 2000 MT 186, 300 M 381, 6 P3d 453 (2000), which provided that to be in violation of the clause, a statute must be retrospective and must disadvantage the offender affected by it. In this case, Giddings was not disadvantaged because the statutory change did not alter the definition of or punishment for the probation violation that Giddings was charged with. Further, the error that was the basis for reversal of Giddings' case was jurisdictional, so all proceedings in the District Court were void ab initio, and the state was entitled to proceed anew, following the procedure outlined in the newly amended version of 46-23-1012. The Supreme Court's decisions based on the 1999 version of 46-23-1012 were applicable retroactively to persons whose probation or parole was revoked between April 28, 1999, and May 1, 2001. Thus, if a person was arrested during that period pursuant to a warrant issued by a judge and was not afforded a probable cause hearing within 36 hours of arrest, then the District Court did not have jurisdiction to hold a revocation hearing, so the state could refile the petition to revoke the person's probation pursuant to the 2001 version of 46-23-1012, as long as the probationer was still under the custody or supervision of the Department of Corrections on May 1, 2001. If the person was afforded a probable cause hearing within 36 hours of arrest, then the District Court did have jurisdiction to hold a revocation hearing. St. v. Goebel, 2001 MT 155, 306 M 83, 31 P3d 340 (2001), followed in St. v. Finley, 2003 MT 239, 317 M 268, 77 P3d 193 (2003), and in St. v. Van Haele, 2005 MT 153, 327 M 400, 114 P3d 225 (2005).

Failure of District Court to Properly Consider Prior Supreme Court Decision Regarding Suppression of Evidence as Law of Case — Grant of Request for Further Evidentiary Hearing Reversible Error: In St. v. Gilder, 1999 MT 207, 295 M 483, 985 P2d 147 (1999) (Gilder I), the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court erred when it denied Gilder's motion to suppress evidence obtained during the stop of Gilder's vehicle because the investigating officer did not have a particularized suspicion to justify the stop; however, the Supreme Court did not remand for further proceedings. Following the issuance of remittitur in Gilder I, the state requested an evidentiary hearing to present additional evidence to meet its burden of establishing particularized suspicion, arguing that a hearing was appropriate because Gilder I had referenced the District Court's failure to conduct an evidentiary hearing prior to its original denial of the motion to suppress. The request for an evidentiary hearing was granted over Gilder's objection, and the arresting officer was allowed to testify and supplement the evidence offered by the state in Gilder I. The District Court then issued an order again denying Gilder's motion to suppress, and Gilder appealed. The state's interpretation of Gilder I as an invitation for further proceedings on the suppression issue was incorrect. Although the District Court could have properly revisited factual determinations in regard to other issues, the suppression issue in Gilder I was foreclosed from further consideration. Gilder I constituted the law of the case regarding the lack of particularized suspicion for the investigative stop and the suppression of evidence obtained from the stop, and the District Court abused its discretion by not properly treating Gilder I as the law of the case and by conducting further evidentiary hearings on a matter that was conclusively decided by the Supreme Court in the previous proceedings. St. v. Gilder, 2001 MT 121, 305 M 362, 28 P3d 488 (2001), following Zavarelli v. Might, 239 M 120, 779 P2d 489 (1989).

Postconviction Reconsideration Untimely: Petitioner, sentenced to two terms of 100 years plus 3 years for use of a weapon and to two 10-year terms plus 2 years for use of a weapon, filed a motion requesting that the Montana Supreme Court reconsider its order denying his second amended petition for postconviction relief. In denying the motion, the Supreme Court ruled that the petitioner's reconsideration motion was untimely because it was filed more than 10 days after the court entered its denial order. Hans v. St., 1998 MT 255, 291 M 227, 967 P2d 396, 55 St. Rep. 1052 (1998).

Court Invested With Full Jurisdiction on Remand Except for Issues Controlled by Law of Case: In a dispute concerning the common boundary line between parcels of real property, defendant argued that the District Court erred in allowing a new affirmative defense of mutual mistake when the court received the case again upon remand. Under the doctrine of the law of the case, the District Court was properly reinvested with full jurisdiction of the cause and the issues raised in the cause are generally open for the court's decision, except for the legal conclusions controlled by the law of the case established in the reversal. The general principle of the doctrine of the law of the case applies only to determinations of questions of law identical to those on the former appeal and not to questions of fact. Zavarelli v. Might, 239 M 120, 779 P2d 489, 46 St. Rep. 1558 (1989), followed in Story v. Bozeman, 259 M 207, 856 P2d 202, 50 St. Rep. 761 (1993), Trustees, Carbon County School District No. 28 v. Spivey, 262 M 513, 866 P2d 208, 50 St. Rep. 1664 (1993), in which the County Superintendent had latitude beyond the parameters of the first county decision to terminate a teacher, Haines Pipeline Constr., Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 265 M 282, 876 P2d 632, 51 St. Rep. 514 (1994), AgAmerica, FCB v. Robson, 272 M 413, 901 P2d 100, 52 St. Rep. 800 (1995), St. v. Gilder, 2001 MT 121, 305 M 362, 28 P3d 488 (2001), and Bradley v. Crow Tribe of Indians, 2005 MT 309, 329 M 448, 124 P3d 1143 (2005).

Appeal of Prior Issue — Dismissed: The Supreme Court dismissed an appeal raising the same issue of attorney fees that was addressed in a prior determination of the court that constituted a final adjudication. Belgrade St. Bank v. Swainson, 176 M 444, 578 P2d 1166 (1978), followed in In re Marriage of Gies, 218 M 433, 709 P2d 635, 42 St. Rep. 1715 (1985).

Who May Participate in Rehearing Decisions: Only those Justices participating in the original decision and substituting District Judges may decide whether or not a case may be reheard. In re Petitions for Rehearing, 34 St. Rep. 5 (1977) (apparently not reported in Pacific Reporter or Montana Reports).

Rule 21. Remittitur.

Case Notes

CASES DECIDED UNDER SUPERSEDED RULES

Record on Appeal — Lack of Transcript: Arguments on the sufficiency of the evidence in action on charges of unfair labor practices could not be considered without a transcript of the testimony at the original administrative hearing. The cause was remanded to the trial court for election by the employee either to order and pay for the transcript so the trial court could receive it and enter further judgment or to accept affirmation of the trial court's decision. Klundt v. St., 222 M 172, 720 P2d 1181, 43 St. Rep. 1148 (1986).

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Judgment Pursuant to Mandate Becomes Final Judgment: The entry of the judgment rendered by the Supreme Court by the Clerk of the District Court as directed by statute ipso facto modifies the judgment theretofore entered by the District Court. The judgment of the Supreme Court so entered becomes the final judgment in the cause. Hansen v. Hansen, 130 M 496, 304 P2d 1107 (1956).

Modification of Judgment — Language Incorrect: Where Supreme Court, on appeal, by its judgment and remittitur, modified the judgment of the lower court, an entry by the lower court to the effect that its former judgment "stand for naught" is error and can be corrected. Hansen v. Hansen, 130 M 496, 304 P2d 1107 (1956).

Application of Statutes Directing Entry of Judgment: A mandate of the Supreme Court, reversing a judgment and remanding the case, with directions to enter judgment, must be interpreted in the light of the statutes governing the entry of a judgment after appeal, and the direction to enter judgment as directed must be construed as addressed to the clerk of the trial court. State ex rel. Dolenty v. Reece, 43 M 291, 115 P 681 (1911).

Recording of Judgment Proper: The practice of the clerk of the trial court of signing and recording a formal judgment, on receipt of a remittitur by the Clerk of the Supreme Court, is proper, in the absence of any other legislative direction. State ex rel. Dolenty v. Reece, 43 M 291, 115 P 681 (1911).

Duty of Clerk Ministerial Duty: The duty which the former statute imposed upon the Clerk of the District Court, in requiring him to enter on his docket the judgment of the Supreme Court rendered in any cause before it on appeal, is a purely ministerial one. State ex rel. Dolenty v. District Court, 42 M 170, 111 P 731 (1910).

Mandamus Against District Court Improper — Duty Upon Clerk: Since the duty of entering a judgment rendered by the Supreme Court in disposing of an appeal rests upon the Clerk of the District Court from which the appeal was taken, such court, or its judge, may not be compelled by mandamus to perform the act thus imposed by law upon the Clerk. State ex rel. Dolenty v. District Court, 42 M 170, 111 P 731 (1910).

Rule 22. Stay of judgment or order pending appeal.

Compiler's Comments

2011 Amendment: Supreme Court Order No. AF 07-0016 provided: "Finally, a new Rule 22(5) is adopted to conform with M. R. Civ. P. 62(f), and the former Rule 22(5) is renumbered Rule 22(6)."

CASES DECIDED UNDER CURRENT RULES

Department Decision to Move Office — Right to Know — Mootness Due to Lack of Stay: The plaintiffs challenged the Department of Justice's decision to move the Title and Registration Bureau office from Deer Lodge to Helena, alleging violations of the public's rights to know and participate. The District Court entered judgment in favor of the Department, and the plaintiffs timely appealed but failed to stay the District Court's judgment. The Department finished relocating its staff and operations to Helena before the submission of the appeal. Because the office space was no longer under the Department's control, the staff had been relocated, and the reorganization was complete, the change in circumstances precluded a meaningful remedy, rendering the plaintiffs' claims moot. Deer Lodge v. Fox, 2017 MT 129, 387 Mont. 478, 395 P.3d 506.

Fraudulently Transferred Property Awarded to Debtor — Right of Redemption Available — Appeal Not Moot: A District Court awarded to the plaintiff property that the court ruled had been fraudulently transferred. The defendant did not file for a stay, and the property was transferred to the plaintiff subject to a right of redemption. The defendant filed an appeal, and the plaintiff argued that the appeal was moot because he had already taken possession of the property and there was no remedy available to the previous title holder. The Supreme Court disagreed, concluding that a court could award the defendant restitution in an amount to allow her to redeem the property. Larson Lumber Co., Inc. v. Bilt Rite Constr. & Landscaping, LLC, 2014 MT 61, 374 Mont. 167, 320 P.3d 471.

Mootness Not Established When Plaintiff Alleging Spot Zoning Could Be Restored to Original Position: The transfer of property to a third party for the purpose of constructing a power plant did not render moot a plaintiff's spot zoning claim because the original parcel remained intact and the completion and operation of the power plant had not materialized. Mootness revolves around a court's ability to restore the parties to their original position. Plains Grains L.P. v. Bd. of County Commr's, 2010 MT 155, 357 Mont. 61, 238 P.3d 332.

CASES DECIDED UNDER SUPERSEDED RULES

Failure to File for Stay of Execution of Judgment or Injunction to Delay Subdivision Approval — Subsequent Approval Rendering Issue Moot: Plaintiff filed a complaint alleging that Gallatin County unlawfully gave preliminary approval for a subdivision. However, plaintiff did not seek an injunction to prohibit the approval process from continuing. While the action was pending, the county granted final approval of the subdivision, and the District Court granted the county's motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff timely appealed, but did not apply to the District Court or the Supreme Court for a stay of judgment. Thus, there was no order in effect that prohibited the county from approving the subdivision or to prevent the selling of subdivision lots. Plaintiff could not complain that the subdivision approval process continued when plaintiff failed to seek available remedies to preserve the status quo pending appeal. At the time of appeal, the lots had been sold and the parties could not be returned to the status quo, so the appeal was dismissed as moot. Henesh v. Bd. of Comm'rs of Gallatin County, 2007 MT 335, 340 M 239, 173 P3d 1188 (2007), followed in Povsha v. Billings, 2007 MT 353, 340 M 346, 174 P3d 515 (2007). However, see Larson Lumber Co., Inc. v. Bilt Rite Constr. & Landscaping, LLC, 2014 MT 61, 374 Mont. 167, 320 P.3d 471, in which the Supreme Court ruled an appeal was not moot when property awarded to the plaintiff was still subject to the right of redemption by the defendant.

When Supersedeas Bond Remains in Effect Following Remand: On remand, a surety remains in effect when the question is the amount of damages, and not whether a party is entitled to damages. If a question of liability or a question of whether a party is entitled to damages remains after an appeal, the bond may lapse. Spooner Constr. & Tree Serv., Inc. v. Maner, 2003 MT 43, 314 M 268, 66 P3d 263 (2003), following Tenn. Valley Authority v. Atlas Mach. & Iron Works, 803 F2d 794 (4th Cir. 1986), and Beatrice Foods Co. v. New England Printing, 930 F2d 1572 (Fed. Cir. 1991).

Partial Payment of Interest on Promissory Note Not Precluding Appeal: Plaintiff owed defendant $200,000 plus interest on a promissory note. The same day that plaintiff filed a claim for misrepresentation and failure to disclose, plaintiff also deposited the first promissory note payment with the Clerk of the District Court. Following judgment for plaintiff, the District Court ordered release of the funds, which defendant accepted. Plaintiff argued that by accepting the funds and the fruits of the judgment, defendant was prohibited from prosecuting an appeal to reverse the judgment. Defendant responded that because the judgment could not possibly affect the benefit that was accepted, the right to appeal was not waived. The long-recognized general rule is that the right to accept the fruits of a judgment and at the same time prosecute an appeal from it are not concurrent, but rather wholly inconsistent, rights and that the election of one excludes the enjoyment of the other (see Peck v. Bersanti, 101 M 6, 52 P2d 168 (1935)). The exception is that when reversal of the judgment cannot possibly affect the appellant's right to the benefit accepted under a judgment, then appeal may be taken and sustained despite the fact that the benefit was sought and secured (see Niles v. Carbon County, 174 M 20, 568 P2d 524 (1977)). The acceptance of payments that were not contested or that were irrevocably conceded as due by the opposing party does not preclude appeal. Here, when defendant accepted the funds, it simply accepted what plaintiff already conceded was due and no more than it conceded would be due in the event that the appeal was successful. Therefore, defendant did not waive the right to appeal. H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000).

Involuntary Satisfaction of Judgment — Request for Stay of Execution Not Required: Following entry and satisfaction of judgment in District Court, the parties were aware of a contemplated appeal, but no stay of execution was requested or supersedeas bond posted. After plaintiff acquired title to the disputed property pursuant to the judgment, defendant filed a notice of appeal and lis pendens, effectively preserving the status quo pending appeal. Plaintiff moved to dismiss, contending that by voluntarily satisfying the judgment, defendants waived their right to appeal. Applying Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996), the Supreme Court held that the parties' course of conduct illustrated the involuntary, rather than voluntary nature of the satisfaction of judgment. Because satisfaction was involuntary, the right to appeal was not waived. Further, under former Rule 7, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), a party may request a stay of execution, but the request is not mandatory, even though a party choosing not to seek a stay runs the risk of having the appeal become moot. Plaintiff's motion to dismiss was denied. Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 1078 (1999).

Mootness as Separate From Question of Waiver of Appeal Rights — Voluntary Versus Involuntary Performance: The question of whether compliance with a judgment was voluntary or not has bearing on whether a party has waived the right to appeal, but it has no bearing on the question of mootness, which arises when an appellate court cannot grant effective relief. The issue of mootness is separate and distinct from the question of waiver of appeal rights. Complying with the judgment does not necessarily render the appeal moot. However, if compliance is voluntary, the party may be said to have waived any objection to the judgment. In deciding whether a case is moot, it must be determined whether effective relief is available. The fact that a party has not voluntarily waived the right to appeal does not necessarily mean that effective relief can still be provided on appeal, nor may a party claim an exception to the mootness doctrine when the case became moot through that party's own failure to seek a stay of judgment. Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996), following and clarifying State ex rel. Hagerty v. Rafn, 130 M 554, 304 P2d 918 (1956), and Martin Dev. Co. v. Keeney Co., 216 M 212, 703 P2d 143 (1985), overruling any contrary holding in Mont. Nat'l Bank of Roundup v. Dept. of Revenue, 167 M 429, 539 P2d 722 (1975), First Nat'l Bank in Eureka v. Giles, 225 M 467, 733 P2d 357 (1986), Moore v. Hardy, 230 M 158, 748 P2d 477 (1988), LeClair v. Reiter, 233 M 332, 760 P2d 740 (1988), and Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604 (1993), and followed in Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 1078 (1999). See also Gates v. Deukmejian, 987 F2d 1392 (9th Cir. 1993).

Voluntary Versus Involuntary Performance — Bar of Appeal Because of Waiver: Appellants allowed a foreclosure sale to proceed, did not stay the proceedings, and did not post a supersedeas bond. Because of the danger of dismissal for mootness, there is a special need for seeking a stay when the sale of property is ordered and is not enjoined. A party confronted with a judgment ordering a foreclosure sale who allows the sale to proceed runs the risk that an appeal will be rendered moot. The question of whether compliance with a judgment was voluntary or not has bearing on whether a party has waived the right to appeal. If an appellant has voluntarily complied with or performed a judgment, that voluntary compliance may result in a waiver of that party's right to appeal and preclude the necessity of the Supreme Court addressing the issue of mootness. Similarly, when compliance is involuntary, as in most foreclosure actions, the appeal is not barred or waived but may nevertheless be moot to the extent that the Supreme Court cannot grant effective relief. Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996), following State ex rel. Hagerty v. Rafn, 130 M 554, 304 P2d 918 (1956), Gallatin Trust & Sav. Bank v. Henke, 154 M 170, 461 P2d 448 (1969), First Sec. Bank of Kalispell v. Income Properties, Inc., 208 M 121, 675 P2d 982 (1984), and Martin Dev. Co. v. Keeney Co., 216 M 212, 703 P2d 143 (1985), and followed in Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 1078 (1999).

Foreclosure Action — Appeal Not Moot Because of Owners' Failure to Post Bond or Stay Appeal: In a foreclosure action, the bank prevailed in District Court. The owners did not voluntarily relinquish the property. The bank foreclosed. The owners' failure to post a supersedeas bond or otherwise stay the proceedings in District Court did not render their appeal moot. Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604, 50 St. Rep. 509 (1993), overruled, with regard to voluntary versus involuntary payment or performance as affecting waiver of right to appeal without having bearing on mootness, in Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996).

Waiving Right to Homestead Exemption: The defendant used his home as security for an appeal in a civil case in lieu of a supersedeas bond. In the court documents relating to the security for the appeal, the defendant specifically agreed to not file for a homestead exemption on the property. Subsequently, the defendant filed for a homestead exemption. The Supreme Court ruled that although no specific provision of the homestead laws would allow the plaintiff to have the homestead exemption invalidated, the defendant had specifically waived any right he had to the homestead exemption. Amundson v. Wortman, 244 M 103, 796 P2d 205, 47 St. Rep. 1427 (1990).

Involuntary Satisfaction of Judgment — Appeal Not Rendered Moot: If a judgment is satisfied by an involuntary payment or performance, the appeal from the judgment is not thereby rendered moot. First Nat'l Bank in Eureka v. Giles, 225 M 467, 733 P2d 357, 43 St. Rep. 1326 (1986), overruling Gallatin Trust & Sav. Bank v. Henke, 154 M 170, 461 P2d 448 (1969), and In re Black's Estate, 32 M 51, 79 P 554 (1905), and followed in LeClair v. Reiter, 233 M 332, 760 P2d 740, 45 St. Rep. 1531 (1988), with LeClair distinguished in Maloney v. Heer, 257 M 500, 850 P2d 957, 50 St. Rep. 382 (1993), Giles and LeClair were overruled, with regard to voluntary versus involuntary payment or performance as affecting waiver of right to appeal without having bearing on mootness, in Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996). Turner was followed in Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 1078 (1999).

Bond Covering Judgment — Use of Bond in Companion Case: District Court did not abuse its discretion in requiring a supersedeas bond in an amount large enough to cover the judgment, including interest, or in concluding that a bond deposited in companion cases was not available to satisfy the judgment in this case. Safeco Ins. Co. v. Lovely Agency, 215 M 420, 697 P2d 1354, 42 St. Rep. 509 (1985).

No Stay of Execution Sought — Appeal Moot: Defendant bought property under a trust indenture from First National Bank of Kalispell in 1975. Defendant defaulted on the terms in 1981. The property was noticed for a public trustee's sale and was purchased by plaintiff. Plaintiff gave defendant written notice to vacate. Defendant refused, and plaintiff brought an unlawful detainer action. Defendant filed an answer questioning the propriety of the sale and plaintiff's title. Plaintiff moved for summary judgment, alleging it was a bona fide purchaser for value and that defendant's complaint was with the trustee or beneficiary under the trust indenture. No responsive pleadings were filed by defendant. The court granted summary judgment; a Writ of Possession was prepared, and damages were awarded. Defendant then filed an appeal without ever applying to the District Court for a stay of execution or supersedeas bond. By surrendering the property and paying damages under the judgment, defendant removed from the Supreme Court the authority to grant relief. The issue of damages was not before the court, only the summary judgment. The appeal was dismissed as moot. First Sec. Bank of Kalispell v. Income Properties, Inc., 208 M 121, 675 P2d 982, 41 St. Rep. 212 (1984).

Procedure for Judgment Debtor to Stay Execution of Judgment — Bond Not Approved: Petitioner requested a Writ of Supervisory Control to have an ejection order in a property dispute declared illegal. The Supreme Court in reviewing the proceedings stated that a judgment debtor desiring to stay the execution of a judgment or order of a District Court must proceed under former Rule 7, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). That rule provides that if an appellant desires a stay of proceedings where the court has made no such order, he may present to the court and secure its approval of a supersedeas bond. In this case, the District Court fixed the amount of the bond but the bond was never presented to the court for approval prior to the ejection order. Therefore, the judgment holder was entitled to enforcement of the judgment by execution under 25-13-101 and 25-13-201. The District Court followed these statutes and was authorized to order delivery of the possession of the property under 25-13-307. State ex rel. Cady v. District Court, 203 M 522, 662 P2d 602, 40 St. Rep. 610 (1983).

Stay of Execution of Judgment — Effect on Priority: On June 22 Colonial obtained a judgment against Schmidt. On June 30 Schmidt obtained a judgment against the city of Kalispell. On July 2 Colonial filed a Writ of Execution in Flathead County. On July 2 Schmidt executed a note to his bank assigning the funds from the Kalispell judgment as collateral. On July 23 the Missoula County Court issued a charging order pursuant to 35-10-505 directing that any proceeds received by Schmidt be used to satisfy Colonial's judgment. Schmidt subsequently appealed the Colonial judgment and was granted a stay of execution pending appeal. In an action to determine priority to the Kalispell judgment as between Colonial and the bank, the funds were properly applied first to the bank. Colonial was stayed from taking any action to execute on its judgment pending a decision on its appeal. Stenerson v. Colonial Terrace Assoc., 200 M 160, 649 P2d 1344, 39 St. Rep. 1646 (1982).

Bond for Judgment — Remedy for Failure to Post: Plaintiff contended defendant's appeal should be dismissed for failure to post a supersedeas bond for the full amount of the judgment for plaintiff. The contention was without merit. Plaintiff's remedy for defendant's failure to post a bond was to execute on the judgment. Failure to post a bond did not affect the right to appeal. Allers v. Willis, 197 M 499, 643 P2d 592, 39 St. Rep. 745 (1982).

No Stay of Execution — Failure to Follow Internal Guidelines: The District Court held that C. M. Russell High School had been illegally excluded from the Montana Class AA football championship playoffs and ordered them back into the playoffs, with the playoffs to start no later than 7 days from the date of the order. The Montana High School Association sought a stay of judgment pending appeal. The Supreme Court held that in order to preserve the status quo, it would not be enough to determine if the Association was correct on the merits in excluding C. M. Russell because of the alleged ineligibility of players. The court would also have to determine whether the Association followed its own rules and did not violate the law itself in reaching its decision. A new hearing would be required. A new hearing would effectively mean there would be no 1981 Class AA state football playoff. That result would be caused by the Association itself. The Supreme Court refused to grant a stay because it determined even without a record that the Association violated its own rules and therefore its decision could not stand. State ex rel. Mont. High School Ass'n v. District Court, 38 St. Rep. 1847 (1981) (apparently not reported in Pacific Reporter or Montana Reports).

District Court — No Authority to Order Dismissal of an Appeal: Under former Rule 7, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), the District Court is given the power to stay the execution of a judgment entered in its court and has broad discretion in fixing the amount of a supersedeas bond upon which a stay of execution may be conditioned. The District Court does not have authority to order dismissal of an appeal, which authority is exclusively in the Supreme Court. Hadford v. Hadford, 189 M 329, 615 P2d 920 (1980).

Substitution of Other Security for Supersedeas Bond or Bond in Lesser Amount Than Judgment: The Supreme Court denied a motion for substitution of other security or a bond in a lesser amount because neither would protect the rights of the judgment creditor. The security offered, common stocks and pledges of personal assets, is subject to fluctuations in value. The moving party might suffer some financial hardship, but he did not make prompt and thorough attempts to obtain a bond. Paulsen v. Treasure St. Indus., Inc., 183 M 439, 600 P2d 206 (1979).

Postjudgment Powers of Court: A District Court has power to award necessary maintenance, child support, and suit money after judgment in a marital dissolution case during the pendency of appeal. To hold otherwise would leave a hiatus in the remedial power of the court that could cause unmeasured hardship and distress. State ex rel. Kaasa v. District Court, 177 M 547, 582 P2d 772 (1978).

Custody Proceedings — Allegation Regarding Environment Absent: The Supreme Court vacated an earlier order which stayed the District Court's judgment ordering return of custody of a child to the mother because the father was petitioning to modify custody within 2 years of the custody decree with no allegation concerning what kind of environment the mother would provide in another state. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 176 M 488, 580 P2d 104 (1978).

Satisfaction of Judgment Precluded: The District Court's grant of a stay of disbursement and defendants' posting of a supersedeas bond precluded satisfaction of plaintiff's judgment. Therefore, plaintiff's motion to dismiss the appeal was denied. Erdman v. C & C Sales, Inc., 176 M 177, 577 P2d 55 (1978).

Failure to Apply for Stay — Effect on Appeal: When plaintiff neither applied for a stay of execution nor filed a supersedeas bond but accepted and cashed warrants issued to him for reimbursement of taxes, penalty, and interest paid on a tax deed, he was not entitled to appeal. Niles v. Carbon County, 174 M 20, 568 P2d 524 (1977).

Filing of Supersedeas Bond on Appeal Not to Suspend Decree's Provision Regarding Child Support: Supreme Court will not sanction nonpayment of support money decreed in District Court on appeal where need for such funds is shown but will require that such support payments be kept current until final determination of the appeal. Woolverton v. Woolverton, 169 M 490, 549 P2d 458 (1976).

Restitution of Funds — Previous Judgment Vacated on Appeal: The Supreme Court denied the defendant's request for a Writ of Supervisory Control requiring the District Court to order an accounting and restitution of funds, since execution was based upon a previous judgment reversed only as to damages and because the defendant failed to post a supersedeas bond. State ex rel. Burlington N., Inc. v. District Court, 169 M 480, 548 P2d 1390 (1976).

Protective Order — Stay of Proceedings: When the Public Service Commission assumed jurisdiction over matters which were at issue in an appeal before the Supreme Court, the court granted a protective order to enjoin the P.S.C. and Consumer Counsel from undertaking actions which interfered with the court's appellate jurisdiction and declared that the actions of the P.S.C. in reopening its docket and issuing further orders were beyond its jurisdiction. Consumer Counsel v. P.S.C., 168 M 177, 541 P2d 769 (1975).

Authority to Approve Bond Granted: Order of the Supreme Court giving the District Court authority to approve bond for stay of judgment does not give District Court any authority to dismiss appeal if bond is not filed. Bryant Dev. Ass'n v. Dagel, 166 M 8, 531 P2d 1319 (1974).

Constitutional Power — Stay of Mandamus Allowed: Supreme Court's constitutional power under Art. VIII, sec. 3, 1889 Mont. Const., to issue writs necessary to the complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction overrode the provision in subsection (c) of former Rule 7, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), prohibiting stay of a Writ of Mandamus, and Supreme Court could stay a District Court Writ of Mandamus ordering the superintendent of banks [functions transferred to Department of Business Regulation by executive reorganization] to issue a bank charter since a stay was necessary to make the right of appeal effectual. State ex rel. Bennett v. Dowdall, 157 M 11, 482 P2d 572 (1971).

Monetary Requirement Deviated From: The requirement of a monetary amount to be at issue before a stay is granted was deviated from because the appeal would be ineffectual without a stay. State ex rel. Bennett v. Dowdall, 157 M 11, 482 P2d 572 (1971).

Application for Reduction of Bond: An application for reduction in the amount of a supersedeas bond should be submitted to the District Court that set the amount. State ex rel. Adams v. District Court, 155 M 309, 471 P2d 537 (1970).

Supersedeas Bond Required — Dismissal of Appeal: Failure of defendant to file supersedeas bond pursuant to this section resulted in dismissal of appeals since such bond is only method to stay execution of judgment and after judgment is paid, it passes beyond review. Gallatin Trust & Sav. Bank v. Henke, 154 M 170, 461 P2d 448 (1969), distinguished in Mont. Nat'l Bank of Roundup v. Dept. of Revenue, 167 M 429, 539 P2d 722 (1975), overruled in First Nat'l Bank in Eureka v. Giles, 225 M 467, 733 P2d 357, 43 St. Rep. 1326 (1986). Mont. Nat'l Bank and Giles were overruled, with regard to voluntary versus involuntary payment or performance as affecting waiver of right to appeal without having bearing on mootness, in Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996).

Eminent Domain Proceeding — No Bond Required: Where Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) filed notice of appeal and perfected its appeal after Writ of Execution under 70-30-308 had issued, the appeal stayed the judgment although no bond was filed as required by this section, since under former Rule 62(e), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), no security was required from the State. Robertson v. St. Highway Comm'n, 148 M 275, 420 P2d 21 (1966).

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Ability of District Court to Correct Errors: Upon an appeal being taken, jurisdiction thereof passes from the District Court to the Supreme Court, subject to right of District Court to correct clerical errors. Polson v. Thomas, 138 M 533, 357 P2d 349 (1960).

Mandate to Compel Licensure — Authority of Supreme Court: Though this section may not provide a stay of execution in case a Writ of Mandate is issued by a District Court to compel the issuance of a license, the Supreme Court may nevertheless issue any appropriate writ to insure an appeal. Gill v. Rafn, 133 M 505, 326 P2d 974 (1958), followed and clarified, with regard to voluntary versus involuntary payment or performance as affecting waiver of right to appeal without having bearing on mootness, in Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996), and distinguished in State ex rel. Ronish v. School District, 136 M 453, 348 P2d 797 (1960).

Mandate and Prohibition — Moot Question on Appeal: Where Writ of Prohibition was issued against Liquor Control Board prohibiting the issuance of licenses except to persons who have Indian tribal permits and a Writ of Mandate was also issued compelling the issuance of licenses to certain persons, which Writs were complied with after the District Court refused to stay the Writs, so that the licensees invested and established businesses and could not be returned to the status quo, the questions on appeal were moot. State ex rel. Hagerty v. Rafn, 130 M 554, 304 P2d 918 (1956), distinguished in State ex rel. Ronish v. School District, 136 M 453, 348 P2d 797 (1960).

Probate Proceedings — Loss of Jurisdiction After Appeal: Where an appeal was taken from an order appointing a person executor, the District Court and its Clerk were then without jurisdiction to issue letters testamentary to the executor and allow him to qualify. In re Hansen's Estate, 129 M 261, 284 P2d 1007 (1955).

Jurisdiction of District Court Passed to Supreme Court: Where a notice of appeal from a judgment was served and filed, jurisdiction over the parties to the controversy and the subject matter thereof passed from the District Court and vested in the Supreme Court. It then became the duty of the Supreme Court to maintain the status quo of the parties and their rights until the controversy could be determined in this court, so that rights involved in such appeal may not be lost or prejudiced prior to such determination. Benolken v. Miracle, 128 M 262, 273 P2d 667 (1954).

Usurpation of Office — Application to Statutory Disqualification From Office: The provision relating to proceedings wherein judgment relates to defendants guilty of usurping, or intruding into, or unlawfully holding public office, etc., applies not only in quo warranto proceedings, but also to all judgments, including one rendered in a proceeding brought under the Corrupt Practices Act, sections 94-1427 to 94-1474, R.C.M. 1947 (partially repealed), where a finding of the violation of a statute disqualifies the defendant from holding office and authorizes a finding that the office is vacant. State ex rel. Kommers v. District Court, 109 M 287, 96 P2d 271 (1939).

Usurpation of Office — Undertaking Not to Act as Stay: The filing of an undertaking on appeal from a judgment removing a Sheriff from office for violating the provisions of the Corrupt Practices Act, sections 94-1427 to 94-1474, R.C.M. 1947 (partially repealed), and declaring the office vacant, does not operate as a supersedeas or stay of execution, and therefore does not prevent the County Commissioners from filling the office pending appeal. State ex rel. Kommers v. District Court, 109 M 287, 96 P2d 271 (1939).

Mandate to Transfer Cause — Authority of Supreme Court: Though this section may not provide a stay of execution, in case a Writ of Mandate is issued by the District Court to compel the transfer of a cause from a police to a Justice's Court (a question not decided), the Supreme Court may nevertheless issue any appropriate writ to insure an appeal. State ex rel. Brass v. Horn, 36 M 418, 93 P 351 (1908).

CASES DECIDED UNDER CURRENT RULES

No Undertaking Required for Appeal From Justice's Court Upon Satisfaction of Judgment: The District Court dismissed a Justice's Court appeal in part because the appellant failed to file an undertaking or cash bond even though the judgment in a dispute over a residential security deposit was fully satisfied. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that an undertaking and an execution of judgment are not simultaneously permitted and that an undertaking is not required when a judgment is fully satisfied. Guethlein v. Family Inn, 2014 MT 121, 375 Mont. 100, 324 P.3d 1194.

CASES DECIDED UNDER SUPERSEDED RULES

Bond for Costs on Appeal May Not Include Attorney Fees: When allowed by law, attorney fees that a party incurs on appeal may be recovered by that party if that party prevails on appeal. Section 39-2-915 provides that if a party in a wrongful discharge proceeding declines an offer to arbitrate and then loses in court, the party that offered to arbitrate is entitled to reasonable attorney fees incurred after the offer was made, including those incurred on appeal. However, for purposes of determining the amount of a bond or security under former Rule 6, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), a District Court may not include anticipated attorney fees for the future defense of an appeal as part of the anticipated costs on appeal. Moore v. Imperial Hotels Corp., 285 M 188, 948 P2d 211, 54 St. Rep. 1104 (1997).

Appeal From Unlawful Detainer Judgment — Bond Based on Amount of Taxes, Appeal Expenses, and Inability to Invest Land Sale Proceeds: In a tenant's appeal from summary judgment for the landowner in an unlawful detainer action, the only factor preventing the closing of a sale to a third party was the tenant's refusal to leave the property. The District Court properly and reasonably calculated the amount of a supersedeas bond that it required the tenant to post based on the interest lost from the owner's inability to reinvest sale proceeds, the amount of taxes on the land, and appeal expenses. Rasmussen v. Lee, 276 M 84, 916 P2d 98, 53 St. Rep. 263 (1996).

Purpose of Supersedeas Bond: The purpose of requiring an appellant to post a supersedeas bond as a condition to staying execution on a judgment is to secure the rights of the judgment creditor during the appeal process. Rasmussen v. Lee, 276 M 84, 916 P2d 98, 53 St. Rep. 263 (1996).

Test for Review of Amount of Supersedeas Bond: In reviewing the amount of a supersedeas bond, the Supreme Court determines whether the lower court acted arbitrarily without using conscientious judgment or exceeded the bounds of reason. Rasmussen v. Lee, 276 M 84, 916 P2d 98, 53 St. Rep. 263 (1996).

Bond Not Jurisdictional: Respondent contended an appeal to the Supreme Court should be dismissed for failure to file an undertaking for costs on appeal as stated in former Rule 6(a), M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Respondent argued that posting of bond is jurisdictional. The court noted that while under section 9733, R.C.M. 1935, posting a bond for costs on appeal was jurisdictional, that is no longer the case. The only step necessary to perfect an appeal is filing a notice of appeal within the time allowed by former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). While the filing of a bond for costs may be required, failure to file the bond does not affect the validity of the appeal. Failure to effect timely filing of the bond should not, without more, result in dismissal. There were no other circumstances mandating dismissal in this case. Westmont Tractor Co. v. Leighty, 222 M 336, 722 P2d 617, 43 St. Rep. 1309 (1986).

Supreme Court — Acquisition of Appellate Jurisdiction: The time limits for filing an appeal are mandatory and jurisdictional. An appellant has a duty to perfect an appeal in the manner and within the time limits provided by law. Absent such compliance, the Montana Supreme Court does not acquire jurisdiction to entertain and determine an appeal. Price v. Zunchich, 188 M 230, 612 P2d 1296 (1980).

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

GENERAL

Governmental Entities — Undertaking for Costs on Appeal: The Division of Motor Vehicles, being a governmental entity, is not required to file an undertaking for costs on appeal of the denial of its motion for rehearing. In re Petition of Burnham, 217 M 513, 705 P2d 603, 42 St. Rep. 1342 (1985).

Receivership Proceedings — Supersedeas Bond Required: Where the District Court appointed a receiver to preserve property pendente lite, from which order plaintiff appealed, he was not entitled to a stay without a supersedeas bond. The bond described by this section was not enough. Demos v. Doepker, 115 M 183, 141 P2d 372 (1943).

Deposit in Lieu of Undertaking — Statement of Purpose Not Required: While a written undertaking on appeal must specify the purpose for which it is given, where money is deposited in lieu of such undertaking no writing is required, the statute declaring the purpose for which it is deposited. In re McGovern's Estate, 77 M 182, 250 P 812 (1926).

Multiple Appellants in Probate Proceeding — One Bond Required: Where the purpose of a petition in an estate matter was to have the executor render a final account, settle the estate, and deliver possession of the real estate to the devisees, on appeal from the order denying the petition and dismissing the proceeding the appellants were required to furnish but one joint appeal bond in the sum of $300. In re McGovern's Estate, 77 M 182, 250 P 812 (1926).

New Trial Motion After Appeal From Judgment: In view of this section, 25-11-102, and section 93-8003, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by former Rule 1, M.R.App.P., now superseded), the trial court, notwithstanding and perfecting of an appeal from a judgment, retains jurisdiction over a motion for a new trial; and an appeal may be taken from an order denying the new trial, although, before such order was entered, an appeal from the judgment has been perfected. Molt v. N. Pac. Ry., 44 M 471, 120 P 809 (1912).

One Bond Allowed — Purpose: The purpose of the provision contained in the first sentence of this section is to enable an appellant to have one set of sureties execute one instrument instead of several, and to make the merely formal parts of one of the obligations assumed by them answer for all, and thus relieve him of the necessity of writing out each instrument in full. Sullivan v. Fried, 42 M 335, 112 P 535 (1910).

Instrument Combining Undertakings Allowed — Satisfaction of Amounts Required Separately: Whatever may be the number of appeals taken at the same time, only one undertaking need be filed, but the penalty in all cases, except where the appeals from the final judgment are combined with an appeal from an order granting or denying a new trial, taken at the same time, must be sufficient in amount to support all of them, and the references must be so made to each of them that the penalty may be properly apportioned. In re Kappler's Estate, 38 M 419, 100 P 228 (1909).

Nugatory Undertaking: An undertaking on appeal is abortive if words are used therein which render it meaningless and nugatory as an indemnity for costs in any amount. In re Kappler's Estate, 38 M 419, 100 P 228 (1909).

Signature of Appellant Not Required: An undertaking filed in conformity with this and the following section need not be signed by the party in whose behalf it is given. Russell v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Ry., 37 M 10, 94 P 501 (1908).

Separate Undertaking for Each Appeal Required: Where appeals are taken from a judgment and from any order other than one denying a new trial, or from more than one order, a separate undertaking in the sum of $300 must be filed for each, or, if both are included in the same paper, appropriate references must be made to show which appeal each is intended to effectuate, even though one of the orders appealed from may be a nonappealable order. Pirrie v. Moule, 33 M 1, 81 P 390 (1905).

Undertaking as Bond: An undertaking on appeal is technically a "bond" within the common-law definition, save that it need not be under seal. King v. Pony Gold Min. Co., 24 M 470, 62 P 783 (1900).

Joinder of Appeals Under Single Undertaking — Language Required: Where the appeal bond, on appeal from a final judgment and from an order denying appellant's motion for a new trial, was conditioned that it should be void if appellant paid all damages and costs awarded against it "on said appeals, or on a dismissal thereof", not exceeding the sum of $300, the undertaking was insufficient in that the words "or either of them" should have been inserted in each of the alternative conditions, and because of such omission the sureties were not liable upon said undertaking unless both appeals should be affirmed or both dismissed. Baker v. Butte City Water Co., 24 M 31, 60 P 488 (1900). See also Ramsey v. Burns, 24 M 234, 61 P 129 (1900); Coleman v. Perry, 24 M 237, 61 P 129 (1900); Frary v. Dwyer, 26 M 414, 68 P 1133 (1902).

Substitution for Defective Undertaking Allowed: An undertaking on appeal which provides for the payment by appellants of all damages and costs which may be awarded against them on the appeal, but omits the words "or on a dismissal thereof", is defective but not void, and a motion to dismiss the appeal for such defect will be denied where a new and sufficient undertaking is filed before the motion is heard. Woodman v. Calkins, 12 M 456, 31 P 63 (1892), distinguished in Creek v. Bozeman Water Works Co., 22 M 327, 56 P 362 (1899).

AMBIGUOUS UNDERTAKING

Supersedeas and Cost Bond Treated as Separate: If there be any ambiguity in the undertaking so far as it relates to the supersedeas, that would furnish no ground for the dismissal of the appeal for want of an undertaking for costs. Rader v. Taylor, 134 M 419, 333 P2d 480 (1958).

Appeal From Order Treated as Abandoned: Where an appellant served notice that he desired to appeal from a judgment and an order denying a new trial, but the undertaking referred to an appeal from the judgment only, the appeal will be treated as abandoned as far as it relates to the order denying a new trial, and to that extent will be dismissed, irrespective of the intention of appellant. Hurley v. O'Neill, 24 M 293, 61 P 658 (1900).

Ambiguous Undertaking Invalid: Where an appeal undertaking recited four distinct appeals, one from the judgment and three from orders, and that, in consideration "of such appeal, etc., appellant will pay all damages and costs which may be awarded against her", the undertaking was invalid for ambiguity, in not stating which appeal it was intended to secure. Creek v. Bozeman Water Works Co., 22 M 327, 56 P 362 (1899). See also Murphy v. N. Pac. Ry., 22 M 577, 57 P 278 (1899); Washoe Copper Co. v. Hickey, 23 M 319, 58 P 866 (1899); Grage v. Paulson, 23 M 337, 59 P 1 (1899); Richter v. Eagle Life Ass'n, 24 M 346, 61 P 878 (1900); Pirrie v. Moule, 33 M 1, 81 P 390 (1905); Faust v. Rustler Min. & Mill. Co., 34 M 368, 86 P 421 (1906); In re Kappler's Estate, 38 M 419, 100 P 228 (1909), distinguished in In re McGovern's Estate, 77 M 182, 250 P 812 (1926).

Ambiguous Undertaking Void — Avoidance: If an appeal undertaking, reciting separate appeals from the judgment and from different orders, is void for ambiguity as to which appeal it is intended to refer to, appellant cannot escape the effect of the ambiguity by claiming that the orders are not appealable, and the bond therefor refers to the judgment, as the court, in determining the validity of the undertaking, will not examine the record to see what orders are appealable. Creek v. Bozeman Water Works Co., 22 M 327, 56 P 362 (1899). See also Gassert v. Strong, 38 M 18, 98 P 497 (1908).

Rule 24. Sureties.

Case Notes

CASES DECIDED UNDER SUPERSEDED RULES

When Supersedeas Bond Remains in Effect Following Remand: On remand, a surety remains in effect when the question is the amount of damages, and not whether a party is entitled to damages. If a question of liability or a question of whether a party is entitled to damages remains after an appeal, the bond may lapse. Spooner Constr. & Tree Serv., Inc. v. Maner, 2003 MT 43, 314 M 268, 66 P3d 263 (2003), following Tenn. Valley Authority v. Atlas Mach. & Iron Works, 803 F2d 794 (4th Cir. 1986), and Beatrice Foods Co. v. New England Printing, 930 F2d 1572 (Fed. Cir. 1991).

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Exceptions to Sufficiency — Application and Meaning: Exception to the sufficiency of sureties on an undertaking or bond within the meaning of this section has reference to their solvency or pecuniary sufficiency, rather than their qualifications to act as such. Objection to the form of the undertaking challenges their qualifications in respects other than their financial worth. Whitcomb v. Beyerlein, 84 M 470, 276 P 430 (1929).

Failure to Justify — Effect: The provision of this section, that unless the sureties justify when excepted to, execution of the judgment or order appealed from is no longer stayed, does not render the appeal ineffectual because of the failure to justify, but only destroys the effect of the undertaking insofar as it may operate as a supersedeas—the appeal remains though execution is no longer stayed. Threlkeld v. O'Neal, 26 M 209, 66 P 940 (1901); King v. Pony Gold Min. Co., 24 M 470, 62 P 783 (1900).

Application to Ejectment Action: This section applies in case of an appeal by defendant in ejectment involving an unpatented mining claim. The statutes and courts of this state do not recognize any distinction between possessory rights to mining claims upon public lands and real estate held under other titles. State ex rel. Baker v. District Court, 24 M 330, 61 P 882 (1900). See also Cobban v. Meagher, 42 M 399, 113 P 290 (1911).

Liability of Sureties When Execution Already Had: Sureties on a stay bond on appeal were not liable, though they failed to justify as required, where respondent, before determination of the appeal, issued execution against appellant. State ex rel. Reins v. District Court, 22 M 449, 57 P 89 (1899).

Waiver of Undertaking by Respondent Allowed: The statute requiring a justification of sureties on a stay bond is directory, and meant to be for respondent's not appellant's benefit, and may be waived by respondent. State ex rel. Reins v. District Court, 22 M 449, 57 P 89 (1899). See also Morin v. Wells, 30 M 76, 75 P 688 (1904).

Rule 25. Substitution of parties in civil cases - acts of personal representatives or guardians when appointment vacated.

Case Notes

DECISIONS UNDER CURRENT RULES

Death of Criminal Appellant — Appeal Moot Unless Personal Representative Demonstrates Otherwise — Prior Case Law Overruled: A criminal defendant passed away 1 month after filing his appeal with the Supreme Court. After his public defender filed a notice of his death, the state filed a motion to dismiss the appeal as moot. The Supreme Court considered whether to abate the appeal ab initio or to dismiss it as moot. Given that a conviction is presumed valid, the Supreme Court concluded that abating an appeal is inappropriate and overruled precedent, particularly St. v. Holland, 1998 MT 67, 288 Mont. 164, 955 P.2d 1360. Rather, the death of a criminal defendant renders an appeal moot unless the defendant's personal representative can demonstrate there are appellate issues not rendered moot by the defendant's death. St. v. Benn, 2012 MT 33, 364 Mont. 153, 274 P.3d 47.

DECISIONS UNDER SUPERSEDED RULES

Death of Defendant in Criminal Case Abates Case Entirely — Prior Cases Clarified: Holland was convicted in District Court of criminal syndicalism by accountability and other offenses and appealed his conviction. Holland died after the case had been briefed to the Supreme Court but before it was decided, so the state moved to dismiss. Holland's counsel opposed the motion to dismiss, arguing that it was in the best interests of society and the judicial system to allow the appeal to be decided on its merits. The Supreme Court noted that its earlier opinions in the cases of St. v. Lawrence, 122 M 277, 201 P2d 756 (1949), St. v. Pichette, 125 M 327, 237 P2d 1076 (1951), St. v. Hale, 128 M 116, 270 P2d 993 (1954), St. v. Koble, 129 M 605, 285 P2d 837 (1955), St. v. Clark-Kotarski, 156 M 527, 486 P2d 876 (1971), and St. v. Cripps, 177 M 410, 582 P2d 312 (1978), all held that the death of a defendant abates an appeal. The Supreme Court pointed out that 37-61-401(2) requires that a civil case go forward notwithstanding the death of a party but that in criminal cases, no case or controversy remains when a defendant dies and that if a deceased defendant's sentence were affirmed on appeal, it would be impossible to execute the sentence. The Supreme Court also noted, citing State ex rel. Fletcher v. District Court, 260 M 410, 859 P2d 992 (1993), that it does not render advisory opinions and that the former Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure (now superseded) provided for substitution of a personal representative in the case of the death of a party in a civil action, but there is no such provision for criminal cases. The Supreme Court held that upon the death of the defendant, the prosecution of a criminal case, including fines, abates in its entirety. The Supreme Court's prior opinions were clarified to the extent that opinions in those cases were not consistent with its present opinion. St. v. Holland, 1998 MT 67, 288 M 164, 955 P2d 1360, 55 St. Rep. 282 (1998). Holland was overruled in St. v. Benn, 2012 MT 33, 364 Mont. 153, 274 P.3d 47, in which the Supreme Court ruled that the death of a criminal defendant renders the appeal moot unless the defendant's personal representative can demonstrate that there are appellate issues not rendered moot by the defendant's death.

Appellate Review Upon Death of Respondent: Under the authority of former Rule 37, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), the Supreme Court rendered an opinion upon appellate review even though the respondent had died since submission of the case. Absent a motion for substitution of a personal representative, the court assumed there was no representative and proceeded as if respondent were still living. Bieber v. Broadwater County, 232 M 487, 759 P2d 145, 45 St. Rep. 1218 (1988).

Rule 26. Extension of time.

2009 Amendment: At beginning of first sentence inserted clause concerning Rule 24(d), M.R.Civ.P. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Case Notes

DECISIONS UNDER SUPERSEDED RULES

Montana Guaranty Fund Not Considered State Agency, So State Not Party to Action — Contemporaneous Filing of Notice of Constitutional Challenge With Notice of Appeal Required: Plaintiffs filed a notice of a constitutional challenge to 33-10-110 with the Supreme Court. Defendants filed a notice claiming that the challenge was untimely. The Supreme Court agreed with defendants, holding that pursuant to former Rule 38, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), if the state is not a party to the action, the court is precluded from considering a constitutional issue if notice of a constitutional challenge is not filed contemporaneously with a notice of appeal. The Montana Insurance Guaranty Association (MIGA), also known as the Montana Guaranty Fund, is not a public agency but rather, by definition, is a nonprofit, unincorporated legal entity funded entirely by an assessment on its members and not by the state. Because MIGA was not a state agency for purposes of former Rule 38, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), plaintiffs were required to file a notice of constitutional challenge contemporaneously with a notice of appeal, and failure to do so rendered plaintiffs' constitutional challenge untimely. Boettcher v. Mont. Guar. Fund, 2006 MT 127, 332 M 279, 140 P3d 474 (2006), following Haider v. Frances Mahon Deaconess Hosp., 2000 MT 32, 298 M 203, 994 P2d 1121 (2000), and Weinert v. Great Falls, 2004 MT 168, 322 M 38, 97 P3d 1079 (2004), and distinguishing State ex rel. Morales v. City Comm'n, 174 M 237, 570 P2d 887 (1977).

Failure to Give Notice of Constitutional Challenge to Landowner's Liability Law — Consideration of Constitutional Challenge Precluded: Plaintiff was injured on a sledding hill at a city park. Plaintiff contended that legislation that provided immunity to landowners was defective because the title did not mention that liability was also extended to governmental units, including municipalities. However, plaintiff failed to give notice to the Supreme Court or to the Attorney General, pursuant to former Rule 38, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), that an action in which neither the state nor a state agency or employee was a party was being challenged for constitutionality. The municipality was not a state agency, so the rule applied, and absent plaintiff's compliance with the notice requirements, the Supreme Court declined to address the constitutional issue. Weinert v. Great Falls, 2004 MT 168, 322 M 38, 97 P3d 1079 (2004).

Failure to Comply With Immediate Notice Requirements Precluding Consideration of Constitutional Issue on Appeal: Haider filed a wrongful discharge action against her former employer. During negotiations, Haider offered to submit the case to arbitration, but the employer refused to arbitrate. The matter went to a jury, which awarded Haider $44,995.26. After a subsequent evidentiary hearing, the District Court determined that Haider was the prevailing party and awarded her $15,000 in attorney fees pursuant to 39-2-915. The employer filed a notice of appeal seeking to challenge the constitutionality of 39-2-915 and, nearly 3 months later, filed its notice of challenge to the constitutionality of the statute pursuant to former Rule 38, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). The employer failed to comply both with the immediate notice requirement of former Rule 38, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), that was in effect in 1997 when the action arose and with the contemporaneous notice requirement of the rule in effect since October 1, 1997. Because notice was not timely, the Supreme Court was precluded from reaching the constitutional challenge and dismissed the appeal with prejudice. Haider v. Frances Mahon Deaconess Hosp., 2000 MT 32, 298 M 203, 994 P2d 1121, 57 St. Rep. 138 (2000), followed in Russell v. Masonic Home of Mont., Inc., 2006 MT 286, 334 M 351, 147 P3d 216 (2006).

Delay of Twenty Days Not Constituting Immediate Notice: Appellant sought to test the constitutionality of 40-8-111 (now repealed), which allows the termination of parental rights based on nonpayment of support for a 1-year period, on the grounds that a liberty interest is taken away without the showing of a compelling state interest. However, he failed to file notice of a constitutional challenge until 20 days after filing of the record and offered no explanation for the delay. The Supreme Court declined to consider the constitutional question because a 20-day delay was not considered "immediate notice" as required by former Rule 38, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). In re Adoption of C.J.H., W.L.H., & T.A.H., 246 M 52, 803 P2d 214, 47 St. Rep. 2258 (1990).

Challenge to Constitutionality of Statute — Failure to Provide Notice — Issue Not Before Supreme Court: In an action involving Workers' Compensation coverage but without any state parties, the appellant raised the constitutionality of 39-71-2905 for the first time in briefs to the Supreme Court. Appellant failed to comply with the notice provisions of former Rule 38, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court held that former Rule 38, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), precluded the challenge to the constitutionality of the statute from properly being before the court. Billings Deaconess Hosp. v. Angel, 219 M 490, 712 P2d 1323, 43 St. Rep. 115 (1986), followed in Haider v. Frances Mahon Deaconess Hosp., 2000 MT 32, 298 M 203, 994 P2d 1121, 57 St. Rep. 138 (2000).

When Issue of Constitutionality Not Properly Before Court: The issue of constitutionality of 3-1-523 was not properly before the Supreme Court when it was not first raised in the District Court and when a notice of constitutional challenge was not properly filed as required by former Rule 38, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). In re Marriage of Robbins, 219 M 130, 711 P2d 1347, 42 St. Rep. 1897 (1985).

Attorney General Not Required to Appear: Where petitioner, in his case on appeal, challenged the constitutionality of a Statute of Limitations and the Attorney General failed to appear to argue the constitutionality of the statute, the Supreme Court held that former Rule 38, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), had never been interpreted as meaning that the State of Montana has an absolute duty to appear whenever a constitutional challenge arises. The former Rule only required notice of the challenge to the Attorney General. In re W.C., 206 M 432, 671 P2d 621, 40 St. Rep. 1762 (1983).

Constitutional Questions — Early Presentation: A question of constitutionality will not be considered on appeal if it has not been raised initially. A constitutional issue is waived if not presented at the earliest possible opportunity. Dodd v. East Helena, 180 M 518, 591 P2d 241 (1979), following Johnson v. Doran, 167 M 501, 540 P2d 306 (1975), and followed in Billings Deaconess Hosp. v. Angel, 219 M 490, 712 P2d 1323, 43 St. Rep. 115 (1986). Billings Deaconess was followed in Haider v. Frances Mahon Deaconess Hosp., 2000 MT 32, 298 M 203, 994 P2d 1121, 57 St. Rep. 138 (2000). Dodd and Haider were followed in St. v. Mainwaring, 2007 MT 14, 335 M 322, 151 P3d 53 (2007).

Spirit and Intent of Rule Met: While former Rule 38, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), was not strictly complied with, the spirit and intent were met by filing of a "notice of existence of constitutional question" in an earlier proceeding; therefore, the constitutional issue was properly before the Supreme Court. State ex rel. Morales v. City Comm'n, 174 M 237, 570 P2d 887 (1977).

Constitutionality Challenge on Appeal — Noncompliance With Rule: A challenge to the constitutionality of certain statutes was not properly before the Supreme Court because of noncompliance with former Rule 38, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Bradbrook v. Billings, 174 M 27, 568 P2d 527 (1977).

Notice to Attorney General — Time: Notice to Attorney General in compliance with former Rule 38, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), given on the same day the case was certified to the Supreme Court, was sufficient to allow adequate preparation for the hearing, set 2½ months later, and satisfied the "immediate notice" requirement. U.S. Mfg. & Distrib. Corp. v. Great Falls, 169 M 298, 546 P2d 522 (1976).

Constitutional Questions Not Considered: Constitutional questions presented for review on appeal which were not raised in the trial court and were not certified to the Supreme Court with notice to the Attorney General will not be considered by the court. Gilbert v. Gilbert, 166 M 312, 533 P2d 1079 (1975).

Notice to Attorney General Required: If the procedures of former Rule 38, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), have not been followed and there has been no notice to the Attorney General that a legislative act is being challenged on constitutional grounds, the issue is not properly before the court. Clontz v. Clontz, 166 M 206, 531 P2d 1003 (1975); Grant v. Grant, 166 M 229, 531 P2d 1007 (1975).

Rule 29. Suspension of the rules.

Case Notes

CASES DECIDED UNDER CURRENT RULES

Near Certainty of Second Appeal — Suspension of Rules Not Appropriate: The plaintiff's small intestine was perforated during a procedure by the defendant doctor. The plaintiff filed a claim with the Montana Medical Legal Panel (MMLP). In the District Court action, the defendant moved to dismiss, arguing that this issue was not specifically raised in the MMLP pleading and that the District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction. On interlocutory appeal of the jurisdictional issue, the defendant requested that the Supreme Court suspend the rules to consider additional issues. The Supreme Court declined to review the additional issues because a second appeal was not a near certainty. Pickett v. Cortese, 2014 MT 166, 375 Mont. 320, 328 P.3d 660.

CASES DECIDED UNDER SUPERSEDED RULES

Order for Protection of Youth — Rules Suspended: Although an interlocutory order granting temporary investigative authority and protective services is not appealable, the Supreme Court suspended the former Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure (now superseded) based on the facts that both parties apparently relied on the Court's statement in a prior case that the issue may be appealable, a significant period of time had passed with resulting uncertainty in the children's lives, and if the appeal was dismissed, there was a likelihood of a petition for writ of certiorari, habeas corpus, or supervisory control concerning the same issues. In re ?.P. & A.P., 2000 MT 39, 298 M 287, 995 P2d 982, 57 St. Rep. 179 (2000).

Appealability of District Court Order Granting Judgment as Matter of Law — Rules Suspension: Plaintiffs contended that an order granting judgment as a matter of law is not an appealable order because it is not among the enumerated orders listed in former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Following Ryan v. Bozeman, 279 M 507, 928 P2d 228 (1996), the Supreme Court, expressing concerns regarding judicial economy and the near certainty of future appeals following a new trial on damages, exercised its authority under former Rule 3, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), to suspend the requirements of the rules of appellate procedure in the interest of expediting a decision and considered the appeal of the order granting judgment as a matter of law in the limited class of cases like this, when the order granting judgment as a matter of law is taken in conjunction with an order granting a new trial. Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1998 MT 47, 288 M 1, 955 P2d 160, 55 St. Rep. 198 (1998).

Order for Protection of Youth — Rules Suspended — Procedure on Appeal: A petition for temporary investigative authority and protective services was filed by the prosecutor under 41-3-402 (renumbered 41-3-427). Temporary custody of K.H. was later awarded to county welfare department under 41-3-403 (renumbered (41-3-423). The District Court found probable cause for state intervention and ordered temporary investigative authority, custody in the mother, and restrictions on the father's visitation. The parents appealed the order, an appealable order within former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), but not an adequate remedy because of the time involved. Relief should properly be pursued through a Writ of Certiorari, Habeas Corpus, or Supervisory Control. The Supreme Court treated the matter as a Writ of Certiorari and denied it on the grounds that the District Court proceedings were in substantial compliance with law and that the petitioners were not prejudiced thereby. In re K.H., 216 M 267, 701 P2d 720, 42 St. Rep. 796 (1985). However, see In re B.P. & A.P., 2000 MT 39, 298 M 287, 995 P2d 982, 57 St. Rep. 179 (2000), in which it was held that because an interlocutory order granting temporary investigative authority and protective services is not appealable under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded).

Failure to Timely Transmit Transcript — Refusal to Dismiss Appeal: Although the Supreme Court received the transcript 12 days beyond the 40-day deadline and the transcript lacked pertinent documents, the court refused to dismiss the appeal. The court noted that the procedural violation was not one that would affect the validity of the appeal, caused no substantive harm, and was not intended to mislead the court. Garza v. Peppard, 213 M 25, 689 P2d 279, 41 St. Rep. 1922 (1984).

Appeal Allowed Despite Failure to Comply With Procedural Rules: A seller was granted summary judgment against a buyer. Several months later, the court amended its order nunc pro tunc and certified the case for appeal under former Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Despite failure to comply with the former M.R.App.P. (now superseded), the Supreme Court chose to hear the appeal under former Rules 3, 10, and 21, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Marcus Daly Mem. Hosp. v. Borkoski, 191 M 366, 624 P2d 997, 38 St. Rep. 322 (1981).

"Plain Error": In adopting the "plain error" doctrine appellate courts have a duty to determine whether the parties before them have been denied substantial justice by the trial court, and when that has occurred they can, within sound discretion, consider whether the trial court has deprived a litigant of a fair and impartial trial, even though no objection was made to the conduct during the trial. Such was the case when appellant was denied his day in court by the trial judge's recess and failure to reconvene. Halldorson v. Halldorson, 175 M 170, 573 P2d 169 (1977).

Failure to File Timely Notice of Appeal: The Supreme Court has no authority to permit an appeal to be taken after the expiration of the time fixed by former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). If an extension of time is sought, the proper forum to make such a request is the District Court. An appellant must request any extension no later than 60 days from service of notice of entry of judgment. Zell v. Zell, 174 M 216, 565 P2d 311 (1977).

Emergency Restraining Order Denied: Petition by female minor who was denied injunction prohibiting rodeo from refusing to allow her to participate as a bareback bronc rider was not such an emergency as to invoke the extraordinary remedies of the Supreme Court, ex parte, without notice, without bond, and without hearing. State ex rel. Reno v. District Court, 165 M 289, 529 P2d 1407 (1974).

Rules

Rule 1. Scope of rules.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: In second sentence, after "construed", inserted "and administered" and inserted third sentence concerning consulting other appropriate rules and statutes. Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Case Notes

Client Bound by Attorney's Waiver of Right to Speedy Trial — Purpose of Statute: After defendant's attorney orally waived defendant's rights to a speedy trial in Justice's Court, defendant argued in his trial de novo appeal to District Court that he, the defendant, was not bound by his attorney's waiver. Defendant asserted that 37-61-401 makes the waiver binding only if it was entered with the defendant's knowledge or upon the record in open court. Citing Bush v. Baker, 46 M 535, 129 P 550 (1913), the Supreme Court ruled that 37-61-401 has been applied only as to agreements between attorneys and that the purpose of that section is to relieve the presiding judge of the burden of determining disputes between attorneys concerning their unexecuted agreements. The Supreme Court stated that it would not apply 37-61-401 literally as to agreements between an attorney and the court; to do so would lead to absurd consequences and greatly retard the business of the courts. The Supreme Court held that the defendant was thus bound by his counsel's waiver. St. v. Nelson, 251 M 139, 822 P2d 1086, 48 St. Rep. 1129 (1991).

Speedy Trial Clock to Start With Date of De Novo Appeal From Justice's Court to District Court: After defendant's attorney orally waived defendant's rights to a speedy trial in Justice's Court, defendant argued in his trial de novo appeal to District Court that his right to a speedy trial was violated because the clock should have started with the date of his arrest, not the date of appeal to District Court. Citing St. v. Sanders, 163 M 209, 516 P2d 372 (1973), the Supreme Court noted that it had adopted Standard 12-2.2(c) of the American Bar Association Standards for Criminal Justice. The standard provides that in cases of appeal or an order for a new trial, the time for trial should begin running with the order granting the new trial or, in this case, the date of appeal to District Court. The Supreme Court determined not to abandon that standard and therefore held that defendant's trial was within the 6-month limitation of 46-13-401. St. v. Nelson, 251 M 139, 822 P2d 1086, 48 St. Rep. 1129 (1991).

Speedy Trial Not Denied by Application of Six-Month Speedy Trial Limitation to De Novo Appeal From Justice's Court to District Court: After defendant's attorney orally waived defendant's rights to a speedy trial in Justice's Court, defendant argued in his trial de novo appeal to District Court that his right to a speedy trial was violated because it is prejudicial to apply the speedy trial standards of 46-13-401 to an appeal from Justice's Court to District Court. The Supreme Court held that the argument was without merit because the 6-month limit was met in this case, both in the time for trial in Justice's Court and in the time for trial de novo in District Court. St. v. Nelson, 251 M 139, 822 P2d 1086, 48 St. Rep. 1129 (1991).

Uncertain Testimony of Defense Counsel Insufficient to Disprove Oral Waiver of Right to Speedy Trial: At the time scheduled for defendant's trial in Justice's Court on a DUI charge, the Justice of the Peace called defense counsel into his chambers and informed him that a different date for trial was necessary because of another trial then in progress. The Justice of the Peace then issued a written order reciting the fact that an oral motion for a continuance was made by defense counsel, along with an oral waiver of defendant's right to a speedy trial. Trial was then set for a date beyond the 6-month limitation provided for in 46-13-401. In a de novo appeal to District Court, defendant raised the issue of his right to a speedy trial, and defense counsel testified he could not remember whether he made an oral motion for continuance and a waiver. The Supreme Court found that the Justice's Court's order was presumed correct under 26-1-602(17) and that the testimony of defense counsel did not demonstrate that the order was in error in reciting the waiver. St. v. Nelson, 251 M 139, 822 P2d 1086, 48 St. Rep. 1129 (1991).

Rule 2. Commencement of action.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Renumbered former Rule 3 as Rule 2; in (a) deleted former third sentence that read: "The party filing or the party's attorney shall sign the complaint" and inserted third through sixth sentences concerning who must file or sign complaint and requirements for complaint; inserted (b) concerning filing fees; and moved substance of remainder of section concerning place of trial or venue to Rule 3. (Former Rule 2 was deleted by the same order.)

Rule 3. Place of trial or venue.

Case Notes

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

PLACE OF TRIAL

Agreement to Send Deposit to New Address — Special Contract: The plaintiffs brought an action in the county where they resided to recover their rental deposit from the defendant. The defendant moved for a change of venue to the county where he resided and the property was located. The Supreme Court held that the provision in the lease requiring the defendant to forward the deposit to the new address of the plaintiffs constituted a special contract and that proper venue was the county in which the money was to be paid. Olson v. Long, 245 M 492, 801 P2d 1340, 47 St. Rep. 2216 (1990).

Certiorari to Review Jurisdiction: Since the District Court on appeal from a Justice's Court would have no jurisdiction of a cause over which the latter court had none, certiorari is available to annul a default judgment rendered by a Justice in a cause over which he had no jurisdiction because commenced in the wrong county. State ex rel. Gen. Oil Corp. v. Kelly, 94 M 445, 23 P2d 555 (1933).

Contractual Obligations: An action to recover money due may not be maintained in a Justice's Court of a county other than that in which the contract was made or the obligation incurred and in which the defendant resides, unless there is a special agreement as to the place of performance or payment. State ex rel. Gen. Oil Corp. v. Kelly, 94 M 445, 23 P2d 555 (1933).

Jurisdiction Not Presumed: A Justice's Court is one of limited jurisdiction, and there are no presumptions in favor of its jurisdiction; all facts necessary to confer it must appear affirmatively from the docket. State ex rel. Gen. Oil Corp. v. Kelly, 94 M 445, 23 P2d 555 (1933).

Lack of Jurisdiction — Change of Venue Improper: If an action is commenced in a Justice's Court of a county other than the one fixed by 25-31-201 through 25-31-204 (all repealed), the court acquires no jurisdiction, and in such a case, 25-31-301 (now repealed), enumerating the cases in which a change of place of trial may be had, has no application. State ex rel. Gen. Oil Corp. v. Kelly, 94 M 445, 23 P2d 555 (1933).

Foreign Corporation as Nonresident: In the absence of statute giving foreign corporations a domestic residence, they remain nonresidents of the state and may, under section 93-6601(5), R.C.M. 1947 (prior to the 1973 amendment providing for suits in any county), be sued in a Justice's Court in any township of the state. Pue v. N. Pac. Ry., 78 M 40, 252 P 313 (1926).

Jurisdiction by Service Upon Resident Agent: Plaintiff performed work for defendant railway company in Lewis and Clark County, where defendant's principal place of business was located and where the agent designated for service of process resided; the defendant also did business and had an agent in Silver Bow County. A Justice's Court in the latter county had jurisdiction of a suit brought there, summons being served on the agent there. Pue v. N. Pac. Ry., 78 M 40, 252 P 313 (1926).

IMPROPER PLACE OF TRIAL

Docket Entries — Jurisdiction to Be Shown: The docket of a Justice of the Peace must show affirmatively all the facts necessary to confer jurisdiction. Such Justice cannot enter a default judgment in favor of the plaintiff unless the docket shows that he was present at the time specified or within 1 hour thereafter. State ex rel. Kenyon v. Laurendeau, 21 M 216, 53 P 536 (1898). See also Driscoll v. Creighton, 24 M 140, 60 P 989 (1900).

CHANGE OF VENUE

Refusal to Pay Costs: Where defendant on being granted a change of venue refused to pay the accrued costs, as provided by 25-31-306 (now repealed), it was the duty of the original Justice of the Peace to proceed with the trial. Taney v. Vollenweider, 28 M 147, 72 P 415 (1903).

Rule 4. Persons — jurisdiction — process — service.

Compiler's Comments

2002 Amendment: Adopted civil summons form as an appendix to D. Amendment effective February 26, 2002.

1997 Amendment: In A(3), D(1)(b)(i), two places in D(2)(b)(iv), and D(2)(b)(iv)(C) substituted "limited liability company" for "unincorporated association"; in B(1), after "who", inserted "reside or" and at end substituted "State of Montana" for "county or city, respectively, or who can be served as provided in these rules"; in B(2), near end of first sentence after "attorney or", deleted "through" and inserted second sentence concerning separate service; in C(2)(b), after "day of service", inserted "or such other period as may be specified by law"; in D(2)(b)(v), after "city", deleted "village"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

JURISDICTION OF PERSONS

Waiver Allowed by Appearance and Pleading: Under 25-31-403 (now repealed), defendant in a Justice's Court may waive issuance of summons by appearance and pleading. State ex rel. St. George v. Justice Court, 84 M 173, 274 P 495 (1929).

Answer and Motion as Waiver of Summons: Where defendant in an action on an account before a Justice of the Peace filed an answer to the merits coupling it with a counterclaim, making an offer at the same time to allow judgment to be taken against him for a stated amount with costs, and thereafter on appeal to the District Court asked leave to amend his answer, he waived irregularity of service of summons by his general appearance and was precluded from challenging the court's jurisdiction over his person or the subject matter of the action. Stoffels v. Cherry, 67 M 443, 215 P 1098 (1923).

Motion to Dismiss as Waiver of Summons: By joining with his codefendant in a motion to dismiss an action against them in a Justice's Court, a party waives service of summons and appears for all purposes. State ex rel. Beadle v. Smith, 42 M 492, 113 P 294 (1911).

PROCESS

Simulation of Legal Process Condemned: The practice of a collection agency of addressing to debtors, on regular legal paper used in court proceedings bearing the names of the parties as plaintiff and defendant, what was designated "final notice" containing the legend "original to the defendant, and duplicate to the clerk of the court", before any action was commenced, thus simulating legal process, is condemned. State ex rel. Freebourn v. Merchants' Credit Serv., Inc., 104 M 76, 66 P2d 337 (1937).

Rule 5. Service and filing of pleadings and other papers, excluding summons.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: In A, in first sentence after "20 days", inserted "unless otherwise provided by law" and at end, inserted "M.J.R.Civ.P." and inserted second through fourth sentences concerning filing and service of pleadings; in B(2) substituted "if not represented by an attorney" for "if so ordered, by mailing it to the attorney or party at the last-known address or, if no address is known, by delivering it to the judge"; in B(2)(a), after "copy", inserted "to an attorney"; in B(2)(a)(i), after "attorney", deleted "or the party if so ordered"; in B(2)(a)(iii), before "office", inserted "attorney's"; substituted B(2)(a)(iv) concerning mailing to attorney for former text that read: "if the office is closed or the person to be served has no office, by leaving it at the defendant's place of residence with a person of suitable age and discretion who resides there"; inserted B(2)(b) concerning meaning of delivery of copy to a party; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Rule 6. Time.

Case Notes

Time of Filing Appeal Running From Date of Rendition of Judgment: Under 25-33-102, the time for filing an appeal does not run from the date of service of a notice of the judgment. It runs from the date of rendition of the judgment. This rule does not extend the time allowed by statute when that time begins to run upon rendition of judgment instead of upon service of a notice or other paper. NW. Collectors, Inc. v. Vanorio, 1998 MT 80, 288 M 225, 956 P2d 1375, 55 St. Rep. 342 (1998). See also Grimes Motors, Inc. v. Nascimento, 244 M 147, 796 P2d 576 (1990).

Notice of Appeal Timely Filed: Defendant was convicted by a City Court jury of driving under the influence of alcohol and resisting arrest. Defendant's notice of appeal was filed 14 days after conviction and sentencing. The appeal was dismissed on the basis that the appeal was not timely filed. The District Court erred in dismissing the appeal because it failed to exclude intermediate weekend days and legal holidays as required by rule. St. v. Price, 271 M 409, 897 P2d 1084, 52 St. Rep. 527 (1995).

Rule 7. Pleadings allowed.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: In introductory clause, at end of first sentence, inserted reference to reply to a counterclaim and at end of second sentence deleted reference to a counterclaim; in A, at end, inserted reference to type and amount of relief requested; in B, near beginning of first sentence, substituted "must contain a denial" for "may contain a general denial", before "a defense" substituted "constituting" for "containing", and after "defense" deleted "or counterclaim upon which an action might be brought by the defendant against the plaintiff in a justice or city court" and inserted second sentence concerning matter not denied and third sentence concerning entry of default; in C, at end of first sentence, deleted "arising out of an action or occurrence", inserted second sentence concerning required counterclaims, at end of third sentence substituted "the type or amount of relief requested" for "must be stated or the defendant waives the right to maintain an action for it against the plaintiff at a later time", deleted former third sentence that read: "However, the claim need not be stated if it is the subject of another pending action", and inserted fourth sentence concerning dismissal without prejudice of counterclaim that exceeds the jurisdiction of the court; inserted C(2) concerning filing of dismissed counterclaim in District Court; inserted D concerning reply to counterclaim; inserted E concerning cross claims; in F(3), after "answer or", inserted "reply to" and at end substituted "opposing party" for "plaintiff"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Case Notes

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

COMPLAINT

Contractual Actions — Complaint to Be Liberally Construed: Under the rule that complaints filed in Justices' Courts must be construed with great liberality and upheld if a person of common understanding is able to know therefrom what is intended, a complaint stating that plaintiff wrote and delivered to defendants a fire insurance policy the premium on which was $42, which defendants agreed to pay, was sufficient as against the contention that it failed to set out the terms of the contract. Coover v. Davis, 112 M 605, 121 P2d 985 (1941).

Cause of Action for Conversion Not Stated: A "supplemental" complaint, as distinguished from an amended one, has no place in Justice's Court proceedings, there being no provision of law therefor. In conversion, an allegation that the plaintiff is the owner or entitled to the possession of the property in question and that the defendant has converted it to his own use must be shown. In tort, for damages, a duty on the part of the defendant must be shown, a violation of which resulted in an injury to plaintiff. When such facts are not stated and cannot be inferred from the facts stated, the complaint is insufficient. Radosevich v. Engle, 111 M 504, 111 P2d 299 (1941).

Complaint for Conversion Insufficient: The language in 25-31-401 (now repealed) is almost exactly the same as used in section 93-3202(2), R.C.M. 1947 (repealed in 1961), dealing with complaint in District Courts, requiring that the complaint contain "a statement of facts constituting the cause of action in ordinary and concise language"; a complaint framed in the form of an account but including items alleged to have been converted or misappropriated, but containing no allegations as to ownership, possession, or the circumstances of the conversion, was insufficient no matter how liberal a rule of construction was applied. Radosevich v. Engle, 111 M 504, 111 P2d 299 (1941).

Nature of Demand to Be Shown: The pleadings in Justices' Courts are not required to be in any particular form; a complaint filed in such a Court must be construed with great liberality, the plaintiff being required only to state facts sufficient to show the nature of his demand so as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended. Rhule v. Thrasher, 88 M 468, 295 P 266 (1930).

Liberal Construction of Pleadings on Appeal: On appeal from a Justice's Court to the District Court, the sufficiency of the complaint must be tested by the rules applicable to the former and construed with great liberality, plaintiff being required only to state facts sufficient to show the nature of his demand in such a way as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended. Woody v. Sec. St. Bank, 67 M 109, 214 P 1096 (1923).

Account Action — Complaint Sufficient: A complaint in an action brought in a Justice's Court to recover the balance of an account for goods, wares, and merchandise, reading as follows: "E. to M. & W., Dr. To balance for merchandise (describing it), $255.12", was sufficient under 25-31-501 and 25-31-504 (both repealed). Moran v. Ebey, 39 M 517, 104 P 522 (1909).

Complaint Required for Further Action: Since an action can be instituted only by the filing of a formal complaint or its equivalent, by the filing of a copy of the account, bill, bond, or instrument upon which the action is brought, with a statement of the amount due thereon, a Justice cannot issue an attachment or proceed to judgment without this prerequisite. Shandy v. McDonald, 38 M 393, 100 P 203 (1909).

ANSWER

No Waiver of Jurisdictional Defects: A defendant in an action in a Justice's Court does not waive objection to want of jurisdiction over his person by presenting an answer containing a counterclaim, where he insists at every stage of the proceedings that the Justice has no jurisdiction. Wilcox v. Toston St. Bank, 53 M 490, 165 P 292 (1917).

COUNTERCLAIM

Counterclaim Required: Where the defendant in an action before a Justice of the Peace failed to set up a then subsisting counterclaim upon which an action might have been brought in that court, he could not under 25-31-505 and 25-31-506 (both repealed), thereafter, on appeal to the District Court, have it adjudicated. Walter v. Cox, 36 M 20, 91 P 1063 (1907).

Policy of Legislature: Sections 25-31-505 and 25-31-506 (both repealed) demonstrate that it was the policy and purpose of the Legislature in enacting them that all petty claims existing between the parties and falling within the limited jurisdiction of Justices' Courts should be adjusted in one action. Walter v. Cox, 36 M 20, 91 P 1063 (1907).

GENERAL RULES OF PLEADING

Complaint on Account — Insufficient and Confusing: Where a Justice's Court complaint consisted of an "account", concededly without any of the elements of an account involving the relationship of debtor and creditor, a memorandum filed in response to a demand for a bill of particulars, including items not set forth in the account, and a "supplemental complaint" substantially amounting to a complaint in conversion coupled with an action for damages as for tort were fatally defective and so confusing that a person of common understanding would not know what the pleader meant. Radosevich v. Engle, 111 M 504, 111 P2d 299 (1941).

Essential Facts Omitted From Pleadings: While pleadings in Justice's Court are not required to be in a particular form and technical rules of pleading are not to be applied, nevertheless, under 3-10-501, 25-31-501 (now repealed), and 25-31-504 (now repealed), where there is an absolute omission to state a fact essential to a cause of action and such fact is not deducible from those stated, the defect is fatal if proper objection be made to the sufficiency of the pleading. The complaint must disclose the presence of all of the elements necessary to make out the nature of the cause of action, whether brought in Justice's or District Court. Radosevich v. Engle, 111 M 504, 111 P2d 299 (1941).

Joinder of Parties as Sharp Practice: Joining of husband and wife by a collection agency in all actions where a claim against either was involved, although the facts in nowise justified the practice under 40-2-106 on the necessity of life theory, at least amounted to sharp practice. State ex rel. Freebourn v. Merchants' Credit Serv., Inc., 104 M 76, 66 P2d 337 (1937).

Simulation of Legal Process Condemned: The practice of a collection agency of addressing to debtors, on regular legal paper used in Court proceedings bearing the names of the parties as plaintiff and defendant, what was designated "Final Notice" containing the legend "Original to the defendant, and duplicate to the clerk of the court", before any action was commenced, thus simulating legal process, is condemned. State ex rel. Freebourn v. Merchants' Credit Serv., Inc., 104 M 76, 66 P2d 337 (1937).

Inferences From Pleadings: Under the liberal construction of pleadings required by the Code, whatever is necessarily implied from allegations directly or reasonably to be inferred therefrom is to be treated as averred directly. Rhule v. Thrasher, 88 M 468, 295 P 266 (1930).

Confession of Judgment: Where defendant, in an action to recover a debt, in response to a summons out of a Justice's Court appeared in person on the day set for trial and orally "acknowledged" judgment, he in effect admitted the allegations of the complaint and the judgment entered thereon was to all intents and purposes a judgment on the pleadings and not open to the objection that as a "confession of judgment" it was void because not evidenced by a writing executed by defendant as required by 27-9-101(part) through 27-9-104. State ex rel. Kennedy v. Hubbard, 77 M 170, 253 P 271 (1926), overruling Hunter v. Eddy, 11 M 251, 28 P 296 (1891).

Docket Entry — Pleadings Liberally Construed: Under the rule that the pleadings in a Justice's Court as well as the statutory requirements with relation thereto must be liberally construed, 3-10-501 and 25-31-501 (now repealed), declaring that the Justice must enter in the docket a concise statement of the material parts of all oral pleadings, mean no more than that he shall enter such a recital thereof as would advise a person of common understanding of the nature of the pleadings. Malano v. Bressan, 76 M 366, 245 P 871 (1926).

Technical Rules Not to Be Applied: Technical rules of pleading should not be applied in a Justice's Court, and a complaint filed therein must be construed with great liberality. Lambert v. Helena Adjustment Co., 69 M 510, 222 P 1057 (1924).

Statute of Frauds Defense: The filing of an amendment to defendant's answer pleading the Statute of Frauds to an action to recover the price of certain land sold did not require a replication. Duane v. Molinak, 31 M 343, 78 P 588 (1904).

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Taking Under Advisement: Where a Justice of the Peace, after submission of a cause to him for determination, took it under advisement without the consent of the parties, appointing neither time nor place for the rendition of judgment, he lost jurisdiction and the judgment, rendered about a month thereafter without notice to the parties, was void. State ex rel. Collier v. Houston, 36 M 178, 92 P 476 (1907), distinguished in In re Graye, 36 M 394, 93 P 266 (1907).

Case Notes

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Failure of Plaintiff to Appear — Record Required: The record of a Justice's Court must affirmatively show all jurisdictional facts and particularly that plaintiff appeared at the time set for hearing of the case or within an hour thereafter; if he did not then appear, the Justice lost jurisdiction for all purposes, save to dismiss the action without prejudice. Peterson v. Feely, 88 M 459, 293 P 667 (1930).

Failure to Appear at Trial — Judgment Not in Default: A Justice of the Peace could not enter judgment by default on failure of defendant to appear at the time set for trial, when defendant had filed an answer putting in issue the allegations of the complaint. Where the record showed that such Justice tried the issues and entered judgment on proof adduced by plaintiff, the judgment was not one by default, although the Justice's docket recited the notice and entry of defendant's default. State ex rel. Grissom v. Justice Court, 31 M 258, 78 P 498 (1904); Clark v. Great N. Ry., 30 M 458, 76 P 1003 (1904).

Rule 22. Relief from judgment.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: In A. in first sentence after "judgment" inserted "or other order". Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Case Notes

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Time Period for Appeal Suspended Until Entry of Order Denying Request for Relief From Judgment: After the Justice's Court entered judgment in favor of the tenant in a dispute over a security deposit, the landlord filed a motion for relief from judgment pursuant to Rule 22, M.J.C.C.R.Civ.P., which requires relief to be requested within 30 days of entry of the judgment. The request was denied and the landlord appealed to the District Court, alleging that the appeal was not timely filed. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded, holding that the 30-day time for appeal did not begin until the Justice's Court issued its order on the motion to set aside the judgment. Guethlein v. Family Inn, 2014 MT 121, 375 Mont. 100, 324 P.3d 1194, following Grimes Motors, Inc. v. Nascimento, 244 Mont. 147, 796 P.2d 576 (1990).

Challenge of Justice's Court Judgment as Void Not Allowed — No Recourse Under Justice's Court Rules Once Time for Applying for Relief Passes: The Justice's Court entered a default judgment in favor of plaintiff, and 64 days later, plaintiff executed judgment against defendant. Defendant moved to quash the judgment 14 days later on due process grounds of lack of notice, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the District Court affirmed, reasoning that defendant had only 30 days after judgment during which to apply for relief. On appeal to the Supreme Court, defendant essentially contended that the Justice's Court judgment was void because defendant was not given notice of the judgment. However, Justice's Court procedural rules do not allow a party to challenge a Justice's Court judgment as being void, so once the 30-day time for seeking relief from the judgment expired, defendant could not challenge the judgment. The Supreme Court did note that defendant could still file an independent action collaterally attacking the Justice's Court judgment for lack of personal jurisdiction. CBM Collections, Inc. v. Ferreira, 2005 MT 170, 327 M 479, 115 P3d 211 (2005).

Default Judgment Set Aside: The record shows the plaintiff took a default after the defendant felt she had been assured she would be given time to negotiate a settlement, and the judgment entered exceeds by $150 the amount defendant owed plaintiff at the time the Court entered judgment. The default judgment was, therefore, set aside because it is preferable to dispose of cases on their merits than to maintain too strict a regard for technical rules of procedure. Little Horn St. Bank v. Real Bird, 183 M 208, 598 P2d 1109 (1979).

Modification of Judgment: A Justice of the Peace who, upon the return of a verdict for plaintiff for the amount of a note and interest, and for defendant for the costs of the action, has rendered a judgment in accordance with such verdict immediately, has no jurisdiction 8 days afterward to set aside such judgment as to the defendant and to add to the judgment for plaintiff an attorney's fee and the costs of suit. State ex rel. Johnson v. Case, 14 M 520, 37 P 95 (1894).

Rule 23. Execution.

Amendment effective October 16, 2001.

1998 Amendment: In A(1) at end inserted "or the clerk thereof"; in B near end after "office" inserted "or the clerk"; in C in second sentence after "judge" inserted "or clerk"; and in form in signature block after "Justice of the Peace" and "City Judge" inserted "or Clerk". Amendment effective June 25, 1998.

1997 Amendment: In A(1) substituted "boundaries of the state" for "county or city in which the judgment was obtained"; in A(2), in two places before "clerk", inserted "judge or", substituted "justice or city court" for "justice's court", and after "sheriff" inserted "constable, or levying officer"; in form, in paragraph following amounts, after "writ", inserted "not less than 10 days nor more than 60" and after "days after" substituted "the date of issuance subscribed thereon with a record of your actions" for "your receipt of it, with what you have done", inserted D concerning return of execution, and near end of last sentence of E, before "court", inserted "justice or city"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1997.

Disapproval of Rules: Section 3, Ch. 285, L. 1991, provided: "Pursuant to Article VII, section 2, of the Montana constitution, Rules 21C and 23(2), Montana Justice and City Court Rules of Civil Procedure, are disapproved."

Case Notes

CASES DECIDED UNDER STATUTE

Control of Execution: Though the Clerk of the District Court may issue the execution, he issues it upon the judgment of the Justice, as such, made such by transformation of the Justice's judgment. The fact that the Clerk issues the execution does not divest the Justice of his control over it, for the statute does not so provide. Since the control of its process is vested exclusively in the court upon whose authority it issues, the Justice has exclusive control of the execution, whether issued by himself or by the Clerk of the District Court. Pierson v. Daly, 49 M 478, 143 P 957 (1914).

Case Notes

Period of Time Prescribed or Allowed — Ten Days or Less: The Justice's Court sentenced Schindler on March 4, 1994. On appeal, the state contended that Schindler's notice of appeal filed by fax on March 14, 1994, was untimely. The Supreme Court applied this rule, in interpreting 46-17-311 to mean that when the period of time prescribed or allowed is 10 days or less, intermediate Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays are excluded from the calculations. St. v. Schindler, 268 M 489, 886 P2d 978, 51 St. Rep. 1421 (1994), distinguishing St. v. Arthur, 234 M 75, 761 P2d 806 (1988).

CHAPTER 30
PROCEDURE IN MUNICIPAL COURTS

Chapter Case Notes

Appellate Jurisdiction Over Municipal Court Order Properly Denied — Interests of Justice Not Furthered: The defendant was convicted in municipal court of disorderly conduct and ordered to pay a $100 fine and $135 in fees and surcharges. The defendant appealed to the District Court, which declined appellate jurisdiction because the amount of the fine was less than the statutory threshold of $200. The plaintiff then appealed to the Supreme Court, which affirmed the District Court, concluding that the amount of the fine was less than $200 and that the interests of justice would not be furthered by allowing the defendant's appeal. Bozeman v. King, 2016 MT 300, 385 Mont. 376, 384 P.3d 481.

Appeal From Small Claims Court to District Court — Municipal Court Appellate Rules Inapplicable: The defendants appealed from a judgment of the Small Claims Court to the District Court, and the District Court dismissed the appeal on the basis that the defendants failed to file their brief within the deadline imposed by Rule 14, U.M.C.R.App. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, concluding that the Uniform Municipal Court Rules of Appeal are inapplicable to an appeal from Small Claims Court to District Court; rather, the appeal is governed by Title 25, ch. 35, part 8. The Uniform Municipal Court Rules of Appeal would have applied if the case been removed from Small Claims Court to Justice's Court and then appealed to the District Court. Kiser v. Kiser, 2015 MT 315, 381 Mont. 368, 360 P.3d 1139.

I. Applicability of Rules

Source of Compiler's Notes: The compiler's comments for this part are derived from endnotes prepared for a draft copy of the rules as promulgated by the Montana supreme court. The compiler has modified the endnotes for the compiler's comments format.

Rule 1. Scope of rules—limitation of appeal.

Compiler's Comments

Compiler's Note: Section 46-17-404 uses the term "amount in controversy" in criminal actions to mean a fine or restitution.

Case Notes

No District Court Jurisdiction of Appeal From Municipal Court When Defendant Not Incarcerated and Fine Less Than $300: Koestner was convicted in Municipal Court of reckless driving and was fined $175, court costs of $20, and a witness fee of $10, and no jail time was ordered. Koestner appealed the conviction and the denial of a request for a jury trial to District Court, but that court concluded that it did not have jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Koestner appealed to the Supreme Court, arguing that under the Montana Uniform Municipal Court Rules of Appeal to District Court (Title 25, ch. 30, part 2100), a city must have an ordinance in place to trigger the statutory amount necessary to bring an appeal and that because the city never presented evidence that such an ordinance existed, the District Court had jurisdiction under 3-6-110 to review the Municipal Court decision. The Supreme Court agreed that because Koestner was not incarcerated and the fine imposed was less than $300, the District Court properly concluded that it was bound by subsection (b)(2) of this rule which limits appeals in criminal cases to those in which the minimum amount in controversy is greater than $300, unless jail time is ordered. Although Koestner, under Rule 3, U.M.C.R.App., could have petitioned the District Court to hear the appeal in the interests of justice, no petition was filed. Koestner's arguments regarding lack of a city ordinance were not raised before the District Court, and the Supreme Court declined to address the issue for the first time on appeal. Kalispell v. Koestner, 2001 MT 53, 304 M 315, 21 P3d 622 (2001).

Compiler's Note: Subsection (a), see 25-30-101. Title 25, ch. 33, applies to municipal courts. Subsection (a)(1), see former Rules 6 and 7, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and 25-30-101. Subsection (a)(3), see 25-33-204. Subsection (a)(4), see former Rule 7(c), M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Title 25, ch. 33, does not specifically address perishable property. Rule 7(c) would appear to be the appropriate rule. Subsection (b), see 46-17-401. Proceedings in criminal cases are the same in municipal court as district court unless provided otherwise in Title 3, ch. 6. Scope of appeal and stay of sentence in criminal actions are not specifically addressed in statutes. It would appear that under 46-17-401, the statutes relating to scope of appeal and stays in appeals from district court to the supreme court would logically apply. Failure to File Brief Within Fifteen Days of Municipal Court Judgment — Summary Judgment Not Abuse of Discretion: Frazier was convicted of speeding in Justice's Court. Frazier filed a timely appeal to District Court, but failed to file a brief within 15 days after the record was filed with the District Court, as required by Rule 14(a), U.M.C.R.App. (Title 25, ch. 30, part 2400). The District Court summarily dismissed the appeal, and Frazier appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that under 25-33-304, the District Court has discretion to order an appeal to be dismissed for failure to prosecute an appeal or for unnecessary delay in bringing an appeal to a hearing. The Supreme Court declined to reverse the District Court for insisting that parties comply with statutory directives and rules of civil procedure, holding that it was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to dismiss Frazier's appeal for failure to file a timely brief. Failure to File Brief Within Fifteen Days of Municipal Court Judgment — Summary Judgment Not Abuse of Discretion: Frazier was convicted of speeding in Justice's Court. Frazier filed a timely appeal to District Court, but failed to file a brief within 15 days after the record was filed with the District Court, as required by Rule 14(a), U.M.C.R.App. (Title 25, ch. 30, part 2400). The District Court summarily dismissed the appeal, and Frazier appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that under 25-33-304, the District Court has discretion to order an appeal to be dismissed for failure to prosecute an appeal or for unnecessary delay in bringing an appeal to a hearing. The Supreme Court declined to reverse the District Court for insisting that parties comply with statutory directives and rules of civil procedure, holding that it was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to dismiss Frazier's appeal for failure to file a timely brief. CHAPTER 31
PROCEDURE IN JUSTICES' COURTS

Chapter Law Review Articles

Civil Practice in Montana's "People's Courts": The Proposed Montana Justice and City Court Rules of Civil Procedure, Ford, 58 Mont. L. Rev. 197 (1997).

Part 1
General Provisions

25-31-101. Issues which cannot be presented in justice's court.

Case Notes

Actions to Determine Questions of Title to Real Property Prohibited in Justice's Court: This section explicitly prohibits a Justice's Court from determining questions of title to real property or even hearing evidence on the subject, and a party may not file an action in a Justice's Court to quiet title to real property. Stanley v. Lemire, 2006 MT 304, 334 M 489, 148 P3d 643 (2006).

Evidence of Title Admissible in Unlawful Detainer Action: Where defendants unlawfully entered and took possession of the plaintiff's mining claim, evidence of title to the claim in question was admissible in Justice's Court as evidence of the plaintiff's right to possession where it appeared that such right would be disputed in plaintiff's action for forcible entry and unlawful detainer. Hamshaw v. Justice's Court, 108 M 12, 88 P2d 1 (1939).

Allegations as Surplusage: Since allegations relating to title to or possession of real property are not pertinent to forcible entry and unlawful detainer cases and if pleaded are surplusage, such an action is not subject to certification to the District Court under this section. Lambert v. Helena Adjustment Co., 69 M 510, 222 P 1057 (1924).

Forcible Entry and Unlawful Detainer — Jurisdiction Proper: If the question of title is not raised in an action in unlawful detainer, all allegations respecting it in the pleadings are surplusage and the Justice's Court has jurisdiction to hear the cause, of which jurisdiction it cannot divest itself by certifying the cause to the District Court. State ex rel. Lott v. District Court, 33 M 356, 83 P 597 (1905).

25-31-102. Transfer to district court — dismissal.

Compiler's Comments

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

1981 Amendment: In (1), substituted "the certification of" for "filing"; made minor changes in grammar, punctuation, and phraseology.

Case Notes

Jurisdiction of Justice's Court in Landlord-Tenant Action — Failure to Timely Assert Quiet Title Action Constituting Waiver of Jurisdictional Claim: Plaintiffs filed an action in Justice's Court to enforce a rental contract that defendant allegedly violated. Both parties initially argued that the case was governed by landlord-tenant law, but defendant subsequently argued in District Court that the case was actually an action to quiet title in a life estate granted to defendant by the contract and that because Justice's Courts may not hear actions concerning title to real property, the Justice's Court did not have subject matter jurisdiction to hear the case. The District Court concluded that the Justice's Court had jurisdiction, and on appeal, the Supreme Court concurred. Plaintiffs' pleadings established that the action was based on landlord-tenant law, and the Justice's Court therefore had subject matter jurisdiction at the onset. If defendant had raised the quiet title action in a proper and timely manner, the Justice's Court could have been divested of jurisdiction, but because defendant did not raise the title question in answer to the pleadings or in a timely amended answer, the Supreme Court held that the question was waived, and the District Court was affirmed. Stanley v. Lemire, 2006 MT 304, 334 M 489, 148 P3d 643 (2006).

Remedy for Criminal Prosecution of Public Nuisance: Panasuk, convicted in City Court of misdemeanor criminal public nuisance charges under 45-8-111, contended that because 3-10-301, former Rule 4(B), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and this section preclude a nonrecord court from hearing actions involving the title to or possession of real property, jurisdiction for prosecution of the public nuisance charge must lie with the District Court. He cited 45-8-112 as authority that any action to abate a nuisance must be brought in the name of the state and that because abatement is a form of injunctive relief, the District Court has exclusive jurisdiction. He also argued that 27-30-202 provides the exclusive civil and criminal remedies for public nuisance. His claims were dismissed for the following reasons: (1) charges filed under 45-8-111 were criminal rather than related to a civil action involving title to or possession of real property, which is regulated by the sections cited by Panasuk; (2) the remedy created by 27-30-202 has been supplemented by subsequent legislative action regarding a City Court's jurisdiction over misdemeanors and by the enactment of 46-17-101, which requires that all prosecutions brought in City Court be commenced by a sworn complaint; and (3) because Panasuk's interpretation would result in a direct contradiction between 27-30-202 and statutes subsequently enacted, the argument that 27-30-202 provides the exclusive remedies for public nuisance is erroneous. Billings v. Panasuk, 253 M 403, 833 P2d 1050, 49 St. Rep. 499 (1992).

Allegations as Surplusage: Since allegations relating to title to or possession of real property are not pertinent to forcible entry and unlawful detainer cases and if pleaded are surplusage, such an action is not subject to certification to the District Court under this section. Lambert v. Helena Adjustment Co., 69 M 510, 222 P 1057 (1924).

Complaint Beyond Justice's Jurisdiction: A complaint filed in a Justice's Court, if stating a cause of action in ejectment, does not give the Justice jurisdiction for any purpose, and he cannot confer jurisdiction on the District Court by certifying the case to it. State ex rel. Lott v. District Court, 33 M 356, 83 P 597 (1905).

Forcible Entry and Unlawful Detainer: If the question of title is not raised in an action in unlawful detainer, all allegations respecting it in the pleadings are surplusage and the Justice's Court has jurisdiction to hear the cause, of which jurisdiction it cannot divest itself by certifying the cause to the District Court. State ex rel. Lott v. District Court, 33 M 356, 83 P 597 (1905).

Undertaking for Costs: If the question of title to real estate is raised in an action in unlawful detainer, a Justice cannot certify the cause to the District Court without the bond required by this section having been filed. State ex rel. Lott v. District Court, 33 M 356, 83 P 597 (1905).

25-31-111. What provisions of code applicable to justices' courts.

Compiler's Comments

25-31-112. Fees.

Compiler's Comments

2013 Amendment: Chapter 339 in (1) substituted "the following fee" for "$25"; inserted (1)(a) through (1)(c) setting fees; in (2), (3), (4), and (5) increased fee from $10 to $20; in (3) in second sentence substituted "fee provided in subsection (1)" for "$25"; and made minor changes in style. 1985 Amendment: Increased all fees in (1) through (5) from $7.50 to $10; and deleted former (6) that read: "$1 for issuing each writ of execution or attachment".

1983 Amendment: In (1) through (5), changed "$5" to "$7.50"; and inserted (6). See 1985 note for text.

1981 Amendment: Inserted "except as provided in 25-35-605" in introductory clause.

25-31-113. When fees payable.

Case Notes

Landlord-Tenant Dispute — District Court Properly Ruled Before Justice Court's Action on In Forma Pauperis Motion — Award Exceeded Justice Court Statutory Limit: In a landlord-tenant dispute relating to the rental of mobile homes, the Justice Court held a bench trial over several dates. Throughout the course of the bench trial, the pro se tenants claimed to have not received notices because of a change in mailing address. Eventually, the Justice Court ruled in favor of the landlord and awarded attorney fees, damages, and costs in the amount of $21,950. The tenants filed a notice of appeal in the Justice Court, with a motion and application to proceed in forma pauperis. The District Court notified the parties that it received the record and provided briefing deadlines. The tenants did not file an appellate brief or request an extension of their deadline. The District Court then dismissed the tenants' appeal and affirmed the Justice Court. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in ruling before the Justice Court had ruled on the tenants' application to proceed in forma pauperis. However, the Supreme Court found that, although the tenants did not object, the Justice Court awarded damages in excess of $12,000, the limit of jurisdiction provided in 3-10-301. Alto Jake Holdings, LLC v. Donham, 2017 MT 297, 389 Mont. 435, 406 P.3d 937.

25-31-115. Deposit of money in lieu of undertaking.

Compiler's Comments

1981 Amendment: Substituted "by this chapter" for "as prescribed in this code".

Case Notes

Appeal Costs: This section has application to all undertakings other than those on appeal, and 25-33-201, 25-33-203(part), and 25-33-205(1), so far as they permit a deposit in lieu of cash, are special statutes relating to undertakings on appeal and are controlling as to them. 25-31-119. Interpleader actions.

Compiler's Comments

Case Notes

Time of Service of Summons: Where service of summons was made less than the 4 days formerly required by this section before time for appearance, the Justice did not acquire jurisdiction over the person of defendant, and a judgment entered upon such service was void. 25-31-409. Limitation on dismissal — alias summons.

Case Notes

Denial of Lay Counsel in City Court — Any Prejudice Cured by Trial De Novo on Appeal: Henry was charged with driving under the influence and was tried in City Court. The City Court refused to permit a family friend to represent Henry in the trial. Henry then appealed to the District Court for a trial de novo in which Henry was represented by counsel. The Supreme Court refused to address the merits of Henry's claim of violation of the right to counsel. The trial de novo on appeal to the District Court cured any prejudice that may have resulted from the City Court's decision regarding representation. St. v. Henry, 271 M 491, 898 P2d 1195, 52 St. Rep. 516 (1995).

Limitation on Lay Representation in Courts of Limited Jurisdiction: Petitioners sought a declaration by the Supreme Court that under 37-61-210 and this section, nonattorneys have the right to represent clients in Montana courts of limited jurisdiction on a regular and recurring basis. After accepting original jurisdiction of the petition, the Supreme Court held that only practice before courts of limited jurisdiction as is specifically authorized by statute or court rule may be undertaken by lay people. This representation does not extend to criminal proceedings in any court or to representation in any jurisdiction on a regular and recurring basis. This section provides for a one-time only grant of the privilege in Justice Court civil cases to enable a friend or relative to assist and speak on behalf of a party at one proceeding. Recurring representation constitutes the unauthorized practice of law. Sparks v. Johnson, 252 M 39, 826 P2d 928, 49 St. Rep. 124 (1992).

Corporations Not "Person": The word "person" as used in this section does not include a corporation. State ex rel. Freebourn v. Merchants' Credit Serv., Inc., 104 M 76, 66 P2d 337 (1937).

Fee for Appearance of Unlicensed Person: The allowance of an attorney's fee by any court is unlawful in an action where the party to whom allowed is represented by one other than a duly licensed attorney; demand for such allowance by one not an attorney in a Justice's Court amounts to an unlawful practice of law. State ex rel. Freebourn v. Merchants' Credit Serv., Inc., 104 M 76, 66 P2d 337 (1937).

25-31-602. When guardian necessary — how appointed.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 490 in introductory clause and in (1), in introductory clause, near beginning after "minor", deleted "or seriously mentally ill or" and after "incompetent person" inserted "or person who has been committed pursuant to 53-21-127"; in (1)(b), after "old", deleted "or a seriously mentally ill or" and after "incompetent person" inserted "or person who has been committed pursuant to 53-21-127"; in (2), in introductory clause after "minor", deleted "or seriously mentally ill or" and after "incompetent person" inserted "or person who has been committed pursuant to 53-21-127"; in (2)(b), after "old", deleted "or a seriously mentally ill or" and after "incompetent person" inserted "or person who has been committed pursuant to 53-21-127"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Saving Clause: Section 40, Ch. 490, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

1981 Amendment: Substituted "minor or seriously mentally ill" for "infant, insane" in the first sentence, (1), and (2); in (1)(a) substituted "in the case of a minor who is 14 or more years old, upon the application of the minor" for "upon application of the infant, if he be of the age of 14 years"; in (1)(b) substituted "in the case of a minor who is less then 14 years old or a seriously mentally ill or incompetent person" for "if under that age or if insane or incompetent"; inserted (1)(c) allowing appointment on motion of Justice; in (2)(a) substituted "in the case of a minor who is 14 or more years old and who applies before the summons is returned or at the time of the return, upon the application of the minor" for "upon the application of the infant, if he be of the age of 14 years and apply at the time or before the summons is returned"; in (2)(b) substituted "in the case of a minor who is less than 14 years old or a seriously mentally ill or incompetent person, upon the application of a relative or friend or any other party to the action" for "if he be under the age of 14 years or be insane or incompetent or neglect so to apply, then upon the application of a relative or friend or any other party to the action, or by the justice, on his own motion"; inserted (2)(c) allowing appointment on motion of Justice; and made minor changes in grammar, punctuation, and phraseology.

Part 7
Time of Trial — Postponements

Part Case Notes

Client Bound by Attorney's Waiver of Right to Speedy Trial — Purpose of Statute: After defendant's attorney orally waived defendant's rights to a speedy trial in Justice's Court, defendant argued in his trial de novo appeal to District Court that he, the defendant, was not bound by his attorney's waiver. Defendant asserted that 37-61-401 makes the waiver binding only if it was entered with the defendant's knowledge or upon the record in open court. Citing Bush v. Baker, 46 M 535, 129 P 550 (1913), the Supreme Court ruled that 37-61-401 has been applied only as to agreements between attorneys and that the purpose of that section is to relieve the presiding judge of the burden of determining disputes between attorneys concerning their unexecuted agreements. The Supreme Court stated that it would not apply 37-61-401 literally as to agreements between an attorney and the court; to do so would lead to absurd consequences and greatly retard the business of the courts. The Supreme Court held that the defendant was thus bound by his counsel's waiver. St. v. Nelson, 251 M 139, 822 P2d 1086, 48 St. Rep. 1129 (1991).

Speedy Trial Clock to Start With Date of De Novo Appeal From Justice's Court to District Court: After defendant's attorney orally waived defendant's rights to a speedy trial in Justice's Court, defendant argued in his trial de novo appeal to District Court that his right to a speedy trial was violated because the clock should have started with the date of his arrest, not the date of appeal to District Court. Citing St. v. Sanders, 163 M 209, 516 P2d 372 (1973), the Supreme Court noted that it had adopted Standard 12-2.2(c) of the American Bar Association Standards for Criminal Justice. The standard provides that in cases of appeal or an order for a new trial, the time for trial should begin running with the order granting the new trial or, in this case, the date of appeal to District Court. The Supreme Court determined not to abandon that standard and therefore held that defendant's trial was within the 6-month limitation of 46-13-401. St. v. Nelson, 251 M 139, 822 P2d 1086, 48 St. Rep. 1129 (1991).

Speedy Trial Not Denied by Application of Six-Month Speedy Trial Limitation to De Novo Appeal From Justice's Court to District Court: After defendant's attorney orally waived defendant's rights to a speedy trial in Justice's Court, defendant argued in his trial de novo appeal to District Court that his right to a speedy trial was violated because it is prejudicial to apply the speedy trial standards of 46-13-401 to an appeal from Justice's Court to District Court. The Supreme Court held that the argument was without merit because the 6-month limit was met in this case, both in the time for trial in Justice's Court and in the time for trial de novo in District Court. St. v. Nelson, 251 M 139, 822 P2d 1086, 48 St. Rep. 1129 (1991).

Uncertain Testimony of Defense Counsel Insufficient to Disprove Oral Waiver of Right to Speedy Trial: At the time scheduled for defendant's trial in Justice's Court on a DUI charge, the Justice of the Peace called defense counsel into his chambers and informed him that a different date for trial was necessary because of another trial then in progress. The Justice of the Peace then issued a written order reciting the fact that an oral motion for a continuance was made by defense counsel, along with an oral waiver of defendant's right to a speedy trial. Trial was then set for a date beyond the 6-month limitation provided for in 46-13-401. In a de novo appeal to District Court, defendant raised the issue of his right to a speedy trial, and defense counsel testified he could not remember whether he made an oral motion for continuance and a waiver. The Supreme Court found that the Justice's Court's order was presumed correct under 26-1-602(17) and that the testimony of defense counsel did not demonstrate that the order was in error in reciting the waiver. St. v. Nelson, 251 M 139, 822 P2d 1086, 48 St. Rep. 1129 (1991).

25-31-702. Trial to be timely.

Compiler's Comments

1991 Amendment: Near middle substituted "Rule 20, Montana Justice and City Court Rules of Civil Procedure" for "25-31-701"; and made minor changes in style.

25-31-703. Postponement by motion of court.

Compiler's Comments

1985 Amendment: Near middle after "trial", substituted "for not exceeding 4 months for good cause" for former (1), (2), and (3) that read: "(1) for not exceeding 1 day if, at the time fixed by law or by an order of the court for the trial, the court is engaged in the trial of another action;

(2) for not exceeding 2 days if, by an amendment of the pleadings or the allowance of time to make such amendment or to plead, a postponement is rendered necessary;

(3) for not exceeding 3 days if the trial is upon issues of fact and a jury has been demanded".

Case Notes

Justice Hearing Another Case: The Justice has the power to postpone a case when he is hearing another one at the time set for hearing. State ex rel. Beadle v. Smith, 42 M 492, 113 P 294 (1911).

Docket Entry of Adjournment Required: While it appears that a Justice of the Peace may, with the consent of the parties, take a case under advisement, the adjournment of the trial, so brought about by stipulation, must be to a time and place appointed for that purpose and an order to that effect entered upon his docket. State ex rel. Collier v. Houston, 36 M 178, 92 P 476 (1907), distinguished in In re Graye, 36 M 394, 93 P 266 (1907).

25-31-705. Postponement upon application of party — proof required.

Compiler's Comments

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Case Notes

Improper Continuance — Judgment Void: Where a Justice of the Peace continued a cause upon the oral application of plaintiff, made out of court without a showing such as required by this section, and refused to dispose of the cause at the time originally set for hearing, he lost jurisdiction and a judgment entered by him, after hearing testimony in support of the complaint at the time to which the cause had been continued, was void. State ex rel. Akin v. Williams, 50 M 582, 148 P 333 (1915).

25-31-706. No postponement when expected evidence admitted.

25-31-710. Pretrial conferences or hearings — appearance by telephone conference.

Compiler's Comments

Effective Date: This section is effective October 1, 2001.

Part 8
Trial

25-31-802. When issues of fact arise.

Compiler's Comments

1981 Amendment: In (2) substituted "whenever the answer contains new matter which raises questions of fact and not merely an issue of law" for "upon new matter in the answer, except an issue of law is joined thereon"; made minor changes in phraseology.

Part 9
Judgment

25-31-906. Judgment when amount found due exceeds the jurisdiction of the court.

Case Notes

Demand as Basis for Jurisdiction: This section recognizes the principle that in an action for the recovery of a fine, penalty, or forfeiture given by statute or ordinance, where the amount in controversy does not exceed $300, the jurisdiction of the Justice's Court is not dependent upon the amount which the plaintiff might recover but upon the amount which he demands. Reynolds v. Smith, 48 M 149, 135 P 1190 (1913).

25-31-914. Lien on real property.

Compiler's Comments

2001 Amendment: Chapter 515 in third sentence after "continues for" substituted "10 years" for "6 years"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

1991 Amendment: Near beginning of first sentence, after "creates", substituted "a" for "no" and after "defendant" substituted "upon the filing of a transcript of the original docket, certified by the clerk of the justice's court, with" for "unless such abstract is filed as aforesaid in".

Applicability: Section 5, Ch. 285, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] applies to proceedings begun after October 1, 1991."

Case Notes

Duration of Lien: It is clear from the provisions of this section and 25-31-1101 (now repealed) that the lien of the judgment continues for the period of 6 years from the date of the judgment and not from the date of the filing and docketing. (See 2001 amendment.) Pierson v. Daly, 49 M 478, 143 P 957 (1914).

Attorney General's Opinions

Filing Abstracts of Judgment in Another County: An abstract of a Justice's Court judgment may be filed in the office of the Clerk of any District Court. Alternatively, the abstract may be filed and docketed in the county in which the judgment was rendered and may then be issued and filed with the District Court Clerk of another county pursuant to 25-9-302. Under either procedure, the Justice's Court judgment then becomes a lien on any real property owned by the judgment debtor in the county in which the abstract is filed. 37 A.G. Op. 24 (1977).

CHAPTER 33
APPEAL TO DISTRICT COURT FROM JUSTICES' AND CITY COURTS

Part 1
Filing the Appeal

Part Case Notes

Landlord-Tenant Dispute — District Court Properly Ruled Before Justice Court's Action on In Forma Pauperis Motion — Award Exceeded Justice Court Statutory Limit: In a landlord-tenant dispute relating to the rental of mobile homes, the Justice Court held a bench trial over several dates. Throughout the course of the bench trial, the pro se tenants claimed to have not received notices because of a change in mailing address. Eventually, the Justice Court ruled in favor of the landlord and awarded attorney fees, damages, and costs in the amount of $21,950. The tenants filed a notice of appeal in the Justice Court, with a motion and application to proceed in forma pauperis. The District Court notified the parties that it received the record and provided briefing deadlines. The tenants did not file an appellate brief or request an extension of their deadline. The District Court then dismissed the tenants' appeal and affirmed the Justice Court. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in ruling before the Justice Court had ruled on the tenants' application to proceed in forma pauperis. However, the Supreme Court found that, although the tenants did not object, the Justice Court awarded damages in excess of $12,000, the limit of jurisdiction provided in 3-10-301. Alto Jake Holdings, LLC v. Donham, 2017 MT 297, 389 Mont. 435, 406 P.3d 937.

Case Notes

Remand or Order to Lift Stay Unnecessary Upon Affirmation by Appellate Court — Supreme Court Jurisdiction of Municipal Court Appeal Affirmed but Remanded by District Court: A Municipal Court sentenced Costa for misdemeanor traffic offenses, then stayed imposition of sentence pending Costa's appeal to District Court. The District Court affirmed judgment and remanded to the Municipal Court for imposition of sentence. The question then arose as to whether the Supreme Court had jurisdiction to address the District Court's decision. The Supreme Court noted that the definition of remand is to send something back for further action; however, the Legislature did not intend to require an appellate court to formally remand in cases involving affirmed criminal judgments. In addition, it is unnecessary for an appellate court to direct that a stay pending appeal be lifted once a defendant has exhausted the right to appeal and the underlying judgment and sentence have been affirmed. Therefore, the District Court's remand was premature, unnecessary, and of no immediate consequence and had no effect on the Municipal Court's final judgment and sentence. The Municipal Court stayed Costa's sentence pending appeal, which presumably encompassed an appeal to the Supreme Court, so because the District Court's remand was unnecessary, the Supreme Court had jurisdiction over Costa's appeal. Billings v. Costa, 2006 MT 181, 333 M 84, 140 P3d 1070 (2006).

Dismissal of Appeal From City Court to District Court — No Final Judgment: Appellant sought to appeal from City Court to District Court a decision made at a show cause hearing regarding forfeiture of bail bonds. However, because no order or final judgment issued out of the hearing, there was no right of appeal from that hearing. Helena v. Buck, 247 M 313, 806 P2d 27, 48 St. Rep. 213 (1991).

Rendition of Judgment as Commencement of Time for Appeal From Justice's to District Court: Section 25-33-102 and this section, rather than former Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), or a former rule of the Justice's Court, exclusively govern the time for filing a notice of appeal from Justice's Court to District Court. The time for appeal commences with rendition of the judgment of the Justice's Court and runs for 30 days, as provided in 25-33-102. Grimes Motors, Inc. v. Nascimento, 244 M 147, 796 P2d 576, 47 St. Rep. 1536 (1990), followed in Guethlein v. Family Inn, 2014 MT 121, 375 Mont. 100, 324 P.3d 1194.

Party Aggrieved: Appellant was permitted to present his counterclaim in Justice's Court and prevailed. He then moved to file the counterclaim in District Court. The District Court denied the motion and dismissed the action. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court on appeal. Having prevailed on his counterclaim in Justice's Court, appellant was not a "party aggrieved" entitled to appeal to District Court. Mont. Agri-Chem., Inc. v. Jacobson, 225 M 119, 731 P2d 910, 44 St. Rep. 87 (1987).

Justice's Court Appeals: The Supreme Court does not have jurisdiction to review directly the judgments or orders of the Justices' Courts of this state. State ex rel. Estes v. Justice Court, 129 M 136, 284 P2d 249 (1955).

Jurisdictional Limitations: This statute is both prohibitory and jurisdictional, and it prohibits an appeal after expiration of the time prescribed by this chapter. McVay v. McVay, 128 M 31, 270 P2d 393 (1954).

Judgment or Order Required: The right of appeal is purely statutory and is not available for review of findings and conclusions of law in a condemnation case where there has been no order. Sheridan County Elec. Co-op v. Anhalt, 127 M 71, 257 P2d 889 (1953).

25-33-102. Time for appeal.

Case Notes

Dissolution of Protective Order — District Court's Denial of Appeal Incorrectly Interpreted Appeal: The petitioner obtained an order of protection against the respondent in 2015. In 2017, the respondent moved to dissolve the order. The Justice Court denied the respondent's motion and the respondent appealed to the District Court. The District Court denied the respondent's appeal, stating that the respondent's motion to appeal the order was untimely as it should have been filed within 30 days of November 23, 2015. On appeal to the Supreme Court, the respondent argued that the District Court incorrectly treated his appeal of the court's 2017 order as an appeal of the 2015 order of protection itself. The Supreme Court agreed with the respondent, holding that the respondent timely filed his appeal. Anderson v. Larson, 2018 MT 155, 392 Mont. 29, 420 P.3d 1018.

Time Period for Appeal Suspended Until Entry of Order Denying Request for Relief From Judgment: After the Justice's Court entered judgment in favor of the tenant in a dispute over a security deposit, the landlord filed a motion for relief from judgment pursuant to Rule 22, M.J.C.C.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 23), which requires relief to be requested within 30 days of entry of the judgment. The request was denied and the landlord appealed to the District Court, alleging that the appeal was not timely filed. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded, holding that the 30-day time for appeal did not begin until the Justice's Court issued its order on the motion to set aside the judgment. Guethlein v. Family Inn, 2014 MT 121, 375 Mont. 100, 324 P.3d 1194, following Grimes Motors, Inc. v. Nascimento, 244 Mont. 147, 796 P.2d 576 (1990).

Denial of Motion to Disqualify Judge in City Court — Interim Order — No Right to Appeal Prior to Judgment: The city of Dillon filed a civil action in city court to recover from the defendant the costs of installing a water meter. After the first judge resigned and the second judge recused himself, the defendant filed a motion to disqualify the third judge; a fourth judge denied the motion and ordered the third judge to maintain jurisdiction. The defendant then filed an appeal in District Court. After the District Court dismissed the appeal, the defendant filed an appeal with the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court also dismissed the appeal, stating that a ruling on a motion to disqualify a city court judge is an interim order and cannot be appealed to the District Court. Dillon v. Warner, 2012 MT 17, 363 Mont. 383, 272 P.3d 41.

Trial De Novo Allowed in District Court Despite Failure to Request Jury Trial in Justice's Court — No Waiver of Right to Jury Trial: The District Court erred in determining that under 25-33-301, a waiver of the right to a jury trial in Justice's Court waives the right to a jury trial de novo on appeal in District Court. The court disregarded the interplay of former Rule 3, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), with former Rule 38, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and 25-33-301 in attempting to harmonize the statute and the rules. The language in 25-33-301, limiting appeals from Justice's Court to the pleadings filed in Justice's Court, does not limit jury trial demands in appeals from Justice's Court because jury trial demands are not pleadings. The plain meaning of former Rule 81(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), requires that former Rules 3 and 38 be given meanings that are consistent with 25-33-301 and the right to trial by jury. Thus, when a party makes a jury trial demand under former Rule 38 for a trial de novo on appeal in District Court, the action commences when the party serves and files notice of appeal pursuant to 25-33-103 and this section. In appeals from Justice's Court, jury trial demands must be made within 10 days of the filing of notice of appeal. Further, participation in a bench trial in District Court without objection does not constitute waiver of the right to a jury trial so long as a timely jury trial demand is made in District Court. Balyeat Law, P.C. v. Harrison, 1999 MT 144, 295 M 13, 983 P2d 902, 56 St. Rep. 566 (1999), following U.S. v. Calif. Mobile Home Park Management Co., 107 F3d 1374 (9th Cir. 1997), and Woirhaye v. District Court, 1998 MT 320, 292 M 185, 972 P2d 800, 55 St. Rep. 1298 (1998).

Time of Filing Appeal Running From Date of Rendition of Judgment: Under this section, the time for filing an appeal does not run from the date of service of a notice of the judgment. It runs from the date of rendition of the judgment. Rule 6, M.J.C.C.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 23), does not extend the time allowed by statute when that time begins to run upon rendition of judgment instead of upon service of a notice or other paper. NW. Collectors, Inc. v. Vanorio, 1998 MT 80, 288 M 225, 956 P2d 1375, 55 St. Rep. 342 (1998). See also Grimes Motors, Inc. v. Nascimento, 244 M 147, 796 P2d 576 (1990), followed in Guethlein v. Family Inn, 2014 MT 121, 375 Mont. 100, 324 P.3d 1194.

Dismissal for Failure to File Undertaking on Appeal — No Thirty-Day Filing Requirement — Goldsmith Overruled: On January 23, 1996, the Gallatin County Justice's Court rendered a decision against ISC Distributors (ISC) in favor of Dime Insurance Agency (Dime). On February 1, 1996, ISC filed a notice of appeal in Justice's Court. On March 7, ISC deposited its undertaking on appeal with the Clerk of the District Court. When Dime moved to dismiss, the District Court granted the motion, holding on the basis of Goldsmith v. Lane, 226 M 341, 735 P2d 306 (1987), that the undertaking must be filed within the statutorily prescribed time provided for taking the appeal. The Supreme Court reversed, overruling Goldsmith and holding that as long as an aggrieved party takes an appeal within 30 days from the Justice's Court's judgment and as long as the undertaking is filed before the hearing on the motion to dismiss for failure to file an undertaking, the District Court has jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Dime Ins. Agency v. Scott Johnson/ISC Distrib., 279 M 121, 926 P2d 733, 53 St. Rep. 1078 (1996).

Dismissal of Appeal From City Court to District Court — No Final Judgment: Appellant sought to appeal from City Court to District Court a decision made at a show cause hearing regarding forfeiture of bail bonds. However, because no order or final judgment issued out of the hearing, there was no right of appeal from that hearing. Helena v. Buck, 247 M 313, 806 P2d 27, 48 St. Rep. 213 (1991). See also Dillon v. Warner, 2012 MT 17, 363 Mont. 383, 272 P.3d 41.

Rendition of Judgment as Commencement of Time for Appeal From Justice's to District Court: Sections 25-33-101 and this section, rather than former Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), or a former rule of the Justice's Court, exclusively govern the time for filing a notice of appeal from Justice's Court to District Court. The time for appeal commences with rendition of the judgment of the Justice's Court and runs for 30 days, as provided in this section. Grimes Motors, Inc. v. Nascimento, 244 M 147, 796 P2d 576, 47 St. Rep. 1536 (1990), followed in Guethlein v. Family Inn, 2014 MT 121, 375 Mont. 100, 324 P.3d 1194.

Motion to Set Aside Default Judgment — Time for Appeal Suspended: On a motion to set aside a default judgment in a Justice's Court, the judgment was suspended until the motion to set it aside was disposed of and the time for taking the appeal commenced to run from the date on which the motion was denied. Davis v. Bell Boy Gold Min. Co., 101 M 534, 54 P2d 563 (1936), overruling State ex rel. Cobban v. District Court, 30 M 93, 75 P 862 (1904).

Time for Appeal as Statute of Limitations: The provisions of this section are a Statute of Limitations and unless the appeal is taken within the time prescribed, the appellate court acquires no jurisdiction and the appeal must be dismissed. Davis v. Bell Boy Gold Min. Co., 101 M 534, 54 P2d 563 (1936).

Levy of Execution Not Covered: Under this section and 25-33-301, an appeal lies to the District Court only from a judgment of a Justice's Court or from an order of the Justice setting aside or refusing to set aside a default judgment and not from an order setting aside a levy of execution. White v. Corbett, 101 M 1, 52 P2d 156 (1935).

Statute to Be Followed: Appeals are statutory, and the appellant must proceed as the statute requires, particularly with respect to appeals from such bodies as a Board of County Commissioners. Thien v. Wiltse, 49 M 189, 141 P 146 (1914); In re Searles, 46 M 322, 127 P 902 (1912).

Setting Aside Dismissal — Certiorari Improper: An appeal lies to the District Court, from a judgment of the Justice's Court, setting aside an order of dismissal; for this reason, such order cannot be reviewed on certiorari. State ex rel. Beadle v. Smith, 42 M 492, 113 P 294 (1911).

Statutory Basis for Appeal: Appeals from Justice of the Peace to District Courts are matters of statutory regulation, and the provisions of the law relative to the method to be pursued in taking such appeals must be strictly followed in order to divest the former of and invest the latter with jurisdiction. State ex rel. Hall v. District Court, 34 M 112, 85 P 872 (1906).

Scope of Review: Only such questions as were raised and presented in the Justice's Court can be tried on appeal in the District Court. Clark v. Great N. Ry., 30 M 458, 76 P 1003 (1904).

Failure to Perfect Appeal: Where it appears that appellant, without any excuse for his delay, did not demand the transcript until 29 days after judgment with the result that the transcript was not filed with the District Court until 32 days after judgment and 31 days after notice of the appeal, an order dismissing the appeal was properly granted and was not an abuse of discretion. Meyers v. Gregans, 20 M 450, 52 P 83 (1898), distinguished in Bush v. Baker, 46 M 535, 129 P 550 (1913).

Attorney General's Opinions

Court Reporter Filing Fee — Clerk of District Court to Collect Fee in Appeal From Justice's Court or City Court — Appeal Is "Civil Action" Under Statutes: The Attorney General was asked whether a Clerk of District Court must collect the $20 filing fee, required by 25-1-202 and used to help pay the salary of the court reporter, in appeals filed in District Court from judgments of a Justice's or City Court. The Attorney General concluded that: (1) a private legal action in a Justice's or City Court is a civil action; (2) an appeal from a Justice's or City Court may include appeal of a civil action; (3) an appeal from either of those courts results in most cases in a new trial in District Court and that the need for a court reporter in that instance is obvious; and (4) the payment of the additional $20 filing fee required by 25-1-202 is mandatory. 48 A.G. Op. 1 (1999).

Dime Ins. Agency v. Scott Johnson/ISC Distrib., 279 M 121, 926 P2d 733, 53 St. Rep. 1078 (1996).

Proof of Service Not Required: Under this section an appeal from a Justice's Court to the District Court is perfected by service of the notice of appeal upon the adverse party or his attorney and the filing thereof with the Justice, proof of service not being made a jurisdictional requirement; therefore dismissal of such an appeal because the record did not show that service had been made upon the adverse party was error. Farmers' & Miners' St. Bank v. Probst, 76 M 284, 246 P 249 (1926).

Order of Service and Filing: The appeal from a Justice's Court to the District Court is taken by serving a copy of the notice of appeal on the adverse party or his attorney and by filing the original notice of appeal with the Justice or Judge. The order in which these acts are done is not important. State ex rel. Hackshaw v. District Court, 48 M 477, 138 P 1100 (1914).

Description of Judgment Appealed From: The notice of appeal must describe the particular judgment or order appealed from by reference to the court that rendered it, to the parties litigant, and to the date and amount or character of the judgment, in terms sufficiently specific to identify it, without resort to extrinsic evidence. State ex rel. Rosenstein v. District Court, 41 M 100, 108 P 580 (1910), distinguished in Krause v. Ins. Co. of N. Am., 73 M 169, 235 P 406 (1925). See also Valadon v. Lohman, 46 M 144, 127 P 88 (1912); Stephens v. Conley, 48 M 352, 138 P 189 (1914).

Purpose and Contents of Notice of Appeal: The notice of appeal has a purpose to fulfill. It performs the office of a summons; and, if it fails to inform the adverse party of what he is to meet, as where the date of the judgment is not given so that the judgment can be identified, the notice of appeal is insufficient to give the District Court jurisdiction. State ex rel. Rosenstein v. District Court, 41 M 100, 108 P 580 (1910), distinguished in Krause v. Ins. Co. of N. Am., 73 M 169, 235 P 406 (1925). See also Valadon v. Lohman, 46 M 144, 127 P 88 (1912); Stephens v. Conley, 48 M 352, 138 P 189 (1914).

"Adverse Party" Defined: An adverse party is one who has an interest in opposing the object sought to be accomplished by the appeal; but it does not follow that one who is neither a necessary nor a proper party to the action must be considered adverse merely because he appears as such upon the record. Anderson v. Red Metal Min. Co., 36 M 312, 93 P 44 (1907).

Assignor Not Adverse Party: Where in an action before a Justice of the Peace brought by an assignee on an account, the debtor interpleaded the assignor, who admitted the assignment and disclaimed any interest in the subject matter of the controversy, the latter was not an adverse party, within the meaning of this section, upon whom it was necessary to serve notice of an appeal to the District Court. Anderson v. Red Metal Min. Co., 36 M 312, 93 P 44 (1907). See also Mettler v. Adamson, 38 M 198, 99 P 441 (1909).

Presumption of Service of Notice: In the absence of any showing to the contrary, it is to be presumed that a notice filed with the Justice was properly served. Morin v. Wells, 30 M 76, 75 P 688 (1904).

Compelling Preparation of Transcript: One who appeals from a Justice's to the District Court and has paid the Justice his fee for transmitting the transcript of the cause to the District Court may, if without fault himself, upon failure of the Justice so to do within 10 days after perfection of the appeal, compel the performance of such duty, and in a flagrant case, the court may impose a fine for dereliction on the part of the Justice. Bush v. Baker, 46 M 535, 129 P 550 (1913).

Delay in Filing of Transcript — Penalty: Prompt action is required of the appellant insofar as he is responsible for the filing of the papers. He is subject to the penalty of having his appeal dismissed if, without excuse, he is guilty of laches. He cannot hold the appeal in abeyance and prevent the adverse party from bringing the case to a hearing in the District Court. Bush v. Baker, 46 M 535, 129 P 550 (1913).

Fees of Justice to Be Tendered: A Justice of the Peace is not obliged to make out papers on appeal until his fees have been paid or tendered. Meyers v. Gregans, 20 M 450, 52 P 83 (1898).

No Undertaking Required for Appeal From Justice's Court Upon Satisfaction of Judgment: The District Court dismissed a Justice's Court appeal in part because the appellant failed to file an undertaking or cash bond even though the judgment in a dispute over a residential security deposit was fully satisfied. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that an undertaking and an execution of judgment are not simultaneously permitted and that an undertaking is not required when a judgment is fully satisfied. Guethlein v. Family Inn, 2014 MT 121, 375 Mont. 100, 324 P.3d 1194.

Statutory Requirement for at Least Two Sureties for Filing Valid Undertaking Not Met When One of Two Sureties Is Person Acting as Own Surety: Following a Justice's Court award of attorney fees and costs against Miller in a lease action, Miller filed an appeal and an undertaking in District Court. Under this section, two or more sureties are required to validate an undertaking. As defined in 28-11-401, a surety is one who becomes responsible for performance by another or hypothecates property as security for another; so by definition, a person may not act as surety for oneself. The undertaking in this case listed only Miller and another person as sureties. Therefore, the undertaking did not meet the requirement for two or more sureties and was deficient. The District Court did not have jurisdiction to consider the appeal because the undertaking was invalid, and the appeal was properly dismissed. Miller's contention that the provisions of 25-33-205 worked as an alternative to filing the undertaking on appeal also failed because there was no money that could be considered as a deposit filed within 10 days after notice of appeal. Red Lodging v. Miller, 2001 MT 135, 305 M 477, 29 P3d 477 (2001). See also Adams v. Crismore, 211 M 245, 683 P2d 497 (1984).

Perfection of Appeal From Small Claims Court — No Requirement to File Undertaking or Pay Transfer Fee: Petersen cited 25-35-807 and this section in arguing that the appeal from Small Claims Court filed by Aladdin Steel Products, Inc. (Aladdin), was deficient for failing to file an undertaking. However, this section applies to appeals from Justice's Court and City Court, and 25-35-807 concerns proceedings to enforce or collect a judgment and is not relevant to perfecting an appeal from Small Claims Court. There is in fact no statutory requirement to file an undertaking on appeal from Small Claims Court, and Aladdin's appeal was not deficient for failing to do so. Further, although the transfer fee required under 25-1-201(1)(k) does apply to appeals from Small Claims Court, payment of the fee is not a prerequisite to perfecting an appeal. It is the duty of the Clerk of the District Court to collect the fee, and that duty is unrelated to the duty of the appealing party to perfect an appeal under 25-35-804. Thus, an appeal from Small Claims Court to District Court is properly perfected upon filing a notice of appeal under 25-35-804 and requesting that the Small Claims Court transmit the record to the District Court. Petersen v. Aladdin Steel Prod., Inc., 1999 MT 262, 296 M 394, 989 P2d 385, 56 St. Rep. 1061 (1999).

Dismissal for Failure to File Undertaking on Appeal — No Thirty-Day Filing Requirement — Goldsmith Overruled: On January 23, 1996, the Gallatin County Justice's Court rendered a decision against ISC Distributors (ISC) in favor of Dime Insurance Agency (Dime). On February 1, 1996, ISC filed a notice of appeal in Justice's Court. On March 7, ISC deposited its undertaking on appeal with the Clerk of the District Court. When Dime moved to dismiss, the District Court granted the motion, holding on the basis of Goldsmith v. Lane, 226 M 341, 735 P2d 306 (1987), that the undertaking must be filed within the statutorily prescribed time provided for taking the appeal. The Supreme Court reversed, overruling Goldsmith and holding that as long as an aggrieved party takes an appeal within 30 days from the Justice's Court's judgment and as long as the undertaking is filed before the hearing on the motion to dismiss for failure to file an undertaking, the District Court has jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Dime Ins. Agency v. Scott Johnson/ISC Distrib., 279 M 121, 926 P2d 733, 53 St. Rep. 1078 (1996).

Statutory Requirements for Filing Undertaking Not Met — Appeal Not Perfected: The District Court did not err in dismissing an appeal from a Justice's Court decision when appellant failed to comply with the statutory requirements for filing an undertaking. The undertaking was defective on its face, so the appeal was not perfected and the District Court therefore did not obtain jurisdiction over the action. Berry v. Seman, 245 M 335, 801 P2d 589, 47 St. Rep. 2169 (1990).

Undertaking Insufficient but Not Void — Appeal Preserved: The District Court dismissed an appeal from Justice's Court on the grounds that appellant's undertaking failed to meet the requirements of this section, because it was filed with only one surety, or 25-33-205, because the certificate of deposit filed with the Clerk of Court was not properly assigned and the amount was insufficient. On appeal to the Supreme Court, it was found that 25-33-205 controlled and that, although the deposit of money in lieu of the undertaking was $28.36 short, the undertaking was merely insufficient but was in substantial compliance with the statute. Therefore, the appeal from Justice's Court was improperly dismissed. The case was remanded pending deposit of the correct amount with the Clerk of Court. Franklin v. Swenson, 244 M 446, 798 P2d 122, 47 St. Rep. 1712 (1990).

No Determination of Indigency: The Supreme Court held that from the sparse record in front of it, the case should be remanded so that the lower court could determine if the appellants were indigent. The court stated that if indigency was found, the case would be governed by Merchants Ass'n v. Conger, 185 M 552, 606 P2d 125 (1979), which held that the requirement that the appellant post an undertaking in an amount equal to twice the judgment is unconstitutional when applied to indigents. Credit Associates, Inc. v. Harp, 243 M 281, 794 P2d 343, 47 St. Rep. 1222 (1990).

Until Undertaking Filed, No Question of Sufficiency: A void undertaking is the functional equivalent of no undertaking. The question of the sufficiency or insufficiency of an undertaking cannot arise until the undertaking has been filed. Goldsmith v. Lane, 226 M 341, 735 P2d 306, 44 St. Rep. 705 (1987), overruled on other grounds in Dime Ins. Agency v. Scott Johnson/ISC Distrib., 279 M 121, 926 P2d 733, 53 St. Rep. 1078 (1996).

Failure to Perfect Appeal — Appeal Dismissed: The defendant appealed a default judgment entered in Justice Court. Defendant filed an undertaking, but the undertaking was defective. Plaintiff filed a motion to dismiss the appeal for failure to perfect the appeal. Defendant had adequate time to cure the defect prior to the hearing on plaintiff's motion but failed to do so. Since defendant failed to cure the defect, the District Court lacked jurisdiction to hear the appeal and properly granted plaintiff's motion to dismiss the appeal. Adams v. Crismore, 211 M 245, 683 P2d 497, 41 St. Rep. 1338 (1984). See also Roche v. Sabo, 259 M 76, 853 P2d 1258, 50 St. Rep. 689 (1993), and Red Lodging v. Miller, 2001 MT 135, 305 M 477, 29 P3d 477 (2001).

Constitutionality of Double Undertaking Requirement: Section 25-33-201(1), as applied to the indigent appellant, violates her 14th amendment equal protection rights based on the traditional equal protection test. The classification established by the double undertaking requirement for an appeal to District Court is arbitrary and rests on grounds wholly irrelevant to the achievement of the state's objectives in enactment of this provision. Merchants Ass'n v. Conger, 185 M 552, 606 P2d 125 (1979).

Contents of Undertaking: On appeal from a money judgment from a Justice's to the District Court, the appellant must file an undertaking agreeing to pay the amount of the judgment appealed from together with all the costs if the appeal be withdrawn or dismissed or the amount of any judgment and all costs that may be recovered against him in the District Court. State ex rel. Gregory v. District Court, 86 M 396, 284 P 537 (1930).

Real Property Actions: On appeal from a judgment directing the delivery of possession of real property, the undertaking on appeal must be conditioned that the appellant will pay any judgment and costs that may be recovered against him in the District Court, not exceeding a sum to be fixed by the Justice, and specified in the undertaking; and where a stay is desired the undertaking must set forth that during the possession of the property by appellant he will not commit or suffer to be committed any waste thereon, and that if the appeal be dismissed or withdrawn or the judgment affirmed or judgment recovered against him in the District Court, he will pay the value of the use and occupation of the property for the time of the appeal until the delivery of possession thereof. State ex rel. Gregory v. District Court, 86 M 396, 284 P 537 (1930).

District Court Costs Taxed by District Court: This section impliedly authorized the District Court to tax against the unsuccessful party in that court the costs incurred in the trial of the cause in the Justice's Court, where they were included in the cost bill, although the Justice of the Peace had failed to make entry of costs on his docket. Duckett v. Biggs, 57 M 443, 188 P 938 (1920).

Stages of Appeal: An appeal from a Justice's Court presents three defined stages. First, the taking of the appeal, which occurs when notice of the proper character is properly filed and served; second, the perfecting of the appeal or rendering it effectual, which occurs upon the filing of the undertaking; third, the hearing, which occurs when the trial de novo is had in the District Court. Thien v. Wiltse, 49 M 189, 141 P 146 (1914).

Taking and Perfection of Appeal Distinguished: There is a clear distinction between the taking and the perfecting of an appeal. An appeal is taken when a notice of appeal is served and filed. The filing of an undertaking perfects the appeal, but it is not a part of the taking in the statutory sense. Thien v. Wiltse, 49 M 189, 141 P 146 (1914).

Requirements for Effective Appeal: To make an appeal from a Justice's Court effective, a notice of appeal, as provided in 25-33-103, as well as an undertaking, provided for in this section, must be filed with the Justice; and, within 10 days after receiving the notice and the undertaking, the Justice must, as required by 25-32-104 (now repealed), transmit all the papers to the Clerk of the District Court. State ex rel. Hackshaw v. District Court, 48 M 477, 138 P 1100 (1914).

Conditions in Undertaking — Surplusage: An undertaking on appeal to the District Court which meets all the requirements of this section relative to amount and conditions is not rendered invalid by the insertion of additional conditions not in anywise affecting the liability of the sureties under the statute. Marlowe v. Mich. Stove Co., 48 M 342, 137 P 539 (1913).

Notice Ineffectual Without Undertaking: The appeal is taken by filing and serving the notice of appeal, but it is ineffectual for any purpose unless the required undertaking is filed. State ex rel. Rosenstein v. District Court, 41 M 100, 108 P 580 (1910).

Statute Controlling — Dismissal Required: Unless an appeal from a Justice's Court is taken within the time and effectuated in accordance with the regulations prescribed by law, the District Court has no jurisdiction of the appeal except to dismiss it. State ex rel. Cobban v. District Court, 30 M 93, 75 P 862 (1904).

25-33-203. Justification of sureties.

Case Notes

Type of Notice Required: This section not specifying the character of notice, whether written or oral, that must be given by appellant to the adverse party as to when and where the sureties on the undertaking on appeal will justify, 3 days' oral notice given by appellant's counsel to counsel for adverse party was sufficient. State ex rel. Strunk v. District Court, 113 M 58, 120 P2d 831 (1942).

Waiver of Irregularities as to Sureties: Where counsel for the successful party to an action in a Justice's Court had orally agreed that, owing to illness of opposing counsel, justification of the sureties on an undertaking on appeal to the District Court should be deemed sufficient, even though not made strictly within the time prescribed by this section, and where, after the sureties had been examined and the undertaking approved, no objection was offered, he will be held to have waived any irregularity in this respect. Bush v. Baker, 46 M 535, 129 P 550 (1913).

Waiver of Sureties: The right to require sureties on an undertaking on appeal from a Justice's to the District Court to justify is personal to the exceptant and may therefore be waived by him. Bush v. Baker, 46 M 535, 129 P 550 (1913).

Exceptions to Sureties — Waiver: An exception to the sureties does not divest the jurisdiction of the District Court of the appeal; the requirement of the statute concerning the justification of the sureties is directory, for appellee's benefit, and he may waive his privilege of excepting to the sureties or may except to the sureties and afterward withdraw such exception; the statute is mandatory only where the appellee insists that the sureties justify within 5 days. Morin v. Wells, 30 M 76, 75 P 688 (1904).

Extension of Time by Stipulation: Where appellee excepted to the sufficiency of the sureties and they failed to justify within the statutory period, counsel for the parties had the right to stipulate for an extension of time within which the sureties might justify or a new undertaking be furnished. Morin v. Wells, 30 M 76, 75 P 688 (1904).

Notice on Qualification of Sureties: The notice required to be given the adverse party is not notice of the filing of a new undertaking but notice of the time and place when and where the sureties will be examined touching their qualifications. State ex rel. Allen v. Napton, 24 M 450, 62 P 686 (1900).

Case Notes

No Undertaking Required for Appeal From Justice's Court Upon Satisfaction of Judgment: The District Court dismissed a Justice's Court appeal in part because the appellant failed to file an undertaking or cash bond even though the judgment in a dispute over a residential security deposit was fully satisfied. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that an undertaking and an execution of judgment are not simultaneously permitted and that an undertaking is not required when a judgment is fully satisfied. Guethlein v. Family Inn, 2014 MT 121, 375 Mont. 100, 324 P.3d 1194.

25-33-205. Deposit of money in lieu of undertaking.

1981 Amendment: Deleted former subsection (1) relating to deposit of money equivalent to undertaking; substituted "Whenever" for "In all cases where"; substituted "plus $300 . . . order of the court" for "and $300 in addition shall be equivalent to filing the undertaking".

Statutory Requirement for at Least Two Sureties for Filing Valid Undertaking Not Met When One of Two Sureties Is Person Acting as Own Surety: Following a Justice's Court award of attorney fees and costs against Miller in a lease action, Miller filed an appeal and an undertaking in District Court. Under 25-33-201, two or more sureties are required to validate an undertaking. As defined in 28-11-401, a surety is one who becomes responsible for performance by another or hypothecates property as security for another; so by definition, a person may not act as surety for oneself. The undertaking in this case listed only Miller and another person as sureties. Therefore, the undertaking did not meet the requirement for two or more sureties and was deficient. The District Court did not have jurisdiction to consider the appeal because the undertaking was invalid, and the appeal was properly dismissed. Miller's contention that the provisions of this section worked as an alternative to filing the undertaking on appeal also failed because there was no money that could be considered as a deposit filed within 10 days after notice of appeal. Red Lodging v. Miller, 2001 MT 135, 305 M 477, 29 P3d 477 (2001). See also Adams v. Crismore, 211 M 245, 683 P2d 497 (1984).

Undertaking Insufficient but Not Void — Appeal Preserved: The District Court dismissed an appeal from Justice's Court on the grounds that appellant's undertaking failed to meet the requirements of 25-33-201, because it was filed with only one surety, or this section, because the certificate of deposit filed with the Clerk of Court was not properly assigned and the amount was insufficient. On appeal to the Supreme Court, it was found that this section controlled and that, although the deposit of money in lieu of the undertaking was $28.36 short, the undertaking was merely insufficient but was in substantial compliance with the statute. Therefore, the appeal from Justice's Court was improperly dismissed. The case was remanded pending deposit of the correct amount with the Clerk of Court. Franklin v. Swenson, 244 M 446, 798 P2d 122, 47 St. Rep. 1712 (1990).

Deposit in Lieu of Undertaking: Section 25-31-115 has application to all undertakings other than those on appeal, and this section (prior to the 1981 amendment), so far as it permitted a deposit in lieu of cash in the amount of the judgment plus costs in the Justice's Court, is a special statute relating to undertakings on appeal and is controlling as to them; where appellant deposited with the Justice a cashier's check, treated by both parties as cash, it may not be required that the deposit cover costs incurred in the District Court. The statute secures respondent in the judgment he holds, including costs already incurred in the Justice's Court, without securing against costs in the District Court. Ross v. Greenwald, 112 M 324, 115 P2d 290 (1941).

25-33-206. Waiver of undertaking or deposit.

Case Notes

Waiver of Undertaking: The statute requiring a justification of sureties on a stay bond is directory and meant to be for respondent's, not appellant's, benefit and may be waived by respondent. State ex rel. Reins v. District Court, 22 M 449, 57 P 89 (1899). See also Morin v. Wells, 30 M 76, 75 P 688 (1904).

25-33-207. Defective undertaking.

Case Notes

Opportunity to Remedy Defective Undertaking: An appellant who filed an undertaking that was defective because it included the amount of the justice's court judgment instead of twice the amount of the judgment as required by 25-33-201 must be provided an opportunity to remedy the defective undertaking before the District Court may dismiss the appeal. Cox v. Kobelt, 2012 MT 129, 366 Mont 129, 285 P.3d 538.

Statutory Requirement for at Least Two Sureties for Filing Valid Undertaking Not Met When One of Two Sureties Is Person Acting as Own Surety: Following a Justice's Court award of attorney fees and costs against Miller in a lease action, Miller filed an appeal and an undertaking in District Court. Dismissal for Failure to File Undertaking on Appeal — No Thirty-Day Filing Requirement — Goldsmith Overruled: On January 23, 1996, the Gallatin County Justice's Court rendered a decision against ISC Distributors (ISC) in favor of Dime Insurance Agency (Dime). On February 1, 1996, ISC filed a notice of appeal in Justice's Court. On March 7, ISC deposited its undertaking on appeal with the Clerk of the District Court. When Dime moved to dismiss, the District Court granted the motion, holding on the basis of Goldsmith v. Lane, 226 M 341, 735 P2d 306 (1987), that the undertaking must be filed within the statutorily prescribed time provided for taking the appeal. The Supreme Court reversed, overruling Goldsmith and holding that as long as an aggrieved party takes an appeal within 30 days from the Justice's Court's judgment and as long as the undertaking is filed before the hearing on the motion to dismiss for failure to file an undertaking, the District Court has jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Dime Ins. Agency v. Scott Johnson/ISC Distrib., 279 M 121, 926 P2d 733, 53 St. Rep. 1078 (1996).

Failure to Perfect Appeal — Appeal Dismissed: The defendant appealed a default judgment entered in Justice Court. Defendant filed an undertaking, but the undertaking was defective. Motion to Dismiss Appeal With Substituted Undertaking: As against the contention of relator that an appeal to District Court from a Justice's Court judgment should be dismissed unless a new undertaking be filed within 30 days after the filing of the notice of appeal, for insufficiency of the first undertaking, under this section, all that is required is that it be filed at or before the hearing of the motion to dismiss the appeal, and in any event, where the appeal has otherwise been perfected, relator cannot object to the filing of the new undertaking given for his own benefit and protection. State ex rel. Strunk v. District Court, 113 M 58, 120 P2d 831 (1942).

Time of Taking Appeal With Substituted Undertaking: The filing of the undertaking is no part of the taking of the appeal. The appeal may be preserved, notwithstanding the undertaking is defective or irregular, if a good one is substituted at or before the hearing of the motion to dismiss. Thien v. Wiltse, 49 M 189, 141 P 146 (1914).

Substituted Undertakings: The rule that where the original undertaking on appeal to the Supreme Court is not wholly void but merely defective and therefore amendable, the filing of a substituted one preserves the appeal if approved by a Justice of the Supreme Court under section 93-8019, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by former Rules 4, 6, 9, 10, 11, 25, M.R.App.P., now superseded), is applicable to substituted undertakings on appeals to District Courts, filed and approved as provided by this section. Marlowe v. Mich. Stove Co., 48 M 342, 137 P 539 (1913).

Case Notes

GENERAL

Testimony Received During Unrecorded Justice's Court Proceedings: A District Court should treat references to testimony given under oath during a Justice's Court proceeding in which no record was taken the same way as any other statement that has not been recorded or transcribed. McDunn v. Arnold, 2013 MT 138, 370 Mont. 270, 303 P.3d 1279.

Trial De Novo Rather Than Hearing Appropriate Absent Evidence of Prosecutor Conduct Warranting Mistrial: On an appeal from City Court on a DUI conviction, Whittinghill contended that the District Court should have held an evidentiary hearing on whether the prosecutor goaded Whittinghill into moving for a mistrial. However, Whittinghill did not present any cogent argument or statement of available evidence indicating that the situation was a product of prosecutor misconduct and only speculated about why the prosecution's only witness gave offending testimony. Absent a showing that the prosecutor did anything to goad the defense into moving for a mistrial, the District Court properly denied an evidentiary hearing and granted a trial de novo. Helena v. Whittinghill, 2009 MT 343, 353 M 131, 219 P3d 1244 (2009).

Trial De Novo Allowed in District Court Despite Failure to Request Jury Trial in Justice's Court — No Waiver of Right to Jury Trial: The District Court erred in determining that under this section, a waiver of the right to a jury trial in Justice's Court waives the right to a jury trial de novo on appeal in District Court. The court disregarded the interplay of former Rule 3, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), with former Rule 38, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and this section in attempting to harmonize the statute and the rules. The language in this section, limiting appeals from Justice's Court to the pleadings filed in Justice's Court, does not limit jury trial demands in appeals from Justice's Court because jury trial demands are not pleadings. The plain meaning of former Rule 81(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), requires that former Rules 3 and 38 be given meanings that are consistent with this section and the right to trial by jury. Thus, when a party makes a jury trial demand under former Rule 38 for a trial de novo on appeal in District Court, the action commences when the party serves and files notice of appeal pursuant to 25-33-102 and 25-33-103. In appeals from Justice's Court, jury trial demands must be made within 10 days of the filing of notice of appeal. Further, participation in a bench trial in District Court without objection does not constitute waiver of the right to a jury trial so long as a timely jury trial demand is made in District Court. Balyeat Law, P.C. v. Harrison, 1999 MT 144, 295 M

13, 983 P2d 902, 56 St. Rep. 566 (1999), following U.S. v. Calif. Mobile Home Park Management Co., 107 F3d 1374 (9th Cir. 1997), and Woirhaye v. District Court, 1998 MT 320, 292 M 185, 972 P2d 800, 55 St. Rep. 1298 (1998).

Denial of Lay Counsel in City Court — Any Prejudice Cured by Trial De Novo on Appeal: Henry was charged with driving under the influence and was tried in City Court. The City Court refused to permit a family friend to represent Henry in the trial. Henry then appealed to the District Court for a trial de novo in which Henry was represented by counsel. The Supreme Court refused to address the merits of Henry's claim of violation of the right to counsel. The trial de novo on appeal to the District Court cured any prejudice that may have resulted from the City Court's decision regarding representation. St. v. Henry, 271 M 491, 898 P2d 1195, 52 St. Rep. 516 (1995).

Failure to Raise Claim of Erroneous Denial of Counsel in City Court Not Deficient Performance — District Court Not Court of Review: Henry was convicted of driving under the influence, first in City Court and then in District Court. Henry appealed the District Court conviction, claiming ineffective assistance of counsel based on counsel's failure to present Henry's claim of erroneous denial of counsel by the City Court. The Supreme Court held that the District Court does not sit as a court of review on appeal from City Court proceedings. There was no legal basis to present the claim of error, and failure to present it cannot constitute deficient performance. St. v. Henry, 271 M 491, 898 P2d 1195, 52 St. Rep. 516 (1995).

City Court Error to Refuse Waiver of Jury Trial — Error Waived by De Novo Appeal: McCarvel was charged with DUI within the city limits of Billings and scheduled for trial in the City Court. The city demanded a jury trial, but McCarvel waived his right to trial by jury. The City Court refused to accept the waiver, and the jury convicted McCarvel. On appeal to the District Court, McCarvel moved to dismiss on the grounds that the City Court committed error. The District Court refused to dismiss, and McCarvel changed his plea to guilty. Citing St. v. O'Brien, 35 M 482, 90 P 514 (1907), the Supreme Court held that because the trial in District Court is a trial de novo, in which a defendant has an opportunity for a trial without a jury, the opportunity for a District Court trial cured whatever prejudice resulted from the City Court's refusal to grant the right to a waiver provided under the provisions of 46-17-201. Billings v. McCarvel, 262 M 96, 863 P2d 441, 50 St. Rep. 1460 (1993).

Dismissal of Appeal for Unnecessary Delay: Where defendant filed notice of appeal of adverse verdict in Justice's Court with an undertaking on May 8, 1969, but took no further action, District Court properly granted plaintiff's motion to dismiss for unnecessary delay on July 1, 1970, since it was appellant's burden as moving party to bring appeal on for hearing. Eide Ins. v. Correll, 156 M 167, 478 P2d 272 (1970).

Time for Appeal Following Motion: In order to bring this section into harmony with the mandate of Art. VIII, sec. 23, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. VII, sec. 4(2), 1972 Mont. Const.), providing for appeals from Justices' Courts "in all cases", on timely motion to set aside a default judgment in a Justice's Court, the judgment is suspended and the time for taking an appeal therefrom begins to run from the time the motion is disposed of. Davis v. Bell Boy Gold Min. Co., 101 M 534, 54 P2d 563 (1936).

Trial de Novo in Misdemeanor Case: On appeal from a Justice's Court in a misdemeanor case, the cause must be tried de novo in the District Court on the papers and files in the former, unless the latter court allows other or amended pleadings, and each party has the benefit of all legal objections made in the Justice's Court. St. v. Benson, 91 M 109, 5 P2d 1045 (1931).

Appeal as Trial de Novo: The District Court does not, on appeal from a Justice's Court, sit as a court of review but tries the cause de novo. Thien v. Wiltse, 49 M 189, 141 P 146 (1914); Jenkins v. Carroll, 42 M 302, 112 P 1064 (1910); In re Graye, 36 M 394, 93 P 266 (1907); St. v. O'Brien, 35 M 482, 90 P 514 (1907); Duane v. Molinak, 31 M 343, 78 P 588 (1904); State ex rel. Seres v. District Court, 19 M 501, 48 P 1104 (1897); St. v. Deslauries, 13 M 398, 34 P 490 (1893); Missoula Elec. Light Co. v. Morgan, 13 M 394, 34 P 488 (1893); State ex rel. Gleim v. Evans, 13 M 239, 33 P 1010 (1893).

Irregularities Waived by Appeal: Since the District Court does not, on appeal from a Justice's Court, sit as a court of review but tries the cause de novo, any irregularities attending the rendition of the judgment in a case in which the Justice had jurisdiction are waived by taking the appeal. Hosoda v. Neville, 45 M 310, 123 P 20 (1912); In re Graye, 36 M 394, 93 P 266 (1907); St. v. O'Brien, 35 M 482, 90 P 514 (1907).

Appellate Jurisdiction to Affirmatively Appear: On appeal from a Justice's Court the trial is de novo, but the District Court, though proceeding with the trial as in other cases, acquires its jurisdiction by appeal under the statute, and its jurisdiction must affirmatively appear. Jenkins v. Carroll, 42 M 302, 112 P 1064 (1910).

Attachment of Jurisdiction — When: Until the notice of appeal is filed and served as prescribed and the undertaking given and, if required, the sureties thereon, or others in their stead, justify after notice and within 5 days, the District Court does not acquire jurisdiction of the subject matter or of the parties. Jenkins v. Carroll, 42 M 302, 112 P 1064 (1910).

Jurisdictional Defects — Statutory Requirements Exclusive: If any of the necessary steps in taking an appeal from a Justice's Court to the District Court are omitted, the District Court is without jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. Such appeals, though provided for by the Constitution, are subject to statutory regulation, and the mode prescribed for taking them is exclusive. Jenkins v. Carroll, 42 M 302, 112 P 1064 (1910).

Rule Applicable in Criminal Cases: The rule of practice under this section applies in criminal cases. In re Graye, 36 M 394, 93 P 266 (1907).

Jurisdiction on Appeal: The District Court on appeal sits as a Justice's Court, and with no greater jurisdiction, and either party may have reviewed any question of law or fact which was raised before the Justice and presented to the District Court. State ex rel. Grissom v. Justice Court, 31 M 258, 78 P 498 (1904).

Motion to Dismiss Not Properly Before District Court: Only such questions as were raised and presented in the Justice's Court can be tried on appeal in the District Court, and where there was no showing that a motion was made in the Justice's Court to set aside the judgment and dismiss the cause but the record showed that the case was tried on issues of fact raised by the answer, it was proper for the District Court, on appeal from a judgment for plaintiff, to overrule a motion to dismiss the cause and to try the issues of fact that had been raised before the Justice. Clark v. Great N. Ry., 30 M 458, 76 P 1003 (1904).

Scope of Review: Only such questions as were raised and presented in the Justice's Court can be tried in the District Court. Clark v. Great N. Ry., 30 M 458, 76 P 1003 (1904); State el rel. Shanahan v. Lindsay, 22 M 398, 56 P 827 (1899).

DEFAULT JUDGMENT

Questions of Law — Review by Appeal: The District Court properly sustained a motion to quash a Writ of Certiorari where the only questions sought to be raised to annul a default judgment entered by Justice's Court were questions of law, appealable under this section. Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937).

Discretion Determined by Review: Under this section there is no appeal from a default judgment in a Justice's Court except where the court has abused its discretion in refusing to set it aside; on such appeal the District Court can go no further than to determine whether discretion was abused, its action on appeal being a review rather than a trial de novo. Davis v. Bell Boy Gold Min. Co., 101 M 534, 54 P2d 563 (1936).

Denial of Motion — Review by Certiorari: Where a Justice overruled a motion to vacate a default judgment, this section authorized an appeal and the judgment could not be reviewed by certiorari. State ex rel. Reynolds v. Laurendeau, 27 M 522, 71 P 754 (1903).

Discretion of Justice Determined on Appeal: Where a Justice refuses to set aside a judgment by default, an appeal lies, and it is for the court to determine on the papers filed in the Justice's Court as to whether the discretion of the Justice has been abused. State ex rel. Reynolds v. Laurendeau, 27 M 522, 71 P 754 (1903); State ex rel. Shanahan v. Lindsay, 22 M 398, 56 P 827 (1899).

Conditions for Affirmance of Default: A judgment by default will be affirmed, on appeal, where no motion was made in the Justice's Court to set aside the default, or other appropriate relief sought, if the complaint was sufficient for the court in which it was originally filed. Gage v. Maryatt, 9 M 265, 23 P 337 (1890).

Attorney General's Opinions

Court Reporter Filing Fee — Clerk of District Court to Collect Fee in Appeal From Justice's Court or City Court — Appeal Is "Civil Action" Under Statutes: The Attorney General was asked whether a Clerk of District Court must collect the $20 filing fee, required by 25-1-202 and used to help pay the salary of the court reporter, in appeals filed in District Court from judgments of a Justice's or City Court. The Attorney General concluded that: (1) a private legal action in a Justice's or City Court is a civil action; (2) an appeal from a Justice's or City Court may include appeal of a civil action; (3) an appeal from either of those courts results in most cases in a new trial in District Court and that the need for a court reporter in that instance is obvious; and (4) the payment of the additional $20 filing fee required by 25-1-202 is mandatory. 48 A.G. Op. 1 (1999).

25-33-303. Appeal from judgment by default.

Case Notes

Question of Law — Certiorari Improper: The District Court properly sustained a motion to quash a Writ of Certiorari where the only questions sought to be raised to annul a default judgment entered by Justice's Court were questions of law, appealable under this section. Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937).

Abuse of Discretion to Be Determined: Under this section there is no appeal from a default judgment in a Justice's Court except where the court has abused its discretion in refusing to set it aside; on such appeal the District Court can go no further than to determine whether discretion was abused, its action on appeal being a review rather than a trial de novo. Davis v. Bell Boy Gold Min. Co., 101 M 534, 54 P2d 563 (1936).

Refusal to Set Aside Default — Appeal Abuse of Discretion: Where a Justice refuses to set aside a judgment by default, an appeal lies, and it is for the court to determine on the papers filed in the Justice's Court as to whether the discretion of the Justice has been abused. State ex rel. Reynolds v. Laurendeau, 27 M 522, 71 P 754 (1903); State ex rel. Shanahan v. Lindsay, 22 M 398, 56 P 827 (1899).

Review by Appeal — Certiorari Improper: Where a Justice overruled a motion to vacate a default judgment, this section authorized an appeal, and the judgment could not be reviewed by certiorari. State ex rel. Reynolds v. Laurendeau, 27 M 522, 71 P 754 (1903).

Default Judgment — Motion to Be Made in Justice's Court: A judgment by default will be affirmed, on appeal, where no motion was made in the Justice's Court to set aside the default, or other appropriate relief sought, if the complaint was sufficient for the court in which it was originally filed. Gage v. Maryatt, 9 M 265, 23 P 337 (1890).

25-33-304. Dismissal of appeal upon delay — costs and damages.

Case Notes

Failure to File Brief Within Fifteen Days of Municipal Court Judgment — Summary Judgment Not Abuse of Discretion: Frazier was convicted of speeding in Justice's Court. Frazier filed a timely appeal to District Court, but failed to file a brief within 15 days after the record was filed with the District Court, as required by Rule 14(a), U.M.C.R.App. (Title 25, ch. 30, part 2400). The District Court summarily dismissed the appeal, and Frazier appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that under this section, the District Court has discretion to order an appeal to be dismissed for failure to prosecute an appeal or for unnecessary delay in bringing an appeal to a hearing. The Supreme Court declined to reverse the District Court for insisting that parties comply with statutory directives and rules of civil procedure, holding that it was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to dismiss Frazier's appeal for failure to file a timely brief. St. v. Frazier, 2005 MT 99, 326 M 524, 111 P3d 215 (2005).

Remand of Criminal Case Not Authorized: A District Court may dismiss the appeal of a civil case under this section, but the remand of a criminal case is not authorized. Rickett v. Billings, 262 M 339, 864 P2d 793, 50 St. Rep. 1586 (1993), affirming Hardin v. Myers, 194 M 248, 633 P2d 677 (1981).

Unnecessary Delay: Where defendant filed notice of appeal of adverse verdict in Justice's Court with an undertaking on May 8, 1969, but took no further action, District Court properly granted plaintiff's motion to dismiss for unnecessary delay on July 1, 1970, since it was appellant's burden as moving party to bring appeal on for hearing. Eide Ins. v. Correll, 156 M 167, 478 P2d 272 (1970).

Discretionary Power — Reasons for Dismissal: The power, discretionary in its nature, lodged by this section in the District Court, to dismiss an appeal from a Justice's Court for delay in bringing it to a hearing, should not be exercised where there is a reasonable excuse for the delay and where it is apparent that the adverse party has not suffered prejudice by reason of the delay. Bush v. Baker, 46 M 535, 129 P 550 (1913).

Dismissal as Abuse — Acquiescence in Delay: The District Court abused the discretionary power given it by this section, in dismissing on motion an appeal from a Justice's Court for alleged lack of diligence in prosecuting it, where counsel for appellant, by reason of illness, was prevented from attending to matters of business, respondent having suffered no detriment or inconvenience from the delay, but rather, by allowing the case to rest for over 3 months without any effort to have it brought to trial, tacitly acquiesced in the delinquency of the appellant. Bush v. Baker, 46 M 535, 129 P 550 (1913).

CHAPTER 35
SMALL CLAIMS PROCEDURE — JUSTICE'S COURT

Chapter Compiler's Comments

Preamble: The preamble to SB 485 (Ch. 586, L. 1981) read:

"WHEREAS, in 1977 the Montana Legislature enacted the provisions of Chapter 572, Laws of 1977, creating a small claims court within justices' courts in Montana, which provisions are codified as Title 25, chapter 35, MCA; and

WHEREAS, the small claims procedure makes no provision for a jury trial, provides that one party may not be represented by an attorney if the other party is not so represented, and provides that an appeal from the small claims court is to be tried on the record of the case and is not to be tried as a trial de novo; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Supreme Court has held in the case of North Central Services, Inc. v. Hafdahl, 191 Mont. 440, 625 P2d 56 [38 St. Rep. 372], (Civil No. 80-228, decided March 11, 1981), that the cumulative effect of these provisions is to deny the right to a jury trial and the right to counsel at every stage of the factual determination of a case in small claims court; and

WHEREAS, the Supreme Court therefore held section 25-35-403(2), MCA, to be unconstitutional and also held the remainder of Title 25, chapter 35, unconstitutional and void for the reason that it could not be severed from section 25-35-403(2), MCA.

THEREFORE, it is the intent of the Legislature to cure the unconstitutionality of Title 25, chapter 35, by repealing and reenacting those provisions with such changes as to cure the unconstitutionality of those provisions."

Chapter Case Notes

Claims in Excess of Amount for Consideration in Small Claims Court Not Barred by Res Judicata From Consideration in District Court: Thornton contracted to purchase a modular home from Alpine Home Center (Alpine), agreeing to pay $3,000 down toward the $72,120 purchase price, and receiving $6,900 credit for trade-in of an older mobile home. Thornton complained of problems with the modular home necessitating $500 in repairs, and stopped payment on the downpayment check. Upon taking possession of Thornton's trade-in, Alpine discovered damage to the trade-in in the amount of $3,450, and also discovered that Thornton owed $210.09 in back taxes on the trade-in. Alpine subsequently filed a complaint in Small Claims Court for $3,000. The Small Claims Court offset the cost of Thornton's repairs against the amount of damages suffered by Alpine and awarded Alpine $2,500. Thornton did not appeal the judgment, but instead filed a complaint in District Court alleging numerous theories for relief and seeking $65,000 for consequential damages, $100,000 for punitive damages, and general damages to be determined by the District Court. The District Court dismissed Thornton's claim on grounds that the action was barred by res judicata. Thornton appealed. The Supreme Court applied the elements of res judicata as set out in Whirry v. Swanson, 254 M 248, 836 P2d 1227 (1992), concluding that the issues raised by Thornton in District Court were different from the claims raised in Small Claims Court, and pointed out that the issues could not have been raised in the lower court in any case because 25-35-502 limits Small Claims Court jurisdiction to claims not exceeding $3,000. The District Court erred in holding that res judicata barred Thornton's action, so that holding was reversed and Thornton's case was remanded for further District Court proceedings. Thornton v. Alpine Home Center, 2001 MT 310, 307 M 529, 38 P3d 855 (2001).

Constitutionality — Severance Not Possible: Where the Supreme Court held that the small claims procedure in Justices' Courts was unconstitutional because it denied a litigant both the right to a jury trial and the right to counsel, the unconstitutional portions of the small claims statutes could not be severed from other portions of the small claims procedure, so the entire procedure was held unconstitutional and void. If severance of the unconstitutional provisions from the constitutional provisions would leave a complete procedure and if severance could be accomplished while honoring legislative intent, then severance should be made. Because an incomplete and incompatible appeal procedure would have resulted and because the Supreme Court could not ascertain legislative intent, no severance was made and the entire procedure was held unconstitutional. N. Cent. Serv., Inc. v. Hafdahl, 191 M 440, 625 P2d 56, 38 St. Rep. 372 (1981), distinguished, as to dicta stating that the constitutional right to a jury trial was satisfied if a trial was available at the District Court level, in Woirhaye v. District Court, 1998 MT 320, 292 M 185, 972 P2d 800, 55 St. Rep. 1298 (1998). (Annotator's note: This case was decided prior to 1981 repeal and enactment. See "Preamble" compiler's comment under Title 25, ch. 35, table of contents.)

Constitutionality — Small Claims Procedure as Denial of Right to Counsel and Trial by Jury: Where the plaintiff brought an action in Small Claims Court before a Justice of the Peace and, upon appeal to the District Court, the judgment in favor of the plaintiff was affirmed but the defendant was prohibited from appearing through counsel since the law provides only for appeal of questions of law, the District Court erred in holding the small claims procedure in Justice's Court constitutional. The small claims procedure makes no provision for a jury trial, prohibits a trial de novo in the District Court, and prohibits a party from being represented by counsel unless all parties are so represented. These provisions are unconstitutional because they effectively deny a litigant the right to counsel and the right to a jury trial at all stages of the factfinding process. N. Cent. Serv., Inc. v. Hafdahl, 191 M 440, 625 P2d 56, 38 St. Rep. 372 (1981), distinguished, as to dicta stating that the constitutional right to a jury trial was satisfied if a trial was available at the District Court level, in Woirhaye v. District Court, 1998 MT 320, 292 M 185, 972 P2d 800, 55 St. Rep. 1298 (1998). (Annotator's note: This case was decided prior to 1981 repeal and enactment. See "Preamble" compiler's comment under Title 25, ch. 35, table of contents.)

Part 5
General Provisions

25-35-501. Purpose.

Case Notes

Admitting Exhibits Without Proper Evidentiary Foundation: Capital Ford Garage argued that the Small Claims Court erred in allowing the plaintiff to introduce exhibits without laying a proper foundation. The Supreme Court held that the Small Claims Court had not abused its discretion because the purpose of that court was to provide for the informal disposition of claims. Johnson v. Capital Ford Garage, 250 M 430, 820 P2d 1275, 48 St. Rep. 992 (1991).

1991 Amendment: Inserted (2) setting amount applicable to jurisdiction of small claims court over an interpleader.

1989 Amendment: Increased amount of claims that may be heard by Small Claims Court from $1,500 to $2,500.

Case Notes

Claims in Excess of Amount for Consideration in Small Claims Court Not Barred by Res Judicata From Consideration in District Court: Thornton contracted to purchase a modular home from Alpine Home Center (Alpine), agreeing to pay $3,000 down toward the $72,120 purchase price, and receiving $6,900 credit for trade-in of an older mobile home. case because this section limits Small Claims Court jurisdiction to claims not exceeding $3,000 (subsequently increased). The District Court erred in holding that res judicata barred Thornton's action, so that holding was reversed and Thornton's case was remanded for further District Court proceedings. Thornton v. Alpine Home Center, 2001 MT 310, 307 M 529, 38 P3d 855 (2001).

Lack of Small Claims Court Jurisdiction Over Out-of-State Corporation Whose Managing Agent Could Not Be Served: Under this section, the Small Claims Court has jurisdiction of certain claims if the defendant can be served in the county where the action commenced. Here, Aladdin Steel Products, Inc. (Aladdin), a Washington corporation with no office or registered agent in Montana, could not be served in Lincoln County, Montana, so the Small Claims Court lacked jurisdiction. Petersen's argument that process could have been served in Lincoln County on Aladdin's warranty service representative or sales representative failed for lack of evidence that either of those representatives was a managing agent or general agent for purposes of service of process. Petersen v. Aladdin Steel Prod., Inc., 1999 MT 262, 296 M 394, 989 P2d 385, 56 St. Rep. 1061 (1999), following State ex rel. Schmidt v. District Court, 111 M 16, 105 P2d 677 (1940).

Perfection of Appeal From Small Claims Court — No Requirement to File Undertaking or Pay Transfer Fee: Petersen cited 25-33-201 and 25-35-807 in arguing that the appeal from Small Claims Court filed by Aladdin Steel Products, Inc. (Aladdin), was deficient for failing to file an undertaking. However, 25-33-201 applies to appeals from Justice's Court and City Court, and 25-35-807 concerns proceedings to enforce or collect a judgment and is not relevant to perfecting an appeal from Small Claims Court. There is in fact no statutory requirement to file an undertaking on appeal from Small Claims Court, and Aladdin's appeal was not deficient for failing to do so. Further, although the transfer fee required under 25-1-201(1)(k) does apply to appeals from Small Claims Court, payment of the fee is not a prerequisite to perfecting an appeal. It is the duty of the Clerk of the District Court to collect the fee, and that duty is unrelated to the duty of the appealing party to perfect an appeal under 25-35-804. Thus, an appeal from Small Claims Court to District Court is properly perfected upon filing a notice of appeal under 25-35-804 and requesting that the Small Claims Court transmit the record to the District Court. Petersen v. Aladdin Steel Prod., Inc., 1999 MT 262, 296 M 394, 989 P2d 385, 56 St. Rep. 1061 (1999).

Partnerships — Capacity to Sue in Own Name: On certification from the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, the Montana Supreme Court held that a joint venture between two out-of-state corporations had the capacity to bring suit as a plaintiff against a corporation under Montana law. Relying on the Uniform Partnership Act and Montana statutes that allow a partnership to be sued in its own name and to sue in Small Claims Court, the Supreme Court found clear legislative intent to treat partnerships as distinct entities with the power to sue. Decker Coal Co. v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 220 M 251, 714 P2d 155, 43 St. Rep. 337 (1986).

Admitting Exhibits Without Proper Evidentiary Foundation: Capital Ford Garage argued that the Small Claims Court erred in allowing the plaintiff to introduce exhibits without laying a proper foundation. The Supreme Court held that the Small Claims Court had not abused its discretion because the purpose of that court was to provide for the informal disposition of claims. Johnson v. Capital Ford Garage, 250 M 430, 820 P2d 1275, 48 St. Rep. 992 (1991).

Proper District Court Review of Small Claims Court Decision Precluded by Loss of Electronic Record — Reversible Error: When the electronically recorded proceedings of a Small Claims Court trial were lost, the District Court had no basis or record upon which to determine whether the findings of fact were clearly erroneous. A trial de novo was precluded by 25-35-803. Without the opportunity to review the record, it was reversible error for the District Court to affirm the judgment of the Small Claims Court. The Supreme Court remanded to the Small Claims Court for a new hearing. Spence v. Ortloff, 271 M 533, 898 P2d 1232, 52 St. Rep. 606 (1995), following Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. DeSaye, 250 M 320, 820 P2d 1285 (1991).

Part 8
Judgment — Appeal

Part Case Notes

Appeal From Small Claims Court to District Court — Municipal Court Appellate Rules Inapplicable: The defendants appealed from a judgment of the Small Claims Court to the District Court, and the District Court dismissed the appeal on the basis that the defendants failed to file their brief within the deadline imposed by Rule 14, U.M.C.R.App. (Title 25, ch. 30). On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, concluding that the Uniform Municipal Court Rules of Appeal are inapplicable to an appeal from Small Claims Court to District Court; rather, the appeal is governed by Title 25, ch. 35, part 8. The Uniform Municipal Court Rules of Appeal would have applied if the case been removed from Small Claims Court to Justice's Court and then appealed to the District Court. Kiser v. Kiser, 2015 MT 315, 381 Mont. 368, 360 P.3d 1139.

Inmate Claim for Legal Services Improperly Dismissed for Failure to Exhaust Administrative Remedies Absent Evidence of Policies: Brown, an inmate at the Crossroads Correctional Center private prison, filed a claim in Small Claims Court alleging that Brown hired a paralegal office to do legal research and type a court brief and that because the warden denied Brown access to the office, the warden was indebted to Brown for the amount that the inmate spent for the services. The court dismissed the claim after the warden asserted that Brown had failed to exhaust administrative remedies established by the prison grievance policy and the Department of Corrections regulation on which the policy was based, notwithstanding that no evidence of the policy or regulation was introduced or considered by the court. Brown appealed to District Court, but the dismissal was affirmed. The Supreme Court, however, reversed. Without evidence of the applicable policies, the court was unable to determine the nature and requirements of the grievance policy and whether it was complied with and was thus unable to conclude that there was substantial evidence to support the Small Claims Court's implicit factual determination that Brown failed to satisfy the procedure and that, in turn, the failure warranted dismissal as a matter of law. The case was remanded to the Small Claims Court for further proceedings. Brown v. MacDonald, 2007 MT 197, 338 M 390, 165 P3d 1125 (2007).

Weekends and Holidays Included in Statutory Time Applicable to Appeal From Small Claims Court: This section allows a party 10 days after entry of judgment to file a notice of appeal from a judgment of a Small Claims Court. Hubbard contended that the 10-day statutory period should not include weekends or holidays in the calculation, similar to the calculations in former Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and Rule 21, M.U.R.J.C.C. (Title 25, ch. 24). The Supreme Court disagreed. If the Legislature had wanted to exclude weekends and holidays from the time allowed for Small Claims Court appeals, it could have done so, as in the case of the other rules of procedure. However, the language of this section is clear and unambiguous, and does not exclude weekends or holidays from the calculation of the 10-day appeal period. Allen v. Hubbard, 2002 MT 95, 309 M 375, 46 P3d 639 (2002).

Claims in Excess of Amount for Consideration in Small Claims Court Not Barred by Res Judicata From Consideration in District Court: Thornton contracted to purchase a modular home from Alpine Home Center (Alpine), agreeing to pay $3,000 down toward the $72,120 purchase price, and receiving $6,900 credit for trade-in of an older mobile home. Thornton complained of problems with the modular home necessitating $500 in repairs, and stopped payment on the downpayment check. Upon taking possession of Thornton's trade-in, Alpine discovered damage to the trade-in in the amount of $3,450, and also discovered that Thornton owed $210.09 in back taxes on the trade-in. Alpine subsequently filed a complaint in Small Claims Court for $3,000. The Small Claims Court offset the cost of Thornton's repairs against the amount of damages suffered by Alpine and awarded Alpine $2,500. Thornton did not appeal the judgment, but instead filed a complaint in District Court alleging numerous theories for relief and seeking $65,000 for consequential damages, $100,000 for punitive damages, and general damages to be determined by the District Court. The District Court dismissed Thornton's claim on grounds that the action was barred by res judicata. Thornton appealed. The Supreme Court applied the elements of res judicata as set out in Whirry v. Swanson, 254 M 248, 836 P2d 1227 (1992), concluding that the issues raised by Thornton in District Court were different from the claims raised in Small Claims Court, and pointed out that the issues could not have been raised in the lower court in any case because 25-35-502 limits Small Claims Court jurisdiction to claims not exceeding $3,000. The District Court erred in holding that res judicata barred Thornton's action, so that holding was reversed and Thornton's case was remanded for further District Court proceedings. Thornton v. Alpine Home Center, 2001 MT 310, 307 M 529, 38 P3d 855 (2001).

Proper District Court Review of Small Claims Court Decision Precluded by Loss of Electronic Record — Reversible Error: When the electronically recorded proceedings of a Small Claims Court trial were lost, the District Court had no basis or record upon which to determine whether the findings of fact were clearly erroneous. A trial de novo was precluded by this section. Without the opportunity to review the record, it was reversible error for the District Court to affirm the judgment of the Small Claims Court. The Supreme Court remanded to the Small Claims Court for a new hearing. Spence v. Ortloff, 271 M 533, 898 P2d 1232, 52 St. Rep. 606 (1995), following Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. DeSaye, 250 M 320, 820 P2d 1285 (1991).

No Extension of Time Authorized for Filing Notice of Appeal — Appeal to Address Question of Law: Eagle brought an action in the small claims division of District Court, alleging that Russiff failed to properly repair Eagle's vehicle, causing further damage to the engine. Twenty days after judgment was entered against him, Eagle filed a notice of appeal, explaining that he was unable to get his mail. The clerk allowed the filing of the notice of appeal because of excusable neglect. The District Court dismissed the appeal as untimely. The Supreme Court held that there was no provision in the statute for an extension of the 10-day period in which to file the notice of appeal and that even if Justice Court did have such authority, Eagle's appeal was faulty in that it failed to specify any legal issues. Eagle v. Russiff Auto Repair, 254 M 422, 838 P2d 426, 49 St. Rep. 836 (1992).

Prohibition of Trial De Novo Constitutional: Capital Ford Garage argued that the statute limiting appeals from a Small Claims Court to questions of law rather than trial de novo with representation by counsel denied the garage its right to due process. The Supreme Court held that the statute was constitutional because a defendant had the right to remove the case to District Court or waive the rights to trial by jury and representation by counsel by proceeding in a Small Claims Court. The Supreme Court further held that limiting the appeal in District Court to questions of law was constitutional. Johnson v. Capital Ford Garage, 250 M 430, 820 P2d 1275, 48 St. Rep. 992 (1991).

Perfection of Appeal From Small Claims Court — No Requirement to File Undertaking or Pay Transfer Fee: Petersen cited 25-33-201 and 25-35-807 in arguing that the appeal from Small Claims Court filed by Aladdin Steel Products, Inc. (Aladdin), was deficient for failing to file an undertaking. However, 25-33-201 applies to appeals from Justice's Court and City Court, and 25-35-807 concerns proceedings to enforce or collect a judgment and is not relevant to perfecting an appeal from Small Claims Court. There is in fact no statutory requirement to file an undertaking on appeal from Small Claims Court, and Aladdin's appeal was not deficient for failing to do so. Further, although the transfer fee required under 25-1-201(1)(k) does apply to appeals from Small Claims Court, payment of the fee is not a prerequisite to perfecting an appeal. It is the duty of the Clerk of the District Court to collect the fee, and that duty is unrelated to the duty of the appealing party to perfect an appeal under this section. Thus, an appeal from Small Claims Court to District Court is properly perfected upon filing a notice of appeal under this section and requesting that the Small Claims Court transmit the record to the District Court. Petersen v. Aladdin Steel Prod., Inc., 1999 MT 262, 296 M 394, 989 P2d 385, 56 St. Rep. 1061 (1999).

Statute Allowing Attorney Fees in Appeal From Small Claims Court Not Applicable to Appeal From District Court: Plaintiffs prevailed in an appeal from District Court to the Supreme Court, which began as an appeal from Small Claims Court, and sought attorney fees and costs related to the appeal, citing this section. The Supreme Court held that this section applies only to appeals from Small Claims Court to District Court, and declined to award plaintiffs their attorney fees incurred during the appeal from District Court to the Supreme Court. However, as the prevailing party in the Supreme Court appeal, plaintiffs were entitled to costs under former Rule 33, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Allen v. Hubbard, 2002 MT 95, 309 M 375, 46 P3d 639 (2002).
